FAR AND NEAR.

BY H. E. WARNER.

There is a country bright and fair,
A summer land beyond the sea,
Art, riches, beauty, all are there,
Yet it was nothing unto me.

Sometimes a ship was wafted o'er
With sun-filled fruits which it had brought.
A wandering beggar at my door,
Awoke, perchance, a passing thought.

But late, I wring the honored hand
Of a tried friend, in mute farewells,
And saw him sail for that fair land
Of sun and song, and there he dwells.

And now, how near it seems to me,
How home-like, since he calls it home,
How fly my thoughts across the sea,
How long they stay, how slow they come.

Again, beyond the soundless sea,
Mysterious, silent, one beloved,
Unto a land long known to me,
Though little prized, has now removed.

Oh, wondrous change! my spirit thrills,
Dear country, with the thoughts of thee.
When shall I gain thy restful hills?
Oh, when thy clustering glories see?

O, bounteous land! ah, happy bowers!
I pine, I faint, thy joys to share.
Fly, laggard Time; slow-footed hours
Pass on, pass on, and bring me there.

OPEN THE DOOR TO THE CHILDREN.

BY MRS. M. A. KIDDER.

Open the door for the children,
Tenderly gather them in;
In from the highways and hedges,
In from the places of sin.
Some are so young and so helpless,
Some are so hungry and cold;
Open the door for the children,
Gather them into the fold.

Open the door for the children;
See! they are coming in throngs;
Bid them sit down to the banquet,
Teach them your beautiful songs;
Pray you the Father to bless them,
Pray you that grace may be given;
Open the door for the children,
"Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Open the door for the children,
Take the dear lambs by the hand;
Point them to truth and to goodness,
Lead them to Canaan's land.
Some are so young and so helpless,
Some are so hungry and cold:
Open the door for the children,
Gather them into the fold.

"THE UNION PRAYER BOOK."

This is the title of the revised liturgy of the Protestant Episcopal Church just issued. It has been introduced into the Emmanuel Church of New York city, of which Rev. Dr. Thrall is rector. Before using it the rector withdrew from the Episcopal Church, of which he has been one of the most useful ministers. It will also be used in the Rev. Dr. Cooper's, independent Episcopal church of this city, he having also retired from the Episcopal Church. The two features of the work that will most attract the attention of Methodists are, first, the installation of bishops—not ordination—and, second, the consecration—not baptism—of infants. From the New York Times we have the following account of the work, which has not reached our city at this writing:

The book has been compiled by various divines, both in America and England, and its principal aim is to present to the public a form of prayer in which there is "nothing that needs explanation." The main portion of the liturgy, which has been used for centuries, both in England and America, has been retained, and it is said that the various changes and additions which have been made are solely for the purpose of more clearly setting forth the Christian doctrine, and for uniting the various branches of the church. The order of the service has been simplified. The Psalter has been taken from the version of the Bible now in common use, and classified according to the different Sundays of the ecclesiastical year. The tables of lessons have been very much altered; the Apochrypha is entirely left out, and the chapters so arranged that the wholo of the important parts of the Bible will be read through in two years. The book of the Prophet Job and the revelation of St. John, which were both excluded from the old table, are inserted in this. The thirty-nine articles have been reduced to thirty-one, while in those that remain, in every case the language has been simplified, and some of them have been materially altered. The Absolution after the General Confession has been dispensed with, and in its stead are several texts of Scriptnre setting forth God's willingness to forgive those who repent. Several new canticles have been introduced, which will be sung in turn. In the Apostles' Creed the sentence, "He descended into hell," is left out, and the sentence, "and baptism for the remissions of sins" has been omitted for the Nicene Creed. In the prayer for the President of the United States "and all in judicial and executive authority" is added. There are also several additional prayers, among them being a prayer for youths at the various institutions of learning, and a prayer for the missionaries. Several prayers and psalms have been added to the Litany, which is to be used, as under the old ritual, as a separate service, or, at the discretion of the pastor, to be used instead of the usual morning or evening prayer. In the communion service, besides the ten commandments given by Moses in the Old Testament, eight commands of Christ from the New are given, and after the invitation to his congregation to communicate the minister may also extend the invitation to all other members of whatever denomination that may be present. The old form of absolution is also omitted in this service, and instead of the usual benediction a short prayer may be used in its stead. The baptism of infants is termed "the consecration of children to the Lord," and instead of the minister saying, "I baptize thee in the name of the Father," etc., he says, "We consecrate thee to the Lord," but should the parents or sponsors wish it, the pastor will say, "I baptize thee, in which case water will be applied, but it is the aim of the compilers that children shall not be baptized till such time as they can answer for themselves, although "consecrated" when infants. The order of confirmation is performed by the minister laying his hands upon the head of every one of the candidates separately, not the bishop, as of old. The bishops of this new denomination will be "installed," not consecrated, while a presbyter of any denomination, providing he is duly certified, will, after examination, and on expressing his desire to join this branch of the church, be admitted to the ministry. The book contains several occasional services, besides a selection of family prayers. The advocates of this new system of universal prayer are scattered throughout the length and breadth of the United States. It is the work of several years' study, and congregations will, it is thought, soon discover its usefulness. It is so very general in its doctrines that dissenters of almost every grade will be able to use it, and it will, doubtless, be the means of forming a branch of the church composed of those who have hitherto disliked the old prayer book, because of its stringent formalities and rubric, and others who have had no forms of prayer, because there was none applicable to their particular opinion. It is not issued for the purpose of developing new Christian sects, but as a center ground upon which the one common faith may find harmonious utterance.

BOOKS.

The desirable treasure of wisdom and knowledge, which all men covet from the impulse of nature, infinitely surpasses all the riches of the world; in comparison with which precious stones are vile, silver is clay, and purified gold grains are sand; in the splendor of which, the sun and moon grow dim to the sight; in the admirable sweetness of which, honey and manna are bitter to the taste. The value of wisdom decreaseth not with time; it hath an ever-flourishing virtue that cleanseth its possession from every venom. O celestial gift of divine liberality, descending from the Father of light to raise up the rational soul even to heaven; thou art the celestial alimony of intellect, of which whosoever eateth shall yet hunger, and whoso drinketh shall yet thirst; a harmony rejoicing the soul of the sorrowful, and never in any way discomposing the hearer. Thou art the moderator and the rule of morals, operating according to which none will err. By thee kings reign and law givers decree justly. Through thee, the rusticity of nature being cast off, wits and tongues being polished, and the thorns of vice utterly eradicated, the summit of honor is reached, and they become fathers of their country and companions of princes, who, without thee, might have forged their lances into spades and plowshares, or perhaps have fed swine with the prodigal son. Where, then, most potent, most longed-for treasure, art thou concealed? and where shall the thirsty soul find thee? Undoubtedly, indeed, thou hast placed thy desirable tabernacle in books, where the Most High, the Light of light, the Book of Life hath established thee. There then all who ask receive, all who seek find thee, to those who knock thou openest quickly. In books Cherubim expand their wings, that the soul of the student may ascend and look around from pole to pole, from the rising to the setting sun, from the north and from the sea. In them the Most High incomprehensible, God himself is contained and worshiped. In them the nature of celestial, terrestial and infernal beings is laid open. In them the laws by which every polity is governed are decreed, the officers of the celestial hierarchy are distinguished, and tyrannies of such demons are described as the ideas of Plato never surpassed, and the chair of Crate never sustained.

In books we find the dead as it were living; in books we foresee things to come; in books warlike affairs are methodized; the rights of peace proceed from books. All things are corrupted and decay with time. Saturn never ceases to devour those whom he generates, insomuch that the glory of the world would be lost in oblivion if God had not provided mortals with a remedy in books. Alexander, the ruler of the world, Julius, the invader of the world and of the city, the first who in unity of person assumed the empire in arms and arts, the faithful Fabricius, the rigid Cato, would at this day have been without a memorial if the aid of books had failed them. Towers are razed to the earth, cities overthrown, triumphal arches moldered to dust; nor can the king or pope be found, upon whom the privilege of a lasting name can be conferred more easily than by books. A book made, renders succession to the author; for as long as the book exists, the author remaining immortal, cannot perish, as Ptolemy witnesseth in the prologue of his Almazatt, he (he says) is not dead, who gave life to science.

What learned scribe, therefore, who draws out things new and old from an infinite treasury of books, will limit their price by any other thing whatsoever of another kind? Truth, overcoming all things which ranks above kings, wine and women, to honor which above friends obtains the benefit of sanctity, which is the way that deviates not, and the life without end, to whom the holy Boetius attributes a threefold existence, in the mind, in the voice, and in writing, appears to abide most usefully and fructify most productively of advantage in books. For the truth of the voice perishes with the sound. Truth, latent in the mind, is hidden wisdom and invisible treasure; but the truth which illuminates books, desires to manifest itself to every disciplinable sense, to the sight when read, to the hearing when heard; it moreover, in a manner, commends itself to the touch, when submitting to be transcribed, collated, corrected and preserved. Truth confined to the mind, though it may be possession of a noble soul, while it wants a companion and is not judged of either by the sight or the hearing, appears to be inconsistent with pleasure. But the truth of the voice is open to the hearing only, and latent to the sight (which shows us many differences of things fixed upon by a most subtle motion, beginning and ending, as it were, simultaneously). But the truth written in a book, being not fluctuating, but permanent, shows itself openly to the sight, passing through the spiritual ways of the eyes, as the porches and halls of common sense and imagination; it enters the chamber of intellect, reposes itself upon the couch of memory, and there congenerates the eternal truth of the mind.

Lastly, let us consider how great a commodity of doctrine exists in books; how easily, how secretly, how safely they expose the nakedness of human ignorance without putting it to shame. These are the masters that instruct us without rods and without fernles, without hard words and anger, without clothes or money. If you approach them they are not asleep; if investigating you interrogate them, they conceal nothing; if you mistake them, they never grumble; if you are ignorant, they cannot laugh at you.—Richard De Bury, Written A. D. 1344.

TEACHINGS FOR THE TEACHER.

Prepare the lesson for the next Sabbath as soon as the duties of the Sunday school are over. Do not lose the momentum that has been given to your own powers by your surroundings, by the contact of mind with mind. Now you can think quickly and well; you are searching after knowledge on several points. As the sailor improves the favorable breeze, so seize upon your opportunity to master the lesson for the coming week.

Besides, now you realize the peculiar wants and necessities of your class. Their difficulties, their doubts, their dangers, the points at which they are exposed, are distinctly before your mind. If the lesson contains any truths adapted to meet these wants, any appropriate warnings or encouragement, these you will quickly perceive. As the physician welcomes a remedy for a disease under which some unfortunate patient is languishing, so will you lay hold of those truths which promise to promote the spiritual health of those committed to your care. Think, too, how many new thoughts, how many new illustrations, you will gather if the subject is before you—not for an hour or a day—but for a whole week. The calm and full mind, the full heart, reaches and moves other hearts. If you would be a successful teacher, it is not enough to glance at the lesson. It must not only be studied, but mastered. At the outset pierce to the very core of the word. Break the shell, and find the kernel. Examine some of the best commentaries for the explanation of terms and the removal of obscurities and difficulties. Think for yourself, and make up your own mind what truth is taught. Above all, with a deep sense of need, with a humble and a believing spirit, go to the Great Teacher. Did he ever send one away empty? Grasp, as far as you can, the full meaning of God's word, and study carefully all its bearings. Having the subject, at the outset, thus fully before you, during the week, in your walks, in your business, in your relations with men, you will find many illustrations; the truths will open more and more; your own interest in them will deepen; and you will long to impart to others the new views that warm your own heart.

Before going to your class, once more examine the lesson with a special view to the points of spiritual interest, the great and vital truths taught, and in order to take these into your own heart and to make a part of your own being. Then you will no longer go to your class troubled, confused, anxious, hopeless of making any definite impression. Then your class will no longer be inattentive and uneasy. The youthful mind loves knowledge and eagerly seeks it. Give them the knowledge of Jesus Christ fresh from a glowing heart.

Make the class do the thinking. Instead of telling them, make them tell you not only the truth contained in the lesson, but their application. The difference, not only in interest but in power, is wonderful. The teacher who, instead of pouring knowledge into his class, makes them, by skillful questions and hints, tax their own resources and give forth knowledge, not only arouses the attention, but confers a lasting benefit. The saying of our Saviour, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," we usually apply to property. But it is equally applicable to thoughts. Thoughts pent up in our own breasts, like scattered coals, die out. Give them expression, and they increase not only in number, but in value. Teach a child to think and to give forth his thoughts, and you dig a well of far more value than the well of Jacob, for you unseal the fountains of a human heart.

Every teacher knows, or should know, the power of sympathy—that key that unlocks the heart of the child and puts the teacher in possession of his attention, his confidence, his affections. One teacher comes, intelligent perhaps, and wise and earnest, having much to say both good and profitable, but he makes little impression. Another teacher appears, and every eye brightens, every countenance lights up with a smile. He has touched a chord in their hearts. They feel that he is interested in something that interests them. It may be only a look, a pressure of the hand, a passing remark, a tone of the voice—where sympathy really exists in the heart, it will have no difficulty in finding a way to manifest itself.—Sunday School Workman.

THE FIRST WITNESS.

Those who have once been enslaved by the terrible appetite for intoxicants, but have found complete deliverance from it by the power of Christ through faith, were requested in the Christian at Work of August 19 to send in their testimony of the facts to Rev. W. E. Boardman, or Henry C. Houghton, M. D., at No. 50 West Thirty-third street, New York. On the day of the date of the paper, one who had seen it sent in as requested a statement of facts, from which the following is condensed:

"Great reluctance was felt to making the statement, overcome only by gratitude to the blessed Saviour, and by a feeling which all appreciate thus expressed. But if, by making it, even one victim may be enable to find deliverance, as I have done, oh! how vast the compensation. The appetite was formed by insidious degrees. The serpent was trifled with for the pleasurable feeling it seemed to afford the nervous system, which was much deranged. Resistance proved unavailing. Placed by Providence in comfortable circumstances, surrounded by kind friends, I saw my position, and everything that endeared life to me, torn away from me by degrees, all in vain. The tempter grew stronger and stronger, and resistance weaker and weaker. The fear of God was continually before me, and remorse and anguish rose to such a degree that Gough himself could scarcely have described it. Vows, however solemnly made, were soon broken. Sometimes they enabled me to abstain, though not totally, for three months, but only to plunge deeper and deeper into the vortex. A written covenant, signed with my own blood, was of short avail. The victory was finally gained, when all hope of every other means was gone, by simple faith in Jesus. I thought I was sliding into the pit of perdition, and nothing I could do would save me. At last I was enable to cast myself just as I was upon Christ, and was saved. Twenty-two years Christ has upheld me amidst all facilities to fall. Often the temptations have been strong, but he has enabled me to triumph. Sometimes the conflict has been very great, but he has kept me through all. Safety only in Christ. I know I need daily his grace to keep me, as I did at first to save me.

"A strong word for others: I know—and if my own soul depended on the truth of the word, I should say it—that if the greatest slaves to intemperance, renouncing all human help, would throw themselves on the precious Saviour, the answer would be: 'I will, be thou clean,' but he alone can strengthen them to do it."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

Mr. David Strang has been taken by the Presbytery of Egypt on trial for licensure.

Sales of Bibles in the Sandwich Islands have not been so great for many previous years, as during the last year.

In Spain, the American Bible Society is pushing forward the distribution of the Scriptures, freely and satisfactorily.

The value of landed estates devoted to the support of the ministers of the Established Church of England is set down at $150,000,000.

Henry Young, Esq., of Sing Sing, has endowed a professorship in the Union Theological Seminary, at Hampden Sidney, Virginia, by the gift of $30,000.

In Uruguay, South America, Bible distribution and sale are being made by the agent of American Bible Society, with encouraging success. A priest of learning and prominence has lately renounced the Roman faith.

At the Annual Convention of the Diocese of Central New York, held at Christ church, Oswego, the sum of $60,000 was subscribed, to complete the fund for the support of the Bishop, making the whole sum raised for the purpose $70,000.

There is a good demand for the Holy Scriptures in China, but difficulties in meeting it present themselves, and one of them is a peculiarity of the Chinese language, viz.: that while the general written Chinese is read by all educated, Chinese is spoken by none.

A Hopeful Mission.—Rev. W. C. Van Meter, who has been greatly successful in attracting the poor and outcast children of New York to the Howard mission, and inspiring them with ideas of a higher and better life, is planning to open schools on a large scale in Italy.

The New York Advocate announces that Mr. Rolph, of Stamford, has given to the New York East Conference Seminary, the fine sum of $5000, grounds in Stamford valued at $50,000, besides grounds also for the Seminary and church, the building costing $40,000. Mr. Rolph is one of the best, as well as most liberal of men and Methodists.

More Bulls Coming.—Foreign advices report that Prof. Fredericks, one of the excommunicated Dollinger leaders, continues in the exercise of his religious functions, and that the Archbishop of Munich will probably place an interdict upon the church in which he officiates, and excommunicate those who sanction his proceedings.

There are now five ministers of the Methodist Church in Utah. The church at Salt Lake City, organized May 24, 1870, has a membership of fifty-one; that at Corinne of thirteen; that at Evanston of nine. There are five Sunday schools, with an aggregate enrolled membership of four hundred. Three day schools are sustained, having two hundred scholars enrolled. The value of church property is estimated at $10,000.

Truth Spreading.—Many centers of light are forming amid the darkness and superstition that have so long enveloped Mexico. At Cos three hundred and fifty have united with the church on profession of their faith, thirty-one of whom have joined within two months. Many who have heard of the wonderful work of God, have gone more than a hundred miles to see for themselves, some of whom have remained to be instructed in the truth and to carry it back to their homes.

Sons from Afar.—Our Mission Rooms, says the Northwestern Christian Advocate, announce that at least seven native Chinese preachers will be admitted into our several conferences during the current conference year; four have already been, and three more are to be admitted—one each in the Vermont, Black River and Baltimore Conferences. These all have served a probation, passed an examination in the studies assigned them, and received the approval and recommendation of the superintendent, Dr. Maclay, and his associates.

A midnight prayer-meeting has been held in the Baptist church at Stonington, Connecticut, for nearly two years. Every Saturday night a band of Christians, mostly railroad employes, meet for prayer, praise and conference on the arrival of the steamboat train, and continue the meeting until midnight. As the train comes at nine o'clock, and leaves about one, it gives opportunity for Christians to come from Providence, Westerly, and other places along the road, to help in the meetings. Several conductors and other men on the road have been converted.

In Labrador, there are at present, thirty-seven Moravian men and women missionaries. The number of persons under their care is something over one thousand, which is about one hundred less than the number ten years ago. This decrease is the consequence of disease. Heathenism has now entirely disappeared from the Labrador coast, and the natives, with a very few exceptions, are connected with the mission. A comparison with the condition of the scattered heathen, who live in the extreme north and in the interior demonstrates how much the mission has accomplished.

The leading publishers of Sunday school lessons in this country, together with the American Sunday School Union and several of the denominational publishing houses, have agreed on a uniform series of Bible lessons for 1872. Each publishing house or society will prepare such schedules or comments as it prefers in presenting these lessons to the public; but the Scripture passages and themes will be the same in every case. Thus a large share of the Sunday schools of the United States will be studying the same lessons throughout the next year. The lessons for the first quarter relate to "Christ after his Ascension;" of the second to "Elijah and Israel;" those of the third are "Studies in the Epistles;" those of the fourth pertain to "Daniel and his Times." We hail the presentation of this scheme with pleasure, and hope that its adoption will be universal.

Mr. Muller, of Bristol, England, never asks for money to sustain his Orphanage; but he prints an annual statement of the work he is doing, which is far more effective in securing contributions than any begging circular could possibly be. During the last year he has met with many obstacles in his work; but they have all been overcome. Mr. Muller is at the head of what he calls a "Scriptural Knowledge Institution;" and this has the care not only of the Orphanage at Bristol, but of various schools and missions in other parts of the world. As many as one hundred and fifty missionaries are assisted from the funds of this society. From the beginning above $2,500,000 have been received by this institution. The erection of the five orphan houses alone has cost $575,000. The expenses of these houses for the last year were $113,300, and the expenses of all departments of the institution $195,000. For the coming year considerably more will be required. The funds are supplied without solicitation. They never fail to be sufficient, and the greater part of them is given anonymously. During the past year three hundred children have been admitted into the Orphanage, bringing up the whole number to two thousand and thirty-three.

The Brooklyn Tabernacle, Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage pastor, enlarged to hold about four hundred more people, was rededicated on Sunday last. Rev. Dr. Stephen Tyng, Sen., preached in the morning, and the pastor in the evening. The gratifying announcement was made that the voluntary contribution to the support of the church had been during the year $18,899 82, while the expenses had been $17,385, the income exceeding the outgo by over fifteen hundred. This shows that a free church can and will be supported. The pastor stated that all that remained in the way of their prosperity as a church was a floating debt of $21,000, accrued in the building of the Tabernacle, whereupon the people came up and subscribed the whole amount. Hon. G. DeWitt, of Belleville, New Jersey, a Baptist, offered $900 if a baptistery were put in the Tabernacle. Mr. Talmage gladly accepted the offer, and will baptize by immersion those who prefer that mode to sprinkling. After the money had been raised, George W. Morgan played the "Hallelujah Chorus," the people sang "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," and there was such a scene of handshaking and congratulation as has seldom been seen anywhere. The pastor will preach a jubilee sermon next Sabbath morning.—Methodist.

We have before spoken of Latas, the popular Greek preacher of Athens. He is compared to Hyacinthe and Gavizzi, in the Roman Catholic Church, and seems to be drawing crowds after him, just as Spurgeon is wont to do in London. He came in 1867 from a convent near Jerusalem, and took at first but an humble position in the choir of one of the principal churches of the city. As soon as he began to preach all were astonished at his eloquence. He was sent by a wealthy Greek gentleman for some time to a German university; but is now again in Athens, drawing crowds to hear his sermons. He is said to be as modest as he is gifted, and devoutly to attribute all his success to the grace of God. Rev. Dr. Hill, the Episcopal missionary in Athens, recently listened to one of his discourses, and speaks of it as one of the grandest he had ever heard. The audience of twenty-five hundred persons were held for nearly two hours as it spellbound, while this eloquent preacher, the Archimandrite, Dionysios Latas, unfolded, in comparative purity, the great doctrines of grace and salvation by Jesus Christ our Lord. It is a good omen for the Greek Church. It is doubtless something of the fruit of the missionary toil in which Dr. King and others from our own land have borne so conspicuous a part.

GOING TO SCHOOL.

A thorough education is the foundation of the subsequent career. It matters not what business or profession may be chosen, a liberal culture is always desirable. It is the best endowment, even where the learned professions are not thought of. The educated mechanic or farmer will succeed better, other things being equal, than those who have had no training in the schools. A mind strengthened and developed by mathematical and classical studies, and thoroughly acquainted with natural science, is more capable in the most practical affairs, than one whose early instruction has been neglected. No attainments of knowledge, and no improvements of the mind are thrown away, although house-building or plowing be the vocation of life. There is scope for the choicest powers in the counting-room, in the workshop, and in the cotton field. Education fits men and women for the greatest excellence in every calling. If there were no law, medicine or literature to occupy us, a college course would lose but little of its importance. The common pursuits of life are elevated and improved, and, ordinarily, are made more profitable, when under the control of disciplined intellect.

One of the practical advantages of a good education is, that it qualifies its possessor for every and any pursuit. He can choose where others cannot; he can turn from one thing to another, and realize a degree of independence and self-reliance, of which those of more limited resources are deprived. He can turn his attention to any profession for which he has a taste; he can comprehend and apply the discoveries of science in the cultivation of the soil, or he can invent, or improve upon the inventions of others. He can teach; he can write; he can keep accounts; he can trade and command employment, wherever skill and intellect are in requisition. There are but few things that the uneducated can do; there are few things that the educated cannot do. They have that which qualifies them for success and eminence in any department which opens in their path.

To them we may, with some grain of allowance, apply the lines of Milton:

"The world was all before them, where to choose
Their place of rest, and Providence their guide."

In this low utilitarian view of the subject, boys and girls are acting wisely who press their way through all difficulties, and resolve to obtain a liberal education. The father who sells property that he may educate his son, is making a good investment. The education will be of more value to the boy than ten times its cost in real estate. It is money put at compound interest, and is, as a business venture, a surer thing than capital in trade. Parents can, in no other way, make better temporal provisions for their children than by sending them to school. Whether sons or daughters, and whatever their prospects of inherited wealth, this is the only sure capital in life.

As a means of enjoyment and happiness, education cannot be too highly estimated. The capacity of enjoyment is enlarged, and sources of pleasure are opened of the most ennobling and enduring character. The refinement of taste, the powers of thought, the expanded fields of knowledge, the habit and love of study all contribute. The wonders and beauties of nature are more than half lost to the ignorant, and the highest and best appreciation of the "foot-prints of the Creator" in the structure of the earth and of God's handiwork in the order of the heavens, is impossible to them. To the uneducated the classics and the higher mathematics must ever remain as countries undiscovered and unexplored. Here is a world of delight from which they are forever shut out, and springs of pleasure of which they can never taste. The aroma and flavor of the old authors are beyond the power of translation, and the beauty and perfection of the languages in which they thought and wrote and sung can find no compensation in modern tongues. The processes by which Kepler, Newton and Laplace reached their mighty results and discoveries, are a positive blank to the unlearned. Education, as the key of knowledge, is also the instrument which opens to the mind an almost boundless expanse of pleasures and delights. Without it we are denied the happiness designed for us, and our life is comparatively a mental death. As a source of pleasure, nothing can be compared with the thorough cultivation and attainments of a generous curriculum at school. The pleasures of sensual indulgence, the gratifications of wealth, the excitements of social intercourse are mean in comparison.

It is, however, in connection with religion that education is most essential. It is not as essential as religion, nor is it altogether essential to religion in the individual experience. Neither are we to conceive of it as separated from spiritual culture. They are to go hand in hand, and to be the complement of each other. The mental and the spiritual are to be developed and drawn out side by side. Religion, without this higher education of the intellect, is a blessing and a power in the world; but, at the same time, religion furnishes some of the strongest motives for its attainment. Under the influence of piety, the cultivation of the intellect becomes an imperative duty. The mind is God's gift, and is to be improved for the glory of the giver. Education supplies to the Christian the highest means of usefulness, and is a talent capable of the largest improvement for the service of the truth. The Christian, who has missed of education, is deprived of that which might have made him tenfold more useful than he is. Wesley and his humble co-laborer, John Nelson, were men not very unequal in natural powers and in spiritual gifts. Watson and Carvosso might be compared. But the difference in mental culture makes the difference in the breadth and durability of their influence. With the same degree and depth of piety, education vastly increases the power to do good. The church needs educated Christians, both in its laymen and preachers. Piety, united with broad culture and intelligence, is the best and most potent type of religion. We are not sure but this union gives us a better quality of religion, more stable, and less liable to perversion and delusion. In religion, the enlightened mind has peculiar sources of enjoyment in the realms of nature and of revelation. It is probable that Newton appreciated the Nineteenth Psalm more perfectly than did its inspired author. Is it unlikely that such scholarly souls as Clark and Alford found greater delights in the Scriptures than the ordinary and unlearned reader? The bearings of intellectual improvement, united with piety, upon the world to come are, of course, beyond our comprehension. If we knew all, we might, perhaps, find a reason here for diligence in study. The future life surely does not obliterate this most powerful impress upon the mind's imperishable structure; but, on the contrary, it may recognize and give to it an immortal stamp.

In the mental, as well as in the spiritual, pupils and masters are working for eternity. Going to school has a deep significance for parents who have it in their power to put their children in this path to independence and happiness. It appeals to them as the wisest utilitarians, as economists, and, above all, as Christians. As you love your children, as you value their earthly happiness, as you desire their Christian usefulness and their salvation, send them to school. To our youth, to both young men and maidens, we say go to school. Surmount all obstacles, overcome all hindrances, and determine upon the highest practicable scholarship. Let this be the goal in subordination to the higher ends and purposes of religion. Lay now, by hard study, the foundations of character and usefulness, and qualify yourselves for the noblest employments, and for the gravest responsibilities of life.

OPENING OF CENTENARY.

A communication from Bishop Keener, in reference to Centenary College and its new president, will be found in this week's issue. Let it be borne in mind that the fall term opens next Monday, the second of October. President Andrews is himself a graduate of Centenary in its most prosperous days, and is one of the many valuable men which this old and honored institution has sent out to adorn and bless the country. He stands among the foremost in his Conference as a preacher and faithful pastor, and the only objection we have heard to the acceptance of his present position is, that the pastorate sustains an almost irreparable loss by his withdrawal from it. He enters upon his duties with a filial devotion to his alma mater, in the early prime of manhood, with scholastic attainments of a high order, and with such qualifications as promise the most gratifying results. Rev. A. R. Holcombe, A. M., professor of mathematics and adjunct professor of natural science, is a veteran educator, a man of the most solid acquirements, and of the largest experience. His long and successful devotion to the education of youth entitles him to the respect and gratitude of the church. Mr. G. H. Wiley is professor of ancient and modern languages, a post which he has held with distinction. He has been in the college for many years, and stood by it through all its struggles and vicissitudes. The professor of natural science, Dr. T. S. Jones, is represented to us as well fitted for the chair which he fills. Mr. R. S. Holcombe, principal of the preparatory department, has a good report for scholarship, and is a gentleman whose qualifications give assurance of efficiency in the duties which he is called to discharge.

This old institution, with its devoted faculty, healthy location, and ample buildings, now in process of thorough repair, is, we believe, about to enter upon a career of greater vigor and usefulness than ever. The friends of education must send students. There is ample room for two or three hundred, and something like this number ought to be there this year. Send your own boys, and get your neighbors to send theirs. These halls should be filled from the territory of the two Conferences. Besides students, the college needs money, much money, to thoroughly furnish it for its work. Are there none among us who can give five thousand or ten thousand, or even more to begin an endowment worth while? The money and patronage, which ought freely to come in this year, would enable us to place Centenary on an equal footing with the best colleges of the country.

COLUMBIA CONFERENCE.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

ALBANY, OREGON, Sept. 11, 1871.

Since my last, the Columbia Conference has transpired; a body of true men—not more of them than were in the boat with the Master, when it was in the midst of waves and winds contrary. The craft, with its precious freight, is heading the right way. Methodist preachers are the same the world over, specially Southern preachers. The same indomitable force bears them on to ultimate success in every latitude and region. Here are churches to be built, and schools sustained; here men have to live by faith—in two senses. But here, too, are staunch members, who are with us and will never be in any other fold, worthy to stand side by side with the noble band who toil to clear this heritage. From causes various, we have lost more than one good opportunity on this coast for acquiring position at principal points. The country is, however, very new, and its real centers are being developed daily, and, in some instances, offer to us fresh advantages for gaining strength. As yet, but few churches have been erected; our people have used school-houses, and by the favor of other denominations have been protected from the weather. I think the time has come when the desire to set up for themselves has become the ruling one. Every department of the church suffers through this lack of houses, but the Sabbath school probably most of all. The Conference reported but three Sabbath schools. Two preachers were received on trial—Thomas V. B. Embres and Granderson Curtis. A few men of energy and fair pulpit ability can find here a most promising field of labor, and a climate to be preferred to any north of Tennessee. Railroads are beginning to pierce the State, and presently a large population will press the vast fertile valleys of the Bear River and the Willamette. A large emigration has flowed this way from Missouri and other Southwestern States. All of these emigrants, or nearly all, are heartily with us. And, if our church will present them only an ordinary opportunity, they will attend our preaching, and many of them will affiliate fully with our members. But if we present only a shell, or a shed, for their reception, as matter of course, their friendship soon languishes, and they turn sadly away from our altars.

The experiment of holding the Conference at a camp meeting resulted no better than I feared. The Conference got through its business, and the congregation on Saturday afternoon and on Sabbath was a good one. But, on the whole, it was a waste of power. The Annual Conference session is an opportunity for effecting decided permanent good; and when it convenes in a town it usually makes an impression favorable to our cause. But the attention demanded for gathering up the work of the year past, and in arranging for the year to come, is quite incompatible with the uninterrupted labor required at a successful camp meeting. I see in the life of Bishop Heading, however, an account of a Conference held in New York, "near to a camp meeting," which resulted in the conversion of fifty souls; though "there were eight thousand present on Sabbath and one hundred tenters." The missionary meeting on Saturday afternoon was something of a success, yielding some $220. This was thought to be a fine collection. I am amazed at the weight that is attached on this coast to the shekel of the sanctuary. As its earth is more or less mixed with gold, and its rocks, when crushed, yield precious metal, I came out prepared to see a people, for once, who value specie as a sailor just paid off—capable of pouring out their substance into the treasury of the Lord. But, for all that I have observed, they seem to be not a whit less calculating and cautious in parting with money than we at home: "He that loveth silver is not satisfied with silver." The Conference love-feast was after the ancient type.

The mere physical labor of filling a circuit in Oregon is not so great as in Texas, or among the swamps of Louisiana. The distance between appointments are not greater; for that part of the State that is mountainous is very thinly settled, if at all, and the people live quite thickly together in the one great valley that sweeps from its southern to its northern limit. The Walla Walla country is in Washington Territory, and it is represented to be a beautiful, healthy, fertile, grain-growing region, with a pleasant mild climate—that is, in the Umatilla district, on which Rev. C. H. E. Newton is presiding elder. Brother Newton was formerly of the Alabama Conference. He has been doing a good work, and speaks earnestly of the opening prospect of his district. There are three circuits in it to be supplied.

The average value of lands, throughout the valleys of Oregon, is from $15 to $30. In color, it is like that near Opelousas, Louisiana; Fort Smith, Arkansas; Macon, Mississippi; Eutaw, Alabama. In the winter and spring, rains are constant and the mud deep; in the summer, the dry season is continuous and the roads filled with dust. Scarcely any snow or ice for three winters past. Timber is abundant and durable. The fir and the cedar grow to such immense size, that clearing would seem to me quite impossible; but that is not necessary, for the valleys are mostly prairie, while the hills and mountain sides are wood land. I leave to-day for Portland, to take steamer on the Pacific, for San Francisco. I do not fancy the sea, but that overland trip I shall never attempt again.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

ALBANY, OREGON, Sept. 8, 1871.

REV. L. PARKER, D.D. — Dear Brother: By a letter, just received from the Rev. C. G. Andrews, A. M., of the Mississippi Conference, he informs me of his acceptance of the presidency of Centenary College. He was duly elected by the Board of Trustees, in July last, but it was thought best not to announce the fact until it could be certainly known that he would accept. Bro. Andrews has decided upon this new course of usefulness and service to the church, after due thought and consultation with the friends of Methodism in the Southwest and his own brethren. Averse to any engagement that would take him out of the pastorate, he enters upon this arduous undertaking, as he did upon that in answer to a call from the church, and from the promptings of his heart to obey what seems to be the indication of Providence. That he will be heartily sustained and welcomed to this position by the faculty of the college, the members of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences, and the members of our church, I cannot doubt; and that the college begins a new period of growth and prosperity, I have faith to believe. Let our people in the Southwest rally to the support of the noble men who are, at no little sacrifice, laboring to establish an institution that, for more than twenty years, has contributed many valuable ministers and laymen to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Yours truly,

J. C. KEENER,
President of Trustees.

RAMBLING NOTES.

The Nashville Advocate of the tenth instant contains another letter from Dr. T. O. Summers, Jr., from which we extract as follows:

Having taken in all of interest in the city, I left at six o'clock A. M. by the Grand Trunk railroad for Lake Champlain. We crossed Victoria Bridge which spans the St. Lawrence. This bridge is two miles in length—the longest in the world. Our steam engine was fed with peat, in which this country abounds. We arrived at Rouse's Point, at the head of Lake Champlain, about eight o'clock. Here I took the steamer Vermont, the finest vessel I was ever on. Lake Champlain was once, according to geology, covered with salt water and frequented by whales and seals. A large part of the skeleton of a whale—Beluga Vermontana—has been dug up on the borders of the lake. The formation along the shores of this lake has given the name to the Champlain epoch. There are deposits situated above the height at which accumulations are now in progress. Some of these are three hundred and ninety-three feet above tide-level and contains shells to a height of three hundred and twenty-five feet. The scenery is grand.

Going down the lake we had the Adirondacks on the right and the Green mountains on the left. The former mountains present a wilder appearance than any I had ever seen. No doubt many of your readers have been much interested in the series of articles which came lately in Scribner, on "Sport Life in the Adirondacks."

About two o'clock we arrived at Fort Ticonderega, the scene of Abercrombie's defeat in 1758, Ethan Allen's victory 1775, and Burgoyne's 1777. The portion of the town lying between Lakes George and Champlain is a high promontory—the remains of a mountain ridge. Mount Defiance stands at the extremity of the promontory, and is seven hundred and fifty feet above the surface of the lake. There is a vein of graphite in the town from which about thirty tons of black-lead are produced annually. There are also a great many lumber-mills and factories in the place.

I took the stage here for Lake George, which lies four miles distant from Lake Champlain. The ride passed through some very picturesque country—made more interesting by its historical connection. We passed a house in which Washington combed his hair and washed his face, I don't remember which. We drove by so rapidly that I did not have the opportunity to cut a splinter off the door-post. They say they have the identical mirror in which he saw reflected the veritable image of himself. I could not see it, and as they did not offer to show it to me, I rather suspect that it was fifty cents a sight, and so I passed on without farther inquiry. Lake George is said to be the prettiest spot on the continent. It is the Loch Lomond of America. Its waters are as clear as crystal, and remarkably pure that they might be transported thence to Canada to be consecrated for use in the Roman Church. The lake empties into Lake Champlain by a small outlet about two miles in length, which has a depth of one hundred and fifty feet in a channel and a half, and as it never apparently varies, and is remarkably clear, it forms a very valuable watercourse. The islands in this lake are said particularly supposed to be exactly the same in number as the days of the year.

We arrived at Fort William Henry a little after sundown, and were greeted with a salute from one of its guns. Here is one of the finest hotels in America—standing at the foot of the lake and commanding a view for fifteen miles. This is a favorite summer resort, and though very gay, I did not see much evidence of dissipation. Early in the morning we left for Glen's Falls, nine miles from the fort, where we took the Rensselaer and Saratoga railroad for New York, via Saratoga and Albany. At Saratoga we found fifteen thousand people, wild with the excitement of gambling and dissipation. It is a perfect Baden Baden. Why will that Christian people will visit such places? Its very atmosphere is polluting. It is a wonder that God does not visit upon it the fate of the cities of the plain.

We reached Albany about 10 o'clock and took the steamer Vibbard for New York. A delightful breakfast on these Hudson River boats costs you four dollars! Again and the Hudson are to me Mecca and Jerusalem of America. "whither the tribes go up to worship"—Nature; but after passing through Lake George, Hudson's scenery loses half of its interest. All tourists should take the Hudson first. We arrived at New York at sunset. We stopped at the Grand Central Hotel—the Hotel de Ville of the United States.

Dr. Atkinson, professor of physiology in the Boston Dental College, called on me and took me in his carriage to Central Park, where he showed me all the points of interest, and their name is legion. The botanist has here a fine field for investigation.

On Sunday I attended Dr. Deems' "Church of the Strangers" morning and night. The church was crowded. The doctor preached to the edification and delight of the congregation. The morning service was closed by the venerable Dr. Maddin, of the Tennessee Conference. Dr. Deems' Sunday school, the choir of his church, and the music they gave us too. The "Church of the Strangers" is the great sort of Southern people who live in the city, and many a man who does not attend church at all under ordinary circumstances, drops in here and hears words "whereby he might be saved."

I leave to-day for Nashville.

T. O. SUMMERS.

THE GRAND CONCERT of sacred music, to be given in the Carondelet Street church, about the 20th of October, for the relief of the Algiers church, promises to be the most successful musical entertainment of the season. It will consist of the very cream of sacred music, rendered by some of our first class artists. It will include full choruses, as well as solos, duets, etc. A full programme and the precise time will be given next week. Our friends are earnestly solicited to patronize the concert liberally. J. G. MILLER.

STATE OF THE CHURCH.

The San Francisco Spectator reports revivals in California, and says:

The accounts of the work of God in this State are highly gratifying. We hear a good deal of complaint in the matter of the support of the ministry, but in most cases the cause is traceable to the severe drouth and consequent pressure in money matters. Altogether we have great cause to be grateful that our church is making onward movement.

The Raleigh Christian Advocate has accounts of successful meetings and many conversions in North Carolina, and remarks editorially:

Methodism has never had so bright prospect in North Carolina since we have been observing its operations. The eyes of the leading, prominent men in the State, outside of her pale, are turning to her in respect and expectation, as never before. If concord can prevail in her councils, if harmony, such as she now enjoys, can be perpetuated and all the elements she possesses stirred into activity, she is bound to be the leading religious power in the State, and become acknowledged as such. Many there are, we know, who will shut their eyes to this fact, and refuse to see it, but in a few years they will be compelled to feel what they refuse to see. Work is the watchword now. Let every member do something, and feel that he is of no account, dead weight, an incubus, unless he works.

The editor of the Raleigh Christian Advocate testifies to the value of District Conferences:

Our District Conferences have all now been held, and reports of their proceedings have been sent in. We have attended as many of them as our duties would allow. This has been a great year for us in North Carolina. From our stand point we can but survey the field with feelings of great satisfaction and delight. Not one of these Conferences has been a failure, or anything approximating a failure. No measure inaugurated since the war, by our church, has been so wise and timely. It is impossible to calculate their value to us. Under the blessing of God they are putting life into our whole machinery. In them the preachers commune together and catch fresh zeal. Our leading laymen through their instrumentality are brought in contact with each other, to compare notes over the wants and condition of the church. Thus a bond of sympathy is created between them, and a spirit of united effort in the promotion of the interests of the church excited. We have yet to meet with the first layman who has been in attendance on one of these Conferences, who was not delighted and profited.

The Southern Christian Advocate abounds in encouraging items and says:

Southern Georgia is in a blaze. Dr. Key, of Macon district, and Rev. J. Blakely Smith, of Americus district, met one day last week in our office and told of good meetings in more places than we can remember. Despite the prognostications of evil, on the part of some, the church grows. We have received similar intelligence from the Griffin and LaGrange districts, North Georgia Conference. In First Street church, Macon, Dr. Hicks is having a good meeting. It grows daily in interest. Large and attentive congregations, with, at times, very many mourners at the altar, occasional conversions and weekly additions to the church give promise of great good. On Sabbath, August 27, it was the privilege of the editor to preach at Reynolds, about forty miles from Macon, on Muscogee railroad. An excellent meeting had been in progress there for a week or two; and on that day, ten or twelve persons were received in the church. Let the brethren report the revivals. It does good; it encourages others. And be sure to get all new converts to subscribe for their church paper.

The Nashville Christian Advocate contains columns of good news. Of the Elm Street church in Nashville it says:

We believe Dr. Young, the pastor, has received one hundred and four members during this Conference year. His church is now enjoying great prosperity. He has handed us this interesting slip: "You wanted to hear from us on Monday. Yesterday was a time of refreshing. Our Elm Street church was never fuller than it is to-day. At the close of the morning service six persons were baptized, seven received into full connection, and four by letter. At the close of the evening sermon thirty persons presented themselves for prayers — five of whom joined the church. The excitement is in progress a considerable degree, and we judge from past experience, and observation, it may continue several more. Our brethren have a sermon every night. Our ministerial brethren are extremely kind, for which we return them hearty thanks. The church is working day and night."

The Western Methodist of the sixteenth instant contains a good many notes of revivals, of which we give a few samples, as follows:

Gracious influences prevail in Arkadelphia, Arkansas, and in the vicinity. The Southern Standard, September 2, says: "A very interesting revivel of religion has been progressing at the Methodist church in this place, conducted principally by the beloved and eloquent pastor, Rev. J. F. Carr. The altar is crowded nightly with mourners, and we are pleased to learn that there have been several conversions. The meeting continues to increase in interest, and will probably continue several days longer. We also learn that a very interesting revival closed last week, at New Hope church, in this county."

A very gracious revival is now enjoyed by the brethren of Hernando Street church, where meetings are held night after night by the pastor, Rev. L. D. Mullins, aided by several brethren. Fifteen persons have professed faith in Christ, and as many as eighteen have been added to the church. The good work promises to increase in power and extent—may it sweep the city.

The Rev. B. F. A. Lilly, now supplying Charleston circuit, North Mississippi Conference, writes, September 5: "God has graciously revived His work on the Charleston circuit. I have just closed a meeting at Pleasant Hill church, which lasted only one week. I had no ministerial help, but God and the good brethren were with me. I can say that I have not witnessed such a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord for thirty years. Between forty and fifty, it is said, professed faith; I joined in twenty-two adults and seven infants by holy baptism."

The Rev. Amos Kendall, presiding elder of the Grenada district, North Mississippi Conference, writes, September 6: "We are still having 'times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.' Four miles from Water Valley, a meeting conducted by Bro. Barton, assisted by Rev. J. Hunter and Rev. O. Martin, local preachers, resulted in sixty conversions and sixty-three accessions to the church. At Mount Olivet, on the Oxford circuit, there were thirty-six conversions, and at Church Grove, thirty. Bro. Harrison has just closed a meeting in the Water Valley station, with some twenty additions to the church. Some of the preachers I have not heard from for several weeks, but I have reliable information of the conversions of five hundred souls on some six different appointments, since the Week of Prayer. I leave to-morrow for the first of our three camp meetings."

SLOCOMB, BALDWIN & CO.—Nearly half a century has passed since the extensive hardware establishment of the above named firm commenced its business career. The firm is composed of gentlemen after the old regime. They are fully identified with Southern interests, and thoroughly conversant with the wants of planters, as well as other branches of Southern industry in articles of their line. A heavy capital and vigorous enterprise, aided by the experience of fifty years, have enabled them to extend to such proportions, both in the quantity and variety of their wares, as to invite the custom of all purchasers who wish to obtain articles of the best manufacture with the latest improvements.

We assure purchasers that they will be well repaid for calling at their large warerooms, 74 Canal and 91 to 95 Common street, adjoining the City Hotel. See advertisement on the fifth page of this issue.

SOUTHERN REVIEW.—A number of our subscribers whose subscriptions have been forwarded by us, have complained that the Review did not reach them. We have promptly notified the publishers of such complaints, and have been assured by Bro. Poisal that the Review has been mailed faithfully to them, and, in some instances, the same number as often as three times to one address. All further inquiries should be directed to Liven H. Baker, President, St. Louis, Missouri.

ROBERT J. HARP.

THE MISSOURI CONFERENCE.—This Conference, says the St. Louis Christian Advocate, is now in session at Palmyra. Bishops Doggett and Marvin are present, Bishop Doggett presiding. We learn, as we go to press, that the Conference is progressing in its business harmoniously. In our next issue we will be able to give the appointments, with, perhaps, further information of its proceedings.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

THE SONG KING is a collection of music by H. R. Palmer, designed for singing classes, schools and conventions. It contains one hundred and ninety-one pages, embracing a musical dictionary, directions for vocal culture, and a good many new and excellent pieces of music. Published by Root & Cady, Chicago, Illinois.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for this month contains the Story of the Mine, America and Americans, Mercy Before Sacrifice, How to Study the Old Testament, The Stilling of the Tempest, the Poetry of the Old Testament, and other articles of interest.

LE BON TON is a splendidly gotten up journal of fashions, published by T. Taylor, New York. The plates and engravings in the October number are very numerous and very fine.

PETERS' MUSICAL MONTHLY for October contains an excellent selection of new and original music. It is a beautifully printed periodical, published by J. L. Peters, New York.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE of September 16 contains: The Financial Condition of France, The Descriptive Poetry of Chaucer, A French Convict Colony, and other articles.

THE FIRESIDE VISITOR is a handsome eight page sheet, recently started at St. Louis. It is published monthly by H. L. Aldrich & Co., at fifty cents per annum.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE, the Atlantic Monthly and the Little Corporal are among the October magazines received this week. They are superior numbers.

THE SOUTH is a new weekly paper, published in New York, by Tardrew & Co. It is an eight page journal, handsomely printed and well edited.

THE October number of the SUNDAY SCHOOL JOURNAL, published by Carlton & Lanahan, has been received.

HEARTH AND HOME, Appleton's Journal and Every Saturday are the finest illustrated papers that reach us.

Married.

By Rev. J. D. Adams, on the fifth of September, 1871, at Franklin, Louisiana, Mr. A. G. FREDE to Miss LULA CLEGG.

Obituaries.

Major THOMAS C. FEARN was a native of Huntsville, Alabama, born July 17, 1829. In May, 1857, he was married to Miss Mary K. Andrews, who, with six children, survive him in widowhood and orphanage. In 1860, he made a profession of religion, and connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in Jackson, Miss. He gave promise of usefulness in the church. The war came and disturbed somewhat these hallowed relations and prospective hopes. The claims of home and privileges of the church yielded to those of patriotism and Major Fearn entered the service of his country. Trained to business, to its activity, enterprise and promptness, he efficiently, and with unsullied honor, served his country in the Quartermaster's department. After the war, he devoted himself to the high duty of providing for the sustenance of his family. Trained to duty, he knew its high law, and devoted all of his energies to the prosecution of his business. For the last three years he was subjected, at intervals, to spells of epilepsy, which terminated his life on the sixth of August, near Whiteboro, Texas. In obedience to duty, with prompt and persevering energy, death found him far from loved ones and in a strange land. It denied to him and to them one message of love, one sweet farewell. He never spoke. In a moment, on the highway, he was seen to fall from his buggy. Attention and skill were given, but afforded no relief, and, after an illness of two days, he unconsciously passed into the presence of his Maker. He died a stranger, yet among friends, who had learned in the mysterious art of Masonic brotherhood, to plant the sweet acacia over the grave of a fallen brother. In the last years of his life he manifested a growing interest in the enterprises of the church, and, when at home, worshiped God with his family. We indulge the hope that this interest was an eternal one, and, in its rich, unfading fruition he now rejoices. As a man, he was prompt and energetic in business. Frank, generous, and noble in his impulses, he was popular and won to himself a large circle of friends. These enter the communion of grief that brings his widow and orphans to weep over his grave. Inscrutable Providence! touch with Thy grace this holy grief and mingle Thy joys in these hushed and hallowed hours of resignation and prayer!

W. HARRINGTON.

DIED, on the ninth day of August, at the residence of his grandmother, Mrs. Mary L. Branch, Sabine parish, Louisiana, when the sun was casting its last rays and tinging the west with its golden lines, our precious little RAGAN, son of James F. and Sue E. Garnor, aged three years eleven months and five days.

It is a solace to know that death brought no terror with him. He came gently as a sinless angel, and took our darling from us. A short time since our band was complete, and a joyous happiness stole over our hearts, but the flowery perfume soon ceased to greet us, and one of our number was called by a voice from afar, and departed. The Lord pours his balm into sorrowing hearts, and we lifted our weeping heads at his command. God called his precious flower to transplant it in heaven.

His fame still bears a thrilling strain,
But fancy's watching all in vain
For eyes that often turned to mine
When life and beauty, child, were thine.

Little Ragan was not only an affectionate and a dutiful child, but a sweet companion for his now heart-broken mother, and though not quite four years old, intellect had marked this child. He was conscious of his death.

Little Ragan will sleep quietly on; will not heed the silent tears we drop. God has gathered into his kingdom our fairest blossom, where it will bloom in perpetual beauty, and whose sweet fragrance will gladden our drooping hearts when we remember that he is crowned with the fullness of a perfect life.

Bayou Toro, August 20, 1871. J. A. B.

Mrs. ANN KING, the daughter of Aaron and Jemima Spell, was born in Pike county, Mississippi, on the twenty-fifth of August, 1812, and was happily united in wedlock to William L. King, in Holmes county, Mississippi, May 25, 1838. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the fall of 1840, moved to Yazoo county in 1845, and resided there until her decease, which occurred August 12, 1871.

Sister King lived a consistent Christian from the time of her conversion until she bid a final adieu to earth to join the church triumphant in heaven. She was confined to her bed for six months, and bore her affliction only as a true Christian can, patiently, and resigned to the will of God. She, knowing the hour near at hand when she must bid adieu to her loved companion, children and friends, was asked by her pastor if her way was clear to a better world, lifted her eyes toward heaven, and with a countenance becoming with love, said: "There is not a single doubt, or shadow or fear in the way. All is bright." These words were spoken distinctly. Many of her relatives and friends were listening to her last and dying words, as they fell feebly but distinctly from her lips, and with power they reached the hearts of all around her. She never made a show of religion, but always endeavored to do right, and never did a wrong knowingly. In a few minutes her strength failed, and she seemed to rest quietly. Death came, but there was no fear. She quietly fell asleep in Jesus, without a murmur. The deceased was a devoted wife, and a prudent, loving mother. Guided by conscience, and by the teachings of the Bible, she made the will the rule of her conduct, and in all the relations of life left no duty unobserved, no office of kindness unperformed. Her funeral oration was preached by her pastor, at the residence of her bereaved husband; after which she was followed by a large procession of relatives and friends to her last resting place, to await the resurrection morn, when soul and body will be reunited and be ever present with the Lord. May the bereaved meet her in heaven.

THOMAS W. FLOWERS.

Nashville Advocate please copy.

DIED, at her residence, near Brownsville, Alabama, on the eighth of July, 1871, Mrs. MARY DENSLER, wife of Dr. H. L. Densler.

She was born in Washington county, Georgia, March 30, 1808, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1828, married in 1830, and moved to Alabama, where she has since lived. Energy, firmness, amiability and the highest qualities of intelligence and piety were characteristic of her long and devoted life. In the relation of hostess, wife and mother, the beauties of her heart of hearts were chiefly manifested. There was a freedom in the daily communion rarely exhibited between parents and children; a familiarity, blended with the most perfect confidence and sublime respect. As a believer in Christ, and partaker of his salvation, abiding faith sustained her through every trial and tribulation, the last being the loss of one of her gifted boys, who had returned to her embrace after the war with bright prospects in the future. Her last words of hope were: "I have trusted my Saviour all these long years, and have never been deceived nor forsaken. I trust Him still." Hence, we sorrow not as those who have no hope; and as nothing can come to us except through the hands of Him "who giveth and taketh away all things," we commend the bereaved to her God. She is happy, blest, and free. Wife, mother, friend, a long farewell. We would not call thee back. B.

The Celebrated Argyle Bitters.—From one end of the country to the other these unrivaled Bitters have received certificates of their efficacy and health-giving properties, without solicitation from their proprietor or agents.

As a counteracting malarial poison, as a good family medicine, as a tonic, pure and lasting, as a delightful, gentle stimulant of the vital functions, as a preventive and cure of dyspepsia, they stand firm and unshaken in their reputation.

In malarious latitudes, in damp climates, they have no parallel in the many worthless decoctions, with far-fetched and farcical names (too numerous to mention), and palmed off upon an innocent and unsuspecting people as valuable medicinal agents, but which, like "Dead Sea fruits, turn to ashes on the lips," and result in disgust and loathing, wrong and injury.

For fifteen years and more, these Bitters have found a place in the bosoms of thousands of our most industrious and respected mechanics, lawyers, doctors, the clergy, and are the boast and pride of the farmer and planter—the bone and sinew of the land.

They are now offered for sale at reduced prices. se7 1m

The Child's Corner.

WHAT THE BIRDS TOLD.

BY M. H. K.

"What a dreary, sorrowful world is this!"
Said the owl from his hollow tree;
"Yet the lark is glad from the dazzling light,
And the robin can sing in glee.
Poor foolish birds, they are merry now,
But the angry storms will beat
Through the leaves that shelter their hollow nests
With the snow and the cutting sleet."

But higher and higher the blithe lark soared
Till the earth lay far below;
The verdant valleys, the waving woods,
Smiled bright in the sunlight's glow.
"What a beautiful world the Father made!"
She sang as she upward flew;
"The land, the water, and over them all
He has spread the warm sky's blue.

"Wherever on wayward wings we soar,
O'er ocean, o'er earth, through air,
The humblest, the weakest, by night and day,
He guards with a patient care.
He has given us some song to sing,
And we utter them not in vain,
For he hears the hum of the lowliest bee,
And the sparrow's tremulous strain."

From her peaceful nest, on the swaying bough,
The robin sang soft and low:
"Oh! kind is the Father that made the leaves,
And bid the green grass grow.
He made the brooklets that we drink,
The fruits that are rich and sweet
He hangs on the boughs, when the flowers are gone,
That we may be glad and eat.

"We know that the summer that lingers now
Will vanish at his command;
That the flowers will die, and the leaves will fall,
When the winter shall shroud the land.
But the frailest wing will its good hand guide
Through spaces of pathless air,
To climes where the date and the citron grow,
And summer dwells always there.

"He loves the creatures that He has made,
And nothing is mean or small,
For tender compassion and boundless love
Are lavished alike on all.
So the world is bright if our hearts are bright,
And fair if our souls are fair;
For the gifts of His beauty may come to all,
With the bounty of sun and air."

DUMPY DUCKY.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

Quack, quack, quack!
Three white and four black.
Your coat, you saucy fellow,
Shades off to green and yellow.
Do you think I like you best
Because you are prettiest?

Quack, quack, quack!
White spots on his back—
Chasing his long-necked brothers,
I see him, old duck-mothers.
You need not quack so loud,
Nor look so stiff and proud.

Quack, quack, quack!
Ducks, you have a knack
Of talking and saying nothing.
And showing off fine clothing.
Like many folks I see
Who wiser ought to be.

Quack, quack, quack!
Please to stop your clack!
They call me Dumpy Ducky;
Do you not think you are lucky,
You ducklings all, to be
Named for a girl like me?

Quack, quack, quack!
What is it that we lack—
You with a pond for swimming,
I with my bucket brimming;
You with your web-toes neat,
I with my stout bare feet?

Quack, quack, quack!
You make a funny track
When you waddle through the garden.
And, ducks, I beg your pardon.
But I do not choose to try
A swim in your pond; not I!

Quack, quack, quack!
Now you may all turn back—
Your home is in the water:
I am the Dutchman's daughter,
And my plump little sisters cry:
"We want a drink!" Good-bye!

—Our Young Folks.

THE NEGLECTED TOAD.

BY BEATA FRANCIS.

He was very, very ugly; his coat was mud-color, his form unsightly and his mouth frightful. He knew he was ugly, and the fact preyed on his mind night and day; but he could not help it; do what he would, long as he might, he could not improve his figure, or his complexion, or his features, one iota.

Some people said, that inside his ugly little head there was something bright and beautiful and dazzling. That might or might not be the case, our poor little Toad did not trouble himself about it. If it was there, what was the use of it? What pleasure did it give to himself or any one else? Everybody disliked and avoided him on account of his ugliness; even little children, who petted his cousins the frogs, would not touch him on any consideration, and sometimes they teased him, and threw stones at him.

Once a village schoolboy gave him a kick which lamed him for a long time, saying: "I'll larn ye to be a Toad."

The poor Toad did not resent the unkindness; he only limped away, saying to himself:

"Ah! that's all very well, and very natural; but what I want to know is, how not to be a Toad. If any one would teach me that, I would bless him indeed!"

Then he gazed at his own reflection in a puddle long and earnestly. "Yes," he thought, "I am perfectly hideous; no wonder the schoolboy gave me a kick, who could resist it? I look as if I were made to be kicked!"

On one occasion it happened that he was strolling along a lane where a very little child was playing; she crept softly toward him and pointed to him, saying: "Pretty! pretty!" The Toad's heart gave a grateful throb of joy, and he tried to throw a kind and pleasing expression into his eyes as he looked up at the little one; but just then the child's sister, who had charge of her, came up and seizing her by the hand pulled her away, exclaiming: "Don't go near the nasty thing, it'll spit at you, and kill you!" and the child began to scream and cry as she was borne off.

This little incident affected the poor Toad even more than the kick.

"Why, I would not hurt any one if I could," he thought, "and I could not if I would! I know I am ugly, but that is no reason I should be venomous. I wish I could go back to the days of my childhood, when I lived in the pond, and never troubled myself about how I looked, or what was thought of me. I used to think then what a fine thing it would be to be able to walk as well as to swim, and to associate with human beings; but it's nothing but disappointment, after all!" And he shuffled disconsolately back to the garden where he lived.

One summer's day, as he was taking a solitary, aimless walk along a gravel path in the shrubbery, his attention was suddenly attracted by an object which fairly dazzled his eyes by its brilliancy, and a large peacock Butterfly settled on a carnation close to him.

"Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty!" exclaimed the Toad, unconsciously quoting from Shakespeare. "What would I give to be like you!"

"You are really too polite," said the Butterfly, turning herself a little round, so as to show her wings to more advantage.

"How delightful it must be," went on the Toad, "to create admiration wherever one goes!"

"Well," answered the Butterfly, rather superciliously, "one gets a little tired of this sort of thing. Every child that sees me wants to catch me."

"Ah!" said the Toad, mournfully, "no one will ever want to catch me!"

"Really?" said the Butterfly, affecting a well-bred air of surprise. "But you are joking, perhaps?"

"I never was more earnest in my life," answered the Toad, and he crawled a step nearer the Butterfly, and looked her straight in the face.

The Butterfly recoiled a little. "Well, to be sure," she said, "you are rather plain; but, after all, it doesn't signify!"

"Of course it doesn't signify to you," replied the Toad; "but to me it signifies very much, very much indeed!"

The Butterfly opened and shut her wings gently in the sunshine, and considered a moment. At last she said:

"You know we can't all be beautiful!"

"No," said the Toad, dreamily. "I suppose we can't all be beautiful. But why should you be beautiful and not I?"

The Butterfly was incapable of following the Toad's train of thought. To her her own beauty seemed a natural right, and she was inclined to take his remark as a personal affront to herself.

"Well, I'm sure," she began, and then she couldn't think of anything else to say, and buried her trunk in the calyx of the carnation, though there was no honey there, to hide her embarrassment.

"I dare say it's all right," went on the Toad, "only I don't understand it."

"I don't see that there is anything to understand," said the Butterfly, forgetting her breeding in her excitement; "it's simple enough. I am beautiful because my wings have exquisitely-painted peacock's eyes on them, and you are ugly—I mean ordinary—because your coat is so dingy, and your mouth so wide."

"I know that," said the Toad. "That is not what I mean at all. What I want to know is, why is this thus?"

"Well, I must be off," said the Butterfly, who felt that the conversation was getting beyond her; "I have so many engagements. The honeysuckles are expecting me every minute, and I know the tiger-lily feels hurt because it is so long since I visited her. I promised to look up the lavender-bed, too, if I had time."

"Before you go," said the Toad hesitatingly, "might I venture to ask a great favor of you?"

"Name it," said the Butterfly graciously.

"You are mistress of the art of fascination. Will you give me a hint how to make myself a little less uncouth—a little more attractive?"

"I can show you how one should poise one's self, if you like," answered the Butterfly, hovering daintily over the carnation.

"It is a most elegant performance," said the Toad admiringly; "but, you see, it would be quite useless for me to attempt that sort of thing."

"If you wish to pay a hurried visit, and yet be gracious and graceful," continued the Butterfly, "I think it should be done in this sort of way;" and she darted rapidly to a neighboring lily, just kissed her pure white petals and returned.

"Beautiful!" exclaimed the Toad enthusiastically; "but ask yourself, supposing even I were able to accomplish such a manœuvre, how would it suit my figure?"

"Then," went on the Butterfly, pursuing her own train of ideas, when you want to alight, this is the best way;" and she fluttered airily down again on to the carnation's crimson cushion.

"That, alas! would be equally impossible," said the Toad in a voice of deep disappointment, for he began to suspect that the Butterfly was more intent on showing off her own accomplishments than in helping him.

"I am afraid I have nothing more to suggest," said the Butterfly. "The honeysuckles will be in despair, and I never expose my wings to the evening dew. The sun shines as long as he can to accommodate me; but one does not like to be exigeante."

Away she flew, darting hither and thither in the sunlight, greeting now one sweet flower and now another, brilliant and beautiful, welcome everywhere. The Toad meanwhile crawled drearily along the gravel walk. He was but a young toad, and life seemed very long and uninteresting to him at that moment.

For some days after this little interview he wandered listlessly about the garden, occasionally catching a glimpse of the beautiful Butterfly as she flittered about, and looking after her with longing eyes; but she was too preoccupied to notice him with even a passing salutation. As time went on, however, he began to crave less for notice and admiration; he occupied himself with his own thoughts, and lived chiefly under a plank in the tool-house. Day after day he grew more accustomed to his life of solitude and satisfied with his own resources. His neighbors laughed at him for what they called his "old bachelor ways," some of which were rather peculiar. For instance he was very orderly and regular in his habits, and carried his love of tidiness to such an extent that when the time came for exchanging his old coat for a new one, he rolled it carefully into a small ball and swallowed it out of the way. He cared less and less for the opinion of the outside world, and became gradually quite contented with his lot.

The bright summer days sped away, and the flowers in the garden grew scarce. The green leaves on the trees turned scarlet and golden, then dropped from the branches, and rustled and danced over the lawn till they were swept away by the gardener. Then the snow fell thick and fast, till lawn and flower-beds and gravel walks all looked alike in their smooth white covering. How cold it was! The Toad lay snug under his plank in the tool-house, and congratulated himself.

One day he ventured forth from his hiding-place for a moment to take a glimpse at the white world without between the cracks in the wall, when his attention was arrested by a melancholy little voice close to him saying: "Oh dear! oh dear!" He looked up, and saw in a dark corner of the tool-house what he would have taken for the form of a dusty-looking moth, but that the tone of the voice enabled him to recognise the object of his admiration and envy in days gone by—the peacock Butterfly!

"Good gracious!" exclaimed the Toad, "what on earth brings you here?" He did not mean to be discourteous, but living alone under a plank in the tool-house does not improve one's manners.

"I have been here for a long time," answered the Butterfly. "I was forced to seek shelter, for every flower in the garden, and even the sun himself, has deserted me. I managed to find my way into this gloomy place, and, ah me! it is so deadly dull!"

"I don't find it dull," said the Toad. "I am very happy here."

"Ah! very likely," said the Butterfly. "You are used to it, and you have not been accustomed to sunshine and admiration all your life as I have."

"True," replied the Toad.

"But what depresses me most of all," went on his companion, "is a growing conviction which I cannot shake off, that I am not the Butterfly I was. I feel so stiff and disinclined to move, and that must destroy grace, don't you think so?"

"I never was graceful myself," said the Toad. "I don't know anything about it."

"Then," went on the Butterfly, "a horrid thought has come into my mind—that the peacock's eyes on my wings are not so brilliant as they used to be. Dear old Toad! I beg you to tell me if this is really the case, or merely a morbid fancy."

"Come into the light," said the Toad, "and I will tell you."

The Butterfly crawled languidly out of her corner, and stood trembling with anxiety, waiting for the Toad's verdict. "Don't deceive me," she said.

Presently the Toad spoke, but very reluctantly, for he had in truth a kind heart.

"I am sorry to say," he said, that I consider your wings decidedly faded."

The Butterfly moved sulkily away. One does not always like to hear the truth, even when one has begged for it.

The Toad retreated to his snuggery, and pondered. "After all," he thought, "I believe I have the best of it. One cannot miss what one has never enjoyed; and if one has no wings with peacock's eyes on them, one is not afraid of their fading."

For the Toad, you see, had become a philosopher.—Good Words for the Young.

THE READY RECKONER.—"Father, do you remember that mother asked you for two dollars this morning?"

"Yes, my child; what of it?"

"Do you remember that mother didn't get the two dollars?"

"Yes. And I remember what little girls don't think about."

"What is that, father?"

"I remember that we are not rich. But you seem in a brown study. What is my daughter thinking about?"

"I was thinking how much one cigar costs."

"Why, it costs ten cents—not two dollars, by a long shot."

"But ten cents three times a day is thirty cents."

"That's as true as the multiplication-table."

"And there are seven days in the week."

"That's so, by the almanac."

"And seven times thirty cents are two hundred and ten cents."

"Hold on. I'll surrender. Here, take the two dollars to your mother, and tell her that I'll do without cigars for a week."

"Thank you, father; but if you would only say a year. It would save more than a hundred dollars. We would all have shoes and dresses, and mother a nice bonnet and lots of pretty things."

"Well, to make my little girl happy, I will say a year."

"Oh! that will be so nice! But wouldn't it be about as easy to say always? Then we would have the money every year, and your lips would be so much sweeter when you kiss us."—Everybody's Paper.

WHAT LITTLE BOYS ARE GOOD FOR.—"Get out of my way! what are you good for?" said a cross old man to a little bright-eyed urchin, who happened to stand in his way. The little fellow, as he stepped one side, replied very gently: "They make men out of such things as we are." Some people don't like to have little children about them. But whoever read of little folks bothering the blessed Jesus? He always had a place for children, in his heart and in his arms, and among his blessings.

A LITTLE BOY had his first pocket-knife, and for several days used it himself, and extended the privilege of the occasional use of his treasure to his playmate. One evening, he was kneeling at his mother's knee, saying his customary prayer, which he closed in these words: "And, please, God, give little Jimmy Baily a knife of his own, so he won't want to borrow mine all the time."

THE TEST OF LOVE.—"I do love God," said a little girl to her papa one day, when he had been talking to her about loving God.

"Perhaps you think so, Maria."

"O, I do, indeed I do," papa."

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

FARM WORK FOR SEPTEMBER.—Cotton. The farmer should keep well up with the cotton, as it opens. If it gets ahead of the pickers during this month, it will be difficult to catch up later in the season. The heavy dews of September will require that the cotton picked in the forenoon should be sunned before being stowed in the gin-house or elsewhere. Every farmer knows this, but some are tempted to neglect it. If you have heretofore neglected it, the gin-gearing and all other apparatus for putting the crop in readiness for market, must be repaired, cleaned up, greased and put in order generally. See that everything about the gin is fit for use before the day comes for using it.

Corn.—Early corn may, and ought to be gathered during the latter part of this month. Put it up with the shuck on—in that way it is less liable to be injured or destroyed by weevil.

Oats.—Fall oats should be sown at once. Also clover and other domestic grasses. The land should be broken deep, thoroughly pulverized and manured on the surface. After sowing clover seed the land should be rolled, and this whether the oats have come up or not—indeed where oats and clover are to be sown on the same land, we are inclined to the opinion that the oats should be harrowed in, and permitted to come up before sowing the clover. Then sow clover and roll in. Unless the stalk of oats have begun to form, the rolling will not injure it.—Practical Planter.

THE PECAN TREE.—The Southern Farmer, Memphis, Tennessee, says: This tree can be grown as readily as a hickory nut or walnut. Why not grow them as a profitable crop? We have seen trees in bearing on our friend B. Whitfield's place, in Hinds county, Mississippi, on high upland, and certainly some of our "swamp" planters can grow them around their homestead, have a pretty lawn, yet make money by the operation. Select best Texas pecans, largest and thinnest shells, and plant in December, January or February. By transplanting every two years (cut off tap-root first year), for two or three times they will fruit in eight or ten years, and when fifteen years old will bear a bushel each; when fully matured, one or two barrels of the best, will be worth generally twenty to thirty dollars per barrel. Plant, say thirty feet apart, and leave to your children a snug income.

HOLLOW HORN REMEDY.—The following remedy is highly recommended: "First, put a little turpentine between and back of the horns; then take two teacups half full of salt and water and pour one in each ear—both at the same time—once a day for three successive days. This cures the hollow horn every time."

IF POSTS OR RAILS are needed for service during the winter, the trees may be cut now, while in full leaf. Allowed to lie as the trees are cut, the evaporation from the leaves will drain the timber nearly dry, when a short exposure afterward will very effectually season it. The economy of using posts and rails peeled is very great; the loose bark retains moisture between it and the wood, and the sap-wood soon rots. When peeled, the sap-wood dries, and will last many years longer.—Hearth and Home.

SWEET HERBAGE cannot grow in soil which is wet and cold, and the amount of this wet, poached-up grazing land in New England will astonish those whose attention has been particularly called to it. It is not necessary to traverse the pastures, and mire our feet to find out the wet places. The cattle have discovered them before us, and the neglected, unnutritious water grasses too plainly reveal, even at a distance, the cold soil.

THAT digging among such plants as raspberries and strawberries must be a stupid practice is patent on the least consideration. Why manure a piece of land and then destroy the roots seeking to occupy it? When the roots have been mutilated, how can the plant be expected to bear drouth or carry fruit?

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

FRIED BREAD PUDDING.—Cut stale bread into slices; prepare egg as for custards, without sweetening, pour over the bread and soak till soft, then remove carefully to a buttered pan and fry till brown. Eaten with sauce, but good without.

MUSKMELON PICKLES.—Take them when just ripe, pare and slice about an inch and a half thick; put them in alum water; let them stand one night. Take out and drain well. Allow three pounds of sugar to three pints of vinegar; boil well and skim; pour over the melons, drain off the syrup, heat and pour back nine mornings; the last time add cinnamon and cloves to suit the taste; boil the syrup down till just enough to cover the pickles.

FRICASSEED EGG-PLANT.—Peel and slice the egg-plant; lay the slices in salt water two hours, to remove the bitterness and the black which they would otherwise have: after soaking, drain off all the water; have enough boiling water in a clean, bright saucepan to cover the slices; throw in a great-spoonful of salt, and lay in the egg-plant; let them boil till thoroughly cooked; then drain off the water, pour in sufficient milk to cover the slices, and add two tablespoonfuls of butter, rolled in flour; let it simmer gently, shaking the pan over the fire till the sauce is thick, and then stir in the beaten yolks of three eggs just before serving.

OMELET WITH JELLY.—Beat separately the yolks and whites of four fresh eggs; add to the yolks sufficient sugar to sweeten to your taste, and a dessert spoon even full of corn flour very smoothly beaten in a teaspoonful of cream. Beat this with the yolks till perfectly smooth, and stir in the well-beaten whites very gently so as to break the froth as little as possible; pour the whole into a frying-pan in which some butter has been melted, but drain off the butter before adding the eggs, etc. Put it over the fire—two or three minutes will cook the under side; hold the pan to the fire till the under side looks firm; then spread raspberry or strawberry jam over one-half; turn the other over it, and serve immediately.

CORONA.

CORONA STRIVES TO JUSTIFY ITS name,

THE CROWN OF SCHOOLS

for the higher education of women, by judiciously combining in its scheme the specta points of excellence found in all other schools. It aspires to superiority in all departments—literary, scientific, æsthetic, domestic and hygienic. The principal, after spending nearly twenty years in studying educational questions and in the practice of teaching, is devoting his whole mind and heart to the task of maintaining not the largest but the best school in the South. His system of education comprehends such an harmonious development of all the powers of mind, heart and body as will fit the young lady for the faithful discharge of the highest and lowliest duties of life.

The methods of instruction are those approved by the foremost educators of the age. The very best aids are employed for imparting real knowledge, such as maps, charts, globes, specimens and apparatus of all kinds. There is no rote—learning or the mere letter of text books—no cramming of the mind with disconnected facts.

Assistant teachers of known scholarship and well-tried aptness in teaching are engaged. In physical science and modern languages instruction is given by the eminent professors in these departments of Cumberland University.

The course of study is very extensive. It is arranged into schools after the plan of the best universities, and pupils are graduated in such schools as they or their parents may elect. Music on piano, harp and guitar.

In the boarding department young ladies enjoy all the comforts of an elegant home. The rooms are large, well ventilated, neatly furnished and newly carpeted. Fires in rooms whenever wanted. The table is bountifully supplied with wholesome food.

The location is most favorable in point of health, social refinement and religious privileges.

The health and physical development of boarding pupils are promoted by a system of gymnastic exercises, under a competent teacher, with dumb-bells, wands, rings and Indian clubs, without charge.

The expense of boarding and regular tuition is $250 or $260 a year. Extra branches at usual rates. The annual session always begins on the first Monday of September.

EARTHQUAKES.—Mr. C. F. Varley, the electrician, ventures to suppose that earthquakes may be sometimes due to electrical shocks. The suggestion is derived from the fact that during the earthquakes of March 17, powerful currents of electricity were flowing through the telegraph cables toward England. He supposes that between the exterior crust of the earth and the interior red-hot mass there may be a non-conducting layer of hot and dry rock which acts as an insulator. Thus the world is a huge Leyden jar which discharges itself on occasion, causing an earthquake.

SUN PRINTING ON FRUIT.—Boys and girls, if you wish to astonish any members of the family, or any coming guests, by some day allowing them to discover their initials neatly printed on a pear, peach or apple as it hangs upon its branch, this is the way to carry out your plan: Just before the fruit ripens cut the desired letters from a sheet of thin, tough paper, and paste them on the side of the fruit most exposed to the sun. When in course of time you remove the paper from the ripe surface, you will find the letters distinctly marked upon it. There are other ways of printing fruit, but this is the most simple.—Earth and Home.

IN AN ACTION recently tried in England against a railroad company, it was testified that experience has shown that, by tapping, defects can be detected in the wheels but not in the axles, but that the only way to find out whether an axle is sound or not, is to break it. The plan adopted is to break several specimens taken at random from a lot of axles, in order to find out whether the iron is good. If the test be satisfactory, the rest of the axles are taken on trust. The breaking of railway-axles very seldom occurs. In the case before the court, which was an action for damages against a railroad company, arising from injuries caused by the breaking of an axle, it was proved that this particular axle had been in use for fifteen years, and that after it broke a fractnre extending around into the depth of half an inch was discovered.

THE toad as an entomologist is lauded of in the American Naturalist. It is very useful in destroying insects injurious to vegetation, and where the intelligent gardener favors the introduction into the garden. The toad, also, as we see from Mr. Emerie's list, devour the beneficial insects, such as ground beetles, which are carnivorous in their habits. He writes that the toad is of a retiring disposition, loving dark corners and shady places. It has a slow, jumping motion. The moment it sees an insect, its eyes brighten and sparkle, the toes twitch, and, quicker than the eye can follow, the tongue is thrown out, the insect transfixed, and drawn into the mouth. Unlike the frog, the toad does not spring after its prey, but remains seated. Having kept frogs in the aquarium, I have noticed that they will spring two or three times their own length from the moss to catch a fly on the glass, using their tongue, as it were, on the jump. They seldom miss their mark. As far as my experience goes, neither of these animals will eat anything without motion or motion. I have, however, been deceived a frog by moving a dead fly in the sight of the creature, which it always took readily.

THE fact has been brought out by the recent deep sea explorations of the Mediterranean Sea that its waters contain matter in suspension in a very fine state of division, which it derives from its rivers, and for its western basin largely from the ocean. The bottom water is almost everywhere turbid, and the bottom muddy. Very little life exists over it when thus muddy, and this is attributable to the fact that life cannot exist where there is a constant deposit of the finest silt going forward, as it tends to cover the surface of the animal, and prevent aeration. Thus oyster beds will not flourish in the range of river deposits. These facts corresponded with those observed by Dredal, who detected the particles in the surface water of the Mediterranean by electric light, and attributed the deep blue color of the waters, as well as those of Lake Geneva, to their presence. The facts are stated, in the American Journal of Science, to explain to geologists how non-fossiliferous clay-beds may have been formed in past time. Dr. Carpenter suggests as another reason for the absence of life over the bottom of the Mediterranean the stagnation of the waters, due to an almost total absence of vertical circulation. If this last mentioned cause is a true one, it should have crowded life from the bottom where it is rocky, as well as from the muddy part.

A GOOD REASON.—"Did you ever preach such a text?" inquired a minister of a sensible local preacher. "No, sir." "Why not? Do you not see your way into it?" "O yes, but I do not see my way out of it."

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR and CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,
CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

[From the New Orleans Price Current.]

The general market has exhibited increased activity since our last issue, nearly every branch of the wholesale trade participating in the movement, partly in supplying orders from the interior and partly in sales to country merchants and city dealers. Operations in Western produce have been to a fair extent. Flour has been in good request, especially shipping grades, superfine ruling more in favor of sellers, and double and triple extra showing an irregular advance of 12½@37½c. ₱ bbl. Corn has been in light supply, fully maintaining its previous improvement. Pork and bacon have been quiet but firm at previous rates. Our leading staple has come forward more freely but the receipts nevertheless, show a large falling off compared with last year, and the supply, although offering rather more scope to buyers, is still insufficient to excite an active movement. Operations, moreover, have been restricted by buyers, in view of the course of other markets, claiming greater concessions than factors have been willing to admit, but the general tendency has been in favor of the former and the closing rates show a falling off of ⅛@c. in the medium and lower grades and about ¼c. in middling and strict middling. The offerings of new crop show some increase and the difference between it and old crop has lessened. The quality of the receipts is highly satisfactory, especially as to color and staple.

The weather has been clear and pleasant, and inspired a rather better feeling with regard to the crops. The accounts, however, of the ravages of the worms are more general and discouraging, and reviewing the whole field, from the intelligence received here with regard to the districts tributary to this city and the reports from other points, there appears to be no disposition to increase crop estimates. With a slight modification, we repeat our remarks of last week, that the popular estimate is 3,000,000 bales.

The river is now 13 feet 10 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-second instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	2,515
Lake	2
Mobile	425
Texas	110
Total	3,082

On Saturday the inquiry was fair, but mostly from buyers who claimed a reduction of ¼c., which factors, generally, were unwilling to admit, and the sales were confined to barely 300 bales, at prices showing an irregular decline of ⅛ to ¼c., the falling off being the heaviest in the lower grades. On Monday 300 bales changed hands at rather easier prices, hardly showing a quotable decline, factors being unwilling to meet the demand at the prices offered and buyers refusing to go on unless at further concessions. On Tuesday the supply was rather better, and as the telegrams from New York were not encouraging, factors met the demand more freely, giving way ⅛ to ¼c. in some instances, and ¼ to ½c. in others, but without coming down to the limits of many of the pending orders. The business consequently did not exceed 600 bales, and included low ordinary at 14¼, strict ordinary at 15⅜@16, strict good ordinary to low middling, new crop, at 18¾c., and strict low middling to middling at 19¼c. An offer of 19c. was refused for strict low middling, held at 19¼c. The downward tendency continued throughout the day.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas), are 11,671 bales, against 19,709 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 33,708 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 15,300 bales to Great Britain, of 81 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 1,191 to France.

We quote:

Low ordinary	13¾ to 14½
Ordinary	15 to 16
Good ordinary	17½ to 18
Low middling	18½ to 19¾
Middling	19½ to 19¾
Strict middling	20 to 20¼

SUGAR.—On Tuesday cane cutting was commenced on a plantation down the coast and to-day the mill commenced grinding, hence we may look for the first receipts of the new crop very soon. The old crop of Louisiana plantation is nearly exhausted. There is a brisk local demand for immediate wants, and we quote 9@9¾c. for common and good common Louisiana, 11c. for good fair, 11½@11¾c. for fully fair, 12c. for prime, 12¼c. for choice, 12½@12¾c. for yellow clarified, 13@13½c. for white clarified, 14c. for Cuba yellow clarified, Porto Rico, 11@11½c. Demerara 11¼@12¼c. ₱ lb.

MOLASSES.—The small lots now coming in from plantation are all poor in quality and are selling at 15@20c. for Inferior and 25@35c. for common. Fair refinery reboiled is selling at 40@45c., prime 50c., choice 60c. ₱ gallon; golden syrup 60@65@$1 ₱ gallon.

COAL.—Is in light supply. The demand is fair and prices have ruled firmer. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 4000 sacks at 2½@3c. for mixed and white mixed and 3½@3¾c. for mixed, yellow and white. On Tuesday, owing to the scarcity, the sales were confined to 600 sacks at 3¾c. for some white in second hand bags and 3¾c. for prime white and yellow.

GRAIN.—Are in light supply and firmer with a good demand. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 2500 sacks at 55c. for Mixed and 56@56½c. for St. Louis and 57@58c. for choice. On Tuesday 500 sacks at 55@56c. for St. Louis and 58c. for choice.

HAY.—The market has been steady, with a fair supply and moderate demand. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of about 100 bales, in lots, at 85c. for shoulders, 95@$1 for clear rib sides, and 90@95c. for clear sides. Subsequently shoulders were held at 85c., clear rib sides 95c@$1, clear sides 90@95c. On Tuesday the market was quiet, but steady and firm. There were no important sales, but shoulders were quoted at 85c. nominal, clear rib sides 95@$1, and clear sides 90@95c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in only moderate request, and ruling in agreement with New York. The market has shown some irregularity, but closed at a net decline of ¼ per cent. opening on Saturday at 111@111¼ against 111¼ at New York), and closing at 111@111¼ (against 111¾ in that market), opening on Monday at 111@111¼, against 111@111¼ at New York, and closing at the opening rates (against 111@111¼ at New York); and opening on Tuesday at 111@111¼, against 111 at New York), and closing at the opening rates in both markets.

The sales of silver include $300 and $10,000 in American half-dollars on Monday at 10c., $5,000 on Tuesday at 10c. There are now no Mexican dollars offering. American quarters are now quoted at 19¾@19¾ and Mexican dollars nominal at 14@14½ ₱ cent. premium gold.

MISCELLANEOUS.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered immediate relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is respectfully referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Holly, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Buckley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure invariably any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for

The Christian Advocate.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FOREIGN.

MUNICH, Sept. 28.—The kingdom of Bavaria is about to recall the ambassadors to foreign States, and will in future be represented only as a portion of the German Empire.

BERLIN, Sept. 28.—A Protestant league is in the course of formation throughout Germany, the object of which is the expulsion of the Jesnits from the country.

MADRID, Sept. 30.—Marshal Serrano has been proposed for the presidency of the Cortes.

All quiet in Spain, and the recent agitation on the part of the Carlists was utterly unsuccessful.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—Constantinople dispatches report ninety cholera deaths on Saturday. The supply of water was failing.

A steamer and a brig foundered in a gale off the mouth of the Cumber. Sixteen lives were lost.

Dispatches from Great Grimsby give harrowing accounts of the ships wrecked within sight. The master of the American ship Bertha Thayer was swept from the deck.

PARIS, Oct. 2.—The Germans commenced withdrawing from the department of Oise Sunday afternoon.

Differences have arisen between France and Italy, respecting the Pontifical debt.

Victor Hugo has written to President Thiers, strongly interceding for clemency in Rochefort's case. No intimations have been given that the appeals in Rochefort's favor will be entertained.

LONDON, Oct. 3.—Sam Dickinson writes from Theran, on the seventh of September, giving an account of the condition of affairs in the famine district. He says during the month of July eight hundred thousand persons perished in the city of Meschid, and that forty thousand inhabitants of the province have been carried off into slavery by Afghans.

The pestilence still rages, and its horrors are increased by destructive inundations.

DOMESTIC.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 27.—There was a slight frost here this morning, dispelling all fears of yellow fever.

KNOXVILLE, Sept. 27.—Colonel D. M. Nelson, son of Judge T. A. R. Nelson, of the Supreme Circuit, shot and killed General J. H. Clanton, of Alabama, this evening, in a personal rencounter.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Sept. 27.—A fearful fire is raging along the coast of Lake Michigan, between Monotowoc and Manapee. Farmers are burying their household goods to save them. All communication has been cut off, and unless it rains the loss of property and life will be fearful. The wells are all dried up. Persons who escaped through the fire with their horses badly singed counted twenty houses and barns in ashes.

NEW YORK, Sept. 27.—Advices state that a coolie vessel recently foundered off the coast of Martinique, all on board perishing. Two hundred dead bodies were washed ashore.

The salvage of the steamer Juniata, recently grounded off the Florida coast, was seventeen thousand five hundred dollars.

GALVESTON, Sept. 27.—The following official order was received here to-day by telegraph:

AUSTIN, Sept. 27.—To Dr. G. W. Peete, Health Officer, Galveston, Texas: Enforce a rigid quarantine against New Orleans and Berwick's Bay at once. E. J. DAVIS, Governor.

In compliance with the above order all vessels leaving New Orleans or Brashear City after six o'clock to-day will be quarantined here for twenty-five days.

SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 28.—There is much excitement here to-day by the reported arrest of Brigham Young. No arrest has been made, but it is expected. It is stated on good authority that Brigham Young will meet all the charges brought against him as a law-abiding citizen, and will offer no opposition to an arrest.

WORCESTER, MASS., Sept. 28.—The final vote of the Republican State Gubernatorial Convention resulted as follows: William B. Washburn six hundred and forty-three, B. F. Butler four hundred and sixty-four. Mr. Butler declares that he accepts the action of the convention as final. Resolutions indorsing President Grant were adopted.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—Owing to the interruption of the mails between New Orleans and Galveston by the quarantine at the latter city, arrangements have been made by the Post Office Department to send mails between New York and Galveston by Mallory's line of steamers, weekly, during the continuance of the quarantine.

GALVESTON, Sept. 30.—By the constitution of Texas, foreigners who have declared their intention of becoming citizens have the right to vote. Governor Davis has issued an order disfranchising seven hundred white Democrats (foreigners) of Galveston county, because they qualified as voters by declaring their intention before a clerk of the court, there being no Federal judge present. The Davis order was issued in pursuance of an opinion from his own attorney general.

RICHMOND, Sept. 30.—A special to the Enquirer says a riot occurred this evening in Danville, from an attempt on the part of negroes to rescue a negro from arrest. After a futile effort on the part of the mayor to disperse the mob, the military were called out and the riot act read twice. Stones being thrown, the military ordered a charge of bayonets. One of the most turbulent rioters was bayoneted and a policeman shot by some unknown person. Great excitement prevails. Stores are closed and the people are ordered to their homes.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., Sept. 30.—Nelson gave himself up this afternoon, and gave bond in twenty-five thousand dollars to answer the indictment for killing General Clanton. His father, William G. Brownlow, R. C. Jackson and Joseph Jaques are his bondsmen.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 2.—A special dispatch from Salt Lake City reports a rumor that Brigham Young has been indicted and will be tried this week.

The Mormons continue to buy arms, and Mormon journals advocate open resistance. It is understood that the Federal authorities ask for reinforcements.

LOUISVILLE, Oct. 2.—On Saturday, near Paoli, Indiana, Prof. Wilbur, aeronaut, fell from a balloon, when a mile high. His head was mashed to a jelly.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 2.—The Eleventh Annual Fair of the St. Louis Agricultural and Mechanical Association opened to-day. All the departments are well filled. The four hundred entries in the cotton department, from nearly all the Southern States, attract attention.

SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 3.—Brigham Young's arraignment has been postponed on account of illness. He remains at home in custody of the marshal. The arrest caused some excitement, but there is no popular excitement.

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 3.—The board of directors of the Mississippi State Fair called upon all the physicians and druggists of this city to ascertain beyond question the sanitary condition of Jackson, and the report is that the city was never more healthy at this season of the year, and that the cold weather and frosts now prevailing preclude all fear of further sickness. The State Fair will, therefore, commence October 23.

DEATH OF THE REV. JAMES F. DOWDELL.—We deeply regret, says the Nashville Advocate, to state that the Hon. and Rev. J. F. Dowdell, who was ordained as a local elder by Bishop McTyeire at the last session of the Alabama Conference, died at his residence near Auburn, Alabama, September 12. Before the war he was a member of Congress for several years, during which time his influence as a Christian statesman was largely felt. He was colonel of the thirty-seventh Alabama regiment during the war; about which time he was licensed to preach. He was president of East Alabama College for several years. He was a man of fine literary attainments, having graduated at Randolph Macon College about 1840, in the same class with the Rev. James L. Pierce and the Hon. D. A. Clopton. He was a genial Christian gentleman. We have enjoyed the hospitalities of his happy home, and greatly lament his departure. He died of a complication of diseases—of course, in peace. We hope to have a memoir of this excellent man for insertion in our columns.

THE King of Siam is said to have resolved on the liberation of all the slaves in his kingdom, universal emancipation to take place in Siam on the first of January, 1872. A tax is to be laid for the purpose of remunerating owners. It is announced, moreover, that the king is laying out many new roads and building many fine bridges, with intent to develop the varied internal resources of the country. The proposed visit of his majesty to Calcutta is understood to relate to his projected improvements.

LETTER FROM BASTROP, LA.

MR. EDITOR: The summer is past, and the equinox is upon us. The nights are getting cool, and at the present time fires in early morning are quite comfortable. Times are still hard, and there is no probability of better. The worms, since the last ten days, have become general all over the parish, and will destroy all the young and tender bolls. Many planters have complained of the boll-worm doing a good deal of damage to their crops, and in many places the cotton shed all its forms for about two weeks. Taking all these calamities, together with the wet spring, the cotton crop will be a sorry one indeed—about a half average crop. As for corn, in many places it was almost a total failure. It was thought, some time back, that there would be a fair crop of cotton made in this parish, but the shedding of the forms during a spell of dry weather, and the general destruction of the worms has made it certain that not more than half a crop can be gathered.

The Baptists had a good revival at Oak Ridge, a week or so ago. There were some twenty odd conversions. May it be extended to other places and to other churches. The preachers are becoming more zealous and more earnest in their preaching, and it must and will have its effect upon the church and people. A. S. H.

BASTROP, Sept. 20, 1871.

THE OLD MISSIONARY DEBT.

We had hoped, before this date, that this heavy incubus would be lifted from the church; and we shall deeply regret it if we are compelled to present this question again to any of the Annual Conferences. If, however, the amounts promised us at the several Annual Conferences, at their sessions last year, are not paid, previous to the approaching sessions, we have no alternative except to call again on the Conferences where deficiencies exist.

The following Conferences are deficient as follows:

CONFERENCE.	AMOUNT.
Baltimore	$1512 00
Virginia	1434 00
North Carolina	1341 75
North Georgia	1561 85
South Georgia	1600 00
Florida	158 75
Alabama	33 00
North Alabama	349 05
Louisiana	758 88
Mississippi	679 30
North Mississippi	461 75
Memphis	412 30
Tennessee	74 35
Kentucky	411 00
Louisville	299 85
Western	150 00
Little Rock	94 60
Arkansas	72 50
White River	367 50
Texas	577 95
Trinity	200 00
East Texas	349 00
West Texas	215 40
Columbia	304 00
Pacific	427 85
Los Angeles	108 00
Illinois	33 00

The West Virginia, South Carolina, Holston, Missouri, West St. Louis, Indian Mission, Northwest Texas and St. Louis Conferences, have paid the amounts apportioned to them. The subject was not submitted (by an omission) to the North and South Georgia Conferences last fall, and hence no subscription was taken in either of these Conferences. The amount apportioned to the North Georgia Conference was $1700; and to the South Georgia, $1600. They will take action at the approaching sessions.

The amount apportioned to the Western Conference was assumed by the Alabama Conference.

A. H. REDFORD, Treasurer.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Sept. 25, 1871.

A NEW FIRM.—Our readers, in need of legal advice, are referred to the card of Sawyer & Harding, which appears this week. These gentlemen have just entered upon the practice of the law, after a thorough and laborious preparation, and we predict for them a prosperous and honorable career.

A CONCERT.—We acknowledge the reception of tickets to a concert and tableaux to be given this evening, Thursday, by distinguished artists, for the benefit of the author of a "Requiem for Lee." The concert is to be given in Lyceum Hall.

TRUE religion shows its influence in every part of our conduct; it is like the sap of a living tree, which penetrates the most distant boughs.

RETURNED.

The following communication, addressed by Rev. W. H. Milburn to Bishop Bissell, explains itself. In a brief note he informs us that he has joined as a local elder the church from which he started in the ministry twenty-eight years ago, and that his orders have been recognized by the Illinois Annual Conference.

JACKSONVILLE, ILL., Sept. 23, 1871.

Right Reverend W. H. A. Bissell, D.D., Bishop of Vermont:

RIGHT REV. AND DEAR SIR: For reasons which seemed weighty and sufficient, I determined in 1864 to quit Methodism, and to enter the Protestant Episcopal Church; and was ordained deacon in 1865, and presbyter in 1866, by your venerated and beloved predecessor, the great and good Bishop Hopkins. As I have not since then removed my canonical residence from Vermont, I address this communication to you, Right Reverend Sir, as my Bishop. A connection of seven years with your church has satisfied me that I made a mistake in entering it. When a man finds that he has taken a false step, the only right course left him is to retrace his way. I therefore propose to return to the communion of my Fathers, in which I was born and nurtured, and in which I hope to end my days. In taking farewell of your branch of the church, I cannot forbear to express my grateful sense of the numberless acts of kindness, which I have received from many of her Bishops, clergy and laity; nor can I withhold the statement that within her pale I have met many of the most sweet, noble and Godly men and women it has ever been my happiness to know. Unspeakably precious are the treasures which I have found in the daily use of the book of "Common Prayer;" and I trust that the fellowship begun with so many of your people, with whom I have taken sweet council, if interrupted here, may be renewed in that world where I, who for so many years have walked beneath a darkened sun, hope to see the King in his beauty, and to behold the land that is very far off. I trust that the manifold good influences, which I have received during my stay in the Protestant Episcopal Church, will abide with me forever; and that my character may be quickened and hallowed by the beautiful examples of piety which I have seen within her pale. But as one advances in years he finds it hard to form new attachments, and the heart turns with inexpressible longing to the friends and associations of earlier days. Nothing has obliterated, nothing can obliterate my deep and yearning love of Methodism, the Spiritual Mother who, under God, bred and made me what I am.

With the utmost respect for yourself, and sentiments of life, long affection for many dear and cherished friends, whose ecclesiastical connection I am quitting, I beg leave herewith to tender my resignation of the ministry in your church, and to subscribe myself Right Reverend and dear Sir, your obedient servant, W. H. MILBURN.

REV. P. M. PINCKARD.

We deeply regret to learn that this well known minister is dead. From the St. Louis Christian Advocate we quote as follows:

The sad intelligence of the death of Bro. Pinckard, on the twenty-third ultimo, at Nevada City, was communicated to this city on Saturday last, by telegram, from that place. Being on a business tour in the interior of the State, he was taken sick there with typhoid fever, about three weeks ago. He was received into the family of Mr. Anderson and five days before his death was removed to the residence of Mr. Jones, in consequence of a fire having communicated to Mr. Anderson's house. He received careful nursing and the kindest attention from the community, and particularly from Masons, and was attended also by Bro. J. A. Murphy, the preacher in charge of our church at Nevada City. His remains were taken in charge by the Masons and brought to this city by a committee. By his request, they are to be interred by the side of his wife in the Preachers' Lot, in Bellefontaine Cemetery. We have been informed that he was entirely rational and exhibited in his last hours the utmost composure. He was fully aware of his condition, and said in answer to inquiry: "I have set my house in order." Being asked what message he wished to send to his children, he responded: "Tell them to put their trust in God."

OUR CHURCH IN BALTIMORE.

A correspondent of the Richmond Christian Advocate says:

Since the close of the camp meeting, a brief account of which I gave your readers in my last letter, the Lord has given our Baltimore churches another glorious blessing. God's cause is prospering in this city. Gracious revivals are progressing at St. Paul's, Trinity, Holland Street and Emanuel. It has been my pleasure to attend some of the meetings at all these churches. Penitents throng the altars night after night, and God's people rejoice together in hope of His glory. There must have been at least from seventy-five to one hundred conversions during the last two weeks, and about an equal number have joined the churches.

Southern Methodism was never in a better condition in this city and neighborhood than it now is. Sinners are awakened, souls converted, and the members of the church much revived; churches are being repaired, new ones building, and others purchased. Central church is undergoing repairs at an expense of two thousand five hundred dollars or three thousand dollars; Dr. Munsey's congregation meanwhile worshiping at Trinity, with Dr. Huston's congregation. The new church on Frederick Avenue will be dedicated in a few weeks. At Pikesville, a Southern Methodist church will be dedicated on next Sabbath. This church has been purchased at the price of four thousand two hundred dollars from the Presbyterians. Bro. Charles T. Cooksey became responsible for the entire amount and paid down one thousand dollars cash to secure this valuable property to our church. The South Baltimore congregation have purchased a lot for the erection of a new house of worship in that section, for which purpose they have eight thousand dollars cash in bank. St. Paul's is now being finished, and it is expected will be dedicated about Christmas. This, I am told, will be one of the handsomest churches in the city. The German work, in charge of Rev. Mr. Blogg, is also prospering. Evidently God is with us.

At a meeting held about two weeks ago to purchase a suitable location as a permanent camp ground in the vicinity of Baltimore, the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars was raised in less than fifteen minutes, and a committee appointed to effect the purchase at an early day.

In my last letter I mentioned the fact that the temperance cause was being greatly revived in this city. The friends of temperance are extending their pickets and advancing their skirmishes at every point of the compass. Notice meetings are organized for Sunday afternoon in South Baltimore at Patterson Park, and at the old White-coat Chapel in the Forrestes. The white banner of temperance waves triumphantly at all these and other localities, and ultimately King Alcohol must bite the dust.

THE SMITHFIELD MARTYRS' MEMORIAL CHURCH.—The Martyrs' Memorial Church, in London, for the district of St. Peter, Clerkenwell, hard by the historic site of the 273 Smithfield martyrdom, was consecrated on St. Peter's day, by the Bishop of London. Its erection has cost £8000, of which the Bishop of London's fund has contributed £1500. On the outside of the building are seventeen beautiful executed statues of the principal martyrs, and five bas-reliefs of scenes of martyrdom, with medallions of Tyndal, Wycliffe and others. The interior (without galleries) will afford sitting accommodation for about 800 persons. Of these 416 are free for the poor and for occasional attendants; and 300 may be let. Round the interior walls are ornamental scrolls, on which are recorded the names, accusations, dates of death and memorable words of the sixty-six persons who were burnt in Smithfield, commencing with William Santre, who suffered in 1400, and finishing with Roger Holland, who was burnt on the twenty-seventh of June, 1558. The causes for which they severally met death are specified. One very noteworthy point is, how many of them suffered for the denial of the Romish dogma of the corporeal presence, which is now made such a cardinal point by the revivers of popery in the Church of England. Against them the Martyrs' Church will be a standing protest.—New York Observer.

MISSOURI CONFERENCE ITEMS.

We condense as follows from the St. Louis Christian Advocate:

The fifty-fifth session of the Missouri Annual Conference was held in the court-house, at Palmyra, September 13–21, A. D. 1872, Bishop D. S. Doggett presiding, Rev. J. D. Vincil secretary, Rev. J. O. Swinney assistant secretary, and Rev. J. H. Pritchett statistical secretary.

Received by Transfer—W. H. Lewis, Joseph S. Smith, B. Margeson and Arthur Kiergan, from the Western Conference; George W. Primrose, from Little Rock Conference; J. H. Ledbetter and M. M. Hawkins, from Alabama Conference.

Admitted on Trial—Lewis F. Linn, Philip C. Cooter, Addison L. Brewer, John J. Pogue, Marshall G. Gregory, Cornelius A. Shearman, Hiram D. Groves, James L. Taylor, Joshua F. Monroe, Alvin P. Parker, John W. Perry, Alexander S. Doak, Henry B. Doak, Peter G. Doak, E. Melvin Mann, John W. Huffaker, Chaney Grimes.

Received from other Churches—Rev. L. Smith, from the Methodist Episcopal Church, in elders' orders.

Remaining on Trial—Horatio Linn, William J. Jackson, John Thrailkeld, John H. Duskey, John Anderson, R. H. G. Keeran, Joseph S. Allen, Milton M. Hawkins.

Readmitted—John W. Ellis.

Admitted into full Connection—Eugene R. Hendrix, William Sartor, John S. Rooker.

Finance—Rev. W. M. Leftwich reported that the American Bible Society had cancelled an old account against the former Book Depository of the Conference.

The collections for the Bishops' fund fell short $230, which was raised by collection in the Conference and the claim ($1350) was paid in full. The following apportionment of the claim for the ensuing year was adopted: St. Charles district, $180; Mexico district, $165; Hannibal district, $180; Fayette district, $180; Macon district, $110; Chillicothe district, $150; Gallatin district, $75; Plattsburg district, $130; St. Joseph district, $180.

The amount collected for the superannuates and widows and orphans of deceased preachers was $2014 25, which was distributed among these claimants as recommended by the Board of Finance. The board reported the probable amount necessary to be raised for the Conference claimants at twenty-five hundred dollars, and recommended the adoption of the plan for raising this collection which was in force last year.

Statistical Reports—The statistical secretary made an admirable tabular statement of various statistics of the Conference from which we take the following: White members 22 379 being an increase of 2281; colored members 46; adult baptisms 1976, an increase of 384; infant baptisms 673, being an increase of 125; support of the ministry $47,681 17; number of churches 200, being an increase of 30; value of churches $411,000, being an increase of $49,850; number of church sittings 55,820, being an increase of 7875; building and repairs of churches during the year $80,116 95; value of parsonages $9200, being an increase of $2300; value of other church property $97,028; number of periodicals circulated 5109.

Missions—The whole amount raised for missions, including the apportionment of the "Old Debt," was $4206 33. The Missionary Anniversary was held on Saturday night, and addressed by W. M. Rush and A. H. Redford, and collection taken amounting to about $200.

Sunday Schools—The committee reported 225 schools in the bounds of the Conference; officers and teachers 1883; scholars 11,539; volumes in library 25,199; money collected for Sabbath school purposes $3767 63. There has been during the year an increase in schools of 17; of officers and teachers 344; of scholars 3677; of volumes in library 1916.

THE river Tiber, on which the city of Rome stands, is to be dredged for the purpose of searching for treasures that for two thousand years have been accumulated in its mud; the statues of dethroned emperors, armor, gold and gems, the priceless spoils of conquest, the ornaments of many a palace, even the spoils of Jerusalem may come up from this watery grave of centuries. The golden candle-stick and other sacred vessels brought to Rome by Titus, are said to have been lost from the Milvian Bridge when the treasures were carried out of the city at a time of invasion.—New York Observer.

SAINT SWITHIN.

The green ears droop, brown are the leaves,
The dust is thick upon the eaves,
The babbling brook has long been dry,
Parched is the earth; the glowing sky
Shows not a cloud athwart the blue,
The unbent rays pierce throughand through
The thickest covert. All in vain
The dying flowers sigh for rain,
For rain, sweet, refreshing, balmy rain.

No more from larch the throstle sings,
Even the skylark folds his wings,
Mute are the reed-birds in the fen,
Mute in the willow bole the wren,
The jay in hedgerow makes no stir,
The magpie shelters in the fir,
The kingfisher and heron in vain
Seek river bank, and pine for rain,
For rain, sweet, blessed, balmy rain.

It comes, it comes! Life-giving shower!
Chirps every bird, expands each flower;
It comes, the long-wished boon divine,
Dew pearls upon the gables shine;
It sparkles on the glistening eaves,
It wipes the dust blight from the eaves,
All earth revives, and sings again,
Glad pæans for the gift of rain,
Rain, rain, sweet, refreshing, balmy rain.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, August 16, 1871.

MR. EDITOR: I find, from some of the home papers and also from letters received, that it is the universal belief that we, one and all, are in imminent danger of immediate annihilation, or that we would at least be driven from the empire of China. Now, let me say a few words in regard to these people. Since the terrible massacre of June, 1870, many exaggerated reports have been speedily passing from one to another, until the minds of many have been filled with uneasiness. But do not imagine we shall be driven from China. The heathen would be glad to drive us from their country, simply because they fear that we are here for some political design, and not that they fear the Chinese are going to embrace Christianity. They cannot comprehend the motive of a Christian missionary in leaving his country, kindred and friends, to promote the welfare and seek the salvation of the people of another country. I say they do not understand why this is done, and simply because they know nothing of the pure and holy religion we profess. They are carnal and understand not the things that are spiritual. I speak of the great mass of Chinese, for thanks be to God, there are a few who can appreciate the motive of the Christian, constrained by the love of Christ.

The great ignorance and superstition of the vast multitude around us is really beyond our conception. The Chinese are not a religious people, and, I suppose, there is no country in the world that would be less troubled than the Chinese by the introduction of a new religion among them. What do they care whether their neighbors embrace one religion or another? They are not at all careful or zealous on this point. What astonishes the missionary is the indifference of all the Chinese, high and low, to any religious system, which has for its object to make the people better and more spiritually-minded. The people are more zealous for the worship of their ancestors, and they imagine that the man who neglects this duty will surely come to some bad end. With some no religious act could be more important, and to neglect it would be considered a great crime. Now this ancestral worship is a part and parcel of the idolatry of this country, and to take no notice of it, in admitting members into the Christian church, would be to encourage it. And those who observe it and will not forego it, should not, under any consideration, be admitted into the church. It is, undoubtedly, a religious observance, and one very dear to the people, and should be watched and guarded against by every missionary. The Roman Catholics are not at all careful, and they admit even those who continue to observe this religious rite, and on that account they have been able to add largely to their church. Some ten years since, after the English and French had taken possession of the city of Pekin, there was a Roman Catholic bishop in the city at the same time, who was very fond of taking his snuff. The Chinese in the north are also fond of their snuff. As the good bishop passed along the street he would hand his snuff from one to another, and as each was taking a little, the bishop baptized them and pronounced them members of the good Catholic Church. Thousands fly to the Roman Catholic Church for protection from the Chinese officials, and it is this that has caused so much trouble.

As I have often said, the "Fung Shui" or (wind and water) superstition exerts a powerful influence over these poor heathen in a thousand ways. The location of their houses and graves are selected according to this. If a suitable place is selected, they expect health, wealth, and everything that could make them happy in this life, and give them rest and peace to the soul after death. Anything out of a general way, such as an elevated building, or some innovation different from what their forefathers had experienced, upsets the genial influence of this strange current "Fung Shui," and creates confusion throughout the whole community. For instance, a man or woman has died suddenly, and, of course, mysteriously, just then; all believe it is on account of an interference with this supposed much-to-be-dreaded object—they know not what. This is not only a great obstacle to the introduction of Christianity into China, but it thoroughly opposes all Western science. If a missionary should live in the interior, he must build his house or chapel after the style of the nation, in order not to give any offense. The Roman Catholics have been compelled to do this for centuries. Our native converts meet with much opposition from their heathen neighbors, friends and relations, and they point to them and say in a sneering way: "They are no longer Chinamen. They have forsaken the old path, and have cast aside their ancestors and have taken up the ancestors of foreigners."

The manner in which Roman Catholics have acted, hitherto, has given uneasiness to the civil government of China, and it is for this reason there is so much opposition to Protestants, as well as Roman Catholics. The Chinese are not able to distinguish between one and the other, and, hence, their confusion. They fear there is some design, on the part of those who profess Christianity, of a political nature. It is for this reason the Roman Catholics are watched and hated by almost all classes, for the Chinese have not forgotten the political designs once entertained by them more than two centuries since, which cost them many lives. But nothing of the kind has been done by any foreign government or by any Protestant missionary which could be looked upon in that light. Recently, Mr. Low, the United States minister at Pekin, in answer to a document from the cabinet of the Pekin government, in which it was stated that all missionary operations should cease in China, or nearly to that effect, he desired them to cite one instance of a Protestant missionary acting in such a way as to cause a disturbance with the government officials. All the cases named were Roman Catholics, and not one Protestant. The Protestant missionary has always urged the converts of Christianity to be subject to the authority of the civil government. The document referred to may be divided into eight heads, thus: 1, "The registration of all children received into Roman Catholic orphanages. 2. The prohibition of women from teaching religion. 3. That the missionaries should teach their own religion, without disparaging that of the natives. 4. That the fact of a man's being a convert to Christianity does not denationalize him, and, consequently, gives the missionary no right to interfere in shielding him from the laws of the country. 5. That the passports of missionaries should be limited to the precise scene of their labor. 6. That the missionaries should not be permitted to make converts of criminals, or persons who have been convicted of crime. 7. That the missionaries should take rank with the native literati, and conform to the same strict rules of ceremony which that class is compelled to observe in its communications with the mandarins, etc. 8. That the missionaries must obtain a government license before purchasing ground and building a chapel on it, or conducting divine service anywhere." This entire document has a strict reference to Roman Catholics and not to Protestants. There is but one clause which could touch or interfere with the Protestant missionary at all, and that is the one in regard to his passport. There are no women engaged in preaching religion, and instead of the people showing any animosity for the wife of the missionary, it is just the reverse. The missionary's wife is engaged in good works and charitable deeds, doing all she can to relieve the poor and distressed, and thus she becomes endeared to these around her. This, I know, from many years' experience. Sometime since, a missionary who labored long among the Chinese, died and left a widow who was so beloved by the converts, as well as others, that they besought her to remain among them, and when not being able to stay longer, she was helped greatly out of their small means to pay her way home. And many other instances might be given to show that it is not from the people who know the missionaries that a feeling of animosity springs, but from the officials, who are corrupt in all their actions, and would not, under any consideration, wish to see justice and morality prevail in the land. Nothing but the power of the gospel will ever save this people and their rulers.

I remain yours in the love of Christ, J. W. LAMBUTH.

SERIOUS REFLECTION.

MR. EDITOR: The year is passing away, and soon the church, through her delegates, will assemble in council. Reports of work done, results achieved and labors to be undertaken, will then be made and considered. Will you permit one item to your columns, for serious reflection before the Conference meeting.

If our ministerial brethren and membership will give it that careful attention it demands, good will result. Our last year's report shows a membership of eleven thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven—quite a respectable body. But when we look over the field of our labors and behold the multitude who are opposing our Master, the destitution of spiritual teaching in a large part of this field, and hear singing in our ears: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," and then turn to the financial showing, as set forth in said annual report, can it be said, that, as a church, we are doing our Master's service as he commands? A fraction over three dollars per capita, given by these soldiers of Zion's kingdom for his service.—Well, is that not pretty well done. Look at our poverty, and then remember the burden of taxation and the dishonesty of the times, and the worm, the rain and the storm, and be charitable enough to consider that our groceries cost a deal of money, and our position in society demands a genteel and becoming adornment of the person; and besides, just remember, that in other times we indulged our palates and tastes in the use of good things, and you do not wish us to forego at once these comforts. All this, my fellow-Christian, will be admitted at your request, and then what? Have you shifted your responsibility from its proper bearing upon yourself? Can you, as a follower of Christ, quiet your conscience with the twaddle of the world? Are not the words "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth," "but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven," "for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also," as imperatively binding upon you as upon those who heard them from the mouth of the great Teacher? And can you expect your blessed Master's cause to be advanced by your instrumentality, and to make headway against the powers of darkness, in your day, when you hoard up his gifts to you for your own selfish ends? O, thou giver of every good gift hast thou children who begrudge thee a small share of the bounties thou bestowed?

If it be thus, whence arises the evil? Reader, search thine own heart, and if thine heart condemns thee, know that God is the sovereign of the heart and knoweth it altogether. But a word to the pastors. Have you, my brethren, taught according to Ezekiel 33, or First Timothy 2. If the watchman give not warning, the sin will be his. If he fail to faithfully instruct the people of his charge in all their duty, upon him rests a great responsibility. Our leanness and spiritual poverty is owing to our unfaithfulness. Think of these things. Pray over them. INDAMERA.

LAKE CHARLES, Sept. 19, 1871.

CALL TO THE MINISTRY.

MR. EDITOR: I love my mother (Alabama Conference) and will honor her whenever in my power to do so. But I see her much revered name to an article on the above mentioned subject in the ADVOCATE of August 10, which I cannot indorse; and, therefore, I hope you will allow me space in your columns to enter, with due deference, my modest and brief protest. The writer of the article referred to, after admitting the "Woe is unto me" method is "a mode used by the divine Spirit," says: "But I do not believe it is the only one, nor even the one generally used to call men into the ministry." But he does not undertake to tell us what is the "one generally used," only by giving us a catalogue of religious feelings, most of which, we presume, every live Christian in the world has, and all of which, we presume the patriotic Nehemiah had, and yet God never called him to be a prophet, nor a preacher. It is true, the writer referred to attempts to parse away the force of St. Paul's expression in First Corinthians, chapter 9, verse 16; but we think he makes a signal failure, inasmuch as a woe is a woe, present or future. Another very feeble argument, by which he attempts to sustain his position, is the remark of one of our good bishops: That he (the bishop) esteemed it a privilege to preach the gospel. Yes, of course, he does, and we presume the great apostle, who said: "Necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel," would, when standing on Mars' Hill, or even in sight of Nero's block, have joined the bishop in his remark. And we are sure that Jonah, when walking the streets of Nineveh and crying, in "forty days, in forty days!" felt that it was a most blessed privilege to preach. But where had he just been, and what had been his feelings a few hours previous to his entry upon the work of the ministry? We presume that he, while in the fish, could have used the apostle's expression above cited, both in the present and future tense, and said, woe is unto me and woe will be unto me, that I did not preach to those miserable sinners. And we had thought that every truly called minister, while he feels that the cross is heavy, the responsibility fearful, and the duty impellent, yet feels that it is an inestimable privilege to preach the gospel. Not, perhaps, so much on account of the exceeding highness, the immaculate purity and undying importance of the calling; but because it is the only one in which he can find peace with his God. And now, Mr. Editor, the thing against which we protest is: The idea that every pious young man "who does not desire money except to relieve the distressed, or help the gospel, and who does not care for the praise of men, and is unwilling to contend for the crowns of bay and carnal, and whose most pious friends think he ought to preach, and whose pious parents have prayed a thousand times to the Lord to put him into the ministry," etc., should be recognized as called of God to the work of the ministry. Our grounds of protestation are briefly: 1. An enlightened zeal for God, which should exist in every pious heart, would prompt all the feelings in the catalogue above cited. 2. All those pious feelings may find exercise and outlets in other fields of labor than that of the ministry. We need stewards, leaders and private members, all aglow with such feelings. 3. We deny the right of parents to "dedicate" their children to any special work of the Lord. We think parents ought to "dedicate" their children to God's service, and leave it with God to point out the specific field in which he would have them labor. And, in conclusion, we would admonish our own dear old mother, if she is the author of the article in question, which we do not believe, unless in her rejuvenescence, which (as you, Mr. Editor, are aware) took place last winter. She took some new and strange element into her composition; but, if so, we repeat, we would admonish her to look for the old paths, marked out by preachers of the Old and New Testament, and pursued by most of our fathers; and rest assured, that if God wants a preacher, he will not "speak so softly," or "touch so gently," as not to make "Jonah" feel, hear and understand. AUTAUGA CIRCUIT.

ROBINSON'S SPRINGS, ALA., Sept. 13, 1871.

JEPHTHAH'S DAUGHTER.

I know of no story in the historical records of the Old Testament so profoundly pathetic as the story of Jephthah's daughter. Jacob, weeping over the bloody garment of his son, moves our tender compassion, but the story of Jephthah's daughter is sad, beyond all comparison.

Jephthah must have been a man of superior abilities; he certainly possessed talents of no common order, for he was chosen to lead the army of the Israelites against the children of Ammon. But a large share of superstition must have mingled with his belief. His vow seems to have been an attempt to purchase from God a victory over his enemies.

Jephthah vowed unto the Lord, and said: "If thou shalt, without fail, deliver the children of Ammon into my hands, then it shall be that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely be the Lord's; and I will offer it up for a burnt offering." And the Lord delivered the children of Ammon into his hands.

But we are not to suppose that Jephthah's vow had any influence with the Supreme Being. God had determined to deliver the children of Ammon into the hands of the Israelites; and would assuredly had done so, had Jephthah's rash vow never been made. That God, who had said: "Thou shalt not kill," never intended to sanction such a vow as that.

And now Jephthah is returning in triumph to his house in Mizpeh.

"Listen, mother, I hear the sound of his chariot wheels."

And the beautiful daughter goes forth in her innocent gladness, with timbrel and dance, to meet the beloved father, the victorious warrior. Alas! Alas!

"Who is it that comes to meet me?"

"Oh, Jephthah, Jephthah, it is thine only child, beside her thou hast neither son nor daughter."

What words can paint the agony of that father. The victorious warrior trembles. Ah, his limbs are weak as an infant's now. He staggers in his chariot. He turns his eyes away from the beloved form.

"Alas! my daughter, thou hast brought me very low; thou art one of those that trouble me, for I have opened my mouth to the Lord, and I cannot go back."

And what is it that she says? with unruffled brow and unmurmuring lip.

"My father, if thou hast opened thy mouth to the Lord, do with me according to thy vow."

And in the bright morning of her life, in her sweet maidenhood, she gives herself up to die, that her father's vow may not be broken. She asks but for two months, that she may wander up and down on the mountains with her companions, the young Jewish maidens, to mourn, not for herself, but that she will leave her father childless.

And it came to pass, that at the end of two months she returned to her father, and he did unto her according to the vow which he had vowed. And it was a custom in Israel, that the daughters of Israel went yearly to lament the daughter of Jephthah, the Gileadite, four days in a year.

But the iron had entered into Jephthah's soul; the arrow had struck home; he survived his daughter only a few years, and those years must have been years of bitterness, of wasting grief, of unavailing regret.

WEST FELICIANA, Sept. 5, 1871. O. A. W.

A DRUNKARD'S CONFESSION.

MR. EDITOR: I have just finished reading the communication of Mr. J. Nicholson, upon the subject of drunkenness, published in your paper of the seventh instant, all of which I heartily approve. I am a drunkard, and have been for the last twenty-five years, and am at this moment under the influence of whisky, and am laboring under such a state of nervous excitement from its effects, that I can scarcely write this article, as you see from the writing. I am also laboring under such a state of mental anguish, on account of my debasement, that I feel that I am suffering all the torments of the wicked who have no hope hereafter. Mr. Nicholson says that he has known "some of the worst drunkards who have been reformed." That is the point I wish to arrive at, and if Mr. Nicholson will inform me through your paper, how it was brought about, I should never cease to be under obligations to him. I have tried the strength of my own will, and that has failed. I have prayed as earnestly to the good Lord to help me to quit the vile practice of whisky-drinking, and have received no encouragement from that direction. I have, therefore, almost come to the conclusion that he will not listen to the prayers of a drunkard. I am tired and weary of being a drunkard. I wish to be a Christian and, of course, a gentleman, but I am persuaded, in my own mind, that I shall never be the one or the other, so long as I drink whisky. I think that God will not believe a drunkard's prayer. I know, myself, that there is not much sincerity in any drunkard's assertion, under almost any circumstance, even to his fellow. How, then, would the Lord put any confidence in the prayers of a man, whose body is contaminated with whisky. I think that a man, whose body is under the influence of one drop of whisky, is just as much a drunkard as if he had taken a gallon of whisky, if he took it socially. A temperate man has but a poor appreciation of a drunkard's feelings. In fact, he knows nothing about it. I have many friends, like myself, who would be glad to become sober men, if they knew how. All drunkards are cowards upon that subject. There is a fascination about drinking whisky, which I cannot even describe myself. I know and feel its evil effects. I see plainly the unhappiness it causes my family and friends. I feel my own degradation and shame, and with all these facts staring me in the face, I cannot refrain. You will say, that is for the want of true moral courage. You are right; it is. I know it. There is not one drunkard in a hundred who has any moral courage at all, and I am not that exception. A drunkard may become a thief, a liar, may commit murder and, indeed, be guilty of all the crimes in the catalogue, when under the influence of whisky, which, when sober, he would know nothing at all about. I have done some of the worst things myself, and when told about it afterward, when I was sober, have denied it emphatically, because the idea was so shocking to me, that I could not believe it possible, although my wife and children said it was true. But I have given enough of my own experience. It is bad enough, and the whole is not told. I wish to say, that I have not disgraced any church by being a member. I want to become a sober man first, and if Mr. Nicholson, or any one else, will show me the plan, I will willingly and cheerfully try. I am a constant reader of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, Episcopal Methodist and Western Methodist, and always look for something about drunkards first, to see if I can find anything to encourage me in trying to become a sober man; I mean, some prescription to be taken as a medicine, which would answer for the time, in the place of whisky, so that I could leave off the habit. There is an inebriate asylum in Baltimore, I think, which was established by Christian people, for the purpose of reclaiming drunkards, as a charity. Now, if Mr. Poisal would publish the plan in his paper, it might be the means of reclaiming many of us in this place. TOPER.

OCTOBER.

Sweet as the voice that calls
From babbling waterfalls
In meadows where the downy weeds are flying;
And the soft breezes blow,
And eddying come and go,
In faded gardens where the rose is dying.

Among the stubble corn
The hill the quail pipes at morn,
The merry partridge drums in hidden places,
And glittering insects gleam
Where busy spiders spin their filmy laces.

At eve cool shadows fall
Across the garden wall,
And on the clustered grapes to purple turning.
And pearly vapors lie
Along the Eastern sky,
Where the broad harvest-moon is redly burning.

Ah, soon on field and hill
The wind shall whistle chill,
And patriarch swallows call their flocks together,
To fly from frost and snow,
To seek for lands where blow
The fairer blossoms of a balmier weather.

The cricket chirps all day,
"O, fairest summer sky!"
The squirrel eyes askance the chesnut browning;
The wild fowl fly afar
And hasten southward ere the skies are frowning.

Now comes a fragrant breeze,
Through the dark cedar trees,
And round about my temples fondly lingers,
In gentle playfulness,
Like to the soft caress
Bestowed in happier days by loving fingers.

Yet, though a sense of grief
Comes with the falling leaf,
And memory makes the summer doubly pleasant,
In all my autumn dreams
A future summer gleams,
Passing the fairest glories of the present!

What the Hebrews Knew of Farming.

In his laws Moses made agriculture the basis of the State. According to this principle he apportioned to every citizen a certain portion of land, marked by fixed boundaries. Land-grabbing speculations were prevented by the law, which required all lands in the commonwealth to revert to the heirs of the original owners on the jubilee year. The occupation of the farmer was held in honor from being thus protected by the fundamental law of the State. None were so rich or noble as to disdain to put their hand to the plow (1 Kings xix, 19; 2 Chron. xxvi, 10). Various means were resorted to by the Hebrews to increase the fertility of their soil. The stones were gathered and built into walls, water was brought in aquednets from great distances, and many kinds of manure were used. The hills were terraced to the very tops, and planted with vineyards and gardeus. They cultivated wheat, barley, millet, beans, and perhaps rice. (Isa. xxviii, 25). In agricultural implements the Hebrews were not so far behind the present age as we are prone to think. Isaiah lived seven hundred years before Christ, yet in his day iron plows were in use, for he prophesied of the time when swords should be turned to plowshares and spears to pruning hooks. This passage shows, too, that they had instruments for pruning vines and trees. The animals used in plowing were cattle and donkeys. Horses were not in common use among the Hebrews. The original method of harvesting grain was to pull up by the roots, but sickles were used among the Hebrews from the time of Joshua. Harvest among them was a time of rejoicing, cheerful songs being heard in every field. Threshing was effected by flails, the feet of animals, or by drags or rollers. Vineyards and olive groves were extensively and carefully cultivated. Culinary plants and fruit trees were among the first objects of attention. Palestine was said to flow with milk and honey. Bees were highly esteemed. Their hives were made of clay mixed with straw, but stores of honey were often found in hollow trees and fissures of the rocks. (Psalm lxxxi, 16). One remarkable provision of the Mosaic law in regard to agriculture was the Sabbatic year. (Lev. xxv, 1–7). Every seventh year was a year of rest, not so much to the farmer as to the farm. Nothing was sown, and nothing was reaped; the vines were not pruned; there was no gathering of fruit. The object of this regulation seems to have been to preserve the wild beasts, to let the land recover strength, and to teach the people to be provident and look out for the future. But the year was not spent in idleness. The people could hunt, fish, look after their bees and flocks, repair their buildings or furniture, manufacture cloth, or carry on commerce.—Journal of Chemistry.

THE TRUE CENTER.

The old astronomers taught by Ptolemy held that our earth was fixed in the center of the universe, and that all the magnificence of the heavens rolled around it. In our days the Ptolemaists in astronomy have almost died out, but of Ptolemaists in theology there are not a few; I mean the teachers who make men the center of their system, and talk so much of the divine in man, and even of collective humility, as the only God they know. On these, however, I need not dwell; I cannot think we are in much danger from that quarter. But it may not be amiss to ask: What is the center of our system? Ought we not be careful to see that point distinctly, and then earnestly contend for it against all adversaries?

I hear a voice that says: "I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." It was a master in Israel who said that; one who had as much sweetness and light as Mathew Arnold, and was neither a Philistine nor a fanatic. "Christ crucified," says the apostles; not Christ on the manger, not Christ in the miracle, not Christ on the mount, not Christ on the millennial throne, but Christ on the cross; and by this I understand, comparing Scripture with Scriptnre, Christ the Substitute, Christ the Prepitiation. I know, indeed, it is fashionable new-a-days, to deny any legal influence of the death of Christ, and to insist only on its moral influence. It may be fashienable, but I held it to be fatal; and fatal among other things, to the moral influence itself. If sin be something that can be forgiven without any atonement, it is something that I shall commit without remorse. If God winks at it, I shall wink at it. If the lawgiver takes it easily, the law-breaker will not take it hard. The moral influence of the cross of Christ I would uphold as earnestly as any man; but for that very reason I would uphold the legal influence, and this I cannot do without teaching a real propitiation—Christ crucified, the Substitute for the guilty—Christ crucified, a curse for us. Oh, but, say they, we want a living Saviour! So do I. We want a personal companion and ever-present friend! So do I. We want a hand to grasp, a heart to lean upon! And so, God knows, do I. I want a living Saviour; but he must be one that liveth and was dead. I want a personal companion, an ever-present friend; but he must be one that loved me, and gave himself for me. I want a hand to grasp and a heart to lean upon; but it must be a hand in which I can feel the print of the nails, and a heart that throbs against the scar where it once broke for me.

Bear with me, brethren. I am speaking to you very freely. But it does seem to me that the offense of the cross has not yet ceased. On every hand I seem to hear the cry: "Let Him come down from the cross, and we will believe Him." And, therefore, I would cry aloud in return: "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of my Lord Jesus Christ." I desire, therefore, to keep the cross the center of my system. I wish, on whatever are of the circumference I may travel, to point inward to that center. And I am sure that those of you who can describe a large circle, and take a far grander sweep than I, may yet be followers of the apostle, and know nothing among men save Jesus Christ and Him crucified."—New York Observer.

SCRIPTURAL DANCING.

A history of the burdens which have been laid upon Scripture would be one of the "curiosities of literature." There is scarcely any practice or opinion for which controversialists in their eagerness have not sought authority in the Bible. We supposed that all tolerably intelligent people know the difference between the dancing described in the Bible and the modern dance. But here is the New York Tribune, which rarely blunders in its history, gravely citing David's dance before the ark as a testimony in favor of the modern ball. So we judge it cannot be useless to go over the old, and, as we thought, familiar ground once more.

The dancing of the Bible then was generally, though not exclusively, a religious ceremony. The dancers usually carried their instruments in their hands, and danced to their own accompaniment. As in the Oriental dance of the present day, the evolutions as well as the songs were extemporaneous. They were always performed by the sexes separately. There is no evidence from sacred history that the diversion was ever promiscuously enjoyed, except possibly at the erection of the deified calf, when, in imitation of the Egyptian festival of Apis, all classes of the Hebrews intermingled in the frantic revelry. In the sacred dances, although both sexes seem to have frequently borne a part in the procession or chorus, they remained in distinct and separate companies.

From being principally reserved for occasions of worship, dancing came gradually to be practiced in common entertainments. In early times, indeed, those who perverted the exercise from a sacred use to purposes of amusement were considered profane and infamous, and Job denounces as a distinguishing feature, characteristic of the ungodly rich, that they encouraged a taste for dancing in their families. It was not till the classic ages of Greece and Rome that society underwent a revolution of sentiment on the subject. Under the patronage of the emperors, and of their luxurious tributaries, like Herod, dancing was carried to the utmost perfection, and was often of the most licentious description. But it derives no line or word of sanction from the Bible. And it derives as little from the early church. All promiscuous and immodest dancing of men and women together was forbidden among the early Christians, and Chrysostom declaims against promiscuous dancing as one of those pomps of Satan which men renounce in their baptism.

We do not venture here into a discussion of the modern dance. But we do enter our protest against deriving any argument for it from the religious dances of the Hebrews, which bear as little resemblance to it as the Greek drama in its purity bears to the modern opera bouffe. One might as well argue for the modern prize-ring because Paul says he has "fought a good fight," as contend for a modern ball because David danced before the ark of the Lord.—Christian Weekly.

JUST AS YOU ARE.

Anxious sinner! hasten, O hasten to Christ, just as you are.

Just as you are; for He came to save just such sinners as you are. Had there been no sinners, He had never made atonement; He had never invited men unto Himself; He had never authorized the offer of mercy. If you come in any other character than that of a guilty, ruined sinner, you mistake the grand feature of salvation, and assuredly will never experience its blessedness.

Just as you are; or you will never be any better prepared. You have spent a whole life time, long or short, in trying to make yourself good; but God loathes you more and more as you go about to establish your own righteousness. All you can do has no merit, and will never procure the favor of Him from whom alone must come the blessing.

Just as you are; for He waits to be gracious to you. He has invited you as a sinner; why should you wish to present yourself in any other character?

Just as you are; for His grace is infinite, and cannot fail to cover the whole extent and enormity of your guilt. Did He not know the whole case of ruined sinners when He undertook the work of redemption? Has He not all fullness in Himself, and can there be a case so desperate that he cannot rescue and save?

Just as you are; for it is only as a sinner saved that you will have any disposition or capacity to rejoice or to join in the blessed anthems of the redeemed. O! what is the theme of their present and their eternal praises, but the grace that has made them white in the blood of the Lamb?

Just as you are; for He may not wait longer if you delay. Hell is peopled with those who have refused until the compassionate Saviour has turned from them, and wept over the infatuation that decided their ruin.

Just as you are; for you have nothing else to give. Penances of no account with him; all your righteousness is but as filthy rags; even your confessions, and lamentations, and self-reproaches render you not more acceptable in His sight. O, then wait no longer, but make the resolve to go to Jesus just as you are. Give yourself up to Him, to be saved just as he sees fit to save, and say:

"Here, Lord, I give myself away—
'Tis all that I can do."

"For I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."—Matt. ix, 13.

"Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."—Rev. xxii, 17.

Original Letter of the Late Rev. Richard Watson.

The subjoined letter of the never-to-be-forgotten Richard Watson, was addressed to the Rev. William Woon, missionary at Mangungu, New Zealand. As it contains some advice appropriate to young ministers, as well as missionaries, I send it to you; if you deem it worthy of a place in the Herald, you will thereby gratify, yours truly,

DAVID NASH.

No. 77 HATTON GARDEN, Sept. 17, 1832.

MY DEAR BROTHER: I have written to the chairman, Mr. Thomas, introducing the brethren who, by God's blessing upon them will have been conducted safely to you, to present you with this letter.

I have seen, in your communications with the committee, the good use you are making of the press. You are now a printer indeed! A noble business, my brother, when you can by it not only speak for Christ, but make your own and others' speaking to be heard and understood where your living voice cannot reach, and after you are dead. Even elementary books will convey elementary instruction of the most lasting and saving character. These thoughts will help you to pull your press, and move your letters joyfully. At any stage you may say: "This is God's work, and I do it unto Him." Should you ever have somewhat more labor than others, you will have the greater blessing. Still, by training up native, you may relieve yourself, in time, of the drudgery of the press, although the direction and management will remain with you.

I have concluded my three years in your old circuit (that of City Road), in great happiness and harmony, and in none more than with the local preachers, who have given me great satisfaction. The congregations are all good, and the work is hopeful. Death has made progress of late among us. Dr. Clarke, Mrs. Storry, Mr. Scarlett, and others, have been called away, so that we shall soon meet together from the ends of the earth, in our Father's kingdom, and what will it matter where we have died, whether in London or in Tonga?*

Mrs. Tucker will, I think, be a great acquisition to the mission. She is little in stature, but of great judgment, prudence, and piety. She is the daughter of Mr. John Hall, of Bristol, of whom, I dare say, you have heard. Give my love to the brethren, from whom we delight to hear often and much. Only aim at being true Methodist missionaries, preaching the religion of the heart, living in its full influence, having nothing to do but to save souls; despising ease, indulgence, show; living in perfect harmony and affection; honoring one another, reading often, and making your rule St. Paul's Epistles to Timothy and Titus; then God will be with you. You will save your own souls, and them that hear you. Keep far from worldly things, and civil disputes with the natives. Show them that your work is higher.

May you have health and peace, through Jesus Christ. I beg my kind regards to Mrs. Woon, and am, dear sir, yours affectionately,

RICHARD WATSON.

P. S.—I advise you and all the brethren to read daily with the Scriptures, books of stirring experimental piety. This is a very important means of grace. R. W.

*Mr. Woon was stationed at Tonga, Friendly Islands, when this letter was written, and afterward removed to New Zealand.

FATHER GAVAZZI recently delivered a lecture at Dublin, in which the progress of Protestantism in Rome received partienlar attention. The first advance of the anti-Catholic movement in the Papal States was after the downfall of the first French empire. Protestants were then permitted to practice their own worship outside of the city gates. Two English churches, two Scottish churches, and an American church, are still outside of Rome proper, and their edifices, says Gavazzi, resemble "old rough barns." The Bible at that time was forbidden, and the Father in his discourse spoke of the frequent trials resulting from tourists carrying the sacred volume with them for private use. The change wrought by the loss of the temporal power is thus depicted in the lecture: "Now the Bible is a free book in Rome. We have eight colporteurs selling it without difficulty everywhere. (Applause). They sell it publicly in the market squares everywhere, and several thousand copies are already in circulation among the Romans. (Loud applause). There is another great fact—namely, that an English lady has sold two thousand copies of the New Testament in a quarter exclusively occupied by Jews. (Hear). That is a great triumph. (Applause). More than that, I can point out to you a standing triumph which defies all the impotent rage of the Pope. Do not forget that the Bible was in Rome the forbidden book. Now, when you enter Rome, and pass that great and beautiful square called the Corso, which is the largest in the city, the first thing you meet is a beautiful shop, neatly fitted up, with a large inscription in golden letters: 'General Depot of the London Bible Society.' (Enthusiastic cheers). That is something. The Bible, once forbidden in Rome, is now sold in a large and beautiful depot, in the largest street, in immense variety, in all languages. (Applause). That is something new and extraordinary for Rome. (Hear, hear). But there is a culminating point in the transaction. That shop faces the Vatican, which stands on the other side. (Laughter and cheers). Even without an opera-glass the Pope can see the General Depot of the London Bible Society. (Loud laughter)." Of Protestant churches we are told that there are now in Rome five regular congregations—two of the Free Church, of which Father Gavazzi is an evangelist; one of the Waldensians, and one of the Baptists. Throughout Italy there are also one hundred congregations, with ten thousand communicants and three hundred thousand catechumens.

BEWARE of evil thoughts. They have done great mischief in the world. Bad thoughts come first, bad words follow, and bad deeds finish the progress. Watch against them. Strive against them. Pray against them. They prepare the way for the enemy of souls.

Bad thought's a thief; he acts his part,
Creeps through the windows of the heart;
And if he once his way can win,
He lets a hundred robbers in.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THERE were four thousand two hundred and thirty-three fewer additions by examination to the Presbyterian churches last year than the year before; in view of which the Presbyterian asks if money raising did not interfere with labors for the impenitent. Churches, like individuals, can have but one absorbing interest before them at a time.

CONVERSION OF DOMINICAN FRIARS. It is stated that Father Aguas, the celebrated friar, lately converted to the Protestant faith in Mexico, is making a great impression upon the people of that city by his powerful preaching. A Dominican Friar in Rome, who has renounced the papacy, is now preaching with effect the gospel of Christ, almost under the shadow of St. Peter's.

REV. ARTHUR MITCHELL says, in the Interior, that west of the Alleghanies there are five hundred Presbyterian churches without pastors; that annually, in that section of the country, forty ministers, on an average, die, and one hundred new churches are formed; and that in the six theological seminaries connected with the denomination, there are at present about four hundred and fifty students.

AT the session of the New York Central Baptist Association (Free-will Baptists), held at Fairport, it was stated that the regular Baptists in the United States show signs of a revision of judgment in the matter of close communion. Dr. Caswell, of Brown University, and Rev. Dr. Dodge, of Madison University, were mentioned as on the liberal side. It was also asserted that "within the next two months more than one hundred able, distinguished and influential ministers belonging to the Close Communion Baptist body would unite in making a public protest and declaration in behalf of entire toleration on the communion question."

THE Presbyterian has been making an examination of the record of church benevolence, as shown not only by the body which it specially represents, but also by three other prominent denominations. Its final result is as follows:

	Communicants.	Contributions.
Baptist	1,419,493	$516,764
Methodist Episc.	1,298,938	957,138
Presbyterian	455,378	1,444,388
Prot. Episcopal	176,686	242,032

The deduction from these figures is, that "the Presbyterians contribute nearly six times as much as the Episcopalians, nearly three times as much as the Baptists, and half as much again as the Methodists, for their benevolent purposes." Or, stated in another form, "The Baptist average thirty-six cents a communicant; the Methodists seventy-four cents; the Episcopalians $1 37; the Presbyterians $3 17." Last year, indeed, the Presbyterian average was $5 40. This excess in contributions is attributed partly to the excellent system of collections, but mainly to positive denominational superiority in benevolence.

THE great reformation in Germany is steadily gaining ground. Three thousand families in Vienna have applied to the minister of religion for permission to have mass performed in the cathedral by priests who have remained faithful to the "pure old Christian doctrine." The old Catholics are organizing throughout Bohemia and Corinthia, and they have started their first newspaper. A fund has been started for the support of priests who may be excommunicated or deprived of their benefices for opposing the dogma of papal infallibility. Above all, a thorough understanding has been reached that this movement shall not rest with repudiating the new dogma; but that a general reform of the church must now take place. The laity must be admitted to power in the church, and the whole scheme of church dogma must be revised. Singularly enough, this movement seems to be quite as strong among the Catholics of Austria and South Germany as in the northern countries. The Ultramontane bishops in Hungary having threatened to bring suit against Herr Pauler, the minister of instruction, for refusing to allow the promulgation of the dogma, Francis Joseph has himself written a letter rebuking them. In answer to this, shall we hear a fulmination from Fulda, against the "aggressive policy" of the emperor? The fact is, that the enormous pretensions of the Ultramontanes have alarmed the potentates and incensed the people; and an opposition to them has been aroused that will not cease till their prestige is broken.

IT WOULD appear from a statement of Rev. Mr. Williamson, agent in China of the Bible Society of Scotland, that the Greek Church, under the patronage of the Russian government, is already at work by its missionaries in many important localities of Mongolia, Manchuria and Siberia—men, he says, who are laboring with zeal and intelligence. He also represents their views of divine truth as much more scriptural than we have generally supposed the Greek Church to teach. Mr. Edkins, of Pekin, who is of the Church Missionary Society, also speaks of the charge of some Greek bishops as much like the charge of other missionary bishops. The worship of Mary and the saints was alluded to, but only that; and Christ Jesus was set forth as the great mediator between God and man. These Greek missionaries are freely using the Scriptures also—that in the Mongolian language, which was translated by Messrs. Swan and Stallybrass, of the London Missionary Society—together with schoolbooks prepared by them. The Russians have recently purchased of the British and Foreign Bible Society two large cases of these Scriptures, and forwarded them to the Buriats, in Pekin. Nor is this all. They have been purchasing the Scriptures and portions of the Bible in the Manchu language, for the use of the Manchu tribes on the Amoor; and have recently completed a translation of the New Testament in Chinese, for their work among that people. These are very remarkable things to be done by the Greek Church; and yet the statements come from high authority. If they are to be received according to their full import, they indicate a great change in that communion, or else the Greek Church of Russia is very unlike that of Greece itself or of Turkey.

THE Madrid Evangelical Aid Society has lately been formed in London, for the purpose of assisting the Spanish Evangelical Union at Madrid in the spread of the gospel in that city and in the northern provinces of Spain. Its objects are further set forth as follows: "Means have been supplied from Scotland to support seven rising churches in Andalusia, which are being organized after the Presbyterian system, and united by a synod. The help given from England has hardly yet been in proportion to the interest the Spanish reformation ought to awake, and really does awake, in our country. Some English societies have sent out agents to Spain, who have undertaken work in different places. Some have met with success; others have hardly overcome the difficulties which foreigners must always meet. In forming a new committee, it is not intended to originate a new mission. What Spain permanently wants is not so much evangelizing foreigners as the development of a national Spanish reformation. Abstaining, therefore, from the employment of any agency of our own, we propose to furnish Spanish Christians with the help they urgently require. The Evangelical Union of Madrid has a confession of faith in harmony with that of other Evangelical churches. Their excellent pastor, Don Antonio Carrasco, has been honored by God in bringing many souls to the Saviour; and the ministrations of this infant church are so regulated as to secure for its members (now numbering over two hundred) that 'all things shall be done decently and in order.'"

A LARGE PART of the Foreign Missionary for September (Presbyterian) is taken up with letters from Rev. Dr. H. H. Jessup, at Beirut in Syria, giving account of the persecution of a Moslem, named Haj Hassan El Arbaji, servant in a respectable native family at Beirut. He was seized by the police. This man had in a somewhat desultory way, for two years, but frequently during the last three months, attended the Protestant church, but had not yet been baptized. Though illiterate, he is spoken of as an earnest, honest and hard-working man. A protest against this illegal seizure was made to Raouf Pasha, governor of Beirut, by the consuls general of Prussia and America, Messrs. Weber and Johnson, and by Her Britannic Majesty's vice consul, Mr. Jago. The Pasha replied that he was acting under orders from his excellency the Wali (Rashid Pasha), and the utmost favor that the representatives of Europe and America could obtain was that the wretched man might take leave of his wife. At Damascus, he was alternately threatened, cajoled and ill-treated by the Wali and Mustafa Bey, the Mir Alay (chief of police) of Zabayeh, an aggressively fanatical Mohammedan. The matter having come to the notice of Captain Burton, English consul at Damascus, he immediately sent in a demand for the release of the convert, which was curtly and decisively refused by the Wali. The next day, however, he was compelled by Captain Burton's representations to let the man go, privately warning him at the same time, that if he and his family did not quit Beirut within twenty days, he would be sent in irons to Constantinople. The American missionaries, under whose preaching Hassan had become a convert to Protestant Christianity, were active in seeking his relief from persecution, and do not consider the end of this case as by any means reached. The whole record is one of the most interesting in modern missionary experience, and some principles are likely to be established by it, of great importance in missionary work in the Turkish empire, among them the concession, vital and practical, by the government, of the right of a Moslem to leave his faith, and the placing of Moslems and Christians, in this regard, on the same footing.

THE WORM.

There is but one worm that our people are much troubled about. At a time when other unfavorable conditions have operated to shorten the crop, this great enemy has come along to still further reduce the harvest. Perhaps a million of bales may be devoured by this voracious creature, and thus lessen, by many millions of dollars, the amount realized. Had these millions been saved, we can only conjecture where they would have gone. Still, we cannot help meditating upon the fact, that such an enormous sum has gone the way of all the earth, more in dollars and cents, by many times, than the whole Christian world gives to foreign missions, and more than ten thousand preachers get for their yearly services. If this immense sum had not been lost, how much of it would have found its way into the Lord's treasury, and how much richer would the enterprises of the church have been? It will take a great deal of argument, eloquence and religion to overcome the plea which the worm has put into the mouth of those who have, in any degree, felt its ravages. There may be enough left to pay taxes, to keep up a comfortable style of living, something for investment in real estate, or to meet business obligations, but God's share has been devoured.

In ancient times the visitations of destructive insects were interpreted as judgments from the hand of God. The Jews were sorely familiar with the locust, the palmer-worm, the canker-worm and the caterpillar, and these were sent upon them for their sins. The caterpillar, whatever its kind was, doubtless passed through all the developments of the modern worm. The butterfly, the egg, the crawling worm, the cocoon, were all present in the various stages of its being. The circumstances aiding or retarding the growth of the pest were known, and wise observers were busy with their plans to prevent or destroy the evil. The reign of law was then as uniform and absolute as now, there was practical atheism, scientific unbelief, and the ignoring of God in the teeming workshop of nature, as well as in the problems of government and society. The vine withered, the apple tree dried up, the corn was blighted, the locust came, the palmer-worm did his work, and all were accounted for upon natural principles. The unusual conjunction of the heavenly bodies, heat, moisture and the general perverseness of things, afforded an easy solution. Notwithstanding, they were sent, and for a purpose looking to the discipline and punishment of an offending people. Is the worm and grasshopper of our day less under a guiding providence than the insects which wrought such fearful havoc in the times of Joel?

To connect the cotton worm with God and with moral ends, is the last thing that the planter or the merchant thinks of. It is a chance that comes in the common order of nature; a misfortune incident to all pursuits, and is without significance further than its bearings upon the rates of interest or the value of exchange. Nothing short of a Persian famine is likely to make people think of their sins, and the source of their manifold blessings. God's gentlest word speaks in such a mild visitation as the present, but are there ears to hear it? It is the still small voice admonishing, not after, but before the earthquake and the fire. It is rather to arrest our covetousness than to punish us for it, and to remind us how largely God can take when we do not choose to give. The aptitude of men to misinterpret and misapply appears here. The voice of God is made to shut up, where it is designed to open; and it is made the ground of withholding, where its purpose is to lessen and relax the selfish grasp. The worm is hatching, eating and webbing in obedience to a divine command, and it is in accordance with a divine commission that the fields are being stripped. There are few who will not feel the effect in some way and in some degree, but who will recognize the Lord of the harvest in his sovereign sway? If the infinite God does not speak from the field, and in the harvest, he has no voice whatever in the world.

And it is here that we are least disposed to listen and to apply his admonitions. A gentle reminder, far short of a severe judgment, comes to the planter in the diminished results of the year's toil. What he has, speaks eloquently enough of mercy and forbearance; but what he has not, tells in deeper tones that he has been an unfaithful steward. The giver of all keeps back, because we are not worthy to be trusted with such overflowing abundance. We would like to see some godly men make the true application by giving more, because they have made less. How many have tried this remedy for the worm, and how many have the faith thus to improve the lessons of providence which surround them?

The worm has come as a calamity of mild proportions, millions have been swept from our expected gains, and many mourn over their losses, but there is a worm a thousand fold worse than any that now ravages our fields, and a destiny more lamentable than poverty breeds in this world. There is a state "where their worm dieth not," and in which the memory of blighted crops will be as a solace amid the wretchedness of despair. There are worms breeding in the covetous soul more numerous than those that shall feed upon the decaying body, and far more terrible than those that have blasted the pride of earthly husbandry. The rumors that come from hills and bottoms of the injured and half destroyed crops, and oft-repeated alarms about the progress of the work of destruction, are of small moment, compared with the wail which shall come up from the depths of a lost eternity. There is a crop of worms whose period of incubation reaches beyond the boundaries of time, and whose manifestation will be an awful surprise to those who have wasted the opportunities of life.

ON THE PACIFIC.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

STEAMER IDAHO, Sept. 19, 1871.

On Saturday, the sixteenth instant, I took passage on the steamer "Idaho," which runs from Portland to San Francisco, one of the North Pacific steamship line. She is now creaking and rolling herself forward on the broad bosom of the Pacific, and I am in her cabin writing. I cannot but compare the swelling, surging movement of the steamer with that of the stagecoach, with its bound, recoil and precipitate fury, and much prefer this to that. Some one told me that when in the stage, I should wish myself at sea, and when at sea, in the stage, but my calm decision is in favor of the sea route. Sunday was a beautiful day; the Columbia river never looked broader or grander. The frost had fired up the woods just a day or two previous with all the richness of autumn's golden dye, and as we at times neared the steep sides of the river, we could see the gray rocks brightly flecked in patterns of vermilion, emerald, russet and saffron. Astoria sits stiffly on the side of a hill; small and unpromising. It has immense forests behind it, the growth too large to be cleared or disposed of, unless by milling, and that would be a slow business. On its front the river has a width of ten miles. Portland has nothing to fear from this town, though it is within fifteen miles of the mouth of the Columbia. The rich valleys about Portland compensate for its distance from the ocean—twelve hours run by steamer. As I was detained some three days at Portland, waiting for passage, there was ample time to walk about and see the very many evidences it gives of thrift and strength. Tasteful buildings, and costly ones, are springing on every side. How I did wish for $2,000 to buy a church lot, just in the right place, if one had the pick of the whole city. The place has grown suddenly in a different way from its first indications, for the churches are together and not well located. Will the day ever come when the Lord's people will trust Him for a little money! Here are openings on this coast, if there were any one to lend a little money to be returned, like life insurance policies, after death. A good church at Portland would give us a good congregation. As it is, we have none. The Northern Pacific railroad will have a terminus at Puget's sound, and there may spring up then another Pacific center. At present all bids fair to be tributary to Portland. Portland and San Francisco are the keys of this coast, both, in a military, commercial and ecclesiastical point of view. Some years ago, we were offered a fine lot in Portland, but the brother, who is now in heaven, refused to take it, because he thought the town never would come to anything. Well, the church has to survive the faith of some men and the folly of others.

This morning five whales were fluking within rifle shot of our craft, and several large ones have been blowing off and spouting within a quarter of a mile. A considerable business is done in this latitude, in the whaling business, by companies that stay upon the shore. They go out in sailing boats to hunt and capture these huge oil-growing monsters. The boat sails bravely up within a hundred yards of the whale, and a harpoon is discharged from a gun into his side; a line attached to the iron is then run out as far as the whale chooses to go on the surface, but if he starts down the line is quickly cut, and off he goes till next time. But if he stays out the boat hauls up near enough to shoot an explosive ball into him, again and again, until he is captured. One company secured in this way, the past season, twenty-two whales, yielding from thirty to seventy barrels each. Further up the coast, the Sitka Indians capture the whale by attacking him in their light canoes. They plant a barbed iron in him, to which is attached a seal-skin buoy. The whale starts down dragging this big air-bag after him; when he rises they throw another lance in him with another bag to it, and so on until he is fairly worn out of his element and his life with bags and lances.

The swell upon this vast waste of water shows that it has room. The mind attempts to run out five thousand miles to the west, and imagine those distant shores where more than half the world is lived; then it moves up to the crunching floes and packs of polar ice; and then goes southward far past the starry isles of the Southern archipelago; nor scarcely finds rest upon the stern coasts of our Antarctic continent. How vast is the realm of this mighty deep, where storms may exhaust themselves in perpetual rounds, and how mighty is that King of the Floods who has said to this restless force: "Here must thy proud waves be stayed!"

Just this instant one announces that we are in sight of the coast; and, on to-morrow, a kind Providence still permitting, we shall steam through the Golden Gate and tie up at San Francisco.

P. S.—September 20.—I close this just as we are passing into the spacious harbor of San Francisco. We have had a somewhat rough but pleasant passage. It is so near the equinox that we are doubly thankful for a safe passage.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Mount Lebanon Circuit, Louisiana.

Rev. J. H. Jordan, in charge of the Mount Lebanon circuit, writes September 15: "My season of protracted meetings began with the third Sabbath in August, at Arcadia. We had an interesting meeting, which lasted four days. I had no help until the last day. Bro. McCoy, a local preacher, and Bro. Campbell, a Cumberland Presbyterian preacher, came in and rendered good service. But for other arrangements I should have continued the meeting. It resulted in six accessions to the church, and the membership much strengthened.

"On Friday night we reached Mount Lebanon; found a small congregation assembled; very soon had the pleasure of seeing Bro. Crowson, from the Sparta work, who rendered efficient service during the meeting. No one could fail to be profited by his company or his preaching. He is one of our oldest and best preachers. Our congregations were small until Sunday. I think the meeting was profitable; not as much as it might have been had the church been more interested. We closed Sunday night, having received two members by letter, leaving several mourners at the altar.

"Our next appointment was at what is known as Brice's schoolhouse, in a section of country where there has been but little preaching until about a year ago. I was requested by a brother Baptist to give them an appointment. I did so, and soon saw the necessity of an organized church of some kind in this community. I appointed a protracted meeting, which I held a week, almost without help, Bro. Upton preaching once and Bro. Davidson once, during which I opened the doors of the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian churches—(as the people say). I did make a test as to which was the most important for the community. It was for the good of the cause in that community I was laboring, which resulted in organizing an Methodist Episcopal Church South, of twenty-eight members, five of whom have since moved away.

"I served them the best I could last year, and this took it in the Mount Lebanon work. So much for its history up to the meeting, which lasted six days, resulting in one of the most gracious revivals I ever attended, all things considered. I had no assistance except lay members, but the best of all—God was with us—having had twenty-five accessions to the church—many of the brightest conversions; the church, without exception, graciously revived. We now have a membership of fifty-two members and have erected a comfortable church, which is out of debt. Oh! that every community could have such a season of rejoicing."

Lisbon Circuit—Louisiana Conference.

Mr. Editor: I rejoice at the reports of revival influences coming from almost every quarter. The times seem to be most auspicious for Zion. Her triumphs, it seems, are more constantly and generally recorded than ever before. Who cannot take courage? Whose heart will remain untouched, and hands idle, while such glorious demonstrations of the power of Christianity are being made?

I do not write now to relate anything extraordinary on this subject, Mr. Editor; yet I have a matter which I regard as worthy of record. It is due the people of Lisbon (the metropolis of my circuit) to have publicly announced that they have recently built a new church edifice for the Methodist Episcopal Church South, had it dedicated, and on which occasion they were most signally blessed by the divine Head of the church. The church is a very neat frame building, thirty by fifty, is finished, all but the painting, which I hope will be done soon, and is paid for, the entire cost being somewhere between fifteen hundred and two thousand dollars. The house was dedicated on the tenth of September, the sermon being preached by Rev. N. A. Cravens. It was an important occasion, as indicated by the immense throng present. The preaching was in power. Bro. Cravens and Bro. Armstrong, and one or two local brethren, remained with us several days during the progress of the meeting. A deep interest was generally manifested during the whole time of its continuance, and although the seven days' services resulted not in many conversions and accessions to the church (this being a very religious community), yet the church was thoroughly revived. Oh! how the brethren did rejoice together. It was good to be there. The love-feast, class-meeting and prayer-meetings, during the time, were most efficient agencies in promoting harmony and spirituality.

The people here deserve much credit for their noble enterprises. I believe they are alive to most all the interests of the church, and do well considering the few facilities they have. The Sunday school flourishes, prayer meetings are attended to, and I believe the preacher always gets his allowance.

Suffice it to say, for the remainder of the work, that a general religious sentiment prevails. The people everywhere are clamoring for protracted meetings. They want preaching. Ministerial labor is in great demand. O what a field ready to be harvested, and but a few to put in the sickle! Men are perishing for the bread of life, and none to give it. Talk about circuits being too small; we want more preachers; every foot of ground ought to be occupied. Then would we have more religion, and, consequently, a more ample support for the gospel, then more work done and more glorious conquests. But I desist.

Yours truly, Jos. W. Medlock.

ARIZONA, Sept. 20, 1871.

Revival at Midway, Alabama.

Mr. Editor: The Eufaula District Conference convened at Midway, Alabama, September 14, Rev. J. L. Cotton, presided. The attendance was larger than is usual. The business of the Conference was dispatched with perfect satisfaction. The preaching was spiritual. Penitents crowded the altar, and some were converted. The meeting still continues, and up to this date more than fifty have been converted and forty-six added to the church. Dr. Cotton and Rev. J. W. Glenn remained and assisted us. Such a sweeping revival has not been known in this country for years. Dr. A. S. Andrews, president of the Southern University, was present to represent the claims of that institution before the Conference. The Doctor made a fine impression, and carried several young men from East Alabama with him to Greensboro. He is a working man, and knows how to take hold of the people. We predict greater prosperity for the Southern University than ever before. Respectfully, W. H. Wild.

MIDWAY, ALA., Sept. 29, 1871.

Wilkinson Circuit—Mississippi Conference.

Mr. Editor: I have just closed a meeting at Pisgah, of nine days' duration, and, notwithstanding the weather was very unfavorable for several days, our congregations were good. The Lord was with us in great power, the church was greatly revived, sinners were made to tremble and cry out: "What must I do to be saved?" There were thirteen conversions and ten accessions to the church. The meeting closed with many penitents at the altar, three of whom have been converted since the meeting closed, at prayer meeting. J. H. Shelton.

BETHEL, Sept. 29, 1871.

A Word from Natchitoches.

Mr. Editor: It will be gratifying to the friends of Methodism to learn that we have organized a Methodist Church South in the town or city of Natchitoches, and have a Methodist Sunday school; but we have no house of our own, and we are meeting with discouragement on that account. We are trying to get means to build a suitable house in an eligible location. I would be glad to know whether we can get help to build or not. By the help of the good Lord we will not give up the ship. R. Parvin.

Crystal Springs, Mississippi.

Mr. Editor: For months a work of grace has been progressing in this church. Recently it developed such interest, we felt constrained to hold meetings for its nurture. During the time eighty-one have professed a gracious experience, and up to this time seventy-seven have joined the church. Yesterday, the morning service, thirty-five surrounded the altar to affirm the covenant vows, and received the right hand of fellowship—a spectacle of Christian beauty we never witnessed before. Yours truly,

W. E. M. Linfield.

Crystal Springs, Miss., October 2, 1871.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Notice to Committee of Examination and Preachers for the Fourth Year.

J. T. Heard will examine the class on the Bible, in reference to the Acts and the Epistles, their analysis and design; Wesley's Sermons, Volume IV, and Manual of Discipline, Chapters VIII and IX.

J. M. Pugh will examine the class on Watson's Institutes, Part I, and Powell on Apostolical Success and Discipline.

H. F. Johnson will examine the class on Hickok's Moral Science, Mosheim's Church History, and Summers on Baptism.

J. T. Heard,
Chairman of Committee.

P. S.—The Committee on Preachers of the Fourth Year will meet in the Methodist Church in Meridian at nine o'clock on Tuesday morning the twelfth of December. J. T. H.

W. C. Shepard & Co., importers and dealers in china, crockery and glassware, whose advertisement appears on the fifth page of this issue, have the confidence and respect of a very large number of customers made up of the best class of our citizens. Their assortment is large and well adapted to the wants of the people, and we take pleasure in saying that in our own dealings with them, for several years, they have fully maintained their reputation as straightforward, honorable and obliging merchants. Purchasers will do well to call at No. 55 Camp street, and examine their stock.

Grand Concert of Sacred Music. A rendition of masterpieces of the standard musical composers by the best artistic and amateur talent of the city, will be given in Carondelet Street Methodist church, on Monday evening, October 16. In addition to several professional artists, we shall have the combined strength of our various choirs, thus constituting a grand festival of sacred song. The proceeds are to be applied to the relief of the Algiers Methodist church.

The Storm.—Monday and Tuesday last a storm of considerable violence raged in this region. There was an unparalleled fall of rain, and some damage to trees and buildings. At this writing the weather is cool and clear, and every indication of a settled and healthful atmosphere. We trust that the excitement about the fever and the tidal wave have been blown away together, as there has been no foundation for either.

New Orleans Conservatory of Music.—This institution, recently organized by Prof. Masae, is now open at No. 90 Barenne street. The spacious building is handsomely fitted up and well supplied with instruments and all the requisites for the use of students in music. The Board of Instruction is filled with professors of wide celebrity. Such facilities for instruction in all the departments of music have never before been offered to our people.

Health of the City.—The last report of the Board of Health indicates a remarkable degree of good health in New Orleans. Never, in our history, has the mortality been so light at this season of the year. There was, within the last nine days, one death from yellow fever, and this case came from Natchez. We regard the city as entirely safe for the unacclimated.

Mr. R. M. Lusher, principal of the Commercial and Classical Academy, has in our issue of this week an advertisement of his school located at No. 247 St. Charles street, to which we take pleasure in calling the attention of parents and guardians. Mr. Lusher has had many years of experience as an educator and is highly respected as a gentleman of moral worth as well as thorough scholarship.

THE NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

The bill of fare for October is very appetizing. Here it is:

Nothing But A Woman, by Allan Melville. The Cephalopoile, Illustrated. The Witch, by S. Adams Lee. Picciola, or The Prison-Flower, selected. Rainy Days, by Nettie Veale. Effects of Cold in Russia, selected. In China and Back, by George W. Gift—No. VI. Celebrities That I Have Seen, by Mrs. Martin. Gossiping Sketches—No IX. Woman's Position, As Taught in the Bible. The Altar, the Tabernacle, and the Temple, by Prof J. O. A. Clark—Part II. The Mystery Pervading the Universe, by Rev. W. F. Mistor. The Aged Pair, by Mrs. Mary Ware. Earthquakes and Volcanoes—Part I—Earthquakes, selected. Little Willie Brandon, by Mrs. Mary Ware. Field-Flowers, selected. Editor's Round-Table: The Social Influence of Woman; The English Home; Rights and Wrongs of Woman; How to Manage Them; The Good Time that is Coming; Why not let Woman Vote? The Ministry of Music; The Old, Old Story; Our Subscription List; Let us Make One More Effort.

There is an item in the foregoing which gives us pain and mortification. After all the genius, talent, and labor bestowed upon the magazine by the editor, and the herculean efforts put forth by the agent, the magazine cannot be sustained. The apprehensions expressed at the General Conference, by those who did not favor the enterprise, have been sadly realized. We bear witness to the earnest and persevering efforts of agent and editor to make it a success; and we deeply deplore the lack of interest in the connection which precluded their success. We copy from the magazine, as follows:

THE OLD, OLD STORY.

The editor takes his place at the "Round Table" with a heavy heart this month. In the beginning of the year the prospects of the New Monthly Magazine were very encouraging. For four months the tide of subscriptions kept swelling and rising, until we fondly dreamed that the flood would waft us into the haven of success. Alas! before we reached the port there was a sudden pause, and we found ourselves in mid-summer drifting away, and losing sight of the blessed shores of green foliage that promised rest from the burden of anxiety and care. Then sickness came, and the editor was compelled to cease from labor for a season; and when he returned the prospects of the magazine were seriously darkened. The agent had made a vigorous appeal for aid, and had scattered through the mails thousands of circulars invoking the patronage of our friends. The answers to these appeals came back, in many cases, in words of censure; in other instances, the circulars were returned without a word pro or con. The vast majority treated the subject with profound indifference.

In view of this state of things, the editor felt constrained to take the course indicated in his communication to the Book Committee. We have no personal interest in the New Monthly. If the church does not need it—if the church does not want it—we cannot be induced to attempt to force the periodical upon a reluctant public. The editor addressed the following communication to the Book Committee:

"To the Members of the Book Committee:

"DEAR BRETHREN: It is with very great reluctance that I make this communication to you.

"The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at the session in Memphis, in May, 1870, ordered the publication of a monthly magazine. The character of the periodical was not further defined than that it should be of high literary grade. It was believed at that time that such a periodical was needed by the members and friends of our church. Having been elected to the post of editor of the magazine, I entered upon my duties, and the Publishing House issued the first number early in January, 1871.

"I had reason to believe that the enterprise would meet with the cordial support, not only of those who ordered the publication, but of those for whom the periodical was designed. I regret to say that my expectations have not been fulfilled. It is not necessary to inquire into all the reasons why this support has been withheld. The financial pressure in many parts of the Southern country during the past year will, doubtless, account for the failure of a large class of persons to come to our aid; but I cannot avoid the conclusion that the indifference, which has been manifested by the vast majority who sustain our church literature, is attributable to one of two causes; either I must exist dissatisfaction at the manner in which I have conducted the periodical, or else the General Conference erred in supposing that there was a necessity for such a publication. In either case, my duty in the premises is obvious.

"I need not refer to the embarrassments that have embarrassed me in the management of the magazine. I have personally solicited aid from many writers who were competent to afford it. To these solicitations a few have responded; but the many have requested to be excused. In the straitened circumstances of the Publishing House, it was impossible to expend a sufficient amount of money to command the best literary abilities of the country. I feel no hesitation, however, in affirming that many of the contributions I have published have been, in all respects, equal to those of the standard periodical press. But I have been painfully conscious that the magazine has not attained the high character and position which its friends desired, and for which I was earnestly laboring. You have been witness of my efforts in this direction; and to you I leave the verdict which shall pronounce upon my faithfulness in this regard.

"That I have not given universal satisfaction is a fact which neither disappoints nor discourages me, because I did not at the beginning, and do not now, believe that result attainable. It is the lot of all editors to displease and offend some of their readers. To a few the magazine has been objectionable, because I have admitted into its pages that class of reading which is generally termed 'light literature.' By others, the objection has been urged that there was too little fiction. So far as my own taste is concerned, I need hardly say that a well-written essay upon an instructive theme is to me incomparably more attractive than any work of fiction. Consulting my own wishes, then, I should have excluded everything that savored of 'light literature,' but I did not so construe my duties as an editor, and if for this I am to be blamed, I will patiently submit.

"I am satisfied that a purely ecclesiastical magazine cannot be sustained; to confine the periodical to this channel, therefore, is to doom it to certain failure. On the other hand, nothing less than the endorsement of a larger circle of patrons than we now have can warrant its continuance. In the mechanical department, I think I can safely say that the publisher has given no ground of complaint. In typographical accuracy, and neatness of appearance, the magazine is equal to any published in this country.

"It remains for me to glance at the present prospects of the publication. The book agent has issued three thousand circulars, appealing to the traveling ministers throughout the connection for aid in increasing the circulation of the magazine. I regret to state that the few responses made to this appeal are of such a character as to render the continuance of the magazine, in my judgment, extremely hazardous. Unless the number of subscribers is sufficiently increased to make necessary improvements in the magazine, I feel convinced that the purpose of those who originated the enterprise cannot be accomplished. I am unwilling to take the responsibility and to bear the blame of bringing upon the finances of the Publishing House a heavy burden, instead of a source of profit. I see no way by which this evil can be averted, unless it may be done by the employment of a general canvassing agent, who shall be specially charged with the interests of the magazine. To leave the enterprise to voluntary aid, is to abandon it to indifference and neglect.

"When to all these considerations I add the statement of my precarious health, which, under the burden of anxiety and care, admonished me so forcibly during the past summer, I think you will not be surprised to learn that my decided preference, as a sphere of labor, is the pastoral work. I can only consent to occupy my present position while I have a reasonable prospect of rendering greater service to the church thereby. As I do not consider this end likely to be attained, I feel compelled to ask you to release me from the embarrassments of my present office, and allow me to return to the work of the ministry in my own Conference.

"I therefore respectfully tender you my resignation as the editor of the New Monthly Magazine.

"Yours in the bonds of Christian love,

"W. P. HARRISON.

"Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 9, 1871."

To this communication the Book Committee, through its chairman Dr. A. L. P. Green, returned the subjoined reply:

"Rev. William P. Harrison, D.D.:

"DEAR BROTHER: The communication which you laid before the Book Committee of the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, containing your tender of resignation as editor of the New Monthly Magazine, together with the facts and reasons which have led you to this step, has been duly considered by us; and, in accepting your resignation, we think it due to you, and the church that we mutually love and serve, that we should communicate to you the facts and circumstances that have led us to this action.

"We will begin by saying that the origin, history, and present condition of the New Monthly Magazine are fairly and truly set forth in your communication; and you judge correctly when you say that the General Conference was mistaken with respect to the wants of the church when they established the New Monthly Magazine. This is evident from the fact that there are whole Conferences in which there are but few numbers taken, so that it cannot be that the magazine failed because its character was not such as to meet the wants of the church, for it was ignored without being seen or read. Neither does its want of success grow out of the fact that it is not such a publication as the General Conference provided for, for it certainly is a periodical of high grade. Men of extensive learning and ripe scholarship in Europe have declared in public prints, that it is the most pure and elevated publication of the kind ever laid upon their tables; so that the General Conference made no mistake in the selection of editor; neither has the editor failed in meeting the most sanguine expectations of his friends; and we take pleasure in saying to you, Doctor, that we believe all that brain and muscle, and an ardent desire to please could do, has been done by your self; so that the failure of the publication to sustain itself is in no degree owing to a want of ability or devotion on your part.

"It is the opinion of the committee that the character and style of a religious monthly periodical designed for ladies, that will sustain itself, is yet to be discovered; and as the Publishing House is not in a condition to publish a monthly magazine at a heavy loss, we have advised the agent, at the end of the present volume of the New Monthly Magazine, to discontinue it; so that you will understand that we have no idea of an attempt to fill the vacancy occasioned by your resignation. The agent has already done all he could to increase the patronage of the magazine, without success. There is an unaccountable, unconquerable, death-like indifference on the part of the church with regard to the New Monthly Magazine, which completely stultifies all efforts for its support. The leading ministers of the church will not write for it; the preachers do not seem inclined to act as agents, and the membership will not subscribe for it; so that we think we are acting according to the developments of the mind of the church by discontinuing this publication.

"It is sad to think that we will soon have to part with you—that we will miss you from your post and our pulpits, and our circle of friends at the Publishing House.

"You will carry with you our best wishes and prayers that your failing health may be restored, and that you may long live to bless the church, and advance the cause of God among men.

"We are, dear sir, yours truly, in the best of bonds.

A. L. P. GREEN,

"Chairman of Book Committee.

"Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 12, 1871."

LET US MAKE ONE MORE EFFORT.

We are unwilling to give up the New Monthly until we have made one more appeal to its friends. Ladies, we appeal to you. We have on our books three thousand five hundred names—if each one of these will renew, and obtain one more subscriber each, the magazine is safe. Is this asking too much? Will not our fair friends come to our rescue? Now, reader, lay down the magazine, and think a moment. Have you no lady friend that ought to take the New Monthly? Can you not persuade her to do so? Will you not try? Make the effort, and let us hear from you. Unless you respond promptly to this call we will be compelled to discontinue with the December number. It will be mortifying to us if we are forced to take that step. If you value the labors of the editor—if you desire to see the magazine continued, show us your faith by your works. One month will decide the question.

If the responses to this appeal are not sufficient to justify the continuance of the magazine, the money will be promptly refunded. Send five dollars to A. H. Redford, Agent, Nashville, Tennessee, and you shall have two copies of the New Monthly for 1872. Nashville Christian Advocate.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

AGATHA'S HUSBAND is another of Miss Mulock's works, and published by the Harpers, New York.

This edition of the popular works of Miss Mulock is handsomely bound, but cheap, and destined to have a wide circulation. For sale by Ellis & Bro.

WE TAKE PLEASURE in announcing that Dr. William H. Holcombe, of New Orleans, has in the press of Lippincott & Co. a new poem, entitled: SOUTHERN VOICES. The book will be out about the middle of October. The work, we understand, is of a purely literary character, and one which is likely to secure the popular appreciation of our people.

KING ARTHUR. A poem by Edward Bulwer, Lord Lytton. Revised edition. New York: Harper & Bros., 1871.

The author seems to regard this as the masterpiece of his life, and as the product of his matured powers and ripest attainments. The poem has been the work of a lifetime, and the author says in his preface: "It was in my earliest youth that the subject of this poem first occurred to me." The present edition has been carefully revised, and has received the last touches from the hand of him who conceived the poem nearly a generation ago. The work contains four hundred and ten duodecimo pages, and is printed and bound in the best style of the art. For sale by George Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

ARTHUR'S LADIES MAGAZINE and the CHILDREN'S HOUR for the present month are both in the best style of these always excellent periodicals.

GOOD HEALTH for October has a fine table of contents. Asiatic Cholera, Means of Preserving Health, the Baths of Ancient Times and What is Cruelty are the titles of some of the articles.

THE SOUTHERN FARMER for October has been received. It is well filled with matter for the season, and should be in the hands of our planters. It is published at Memphis, Tennessee. Price, $2 per annum.

HEARTH AND HOME is grander than ever in its pictorial attractions. The issue of September 30 contains the beginning of a new story by Edward Eggleston, entitled: "The Hoosier Schoolmaster." The story is accompanied by graphic illustrations of Western scenes. Hearth and Home is, in all its departments, a journal of unsurpassed interest.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for October has a good table of contents, and is splendidly illustrated. The general tone of this magazine is unexceptionable, and its literary finish is not excelled. Among the articles in the present number we have noted: An Island on Fire; The Last of the Pequods; Was Adam the First Man? How the Storm Came. Topics for the Time has a brief notice of Charles Scribner, lately deceased, and a very sound and discriminating article on Dickens.

Obituaries.

Miss ANNA GERTRUDE BARRETT died in La-Grange, Georgia, on the twenty-sixth of August, aged twenty-three years eleven months and eight days. She was the daughter of William Barret, of New Orleans, and was born and raised in this City. While on a visit to Georgia for her health she was called away to her home above. Her mother was a most exemplary member of the church and a Christian of deep piety and great usefulness. While a child she lost her mother, but not the hallowed influence of her memory and prayers. She grew up in the Sunday school of the Carondelet Street church, was always prayerful and serious, and several times was a seeker at the public altar of prayer. She made no profession of conversion, until on her death-bed, when she expressed herself as assured and satisfied of the pardon of her sins. Her last hours were serene and exhibited the comforting hope and assurance that death was an endless gain. Having known her from her early childhood, I can truthfully say that she was a most lovely and amiable girl, possessing a character of great purity, simplicity and benevolence, and every excellence. In the midst of affluence and beautiful womanhood she had many promises and attractions for her. She was the sunshine of her home and the delight of her friends, seeking unselfishly to minister to the happiness of all. She was highly endowed with personal beauty, and with great sweetness of disposition. Seemingly so well qualified to live and to adorn society, it was pleased to call her to rest. We can submissively bow to the dispensation, and be thankful that the loved, the beautiful and the good was "meet, for the inheritance of the saints in light."

LINUS PARKER

ELIZABETH D. KNIGHT was born May 25, 1831. She was the daughter of Alexander and Nancy Reid. Her father and mother were favorably known for many years in this community as very pious and excellent members of the Methodist Protestant Church, with which church Sister Knight united in her sixteenth year. She was married to Bro. John A. Knight, April 29, 1852. She and her husband, with several others, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South in August, 1850, and formed a society at Templegate, where she had long held her membership in the Pretty Run Church. She died after a very short illness, at her residence, in Lowndes county, Alabama, May 15, 1871. Her children descended her greatest care, and as they advanced in age she was careful to instruct them well in the principles of the doctrine of Christ. Found written on the margin of the family record where the birth of her children were recorded in her own hand: "All our dear children were baptized on the second Sabbath in March, 1862, by Rev. J. M. Scott." Three of these children preceded her to heaven: Ada, died on the fifth of July, 1862; Ida, September 2, 1867, and Jesse, January 1, 1868. The writer was for several years her pastor in both the Methodist churches. Her house was the preachers' home; it was her pleasure to do them a kindness. She was one of those sweet-spirited Christian women. With a well-balanced and well-cultivated mind, sanctified by religion, she was purely domestic in her habits. She delighted much in having her husband, children and friends about her at home—sweet home. The sick and the poor were never forgotten by her; none turned empty away. She made friends of all who knew her, yea, more than friends; to know her was to love her as a Christian. Her voice rang in sweet melody in the song of praise to God, in which service she greatly delighted and excelled. Words of encouragement she whispered in the ear of the mourner; reproved sin, and pointed to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

Sister Knight is a great loss to the Church and the community in which she lived. She has left behind a husband greatly afflicted and bereaved, with seven children, and many relatives. May they follow her as she followed Christ, and at last meet in heaven and form a family there.

JOSEPH M. SCOTT.

Sister JULIA A. PRICE died near Alexandria, August 8, 1871, aged twenty-three years four months and twenty-three days. She was the daughter of Brother Joseph and Sister Mary A. Barnes, and was born in Hinds county, Mississippi. Her parents moved to Louisiana in December, 1857. She was married to Bro. Z. T. Price in January, 1870, and was trained by pious parents in the way of religion and truth. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the tenth year of her age and experienced religion in her twelfth year. She lived the life of a Christian, was obedient to her parents, and was a kind and affectionate wife. She was beloved and highly esteemed by all who knew her. Her extreme illness was short, a few days of pain and suffering, and the lamp of life ceased to burn. The saints she went down beneath a cloudless sky, or she was perfectly resigned. She said to her mother and husband that she was going to die. Her husband asked her if she was perfectly willing to meet God. Her answer was: "Oh, yes." She said to her husband: "Oh, it makes me still happier to know that you have found peace with God before I am called to die." Her husband had but a few days before embraced religion. She then requested her weeping husband, parents and friends to meet her in the rea[lm]. She said she wished to hear some singing. They sang "When I can read my title clear," with the chorus "I feel like I am on my journey home." She assisted in singing it through with a clear voice, and then said in a low but audible tone: "Oh! happy day, when Jesus washed my sins away." She peacefully fell asleep in the arms of Jesus. She has left husband, parents, four sisters, and many friends to mourn, but we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for, sister, we hope to meet thee where no farewell tear is shed.

FREDERICK WHITE.

DIED, in Sunflower county, Mississippi, March 6, 1871, Miss MARY MARTIN, (daughter of Mrs. M. E. Byrd), in the twenty-ninth year of her age. She lingered eight months with consumption. She was the daughter of a pious mother, the child of many prayers. She came to her long illness unprepared for her change, naturally timid on the subject of religion, and living in a section of very few religious privileges, her mother's pious soul was stirred to its depths; her pleadings at a throne of grace were earnest for her child, and not in vain; the daughter's deep penitence encouraged a mother's faith and earnest prayers. One day, her mother plead and prevailed with God in secret for her child to leave an assurance of her acceptance with God. When she returned to her daughter's room she found her alone, who, smiling through her tears, threw her arms around her mother's neck, exclaiming: "God has blessed me. I have been praying for it a long time, and, at last, I have the blessing." She began to exhort her brother and sister and all the family to prepare to meet her in heaven. What tender words of entreaty! Shall they be in vain? After sufferings were assuaged till she slept in Jesus, in full assurance of hope that she would rise with Him in glory.

"Unveil thy bosom, faithful tomb,
Take this new treasure to thy trust;
And give these sacred relics room
To slumber in the silent dust."

The Celebrated Argyle Bitters.—From one end of the country to the other these unrivaled Bitters have received certificates of their efficacy and health-giving properties, without solicitation from their proprietor or agents.

As a counteracting malarial poison, as a good family medicine, as a tonic, pure and lasting, as a delightful, gentle stimulant of the vital functions, as a preventive and cure of dyspepsia, they stand firm and unshaken in their reputation.

In malarious latitudes, in damp climates, they have no parallel in the many worthless decoctions, with far-fetched and farcical names (too numerous to mention), and palmed off upon an innocent and unsuspecting people as valuable medicinal agents, but which, like "Dead Sea fruits, turn to ashes on the lips," and result in disgust and loathing, wrong and injury.

For fifteen years and more, these Bitters have found a place in the bosoms of thousands of our most industrious and respected mechanics, lawyers, doctors, the clergy, and are the boast and pride of the farmer and planter—the bone and sinew of the land.

They are now offered for sale at reduced prices. se7 1m

The Child's Corner.

[For the Advocate.

"LITTLE DAISY,"

BY PERDITA.

"Wee, modest, crimsoned-tipped flower."

Thou tender, sweet blossom,
So fragrant and small,
May never a shadow
O'er thy charmed life fall.

Thou wee, folded floweret,
So dainty and white;
Untouched by life's storm winds,
Kissed wake by the light!

Sweet, dreamful eyes, shining
With visions untold,
And a reflex of heaven
Long lost from the old.

Soft grey, and all misty
With beautiful dreams;
Ah, never may sorrow
Drown those tender-bright gleams.

Such small, clasped fingers,
All dimpled and fair!
May they e'er be as stainless
Uplifted in prayer.

Frail flower-heart, beating
In childhood's soft rhyme,
Through all the years coming
May thy glad joy-bells chime!

Oh, Saviour of children,
"Suffer 'Daisy' to come,"
That through all life's journey
Thy arms be her home.

Though ever astraying,
Oh, lead Thou her feet
By Love's quiet waters
And green pastures sweet.

THAT CALF.

BY PHŒNE CARY.

An old farmer one morn, hurried out to his barn,
Where the cattle were standing, and said,
While they trembled with fright: "Now, which of you, last night,
Shut the barn door, while I was in bed?"
Each one of them all shook his head.

Now the little calf, Spot, she was down in the lot,
And the way the rest did was a shame;
For not one, night before, saw her close up the door,
But they said that she did, all the same;
For they always made her bear the blame.

Said the horse, Dapple-gray: "I was not up this way
Last night, as I now recollect;"—
And the bull, passing by, tossed his horns very high,
And said: "Where's the one to object,
If I say, 'tis that calf, I suspect?"

"It is too wicked, now, said the old brindle cow,
"To accuse honest folks of such tricks;"
Said the cock in the tree: "I am sure 'twas'nt me;"
All the sheep just said: "bah!" there were six;
And they thought now that calf's in a fix!

"Of course, we all knew, 'twas the wrong thing to do,"
Cried the chickens. "Of course," mewed the cat.
"I suppose," said the mule, "some folks think me a fool,
But I am not quite so simple as that:
Well! that calf, never knows what she's at!"

Just then the poor calf, who was always the laugh,
And the jest of the yard, came in sight;
"Did you shut my barn door?" said the farmer, once more;
And she answered: "I did sir, last night;
For I thought, first to close it, was right."

Now each beast shook his head; "She will catch it," they said;
"Serve her right for her meddlesome way."
Cried the farmer: "Come here, little bossy, my dear,
You have done what I cannot repay,
And your fortune is made from to-day."

"Very strangely, last night, I forgot the door quite,
And if you had not closed it so neat,
All the colts had slipped in, and gone straight to the bin,
And got what they ought not to eat—
They'd have foundered themselves upon wheat."

Then each beast of them all, began loudly to bawl,
The mule tried to snuffle, the cock crew,
"Little Spotty, my dear, you're the favorite here,"
They all cried: "We're so glad it was you!"
But that calf only answered them: "Boo!"

KEEPING HOLD OF HIS HAND.

"Aunt Susan, I'm just bored to death, and I've come here this hot afternoon, to get rest and counsel. There's Uncle Charles Ferguson at home and Dr. Smythe for ever debating. Uncle Chales has gone over to the new philosophy as he calls it, and bewilders me with his fine sophistries. I'm well nigh crazed. Oh, but it's good to be here!"

It was good to be there, at Aunt Susan's, good for tired body or weary soul. The large, cool room, with its white matting and half-closed window-blinds, the chintz covered lounges and easy chairs, the book-covered table, told of a nice ordering, and a mind well stored.

"It gives one peace to look in Aunt Susie's face;" so thought Blanche Carlisle, as almost in a twinkling a glass of milk and some crisp cakes were placed on a tiny table at her side.

"How thoughtful you are, Aunt Susan! I was thirsty—this milk is sweeter, I do believe, than any I get at home. I should so like to bring Uncle Charley here, but he would talk so much, and advance such queer opinions that it would worry you, I'm afraid."

"I have had much to do, my dear, with people of your Uncle Charles' stamp," she said with a quiet smile.

"You have? how did you put them down? Who were they? And didn't they worry you almost to death? I'm sure they do me."

"I didn't put them down at all, Blanche; I only tried to be consistent in all I did and said. And I found all the blessed words in that Bible that fitted the case, so that at every fresh attack I had ready a little gospel arrow. I seldom used my own words, my dear, but the words of the Lord Jesus. I had a free-thinker very near my heart for ten years, my own son Joshua."

"Why, Aunt Susan! your son! a clergyman! your son, Joshua, of all men! I should have thought it would have broken your heart."

"Oh, no, dear; because I relied on the Lord's promises, and knew what infinite patience he exercises with his poor, fallen creatures. I tried to here him calmly—and above all, I never allowed myself to get into an argument. I only turned over page after page of that wonderful Book, and here and there quietly read without comment, inwardly praying without ceasing that some time his eyes might be opened."

"Dear Aunt Susan! and you were rewarded?"

"Yes;" and there broke all over her face the smile of an angel.

"I wonder if I shall ever feel as you do? I get so irritated, sometimes, and so perplexed between Uncle Charles' unbelief and Dr. Smythe's theology, that I almost despair of ever finding the truth."

"My dear, who was it said, 'I am the way, the truth, and the life?'"

"Yes, I know; Jesus said that."

"And does it need any great effort to fix it upon your memory, to stamp it upon your heart?"

"No; but Uncle Charles says such plausible things; such bold dreadful things; and somehow I ponder over them, and half doubt myself. O Aunt Susan, I wish I could cling to the Rock as you do. Nothing ever disturbs your religious faith, does it?

"Sorrow, dear, and much suffering, have anchored me. When I saw my beautiful daughter, about your age, sinking in death, and she cried out: 'Mother, Jesus has come to take me over himself,' how could I doubt that she saw the Son of God? When my dear husband waked me up, night after night, talking with Jesus, during his last sickness, and I saw the light that irradiated his face, and almost transfigured him, how could I doubt? When my only boy, after denying Christ's divinity, and placing himself on the side of the scoffer and the infidel, bringing all the force of his powerful intellect to the side of the enemy, came to me one day as humble as a little child, crying: 'Mother, pray for me to your Jesus,' and when I saw him calling, himself, for forgiveness, and then beheld him a rejoicing believer, how could I doubt. I cannot tell you how often during the day I lift up my heart in devout adoration and thanks to my Father."

Blanche gazed through glistening tears at the sweet serenity of Aunt Susan's face.

"I think I'll try to trust more," she said softly, "and instead of searching the Bible for arguments to refute Uncle Charles, I'll search for the spirit and truth of the Word. Then, perhaps, I sha'n't get so nervous and irritable."

"And pray for Uncle Charles," said Aunt Susie softly.

"Yes, I will; I have felt so opposed to him, that I never got calm enough to think of doing that. But I shall never be a saint, I fear," she added with a sigh. "Sometimes when they are all talking, and Dr. Smythe brings up the prophets and the fathers, in that terrible denunciatory way of his, I think Uncle Charles has the best of it; and then when Aunt Lydia drags in some of her really absurd spiritualistic views, one denounces, and the other ridicules. But after this I will remember who said: 'I am the way, the truth, and the life,' and repeating that, I shall keep my mind clear and well balanced."

"Of one thing I am sure, though," she added brightening, "if Uncle Charles does sometimes shake my faith a little, a few moments alone with Jesus always restores it, and I wonder I could feel so foolishly."

"The time will come, my dear," said Aunt Susan, "when your peace will be like a river, and your faith immovable; when in the night-watches, in sickness, and in health, your heart will turn to Jesus, and he will be sufficient solace for all your sorrows. Oh the fullness of such a communion! to desire no earthly good; to ask for no will but His, no home but heaven, no love but God's wonderful love. Why, my dear child, it glorifies even this sinful earth; one talks and sups and walks with angels. If Uncle Charles' philosophy could give him this great, this wonderful happiness, he would spend little precious time in argument; he would constrain men by his life, by his love for them, to come to Jesus."

Aunt Susan's shining eyes and beautiful smile attested to her own unqualified happiness, and Blanche spent one of the sweetest hours of her life at the feet of this gentle disciple.

After this she was so sweetly silent when Uncle Charles, who liked to see the flash of spirit in her eye and rouse her temper, attacked her religious faith, that he wondered at the rest that seemed to have come into her nature. Instead of disputing, she only said gently but firmly:

"Uncle Charles, Jesus has said: 'I am the way, the truth, and the life,' and I am just keeping hold of His hand."

The strong man was baffled.
Here was no field for dispute.

MARTIN LUTHER'S LETTER TO HIS LITTLE SON.—Grace and peace in Christ, my dear little son. I see with pleasure that thou learnest well and prayest diligently. Do so, my son, and continue. When I come home I will bring thee a pretty fairing.

I know a pretty, merry garden wherein there are many children. They have little golden coats, and they gather beautiful apples under the trees, and pears, cherries, plums and wheat-plums; they sing, and jump, and are merry. They have beautiful little horses, too, with gold bits and silver saddles. And I asked the man to whom the garden belongs, whose children they were? And he said: They are the children, they love to pray, and to learn, and are good. Then I said: Dear man, I have a son too, his name is Johnny Luther. May he not also come into this garden, and eat these beautiful apples and pears and ride these fine horses? Then the man said: If he loves to pray and learn and is good, he shall come into this garden and Lippus and Jost too, and when they all come together they shall have fifes and trumpets, lutes, and all sorts of music, and they shall dance and shoot with little cross-bows.

And he showed me a fine meadow there in the garden, made for daneing. There hung nothing but golden fifes, trumpets, and fine silver cross-bows. But it was early, and the children had not yet eaten, therefore, I could not wait the dance, and I said to the man: Ah, dear sir! I will immediately go and write all this to my little son, Johnny, and tell him to pray diligently, and to learn well, and to be good, so that he may also come into this garden. But he has an Aunt Lehne, he must bring her with him. Then the man said: It shall be so; go and write him so.

Therefore, my dear little Johnny, learn and pray away, and tell Lippus Jost too, that they must learn and pray. And then you shall come to the garden together. Herewith I commend thee to Almighty God. And greet Aunt Lehne, and give her a kiss for my sake—thy dear father.

Anno, 1530. MARTIN'S LUTHER.

"I AM NOT AFRAID."—A happy time little Robbie and Rosy were having "see-sawing" on a board laid across a big log. At first both were very timid, and clung on tight to the board. But by and by little Robbie grew bolder, and would let go his hold, when he went up "sky-high." Just as he began his descent, however, his chubby hands were pretty sure to come down too. After a few such daring flights, he grew still more careless, despite little sister's cautions.

Just as he laughing and tossing his arms the gayest, saying, "I a'n't afraid," a sudden jolt brought him tumbling to the ground "all in a heap." Little Rosy too got a bad fall, and mother had various little bruises to doctor that evening. If Robbie's daring never brings him into worse troubles, we shall all be glad.

A great many boys have gone down to their death because they were not afraid to go into the rumshop and billiard-saloon. Always remember it is manly and noble to be afraid of sin in all its forms.—Mrs. J. E. McConaughy.

A TEMPERANCE FABLE.—The rats once assembled in a large cellar, to devise some method of safely getting the bait from a steel trap which lay near, having seen numbers of their friends and relatives snatched from them by its merciless jaws. After many long speeches and the proposal of many elaborate but fruitless plans, a happy wit, standing erect, said: "It is my opinion, that if with one paw we can keep down the spring, we can safely take the food from the trap with the other." All the rats present loudly squealed assent. Then they were startled by a faint voice, and a poor rat, with only three legs, limping into the ring, stood up to speak: "My friends, I have tried the method you propose, and you see the result. Now let me suggest a plan to escape the trap: Let it alone."

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

FARM WORK FOR THE MONTH.—There are many things in our Southern farm life which we should do, and equally important things to be left undone. While all the needful exertion should be made to save what is made, yet it is, in our humble opinion, "a penny wise" economy, to be devoted to husbanding all cotton because made, to the detriment of providing for wants, which a few days' labor and loss of a few hundred pounds of cotton at furthest cannot make up—"the pound foolish" economy. We mean it is right and proper to use all due diligence to house the cotton in good weather, while the mornings and evenings are warm and genial; but if the housing of peas and potatoes is neglected until wet and cold destroy, it is no economy. The cotton of one day's saving, even if a total loss, would not buy the potatoes and peas—a necessity. Hogs should be taken from the corn and pea fields before they have fallen away. Pindars should also be dug in good weather, and before frost; cure the vines as clover, and with the immature fruit will be double pay. Turnips, in much of our beloved Dixie land will pay, sown even in October, the Rata Baga persuasion especially. Preparation of land for trees and vines, as soon as land is moist enough after our terrible hot summer, and left rough until after a freeze for planting. Grass, the very bulwark of our defenses and the mainstay of all offensive operations, should not be ignored. We do insist if every farm in Dixie had one-third of cleared land devoted to grass culture, that in ten or twenty years we would be richer than if kept under the plow, and cotton sold therefrom. It is idle to talk at this day that the improved grasses, the clovers, all of them, will not do well. We do believe that the best grass and hay region of America is south of "Mason's and Dixon's line." We can, from rich land, make four, five or six cuttings of Lucerne yearly for ten to twenty years, and an average of a ton per cutting, we say in moderation, and ask where can four, five or six tons of hay be made north of latitude forty degrees? Will not Bermuda equal? Is red clover any better in Jefferson county, Kentucky, or "just over the border," than can be grown in Hinds county, Mississippi? We speak of what we know, from absolute measure, in June, 1837. What evidence will our people be content with to influence action? They know the effect of all cotton; they know the negro persuasion will not take care of land or stock, and must see the edge of rag issue before they will start—can't wait one or two years for the gain. They know four millions of bales reduce price below cost of production. It is certain, if we rely upon "over the border" for corn and meat, that the price will be held up and all cotton demanded to buy necessaries. Why follow the "ignis fatuus"—Jack with a lantern. We say do not invest in the cotton threshing, the horse-rake gathering and the gin-sifting machines. Do not plant for these "omnium gatherums," but handle cotton well, and resolve to have four or five bales, worth one hundred dollars in gold each, and a surplus. Our own people and all outside are offering immense premiums, baiting traps to lure the credulous. Our "old mummy" of the colored persuasion was prone to say the devil would sometimes cheat himself. We hope his mighty efforts thus to bind the South to cotton will open the eyes of "our people." Corn has gone down now, when no demand; meat gone down—sixty cents per bushel for corn and seven and a half cents for clear sides. Be not seduced; next spring, after the crop is cast, it will be found the quantity is not so large, and corn goes up to one dollar and clear sides to fifteen cents. Save your corn; save your bacon. Provide hay, and start for independence.—The Southern Farmer.

SETTING CABBAGE PLANTS.—As these plants wilt very quickly when exposed to the sun before they take root, a cloudy day is, generally, selected to set them out. This renders the work very disagreeable, and if the plan recommended by a correspondent should prove, after trial, to be as successful as he claims, it will soon come into favor, for it is much more pleasant working when the ground is dry; the soil is then light and does not pack and become lumpy, and another advantage is, that the plants can be set without waiting for a rainy day. We give the plan referred to, as follows; "As soon as your plants are large enough, take up a dozen or so at a time, and mark the place you wish to set. Have a dish of water with you (I prefer rain water), make a hole and put in your plant, fill in the dirt and press it firmly around the roots until the hole is nearly full. Then turn in half a gill or so of water, and haul fresh dirt upon that, but do not press it. This will prevent the ground from baking, and the plant is sure to grow." If the above directions are followed, the plants will need no more watering. Hoe as often as twice a week until they are large enough to pretty well cover the ground, and you will not fail to have plenty of cabbages.—Farmers' Home Journal.

We have put out plants for ten or fifteen years, as a rule, only in dry weather. We prepare, some ten days beforehand, old cow dung, beaten fine in water, stirring daily until all lumps are broken and a fermentation; make thick as gruel, so it will pour freely; have land well prepared; dip roots to the leaf in this "lob-lolly," our negroes call it, set out pretty deep, and pour into the hole, after the roots are moderately compressed, the water. Often this is all, except filling up next morn with dry earth, but sometimes we repeat the water, and when soaked away fill up with dry earth. We would always shade for a day or two from hot sun with pine bark, shingles or a plank placed against stakes, south side. We had twenty thousand plants yearly, or more, and seldom did we set out in wet weather or when earth was wet. We did the same with sweet potato drawings.—Ed Southern Farmer.

HENS IN PLACE OF DOGS.—There is hardly a family that does not throw away enough table scraps to feed at least half a dozen hens, and many that keep a nuisance in the shape of a dog, that does no good, but costs more than a dozen good hens, complain that they cannot afford to keep hens. One dog in a neighborhood is generally a greater trouble to the neighbors than a flock of hens would be, for if hens are well fed yt home they will rarely go away. But who ever saw a dog that was not a pest, running across the newly-made garden, and sticking his nose into everything. Kill off the curs, and give the food to the hens, and you will find pleasure as well as profit in so doing. We wish there was a tax of one hundred dollars on every dog in the country. Those that are of value as watch dogs could be retained, while the host of snarling, dirty curs would give place to some more useful and less troublesome pet.—Poultry Standard.

CURING MILLET HAY.—Curing millet is done in the same manner as timothy and other grasses. Weather favorable and properly handled, it will be sufficiently cured for harvesting two days after cutting. Harvest when the seed is about swelling. If cut at a later period, the nutritious qualities will be seriously diminished. Product, two to four tons per acre. The land ought to be thoroughly plowed and harrowed. Sow four or five pecks of seed per acre, broadcast, and cover with a harrow, followed by a roller. The land, sandy or light loam, and made rich enough for corn. The same mode of curing will apply to the Hungarian grass. Our preference is the India or Grand millet, which produces a third more forage and seed than the common millet. Millet is very nutritious, and is eaten with avidity by horses and horned cattle.

TO DESTROY THE BEE MOTH.—Mr. Quinby, in the Country Gentleman, recommends a drink of molasses, vinegar and water, set in saucers near the hive at night, to destroy the moth. He says their appetite for the mixture will prove their ruin. The same liquid may be used repeatedly, renewing when necessary.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

RICE PANCAKES.—One cup of cold boiled rice, one cup of sifted flour, one egg, one-third teaspoonful of soda, and milk enough to form a batter.

CAKE WITHOUT EGGS.—Five cups of flour, two cups of sugar, one-half cup of molasses, two cups of sour milk, three-fourths cup of butter, one large teaspoonful of soda, all kinds of spice and salt. This makes two loaves.

PIE CRUST.—Take two quarts of flour and one-half cup each of lard and butter, rub well together, then slowly pour in water while stirring. The secret of success consists in not kneading the dough. Bake in a quick oven.

LEMON PIE.—Six eggs, one pint of milk, one fourth pound of butter, one-half pound of sugar, and the rind and juice of two lemons. Beat the butter and sugar together, and squeeze the juice and grate the rind of the lemon in the butter and sugar, stir in the yolks of the eggs, then add the whites and mix well. This is excellent, and is baked like custard pies.

TO WASH FLANNELS.—A correspondent, writing to the Household, says: I notice that one of your subscribers asks how to wash flannels without shrinking them. Here is a method I have used with success: Wash the flannels in warm water with good soap (as common soap contains soda), then put them in a tub and cover with boiling water; let them remain till cool, then wring them out and dry quickly.

TO DETECT THE ADULTERATION OF TEA. The simplest method is to burn the tea and weigh the ashes. Any kind of tea, from the best quality down to the most common, must not leave over five per cent of ash; while those adulterated sorts have actually given thirty-five to forty-five per cent of ash, proving that at least thirty to forty per cent of worthless or injurious stuff had been added. If a pound of such tea were to cost one dollar, it would contain from sixty to seventy cents' worth of tea and some six ounces of plaster, sold for about six cents per ounce.

CREAM CAKES.—Boil a pint of water, rub together one cup of butter and two cups of sifted flour, and stir them into the water while boiling. When it thickens like starch, remove from the fire. When cool, stir into it ten well-beaten eggs and a scant teaspoonful of soda, then drop the mixture on buttered tins with a large spoon, having them several inches apart. When done, fill with cream, made as follows: One cup of fine white sugar, four eggs, one cup of flour, one cup of milk. Beat the eggs to a froth, stir in the sugar, then the flour, and stir into the milk while boiling.

MACARONI.—Boil a quarter of a pound of macaroni in clear water till tender. While boiling thicken half a pint of boiling milk with enough flour to make it as stiff as thick cream: add half a tablespoonful of butter and two tablespoonfuls of cream, half a small teaspoonful of mustard, a little pepper, (white, if you have it, if you have not, black will answer), a little salt, and a very little cayenne pepper. Stir into this a quarter of pound of grated cheese. Boil this all together a few moments, stirring it constantly to prevent its burning, then drain the water from the macaroni and stir it into thickened milk, let it boil up a few moments and serve hot, or if preferred after dishing it, set the dish in the oven and let it brown. For variety a little parsley chopped fine and stirred in before adding the macaroni is considered an improvement. Another very good way to prepare macaroni is: boil it fifteen or twenty minutes in clear water, then drain it and use chicken or veal broth instead of milk for the seasoning. Another: Prepare as above or with milk, and just before it is done beat up two eggs and stir in.

Scientific.

MICROSCOPIC crystals of diamonds have been found in the mineral Chrysophyllite from the Ural Mountains. They are of variable size, and unequally distributed through the mass of the mineral. Magnified 500 diameters, they are distinctly visible; and with two hundred diameters their crystalline form can be distinguished with the greatest precision. The greater portion of the crystals are colorless and perfectly transparent; some have a yellowish brown color. The diamonds are symmetrically embedded in the mineral. This discovery in the diamond field in situ, adds the Academy, is of great interest.

DR. CARPENTER seems to have shown, as a general result of his deep sea soundings, that the ocean bottom at the bottom in the Arctic regions has a temperature below the freezing point; and under the equator is only a few degrees higher. He has, therefore, concluded that cold waters flows along the bottom from the northern regions to the equator and beyond, while at the surface the warmer currents take their course backward to restore the equilibrium. This theory is a fair one, yet not altogether satisfactory. For the Mediterranean currents another explanation is given. That inland sea receives more water by evaporation than it gains by rivers and by rain; in consequence it becomes denser and more salt than the waters of the ocean, and to establish an equilibrium the deep waters flow outward while the surface waters flow inward from the Atlantic. Former researches in regard to temperature at great depths, it is said, were wholly in error, because the effect of pressure on the thermometer was not understood. The pressure is estimated to increase a ton per square inch for every eight hundred fathoms of depth. The best thermometers of the ordinary construction, at a depth of from two thousand to two thousand five hundred fathoms will register eight or ten degrees higher than they should, owing to the pressure.

UNDOUBTEDLY the most wonderful application of the spectroscope yet made, says the Bowdoin Scientific Review, is that by which the velocity of approach or recession in luminous bodies, moving with great velocity, may be determined. Suppose some luminous object, which is sending light of a particular color to be placed at a great distance, and its light be received through the slit of the spectroscope; it will be more or less refracted or bent from its course according to its color or length of its waves of light. Now the luminous object approach with great velocity, we shall find the position of the image of the fine lines, being removed toward the violet end of the spectrum. If the object recede, the change of position is toward the red. These changes will always be appreciable when the rate of movement in the luminous body bears some noticeable ratio to that of light itself. We should only need to know the position and rate of movement of the object above supposed in order to establish a ratio between its rate and the amount of displacement observed in the image of the slit. Then we should be able conversely to measure the velocity of the movement, by knowing what position the fine or lines of its spectrum occupy when the body is at rest, and observing the position they occupy when in motion. In this way, the velocity of the sun's movements may be determined; and so also the velocity of the gas composing the prominences of the sun, and the movements of the fixed stars.

BOILER EXPLOSIONS.—The constant occurrence of boiler explosions is due not altogether due to the carelessness of engineers and firemen. Carelessness may be proved, and should always meet a just retribution at the hands of jurymen; but there are the difficulties in the safe working of steam, the mere surely named carelessness and ignorance ruled out by the severities of law. There are difficulties which seem, for, beyond the reach of scientific investigation. The many explosions which have been mysterious beyond explanation—like that one of a factory in Rhode Island which flew into the air and landed some hundred of feet away without any rupture of the shell—and the multitude conflicting opinions that are given from or volunteered by professed experts, as in case of the late Sheffield, show how little is really known to engineering science. A certain number of so called experts are, of course, be ruled out as cranks. Such, for example, as talk in a vague way of gas, and then cannot tell what gas means, though they probably have some distant impression that oxygen and hydrogen in certain proportions, make a dangerous explosive mixture. But when the oxygen gets into the boiler and puzzle them or any one else to. The most intelligent, however are still at fault, and quite extensive discussions are renewed on every occasion of disaster. One point seems to be just now calling particular attention, and that is, that there may be too much water in a boiler as well as too little, and some seem to hold that water, under certain circumstances of pressure and stillness, may acquire a state of tension with an enormous amount of steam imprisoned in its substance, which, on the least relaxation of pressure, or by opening a valve, is ready to blow everything to atoms.

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our Instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,
CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our Instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices ranging from $110 to $650 — will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All Instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and in their teaching unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's English Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. Schele De Vere, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. Gildersleeve, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. Carter, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LeConte, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. Johnston, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

We remarked in our last issue that the movement in the general market had been materially restricted by the quarantine at Galveston, which had interrupted the course of business, especially in the wholesale trade. The effect has been still more apparent since, and we hear complaints on the subject from nearly every department. It is hoped, however, that the representations of the Mayor, which are said to have given the full particulars of the few cases of yellow fever which have occurred here this season, will satisfy the Governor of Texas, that there has been no epidemic, nor any danger of one, and that the circumstances warrant an immediate abrogation of the quarantine regulations, when trade will resume its usual channels.

We have no doubt that the next report of the Agricultural Bureau, will be in striking harmony with this of the Cotton Exchange, because both draw their information from similar sources, and we believe are both entitled to credit for an intelligent and impartial execution of their important duties. However much distrust our long-cup friends may feel in planters' reports, we presume that although some of them still hold out for 3,500,000 and even more, yet few anticipate more than 3,250,000 bales, which may be regarded as a very full estimate, while others count on not over 3,000,000 and probably less. The result will depend very much on the extent of the damage done by the worms, and the prevailing storm as well as the weather for the rest of the season. An early killing frost would, with the general backwardness of the crop, be more fatal than the caterpillar.

The river is now 12 feet 6 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-ninth ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	4,124
Lake.....	2
Mobile.....	842
Texas.....	380
Total'.....	5,357

On Saturday under the favorable impulse imparted by an advance of t-16d at Liverpool the demand was fair, and although the movement was restricted by moderate supplies and factors being more stringent in their pretensions, yet the sales embraced 900 bales, partly at previous rates, and partly at an improvement of ⅛@¼c., the advance being the most marked in the medium and lower grades. On Monday with a better supply and encouraging dispatches from Liverpool and New York, the demand was still more active and in some cases factors obtained ¼c. more than they could have realized on Saturday, but the advance was not general and required only a very slight variation in quotations. The sales summed up 1600 bales. On Tuesday, notwithstanding the heavy rain and violent gale, yet the favorable tenor of the Liverpool and New York dispatches, and some apprehensions of the effect of the storm brought out buyers with still more spirit, and 2200 bales changed hands at irregular prices, part showing no quotable change, and part at an advance of ¼@½c. The sales included low ordinary at 14¼ and 14½, low middling at 19, middling at 19¼ and 19½, and strict middling at 19⅞ and 19¾.

The receipts steeper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas), are 17,059 bales, against 34,212 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 55,455 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 16,835 bales to Great Britain, of 1,978 to France, and 79 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

SUGAR.—The market for the old crop has now about closed, and the first receipts of the new are being expected. A plantation down Bayou Lafourche commenced grinding on the twenty-seventh ultimo, but has since suspended sugar-making for the moment, the yield of the cane proving insufficient as yet. On Monday 20 hds of Lafourche sold at 12@12½c. for yellow and white clarified. There have not been any new receipts of the old crop.

MOLASSES.—There have not yet been any receipts of the new crop molasses. A few bbls old crop, good prime, received on Monday, sold at 37½c. ₱ gallon.

CORN.—Is in fair supply and moderate demand, at about previous prices. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 3000 sacks, in lots, at 83@85c. ₱ bushel for all kinds. On Tuesday, notwithstanding the rain storm, 1573 sacks yellow mixed sold at 85c, and 159 white mixed at 8 c.

OATS.—Are in fair supply, but the demand has been checked by the quarantine and there were no sales on Monday. On Saturday 600 sacks sold at 55@56c. ₱ bushel for prime, and 58c. for choice. On Tuesday the rain storm prevented movements on the landing.

BACON.—The market is quiet but firm, with a light stock on hand. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of about 100 casks, in lots, at 8½c. for shoulders, 8¾ for clear rib sides, and 9c. for country clear sides; 12 casks shoulders and 50 casks clear sides sold, to arrive, on private terms. On Tuesday 3 and 5 casks clear sides sold at 9 c. ₱ lb. Shoulders are now quoted at 8¾@8½c., clear rib sides 8¾@8¾c., and clear sides 9@9¼ c. ₱ lb.

HAMS.—Good and choice sugar-cured hams continue scarce and in demand. They are quoted at 13@13½c., good 12½@13c. ₱ lb; ordinary sugar-cured hams at 10½@11c. ₱ lb.

DRY SALT MEATS.—The market is free of supplies in first hands. Shoulders are retailing at 8c. ₱ lb.

BREAKFAST BACON.—The market is bare and the supplies sell at high prices as soon as received. Western and Northern canvassed hams 14@14½c. ₱ lb. The Morning Star boxes Western, just received, sold at 14c. ₱ lb, and on Tuesday 17 boxes do. at 14c. ₱ lb.

BUTTER.—The supply is good and the demand is only moderate. The medium and lower grades are in abundance and dull at 12½@15c.; good Western commands 18@20c., choice 20@25c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in only moderate request, and owing to scarcity has ruled somewhat higher than in New York, closing at a nominal advance of ¼c., opening on Saturday at 114¼-114¾ (against 114¾ at New York), and closing at the opening rates, (against 114¾ in the market); opening on Monday at 114½@114¾, (against 114¾ a. New York), and closing at 114¾@114¾, (against 114¾ at New York); and opening on Tuesday at 114¾@115, (against 114¾@114¾ at New York), and closing at 114¾@114¾, against 114¾. The quotation of 114¾ at three P. M. at New York was not received until after the close of business.

The sales of silver have been confined to trifling amounts. There are now or no Mexican dollars in the market. American half dollars are now quoted at 104½@106, and Mexican dollars nominal at 1½@1¾ ₱ cent. premium in gold.

Under a burning sun, where Bilious affections and Fevers of various descriptions so generally prevail,

Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient

Has been successful beyond all parallel. Hence, the physicians of the tropics give it their emphatic sanction, prescribing it in preference to every other aperient in use. The patients, of course, gladly acquiesce, for this preparation is one of the most delightful, as well as mild and cooling cathartics chemistry has yet devised, and possesses every medicinal virtue of the far-famed German Seltzer Spa. It is a powder that only requires the addition of water to produce in an instant a delicious, effervescent beverage, as well as an invaluable medicine. Ask for and accept none but the genuine.

VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1871. NO. 39.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FOREIGN.

City of Mexico, Oct. 2.—Juarez was installed as president last night, amid great excitement. No revolutionary demonstrations have yet been made.

Juarez's message was conciliatory, but firm.

Matamoros, October 2.—Another great revolution has broken ont in the State of Nuevo Leon. All the State officers are leagned against Juarez. It is expected the movement will be seconded by neighboring States.

Merchants here and on the coast are uneasy about coming events. Great preparations are being made at Matamoros for the defense of the city.

City of Mexico, Sept. 30, via Havana, Oct. 4.—Elections completed, and Juarez has a majority of eighteen in Congress. His election is therefore certain, and Congress has nothing to do bnt go through the form of choice between the rival candidates. It is believed there will be no important revolutionary movements following this result. Confidence is restored in all parts of the republic.

Rome, Oct. 4.—The Italian government has determined no professor of the University of Rome will be permitted to continue to exercise function without taking the oath of allegiance to Italy. The oath has been tendered upon this basis.

Darmstadt, Oct. 4.—A meeting of Protestants representing various portions of the German Empire is now being held in this city, for the purpose of discussing the condition of the Protestant religion in Germany.

A resolution has been adopted setting forth that it is the interest of Germany to oppose the doctrine of Pspal infallibility, that dogma so inimical to the sovereignty of state and the liberties of the people and destructive to that freedom of conscience, which is the base of pure religion; that the establishment of the Order of Jesus must be prohibited.

London, Oct. 5.—The weekly statement of the Bank of England, published to-day, shows a decrease in the amount of bullion in its vaults of eight hundred and seventy-six thousand pounds.

A dispatch from Boinbay reports that an insurrection has broken out in the Portuguese settlement of Goa, west coast of India, bnt the military force in charge of the post have been able to quell the disturbance.

The American bark Sancho Panza was towed into Queenstown to-day in a leaking condition.

A large ship off Eastuet unmanageable, with her rudder gone. Her name is unknown. Steamers have put off to her assistance.

Rome, Oct. 6.—Twenty professors of the University of Rome have refused to take the onth required by the Italian government.

Paris, Oct. 6.—The sentence of Rochefort hns heen commuted from imprisonment for life to banishment from French territory.

Paris, Oct. 7.—The court of revision, to which Rossel appealed, has sentenced him to death.

The Republican journals demand that President Thiers take prompt measures to snppress Bonapartist conspiracies.

The Algerian agitations continne. There are apprehensions that an abandonment of the colony will be necessary.

DOMESTIC.

Baltimore, Oct. 4.—The Triennial General Conventiou of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, assembled at Emanuel church, in this city, to-day. The edifice was crowded. In the morning exercises the Right Rev. Johns, of Virginia, preached the sermon, after which the bishops disrobed and were called to order hy the presiding Bishop Smith, of Kentucky.

A resolution was passed to proceed in a body to Grace church for organization, at which their lordships the Bishop of Litchfield, and Right Rev. Dr. Venable, Bishop of Nassau, would be present. Among the deputies on the floor were Hon. Hamilton Fish, and ex-Senator Stevenson, Rev. Mr. Hally, (colored) Rector of Trinity Church at Port-au-Prince.

Salt Lake City, Oct. 4—Daniel H. Wills, Mayor of Salt Lake City and Third President of the Mormon Church, has been arrested for lewdness and held to bail in the sum of five thousand dollars.

Milwaukee, Oct. 4.—A special to the News from Green Bay, says the fires in the woods between there and Michigan have exteuded across Fox river and cover a strip of twenty miles in Suwance and Oconto counties.

The large lumbering towns of Marquette and Pishtego are threatened with destruction.

Fires are now raging over three hundred sqnare miles of territory. About ono hnndred families are burned out of house and home. Farm buildings, bridges and fences have been swept away, and thonsands of square miles of valuable pine forest destroyed.

The entire popnlation is fighting the fire without success. All supplies of food for man and beast have been destroyed, and starvation during the coming winter stares them in the face.

Chicago, Oct. 6.—The dronth now provailing in the West has not been equaled within the past twenty-five years. All throngh central and southern Illinois the wells and small streams are completely dried np, and the inhabitants find great difficulty in obtaining snfficient water for households and stock. The soil is so dry that plowing is rendered impossible.

St. Paul, Oct. 6.—A great prairie fire prevails in this State. Its conrse is southeast, toward the Iowa border and the Minnesota river. Losses confined principally to honses, barns, fences, wheat and live stock. Only two lives known to be lost. Many small farms have been completely destroyed.

Galveston, Oct. 6.—The election throughout the State as far as heard from, has passed off qnietly, except at Groesbeck, where five negro State police murdered D. C. Applewhite, an old citizen of this State. The negroes havo been arrested, and are now in the custody of the civil anthorities.

Special dispatches from many counties to the Galveston News indicate large Democratic majorities, insuring the defeat of Gen. Clarke in this district. The vote polled here is small, but the Democrats have about one thousand majority.

A severe storm passed over Galveston, commencing on the evening of the second. The whole bay front of the city was submerged for several hours by tide water as far back as Church street. The damage to property in the city is small, considering the violence of the storm.

Some three miles of the Galveston, Houstou and Henderson railroad, between the city and the bay bridge, is badly washed and will require several days to be put in running order.

The steamer Thirteenth Era, which was anchored in the bay, is a total wreck. Her passengers and crew were all saved, aftor clinging to the wreck all night, except one negro, who tried to escape from the wreck. The bodies of two other negroes have been picked up in the bay.

The steamboat Beardstown is partially wrecked, being badly hogged and her smokestacks blown away.

The schooner Sarah Cole, of Pensacola, and many smaller crafts, were blown ashore. The shipping in the roads appears to be all safe. The gas works in the city were badly damaged and telegraph lines prostrated.

At Indianola the storm was very severe. The town was flooded hy tide water deeper than known for twenty-five years past.

The town of Crockett, Texas, was destroyed by fire on the first instant. The whole of the business part of the town, including the hotel, was burned, except the dry goods house of L. E. Downs. Loss not stated; insurance fifty thonsand dollars.

Salt Lake City, Oct. 6.—A special Conference was held at the Tabernacle yesterday. There were eight thousand Mormons present. Federal officials were bitterly denounced. Brigham Young was very much excited and prayed curses on Federal officials. He said: "Trust in God and keep your powder dry, and do not fail to have on hand a supply of fixed ammunition." The regular semi-annual Conference begins today.

Cincinnati, Oct. 6.—A conflagration is raging near Custar, Wood county, and the inhabitants are fleeing.

Chicago, Oct. 7.—Fires in the woods and prairies prevail in every direction, including Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa. Heavy rain alone can stop the conflagration. The country is dry as tinder.

Washington, Oct. 8.—Latest advices from the great fire at Chicago were at half past one this morning. Then it was apparently raging as fiercely as ever. A block of buildings on the north side of Van Buren street is now wrapt in flames. The elevator is safe so far, and the fire seems to be spreading south and west, notwithstanding the wind is now directly south and blowing hard.

The glare from the burning buildings is great enough to light the streets half a mile away so one may read. The entire fire department are now on the ground and making almost superhuman efforts to check the flames. The losses probably already amount to millions, and the end is not yet.

Six squares, between Clinton, Van Buren and Jackson streets, were burned.

The Chicago fire got under control about one o'clock this morning, after destroying four squares. Vincent, Nelson & Co.'s warehouse, the largest in the city, and located in the burnt district, was saved. A large portion of ground over which the fire swept, was covered with lumber, coal and wood yards, planing mills, small factories and dwellings and saloons of the poorer class. The total loss is estimated at from two hundred and fifty thonsand dollars to three hnndred thousand dollars, probably half insured.

Chicago, Oct. 8.—The fire broke out again at ten to-night in the western division, where the fire of last night occurred, and appears to be as large as that.

One woman was burned to death in the fire last night. Another life is known to be lost.

Chicago, Oct. 9.—The Crosby Opera House has been destroyed.

The loss is now estimated at fifty million dollars.

The Palmer House is burned.

The chief engineer of Cincinnati, with three engines and hose, has started for Chicago.

A mass meeting was held at Cincinnati, Governor Hays presiding, to take measures for the relief of the sufferers by the grert fire at Chicago.

Madison, Market, Clinton, Jefferson, Buffalo and Griswold streets are ruined. Both sides of the Chicago river are a mass of ruins. The efforts to save the courthouse and gasworks were futile. Thirty or forty vessels are burning now, and many have been destroyed.

Every man in the city has been called for duty. Nearly every bridge over the Chicago river is burned. All is terror.

Later.—The fire is under control; three-quarters of the city, lying on both sides of the river, is in ruins.

Chicago, Oct. 10, noon.—The fire continued to burn all night on the north side, but this morning is under control, nothing remaining on that side from the river north to Lincoln Park north, and from the north branch of the river on the west to the lake east. This portion of the city, except along the main river, where there was a business block, was occupied by dwellings, and two-thirds of the population of the district were Germans and Scandinavians. These people are now houseless.

At three o'clock this morning the rain came. It did not rain long, but made the roofs and ground wet.

Fifteen hundred citizens have been sworn in as special police.

One hundred thousands rations have been issued.

Two men who were caught at incendiarism were hung to a lamppost. This summary proceeding awed the thieves into harmlessness.

Every train brings engines, and the firemen immediately go to work. They are playing on the coal piles to save fuel.

A few business men with more nerve than others are seeking business places on the west side. Rooms which rented last week for fifty dollars now command five thousand dollars.

The newspapers are already at work preparing for a resumption of publication.

Water for drinking and cooking is secured from the lakes and parks.

Thonsands of people are camped about the artesian well. The people are fed in churches and schoolhouses.

The weather was cold this morning, causing great suffering, but the people are praying for more rain.

Three o'clock, P. M.—Word has just been brought that a fierce fire is raging on Thirty-first street.

This street is two miles south of the southern fire limit, and a little less than that from the limit on the west side.

Several incendiaries were plying their vocation. Two were caught firing buildings and shot. Two others were led off with ropes around their necks.

As the wind is now blowing a gale, the end cannot be told.

New York, Oct. 10.—A special to the Times from Chicago, October 10, 2.20 A. M., says three-fourths of Chicago is in ruins and the city is still burning. In the west division, Taylor and Halstead streets have been swept by the flames. The water works went early. There has been a fearful loss of life by falling walls. Ten thousand business men will be compelled to make assignments. An insurance companies' crash is inevitable. The river is impassable except at bridge 12. The other bridges have been burned. It is feared that bridge 12 will be crushed by overwhelming travel.

The railroad trains have ceased running, and there will be no mails.

The present losses are estimated at $200,000,000.

The fireproof buildings burnt like timber.

Few business houses saved even their papers.

No newspapers can be published until type comes from elsewhere.

Some vessels escaped by being sent adrift into Lake Michigan.

The origin of the fire was in a stable, where a woman, with a kerosene lamp, went to milk a cow.

A large number of firemen were killed.

The Convent of Mercy was burned.

The pavements were burned and a hundred squares were burned in the south division.

One hundred thousand employes are out of employment.

The county records were saved. The city records were lost.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Tuskegee Circuit, Alabama Conference.

Ma. Editon: The Lord has blessed Tuskegee circuit, Alabama Conference, with a gracions outponring of His spirit. Our first meeting, at Warren's Stand, resulted in increased spiritnality of the membership, twenty-two accessions to the church of the best material in the community, a revival of class and weekly prayer meetings, and a decidedly increased interest in all the enterprises of the church of God.

The second meeting, at Cotton Valley, resulted in twelve additions to the membership, manifest spiritual improvement of the church, and a marked impression for increasing good upon the community at large. Sickness prevented, to some extent, my own efficiency, as it was in much pain and weakness I preached the gospel. But our brethren caught hold of the work and pushed it to success, under God's blessing. Bro. William Menefee, in his age and infirmities, and Bro. G. B. Campbell labored day and night for the salvation of souls; as, indeed, did all the brethren.

Our third meeting, at La Place, was not as successful as we had anticipated, owing to some cases in court requiring the attendance of a large number of the people of that neighborhood. We had five conversions, and the church was much revived.

The fourth meeting, at Creek Stand, was a most excellent one. Nineteen professed to have found peace in believing in Christ, and eighteen were received in the church. While attending the meeting at La Place I was called on to visit Carr's schoolhouse, which I did on Sunday morning, preached at eleven o'clock, baptized twenty-two and received twenty-seven in the church. These are converts resulting from the labors of Rev. Joseph Bradford, one of our local preachers. This brother deserves much credit. He labored for eight or nine nights, unassisted, with these people. God blessed his labors and the total result was thirty conversions.

My last protracted meeting on this circuit will commence at Union on the Saturday before the fifth Sunday in October. I hope to realize and witness still greater supplies of grace and salvation at that point. This circuit is now in a fine spiritual condition, and I expect its financial report to be superior, because when the love of God abonnds there is no difficulty in raising money for church purposes.

Isaac Spangler, P. C.

Tuskegee, Ala., Sept. 28, 1871.

Vernon Circuit, Louisiana Conference.

Mr. Editon: Amid the pressure of labor I pause at home one day for rest, and devote a few passing moments to the pleasant task of recording the result of the special meetings we have held on the Vernon circuit this year.

We commenced a meeting at Wesley chapel August 26, and continued four days. Some twenty-five or more professed conversion, thirty-seven were added to the church. The old members were greatly revived. Many of the accessions were heads of families, and will strengthen the church materially and morally.

We closed the meeting Tuesday night, and on Wednesday our district meeting opened at Vienna. We closed this meeting the following Wednesday, having received twenty-two into the church—many of them strong accessions.

On Saturday, September 16, we commenced a meeting at Long Straw. Here the church was rather weak, and the neighborhood quite divided. There were several conversions and ten accessions to the church.

The following Saturday, September 23, we again commenced at Wesley chapel, and found our young converts standing firm and the penitents struggling for salvation. We closed last night, after a five days' battle, amid one of the most triumphant scenes I ever witnessed. The church triumphantly happy, and sinners awe-struck, while mourners were melted into great tenderness. We baptized eighteen, received into the fellowship of the church twenty-eight, besides those who joined by letter. We saw the effect of this solemn scene upon the audience, and opened the door of the church for applicants for membership, and ten young men, who had withstood every argument and appeal before, promptly came forward and were enrolled among us. The joy of many seemed to be full. We leave your imagination to supply the scene, for we cannot describe.

It is somewhat remarkable that the number baptized at each of our meetings at this place was the same, viz: eighteen, and the number of applicants the same, viz: thirty-seven. Upon examination, this morning, my church-books show that up to this time we have added, by letter and otherwise, one hundred and fifty members to the church in the bounds of the Vernon circuit. "God alone can give the increase." To His name be all the glory. N. A. Chavens.

Bonner, La., September 28, 1871.

Greene Circuit, Alabama Conference.

Mr. Editor: We have passed through several meetings of interest on our work. At one church there were about fifteen conversions, and thirteen accessions of the most influential citizens in the community. We received three gentlemen and their wives into the church at the same time—something a little unusual. Another item worthy of notice as the fruit of this meeting, was the wonderful improvement in the finance of that church. They more than doubled their "quarterage" in cash and good subscription. Covetousness will relax its hold when religion takes possession of the heart. The most effectual way to improve the finances of the church is to improve her piety.

At two other meetings we received seven happy converts into the church. Of this number we note one—a Frenchman from the Romish Church. He gave evidence of genuine conversion, and expressing entire satisfaction with his baptism in that church, we did not repeat the ordinance.

In reviewing these labors and results, while we find much cause of thanksgiving to God, we can but feel that the ingathering of precious souls should have been greater. The fields are, indeed, white unto the harvest, and when the sickle is put in immortal sheaves should be gathered by scores. Why so little fruit? Is not the answer to be found in the possibility that the Holy Spirit has, in a great measure, been withdrawn from the church? The faith of God's people is weak, and hence the Word does not have free course—that it may run and be glorified in the salvation of souls.

Bro. J. M. Mason is conducting a meeting of considerable interest in Eutaw, assisted by Bros. W. S. Turner, of Forkland, and J. Bancroft, of Marion, Alabama. There is promise of much good.

J. W. Patton.

Catahoula Parish, Louisiana.

Mr. Editon: On the ninth instant, I commenced a two days' meeting at Gressett's Chapel, Catahoula parish, Columbia circuit.

At the close of the services at night of the second day the people asked me to protract the meeting, which I did till the seventeenth. The power of God was with us from the beginning to the close of the meeting. The results were seventeen accessions to the church—all of them adults, and several heads of families. Twenty were baptized by sprinkling, and a large number of conversions; backsliders were reclaimed, and Christians realized the sanctifying power of the Most High. We had sometimes from thirty to forty penitents at the altar; several members of the Baptist Church at the altar from time to time, asking an interest in our prayers and seeking the conversion of their souls. Bro. D. L. Mitchell, an elder in the Presbyterian Church, who is laboring as an Evangelist in this part of the country, was with me from the beginning to the close of the meeting, laboring with power, zeal and acceptability.

Bro. R. A. Davis, the pastor of this charge, and also Rev. J. S. Davis came to us on the Saturday before the close of the meeting, and did good work while with us.

I would state, in conclusion, that the good work is progressing in this part of the country.

Fraternally yours, C. R. Godfrey.

Whistler Station, Alabama Conference.

Mr. Editon: You may say to the friends of Zion that "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." He has visited us in great mercy at this place, and many souls have been happily converted, and nineteen have connected themselves with the church, and the membership have been greatly blessed.

Our meeting has been in progress for two weeks, and we have had added to the church some of the best material of this place. I think the church now in a better condition than it ever was before, and that we shall yet see many more converted and saved. Some from the Episcopal and Catholic churches have attended our service, and have received the blessing of the Lord, and now rejoice in the new birth, and feel that ours is the church of their choice, and hence, they cast in their lots with us and were at the altar of communion on last Sunday. Truly, it was a source of joy to see so many who, a few weeks ago, were in sin, now enjoying the love of God and partaking of the emblems of the broken body and blood of our blessed Saviour. Yours, truly, J. J. Grace.

Whistler Station, October 3, 1871.

Brookhaven District, Louisiana Conference.

Mr. Editor: Allow me to say to you, and through you, to the friends of revival work that the Brookhaven district is enjoying, at different points, a gracious outpouring of God's Spirit in the awakening for the conversion of souls.

There is a gracious revival now in progress at Crystal Springs. Some fifty-five souls have been converted and added to the church within the last week, and the work is still progressing, and we are still looking for greater manifestations of divine goodness. Pray for us.

Your brother, G. F. Thompson.

Castor Springs, Louisiana Conference.

Mr. Editor: On the twenty-fifth of August we commenced a protracted meeting at Castor Springs, Columbia circuit, Louisiana Conference, which lasted until the following Sunday week. The result of the meeting was twenty accessions to the church, and several conversions. Thanks to Bro. C. R. Godfrey for his efficient labors and assistance. Our hearts rejoice at the prosperity of Zion. Pray for us that the Lord may continue with us.

Yours fraternally, R. A. Davis.

Strong River Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

Mr. Editor: Each of the churches on Strong River circuit has been blessed with a revival. At Pleasant Hill there were twenty-two accessions, and at Mutual Union twelve, with about as many conversions as accessions at each church.

The West Point Report.—The report of the Board of Visitors to the Military Academy at West Point, for the year 1871, has just been printed and made public. It recommends a stricter discipline, so as to prevent the familiarity now existing between cadets and their superior officer, in frequent visiting back and forth, drinking and carousing together, the spending of money almost without stint by some cadets, while the superior ones are compelled to put up with mess-house fare, etc. The report also makes it a rule to retire, on a suitable salary for life, professors whose days of usefulness may have passed. The following suggestions are made: That henceforth the office of chaplain he made distinct, the term of incumbency to be limited to four years, and the religious denominations to be represented in rotation in making appointments of chaplains. That a preparatory course of at least one year should be established, and in view of the number of annual rejections, that the minimum age of admission to the academy be fixed at eighteen years. That a professorship of ethics and belles lettres be established, the incumbent to be selected from civil life.

MY BIRTHDAY.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Beneath the moonlight and the snow
Lies dead my latest year;
The Winter winds are wailing low
Its dirges in my ear.

I grieve not with the moaning wind
As if a loss befell;
Before me, even as behind,
God is, and all is well.

His light shines on me from above,
His low voice speaks within—
The patience of immortal love
Outwearing mortal sin.

Not mindless of the growing years
Of care and loss and pain,
My eyes are wet with thankful tears
For blessings which remain.

If dim the gold of life has grown,
I will not count it dross,
Nor turn from treasures still my own
To sigh for lack and loss.

The years no charm from Nature take;
As sweet her voices call,
As beautiful her mornings break,
As fair her evenings fall.

Love watches o'er my quiet ways,
Kind voices speak my name,
And lips than find it hard to praise
Are slow, at least, to blame.

How softly ebb the tides of will!
How fields, once lost or won,
Now lie behind me green and still
Beneath a level sun!

How hushed the hiss of party hate,
The clamor of the throng!
How old, harsh voices of debate
Flow into rhythmic song!

Methinks the spirit's temper grows
Too soft in this still air,
Somewhat the restful heart foregoes
Of needed watch and prayer.

The bark by tempest vainly tossed
May founder in the calm,
And he who braved the polar frost
Faint by the isles of balm.

Better than self-indulgent years
The outflung heart of youth,
Than pleasant songs in idle ears
The tumult of the truth.

Rest for the weary hands is good,
And love for hearts that pine,
But let the manly habitude
Of upright souls be mine.

Let winds that blow from heaven, refresh,
Dear Lord, the languid air;
And let the weakness of the flesh
Thy strength of spirit share.

And, if the eye must fail of light,
The ear forget to hear,
Make clearer still the spirit's sight,
More fine the inward ear!

Be near me in mine hours of need,
To soothe, or cheer, or warn,
And down these slopes of sunset lead,
As up the hills of morn!

THE WATCH FOR TO-MORROW.

BY CARL SPENCER.

It is Psyche that sits in her chamber,
With windows that follow the sun;
By the west, where the lyles clamber,
She sits when the day is done,
All alone.
And her eyes grow sad to remember,
Looking pitiful toward the sun.

But bright with the morning-glories
Is the look to the eastern way,
And the prince of the fairy stories—
The lover so gallant and gay—
Well-a-day!
Is to come with the sunrise glories;
To-morrow is well on the way.

So she turns from the dying splendor,
She looks to the eastern gate;
Oh the whispers the star-deeps lend her,
As she leans to listen and wait!
"Lo! my fate—"
And one that is vainly tender,
Prayeth her, early and late.

Safe under her eyelids closing,
She bideth the welcome sheen;
"It is but a night's reposing,
But a dream and a silence between."
Ah, between!
It is silence spreading and closing,
And an ever-beginning dream.

The prince of the golden feather,
He tarrieth far away;
Through sunny and stormy weather
She wearies of fond To-day;
Well-a-day!
Always and always toge her—
To-morrow is long on the way.

Who waits in the dawning lonely,
When the lattice is drawn apart?
Ah, love him a little, if only
For pity of thy own heart—
Foolish heart!
In the watch that leaveth thee lonely,
In the love that is sorrow and smart.

Nay, out of her ashes of sorrow,
Hope soareth, from day to day,
And the pitiful eyes will borrow
New light from the eastern way—
Well-a-day!
But they never will look on To-morrow—
To-morrow is dead on the way!

BUSH COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of September 21, I find, in a communication from the Rev. Julius T. Curtiss, this remarkable expression: "The day is passed for educating our ministry on horseback, and graduating them in bush colleges." And the writer sincerely hopes "this old fogy idea will die out, and we may hear of it no more; for it is a fatal error and a hindrance to the prosperity of the church." (The emphasis is mine). A common error of mankind, in the discussion of questions of interest, is that the subject overmasters the mind, and not the mind the subject. When this is the case, it is natural for the mind to cower beneath it, and assign to it an undue importance. This reflection ought to set a guard upon us to hold our criticisms of former things, and our enthusiasm for reform with modesty. The gospel, I know, does not breathe an abject spirit; but when history, which is said to be "philosophy teaching by example," attest the value of a custom, we should not hastily conclude that it was a scene of enacted lies misguiding and cheating the wisdom of the past. And for this purpose nature travails so many hundred years to bring us forth, to amend with superior wisdom that of our fathers. Systems are to be judged, not by theory, but by results. If these have been adequate to meet the demands, and unequaled by the results of other systems, this fact ought to be taken as prima facie, if not conclusive, evidence of its wisdom.

Besides, no man has been wise enough to write, beforehand, a practical theory of government. In this respect, the philosophy of constitutional history tells us that God is all the time "confounding the wisdom of the wise." He writes his theory, and it comes to naught. When there has been no theory devised beforehand to elevate, but a spirit within man, then history teaches us that the inspiration of the Almighty "giveth it understanding." It is in this reflection that God is seen in history, and we should take heed how we despise the understanding of the past. It may have a divinity.

This "bush college" is a very old institution. It belongs to every age of the world, and grand are her products. Empires, republics, institutions have gone down, but the "bush college" has survived, and must survive to the end. Tried by results, her success in church, State and science will not materially suffer in comparison with any other college. Great names claim her for their alma mater. From her shady groves Franklin came forth, infused with the vigor of her rough training, to give to the lightnings of heaven their first lessons in obedience to the will of man; and so in the State and the church could her illustrious sons be culled.

I had like to have said this "bush college" was the Almighty's college, where his providence schools the great men of the world. This "bush college" is a necessity to the world, and for that reason it has survived, and must. While, at least, the world has a wilderness, some rough John from the "bush college" will be found crying in it: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord;" and he will cry, until the way is prepared. It has some advantage over other colleges; its curriculum includes all learning; it never graduates, or grants a diploma, or finishes an education, on the sound philosophy that it can never be finished. Other institutions may confer titles, but the "bush college" confers gifts without a title.

Its method, too, is superior. It throws its students always upon their own self-reliance, and they come forth enjoying the glorious triumph of having conquered the world for themselves. They stand in no unnatural relation to learning. To them, learning is not information merely; it is power. Hence, theirs is not "the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love and of a sound mind."

Now, when it is remembered, that information is not, necessarily, education, but depends for its value upon the education it has induced, we may see another wonderful power of a "bush college." I mean, this information, like money, depends for its value upon the good sense that employs it. It is only in the development of this good sense that you can give an effective value to acquired information. This, indeed, is one of the reasons of the vast difference between men. Two men have each a thousand dollars. In the hands of one it has no value, in that of the other its effective value may be incalculable. This difference does not depend on the money, but on some quality of good and bad sense in the men. The one has been to the "bush college" and has acquired that good sense, which is the true money-power. So the mind may be stored with the treasures of knowledge, but the calamity is it remains stored; it is powerless to wield it. While another mind, with half the information, but with a proper skill in its use, may become a power for good. Now, I do not know that there is any institution that will exceed the "bush college" in developing this good sense. In her academic groves it is always employed. What it learns to-day must be turned to the best account to-morrow. He feels that the Master is "to gather where he strewed not," and, having but little, conscience, prayer and a burning desire for the salvation of souls, all come to make his skill effective. He starts to teach when he starts to learn, and, by reciprocity, learns fastest by teaching. The "bush college" is a seat of learning, and there ought to be no hostility between it and the more modern and refined institutions of learning. These modern ones are blessings invaluable to meet the wants from which they sprang. But the "bush" is still a necessity. Its day has not declined. Its obituary must not be written before the time. It has worked wonders. By its instrumentality "the blind has been made to see, the deaf to hear, the dead raised, and the poor have had the gospel preached unto them." The world is still afflicted with the blind, the deaf, the dead, and the poor. Old China, like young America, may yet tremble before the blast of these ram's-horns, rough though they, be of the "bush college."

If it be true that every age is the product of its predecessor, then no fatal error could have begun and fostered a prosperity of unparalleled power.

LAYMAN.

DENOMINATIONAL DIFFERENCES.

One of the arguments in the mouths of unbelievers against our holy religion is this: "Your faith is not one, but many; truth, however, can be but one; therefore, which is the true faith? It being impossible for us to ascertain, we reject religion until its professors shall have come to an understanding, which of the different views entertained is the right one." There is a seeming plausibility in this argument, but it is only seeming, as we shall presently endeavor to show.

In the first place, we do not concede to unbelievers the right to judge those who are spiritually minded; for Paul says: First Corinthians 2, 14, "that the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." They may be competent to judge of matters concerning which they can attain to conclusions by means of intellectual processes, but so long as they do not yield consent to the truth, that in searching the hidden things of God, the Spirit of God moves and directs the mind of the seeker, and that these things can be discerned by the aid of divine enlightenment only, we must consider them as utterly incompetent either to decide between disagreeing parties in the Christian church, or to set up their own views as being the correct interpretation of the divine will and works. With just as much propriety could an illiterate peasant presume to find fault with the result of an astronomer's calculation of a planet's orbit; or a blacksmith to pronounce upon the work of a skillful optician.

And, now, in order to show the fallacy of the above reasoning on the part of infidels, let us see how the matter stands between the disagreeing parties in the Christian church. Before stating the case, however, we premise: First, that there are some things upon which all Christians are fully agreed. Second, that these things are the essentials of the Christian faith. Third, that so long as these remain intact, the religion of Jesus Christ rests upon a sure, permanent and abiding foundation. Nor will all the floodgates of hell, opened and let loose upon the structure reared upon this foundation, be able to remove from it a single stone. Neither devils, nor men allied with devils, to their shame and final utter confusion, will ever have the satisfaction of confounding the language of believers in the different churches, by taking advantage of a few expressions not well understood by all. When comes the final contest they will find, to their dismay, that in the vocabulary of the Christian there are potent words and expressions of power, understood most perfectly by all; and the battle-cry of the host of Immanuel will be a grand unison. The organ peals of truth will be harmonious still, though a few unskillful players sound some discordant notes.

But how about the bickerings, the disagreements and consequent uncharitable feelings of Christians among themselves? Will they never cease? Why waste words and time and talent in wrangling and strife. There is no necessity for it, nor is anybody the better off for it. Religion is not increased by it, though books be. There will never be, I venture to predict, a perfect agreement on minor points, as long as man is a thinking and speculative being.

But to illustrate the case. Two men, Jones and Smith, are in a boat on a lake. They want to get to the opposite shore by nightfall. Both work at the oars with a good will, until the perspiration is in great drops upon their brows. Many dangerous places they safely pass; a storm comes, but by dint of careful management, and by the protection of the Almighty, they safely outride the storm. Now, they rest their oars, and gaze upon the distant shore before them, and then down into the limpid waters of the lake, now calm and at rest. While looking down, Jones spies an object at the bottom of the lake. The water is very clear, but deep; and Jones makes it out to be a shell, and calls Smith's attention to it. Smith, however, at once pronounces it to be a stone. After closely peering down again at the object, each is confirmed in his opinion, and each grows more tenacious in holding it. Now, they might go peaceably on, leave that object calmy reposing there in the silent depths of the lake, while they hasten onward to reach their goal. They are perfectly agreed on some points; namely, that the water upon whose bosom they are sailing, is clear and transparent; is a fluid; is used for purposes of cleaning, cooking and quenching thirst; is plentiful; is accessible. Again, it bears their boat up, and affords them a means of reaching, in a straight course, the point of destination for which they are making. Moreover, they know that they are bound for the other shore and must not tarry, else they will be belated, and, perhaps, will not get there at all. They do not dispute any of these points. Yet mark them. Jones grows excited, and Smith gets excited, and their excitement waxes until it becomes anger. They will not leave the spot until they have ascertained what that object is. They have lost much time already, the sun is about to go down, and yet there they are, each one insisting upon his opinion. The water grows darker as the shadows of evening settle upon the lake, and, at last, the object is lost sight of and forgotten in their anxiety to reach the shore. It will be well for them if they reach it. But they both pull at the oars, while blushes of shame mantle their cheeks, and not a word is spoken, for both see the folly of their late wrangling.

Christians can easily make the application, for the allegory is very simple. We are all sailing to the same port, in the same boat—the good old gospel ship. Let us not wrangle on the way about the hidden things of God. They may be very simple to be understood, but our eyes are not strong enough to pierce the profundity of the mind of God. Our main object should be, by united effort, to get safely to shore, that, after the fluctuations and vicissitudes of life, we may reach the blissful abode of the saints, and there find a spot on which our weary feet may eternally rest.

J. A. G. R.

JESUS.

"Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, my Lord." Phil. III, 8.

Jesus is the radiant center of all our theology, faith, hope and love. He is that manifestation of the Great I Am, which has especial regard to fallen man. In this aspect, he is the Eternal Word of God. Being the only-begotten, well-beloved, and pre-eminently anointed of the Father, He sits, the eternal Fountain of grace and truth. From Him proceeds a ceaseless stream of life and light. Unto Him, like sweet incense, arise the prayers and hallelujahs of His saints. Cherubim veil their faces before His throne, while poor sinners find joy and peace in His coming.

The name of Jesus possesses a talismanic power. In that name, devils are cast out, the dead are raised, and many wonderful works are done. The name of Jesus can touch the hardened conscience. Our logic may fail, and our rhetoric be unavailing, but the mention of that name is effectual to reach the innermost soul of man. "There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." What other name is so soft and yet so inexpressibly sweet! How gently, and with what unutterable melody rings its precious cadence upon my ear! It flows like the sweet river of Eden, bathing my troubled soul. It brings to the weary rest. Jesus!

Fellow-preachers, let us be content as ambassadors of Christ. It is well to enunciate labored disquisitions in speculative theology. It is better to pass to a contemplative height, whence we may view the untarnished honors of the eternal throne; to study the law, its immaculateness, its thunderings, its lightnings. This would be still better for us if we were already a race of saints. But the preaching of the cross is the power of God. "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

Let us present Jesus; the great objective features of his life and character, not only as suffering and dying for us, but for us also, as exalted, glorified, mighty, present and loving. Of this, the people will never be weary. If, from Sabbath to Sabbath, we but reiterate Jesus! Jesus! Jesus! souls will feel Him the power and wisdom of God, and His word will have free course and be glorified.

For this objective teaching has its subjective end in the soul of man. Christ for us becomes Christ in us. The soul actually apprehends Jesus a living, present, Reality. The Christ of God is GOD TO THE SOUL.

Our growth in grace is also a growth in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Actual holiness of heart and life is but the vital union of the soul with Jesus. It is a rest of faith; a placid rest in Jesus.

Reader, this Jesus is mine, personally, particularly. He is my Life and my All. To Him my soul clings fondly for shelter in the stormy blast.

"Jesu, Deliverer!
Stay near to me!
Soothe thou my voyaging
Over life's sea!
Thou, when the storm of death
Roars, sweeping by,
Whisper, O, Truth of Truth!
'Peace! It is I!'"

DEACONUS.

"TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN."

We remember reading, about seventeen years ago, a beautiful little poem entitled:

"We won't give up the Bible!"

We can recall nothing of it save the name and the beautiful sentiment therein expressed; which sentiment was repeated, in various forms, throughout its several verses. We have been thinking, to-day, what a blessing it would be if every one should take this as his watchword:

"I won't give up the Bible!"

Scarce a paper or magazine comes into our hands, now-a-days, but has some new and dangerous theory set forth in language bearing a counterfeit impress of wisdom, easily distinguished from the genuine article by those who deal much in the latter, but dangerous, nevertheless, because so many are wishing for a medium course—an alternative; so many would say that the Bible was liable to mistranslation; that this and that passage must be incorrectly rendered, and so on; that when they see these seductive theories they are prone to say, as some of us do when we read the patent medicine advertisement: "This must be a reliable article, it describes my case so perfectly." "There must be something in what I was saying the other day, for here is a paper, 'by a very learned man in England,' which is just to the same effect." Now, how can you take such poor stuff as that—so weak an excuse—for slighting the Bible. Simply because you see your doubts as to the reliability of the Bible set forth by another in high sounding words. Is not this piece of magniloquence, after all, but the opinion of a poor dying sinner? "A man subject to like passions as we are," and tempted by the same Devil? Ah! my passible readers, let us hold to that good old Bible, the priceless, unquestionable word of God. Think how many, whom you have known and loved, have lived by its precepts and died triumphing in its promises. You, dear sir, had a mother who, in life, trusted the way of her soul's choice to the Bible's teachings, and made that choice according to its advice. Did you ever hear her repent of her confidence in the divinity of its origin? Truly, no! And was she not honored and revered by the righteous and by the unconverted, too, more and more, as she lived more and more in conformity to its laws? You, my young friend, had a dear old grandfather, who held that holy Book for his guide in life, and died rejoicing, because he felt its promises drawing to their glorious fulfillment. Or, perchance, you had a dear, pious grandmother, whom you loved as you did your own life, and who often prayed for you and entreated you to take that Word as "a lamp unto your feet." There hangs, perchance, a picture of her in the parlor, and you can hardly bear to look upon it now. Do, go! and stand before it now! Think how bitterly you wept when they laid her in the grave! Think how oft she begged you to live according to the Bible's teachings, and spoke of it as God's word. You thought you loved and honored her to the utmost, and you are slighting her oft-entreaty; doing that which would have rent her very heart with severest pain; doubting, almost despising, that which was to her the holiest thing on earth.

Our jealousy for the sacred reputation of the Bible has made our feeble pen to go beyond its lawful space. We feel that we need its teachings sadly, too, and wofully often do we merit its rebukes. Our apology, if you ask me, is in these words: The guide-post may point the way truthfully, even though it never travels it! One more remark, and we are done. Remember, the Bible is God's word. Your doubts can never make it less so, nor can any learned man's contradictions lessen its truth; but they can offend its author, and His anger is terrible. Do not incur this dreadful risk! Believe the Bible, here, in time, while He invites you so to do, and realize its precious promises here and hereafter, lest He compel you to believe it, in eternity, and to realize its awful threats.

VIAJERO.

WE HAVE often read of missionary hens and missionary pigs; but here is a man who has impressed beans into the service of the missionaries. The Journal and Messenger tells the story:

"He sent half a pint of beans to the missionary meeting, requesting that two friends would plant them for three successive years, and give the entire product to the mission. At the close of the meeting the beans were counted, and numbered two hundred and fifty six in each quarter of a pint. Two individuals took them, and at the end of three years a most enthusiastic meeting was held to know the result. One brother stated that his beans had yielded two quarters, three pecks, and three pints, which sold for about $26. The other brother planted his beans ten inches apart. The first year he had eleven pints; the second year he had nine bushels, one and a half pecks; the third year thirty-four quarters, one comb, sixty-four bushels, one and a half pecks, which were sold for a little over $381—both crops realizing above $407 for the mission. This last brother offered to take another half pint and try again, as he hoped for greater success. Another friend took a large potato to plant upon the same terms."

PAPERS received in London contain details of a dreadful calamity which has visited the small island of Togolanda, in the Malay Archipelago, about fifty miles northeast of the island of Celebes. An outburst of the volcano of Ruwang was accompanied by a commotion of the sea, and a wave forty yards in height swept all the human beings and cattle and horses from the island. It is reported that four hundred and sixteen persons perished.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1871.

I'M GROWING OLD.

I'm growing old,—'tis surely so;
And yet how short it seems
Since I was but a sportive child,
Enjoying childish dreams.

I cannot see the change that comes
With such an even pace;
I mark not when the wrinkles fall
Upon my fading face.

I know I'm old; and yet my heart
Is just as young and gay
As e'er it was, before my locks
Of bright brown turned to gray.

I know these eyes, to other eyes,
Look not so bright and glad
As once they looked; and yet 'tis not
Because my heart's more sad.

I never watched, with purer joy,
The floating clouds and glowing skies,
While glistening tears of rapture fill
These old and fading eyes.

And when I mark the cheek where once
The bright rose used to glow,
It grieves me not to see instead
The almond crown my brow.

I've seen the flower grow old and pale,
And withered more than I;
I've seen it lose its every charm,
Then droop away and die.

And then I've seen it rise again,
Bright as the beaming sky,
And young and pure and beautiful,—
And felt that so shall I.

Then what if I am growing old,—
My heart is changeless still,
And God has given me enough
This loving heart to fill.

I love to see the sun go down,
And lengthening shadows throw
Along the ground, while o'er my head
The clouds in crimson glow.

I see, beyond those gorgeous clouds
A country bright and fair,
Which needs no sun,—God and the Lamb
Its light and beauty are.

I seem to hear the wondrous song
Redeemed sinners sing;
And my heart leaps to join the throng,
To praise the Heavenly King.

I seem to see three cherub boys,
As hand in hand they go,
With golden curls and snowy wings,
Whose eyes with rapture glow.

When I was young, I called them mine;
Now, Heaven's sweet ones are they,
But I shall claim my own again
When I am called away.

Perhaps, when Heaven's bright gate I've past,
They'll know from every other,
The one who gave them back to God,
And haste to call me mother.

Oh! I am glad I'm growing old!
For every day I spend,
Shall bring me one day nearer that
Bright day that has no end.

WHAT IS LIFE?

"What is life?" Fond youth replied:
"'Tis a sunlit sea, with a flowing tide,
Where the waves are bright as the skies above
And the bark is guided by Hope and Love;
While the song of birds and the breath of flowers
Make glad the flight of golden hours."

"What is life?" Stern Manhood said:
"'Tis a grave where early hopes lie dead,
A tomb with faded garlands deck'd,
A lee shore where the heart is wreck'd;
While the sad deep knell of by-gone time
Peals on the soul like a funeral chime."

"What is life?" Old Age drew near
With tottering limbs and snow-white hair,
And said: "'Tis a journey drear and cold,
Where dear'st fail on doth spare the old
To wander alone from day to day,
When all they love have passed away."

"What is life?" A small, still voice,
Replying, made my heart rejoice:
"'Tis the night before that glorious day
When doubt and fear shall pass away,
And the tears of the mourner shall fall no more
In the calm repose of the heavenly shore."

THE SERPENTS IN THE HOME-NEST

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

The late terrible "trunk" tragedy, followed closely by other tragedies well nigh as terrible, have startled and shocked the nation. This time the serpent has thrust his hissing tongue into our very faces; but there is a whole brood like unto him nestling still in dark concealments. Into two or three dens of death the daylight of detection has streamed; but they are only specimens of a class more numerous than we have dreamed of. They are fresh proofs of the fact that in our great cities there exists a distinct class of "institutions," organized for the sole purpose of extinguishing human life. They are "run" by a body of infamous creatures, whose only trade is to murder! While we are sending our money and our missionaries to convert heathen women, who are flinging their babes into the Ganges, we have among us scores of dens to which our own women go voluntarily for the murder of the unborn! So prosperous are these abortion-dens that their proprietors can buy farms and drive fine carriages! Such prosperity bespeaks large patronage. Who are the patrons?

It is an undeniable fact that many of them are under the solemn vows of wedlock. Some of these, having broken the Seventh Commandment, are driven to break the Sixth Commandment in order to conceal their transgression. They commit murder to hide adultery. But another and larger class are those who regard the sweetest blessings of wedlock as a burden and a bane. Instead of feeling that "children are a heritage of the Lord," these most unnatural "monsters" regard them as a plague and a nuisance—a heavy tax on time and strength and purse, a hindrance to their gayeties, or a hateful intruder upon their ease and self-indulgence. So, rather than become mothers, they are willing to become murderers! Nor is it only in those hideous slaughterhouses where the modern Herods slay the innocents that these deeds of darkness are done. This crime is perpetrated in hundreds of private dwellings. The "medicines" and "reliefs" so widely and wickedly advertised are sent for and used for the prevention of maternity. Medical art has devised a dozen "sure and easy" methods for destroying the germs of infant life. That they are used to an extent almost incredible is well known by family physicians, who are called upon to repair the ravages of these vile potions. For these methods are not so "easy," after all. They cost many a woman a ruined constitution. They cost the power of after propagation. They sometimes cost the life of the guilty wife who harbors this serpent in the home-nest. We heard lately of the death of a gay and beautiful wife in the pangs of premature child-birth. The terrible secret came out that her constitution had been utterly ruined by a half-dozen previous crimes of abortion. The broken law of God "found her out" at last. Every woman who practices any method to destroy an unborn life does it at the peril of her own! This serpent stings the breast that harbors it.

That secret crimes for the prevention of offspring are fearfully prevalent and on the increase is an undoubted fact. One proof is found in the relative decrease of the size of families. A fine, bonntiful progeny is frequently spoken of as an "old-fashioned family"—i. e., such a family as was common before the discovery of "sure and easy" arts of fœticide. Other proofs are found in the shattered health of wives. Others still are furnished by family physicians. Is it not time that this dangerous and diabolic crime was stopped? Should not every pulpit thunder against it? Should not physicians be plain and emphatic in their warnings to the wedded pairs whom they may suspect of these secrets sins? They are not so "secret" as their perpetrators imagine. Murder will out!

But it is not alone among the married that the dens of child-murder or the arts of abortion find their patrons. Thousands of the unmarried, who have sinned against God's law of chasity, flee to these accursed arts to hide their shame. The poor Paterson girl, who was stung to death by this serpent, was but one of an increasing army of victims. Let us not stop with results; but go back to causes. Why is the sin of licentiousness (in all its phases) growing so rapidly?

1. One cause is the growth of a licentious literature. The unclean "frogs" are creeping up into our "kneading-troughs." The news-stands and the news-rooms are stacked up with pictorial journals that are enough to make a harlot blush. One of these filthy sheets is reported to surpass Harper's Weekly in extent of publication! And every such lecherous paper that enters a family becomes a serpent in the nest. But the filthy journals do not stand alone. Some of the fictitious literature that is read by the rich and the cultured is fairly rotted through with immorality. I have seen scores of well-dressed people in cars and cabins who had in their hands a popular and poisonous book called "The Terrible Temptation." I only know of its contents by credible report; but I should think the volume is a "terrible temptation" to lash soundly its author and its publishers. Passion-exciting books have pioneered more than one seduction. It is said that the only books found in brothels are novels.

2. A second source of demoralization has been the attractive indecencies of an indecent stage. Thousands of men and women have gone together (are we sure that there were no church members among them)? to gaze on these lewd exhibitions. One thing these patrons of the licentious play-house ought to know, and that is that in God's sight those in front of the stage are just as guilty as the half-nude creatures who are on the stage. Who can tell how often an evening at the theater has paved the way to such dens of death as Rosenzweig's or Restell's?

3. A third root of licentiousness is found in the prevailing passion for display. The history of prostitution has proved how often infatuated women have been ready to defile their souls in order to decorate their bodies. A good man in Chicago, who took the trouble lately to answer some of the "Personal" advertisements, discovered that several of the female authors of them lived in respectable streets, and were intent on selling their honor to purchase fine dress! Satan baits his hooks for men with dollars, and for women with dress.

4. A fourth source of sexual immorality is the growing rage for social dissipations. These weaken the conscience, inflame the passions, and sensualize the very soul. The ball-room, with its indelicate dress, and its promiscuous caresses, and its wine-suppers, leads the giddy young man and maiden to the verge! The next step is—over the precipice. And young people ought to know that it takes but one step to go down Niagara! The poor, pitiable girls, whose names have lately been dragged before a horror-stricken public, took but that single step. When and how they did it is known now only to Him into whose presence their sad and fatal sins have summoned them.

We are tempted to add still other fruitful causes of the sins against chastity that terminate in disgrace and self-destruction. But we have said enough to warn those who are most in danger. We have written these plain words mainly for the eyes and consciences of parents. Blessed be that household that has no serpents in the nest! "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God." This whole subject is one of infinite moment to our whole people; for no nation has yet survived widespread unchastity!—Independent.

JOHN ANDERSON'S ANSWER.

A WORD TO WIVES.

"I cannot kiss thee as I used to kiss,
Time, who is Lord of Love, must answer this.
Shall I believe thine eyes are grown less sweet?
Nay, but my life blood falls; on heavier feet,
Time goes, old girl, Time goes.

I cannot love thee as I used to love;
Age comes, and little Love takes flight above;
If our eyes fail, have his the deeper glow?
I do not know, sweetheart, I do not know—
Time goes, old girl, Time goes."

Yet what newly married pair would believe this? What bride thinks that her John Anderson could ever prove so false to the thousand vows he has uttered of the eternally passionate devotion? What an indignant denial she would hurl at you for the suggestion! And the first real trial of wifehood is the shock of its realization. She goes forth from her father's house with a heart so full that it scarce remembers what tried trust it is leaving. The new joy which is born of wedlock envelopes all things, and shines over that saddest parting, when the girl is severed forever from her girlhood, and the daughter from her home.

Yet most girls feel that the purpose of life is unaccomplished until this point is reached. Why do we smile and jeer at this instinct? It is nature's law. No heart is content until it feels itself the one life-love of another. In girlhood, this is dimly shadowed forth by the fervent school-day attachments, which are as ardent as evanescent. It is the woman heart blindly seeking the fulfilment of its destiny. In time this destiny comes and finds the craving emptiness awaiting something—some vague glory and fullness—which very condition makes the real and probably common-place advent a divinity, and, thereupon, the newly born womanhood bows down and worships, throwing the strength of its life into the act, and, with most, this ardor is life-long.

In return they crave too much, perhaps; at any rate more than they ever receive, and too few of even most trusting wives understand their husbands rightly in this, demanding what most men fail to give, from the very nature of things.

The wife must live, chiefly, in the quiet nooks of the world—in its shaded, silent places, with only the voices of little children to break the stillness—most sweet music too!—and in this life, many dull, monotonous hours come, though she be the busy mother of a happy home. Visions wake, to keep company with her tired thoughts—visions throng, in the midst of most common-place details, of the sweet golden days of courtship and early marriage—the soft, moon-crowned nights of maiden love and manly wooing—those nights whose radiance seemed born in heaven! And later—the days which were one sweet epithalamium, from dawn to dawn.

The weary wife will dream these dreams again; they do not vanish into forgetful mistiness to her, whose life is made up of the affections, the small sands of love—as to him, whose mighty deeds and stern labor force forgetfulness and callousness to the sweet bird-notes of life. He forgets that loving word he spoke once, which she treasures and dreams over again and again; he often forgets that she yearns to hear its counterpart once more—that though she believes in him, as in God, yet the human will cry out for food, for daily food. Loving and loyal at heart, working always for her welfare, man-like (for he deals only with tangibilities) he feels this should satisfy a reasonable woman. It does satisfy her reason, but the hungry heart still cries for the manna which should fall in the still hours from the holiest heaven of his love.

Grant that this is woman's weakness, yet, if it be a fault, most grievously hath woman answered it; for she is the chief sufferer thereby. And here it is—when manhood in its strength and self-sustaining power fails toward womanhood in its weakness and utter self-abandonment—when the calm lips of the husband forget to speak those tender words, which are the breath of life to his wife—or to perform those little acts which are so small, and yet so sweet—just here it is the happiness of many a home is wrecked forever. She tries coldness on her part; or, perhaps, falls into that refuge of weak souls—sullen silence—which exasperates some men, while others and wiser ones quietly await the passing of the cloud. These and other estrangements generally await those unfortunate ones who enter into the marriage covenant without first settling in their own minds to bear and forbear,

"And oh! to love through all things."

These may be rocks which are, at length, happily steered over, and the two true souls find that best harbor, "Hearts' Content," where mutual faith is the anchor which holds them safely to shore. Happy are they when the turbulent waves of unsettled sailing are safely passed and this dear haven is reached. Let the young wife remember the passion flower cannot always bloom; be content with the mild-eyed Heartsease—in your bosom, and forget not to lay them in his bosom too, for "the current of the world is rough and strong," and after stemming it until weary and sore broken, he turns to his home and you for sweet, full rest; let him find it—do not keep him in terror, walking on egg-shells, lest he wound your over-sensitive feeling; let him be sure there is one who never misunderstands him, and be sure he will not fail in his part, if he is a man, for down deep in his strong heart is a tenderness you may not fathom, though its surface sparkles not.

Always believe, and those whom God hath joined together shall not be put asunder.—New Orleans Times.

THE CZAR LEARNING.

Already some good has come of the Deputation to Russia from the Evangelical Alliance. We read in the Evening Post that the Czar shows that he is neither in sympathy with the Old Russian party nor afraid of it. Among the pet schemes of that party, since the overthrow of the Polish insurrection of 1863, has been the political and religious "Russification" of the Baltic provinces. The government itself, for some time, tried the same levelling system there which it practiced in Poland. But since the Livonians, Esths and Courlanders were always loyal subjects, the Czar could not act as rigorously there as in Poland. The German population resisted the "Russifying" effort at every step, and the more energetic the action of the government the more the oppressed people gained the sympathy of Germany and of Europe.

"The Evangelical Alliance appealed to the Czar in behalf of the religious liberties of the Baltic provinces. This appeal was not well received at first, but the Czar who gives his personal attention to all important questions of policy, seems at last to be convinced that the Evangelical Alliance is right. A few days ago he received very graciously a deputation of leading Esths, and assured them that he had no intention whatever of restricting their political or religious rights. This is a sad mortification for the Old Russian party."

We copy the above from a secular newspaper, in the hope that our religious cotemporary, who sneers at the mission of the Alliance to Russia, may see how it strikes the world.—New York Observer.

TO-MORROW.

Night was rapidly closing around a noble steamer in a crippled condition, vainly struggling with the angry billows, the sea rolling almost mountains high.

A friendly voice came out from the deep darkness, gathering so ominously:

"Did you need help?"

"Yes, I'm in a sinking condition!"

"Then send your passengers aboard directly."

"Lie by me till to-morrow."

To-morrow came, but with it no help; for during the night, in such waves and roll of the sea, no vessel could keep its position.

In a short time the gallant ship, with her living freight and brave commander, all went down, and found a grave in the great deep. O to-morrow! Thou treacherous assassin, thou smiling hypocrite, thou eloquent advocate, thou skillful physician, thou chief recruiting officer of the devil, filling his black cohorts with the noblest and bravest and best of the sons of men! O sinner! trust him not though he charm ever so wisely.

Good resolutions pave the way to hell. Take a thousand Christians; of them were hopefully converted, under twenty years of age, five hundred and forty-eight; between twenty and thirty, three hundred and forty-seven; between thirty and forty, eighty-six; between forty and fifty, fifteen; between fifty and sixty, three; between sixty and seventy, one.

What a lesson on delay. What an awful lesson!

With this rapidly diminishing table before your eyes, dare you await to-morrow?—Christian Weekly.

A TRUE religious instinct never deprives man of one single joy; mournful faces and a somber aspect are the conventional affectations of the weak minded.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Baptists of Wales have 541 churches and 79 branches; 336 ministers and 258 assistants. They added last year 6651 members and lost 5857, making a clear gain of 794. The number of communicants is 59,211, and of Sabbath scholars 54,088.

ABLE AND LIBERAL.—Miss Burdett Coutts, of England, has given away more money to charitable objects than any one who has ever lived, and has had more to give than most people. It is stated that she has given away over $25,000,000 and has $50,000,000 left.

"CONFESSIONS" are heard regularly at nine o'clock nightly at St. Albans, Holborn, London. The "confessionals" are somewhat novel, banners of violet stuff fixed in position in the left side aisle, on one side of which is a chair for the "priest," and on the other a kneeler for his "penitent."

THE Univers publishes the following prayer, which the Pope is said to offer up daily for France: "Oh! Mary, conceived without sin, look down upon France; pray for France; oh! save France. The greater its guilt, the greater its need of thy intercession. A single word to Jesus, reclining in thine arms, and France is saved. Oh! Jesus, obey Mary, and save France."

THE minutes of the Cumberland Presbyterians report: Ministers 1116, licentiates 198, candidates 214, congregations 1863, added by experience and letter the last year 7850, died 380, total in communion 96,335, adults baptized 3230, infants 978, churches organized 78, houses of worship erected 40, number of Sabbath schools 518, number of teachers 3502, number of scholars 26,466.

THE reunited Presbyterian Church has 455,378 communicants. Of these 106,768 live in New York, and 102,699 in Pennsylvania. Presbyterians are thickest in New Jersey. That State has 1 Presbyterian to 24 of its population, Pennsylvania has 1 to 34, New York 1 to 42, Ohio 1 to 45, Indiana 1 to 69, Illinois 1 to 70, Iowa 1 to 78, Michigan 1 to 90, Minnesota 1 to 97, Kansas 1 to 99, Wisconsin 1 to 120, California 1 to 130, and Missouri 1 to 200.

THE Unita Cattolica is responsible for the statement that, "at the beginning of the year 1850 the Jesuit body throughout the world was only a little in excess of 4000. Ten years afterward they had increased to nearly 7000, and in the following decade of years nearly 2000 more were added to their number; and at the time of the last returns the members of the 'Society of Jesus' are given as 8837. Out of these there are 2551 lay condjuto s, 2417 students and 3869 priests."

THE following figures give a bad account of the condition of popular education in Italy: In 1869 there were 205,287 marriages celebrated in Italy, and the contracts in 36,923 cases only were signed by both husband and wife, 43,116 by the husband alone, 5243 by the wife alone, and 120,005 by neither of the parties. These results are said to be worse than those shown by the marriage records of 1868. In France, in 1865, out of 100 married persons 27 men and 31 women were illiterate. In England, in 1868, out of 100 married 20 men and 28 women were illiterate.

FROM an exchange, we learn that of two hundred and eight congregations of Particular Baptists in England, founded prior to 1800, one hundred and fifty-eight originally practiced and seventy-two now (1860) practice strict communion. Originally thirty-one practiced and now one hundred and five practice open communion. It appears that at least fifty Baptist churches in England, founded prior to 1800, and some as early as 1633, have practiced open communion from their beginning.

THE Methodists have had a committee from the National Camp Ground Association, at Shelter Island, in Long Island Sound, for several days, negotiating for the purchase of one hundred acres of land, with the buildings thereon, to be occupied as a home for indigent ministers, a camp-meeting ground, and a summer watering place. It is stated that an agreement has been made for the purchase of the place known as "Prospect." The idea of a retreat for poor ministers is excellent, and the hint might be taken by other churches as well.

A WOMAN'S missionary society has been organized at the Sandwich Islands, under the title of the "Pacific Island Branch of the Woman's Board of Missions." The constitution requires that, at least, three of its officers shall reside on other islands then Oahu. The Lamp of Life has not only shed its light upon the once benighted dwellers of those islands, but they have caught it up and are carrying it still further on in the darkness to enlighten those who, like themselves, have been sitting in the region and shadow of death. The missionary spirit shown by the Sandwich Islanders should be a stimulus to those who have long had the gospel.

THE Armenians holding the church of St. James, at Jerusalem, says the Gazette de France, refuse this year to open the doors of the edifice to the Latins, on the occasion of the Saint's fete day. They will not, they affirm, allow their temple to be profaned by the promulgation of the dogma of infallibility. The grotto on which the Holy Virgin suckled the infant Jesus, and known as the Milk Retreat, was walled up at night by the Latin monks, and closed in the small part left open by an iron gate surmounted by the papal arms. This last act has led to a quarrel between the partisans of the two creeds, and between the Pacha and the French consul at Jerusalem.

THE Boston Directory has a list of 148 churches of all denominations in that city. They are thus classified: Unitarian 27, Methodist 22, Trinitarian Congregational 22, Baptist 17, Roman Catholic 17, Episcopal 15, Presbyterian 7, Universalist 6, Jewish 4, Lutheran 2, Spiritualist 2, Second Advent 2, Independent Congregational 2, Freewill Baptist, Swedenborgian and Swedish 1 each. With the exception of the New Church and the Roman Catholics, all sects have ample church accommodations in all parts of Boston. For one church that is overcrowded there are six or eight not well filled. The churches enumerated above have 165 pastors and assistants.

THE New Jerusalem Messenger, in treating of the slow growth of the New Church body, remarks that only about 9000 persons have been added to the reunited Presbyterian Church during the last year, which is an increase of only two per cent. "The number connected with the New Church organizations in this country," continues the Messenger, "is not over 5000. Increasing at the same rate as the Presbyterians, we ought to have an annual addition of 100 members. We can readily name half a dozen societies whose combined annual increase is equal to this, leaving out not only all the rest of our societies, but the new societies which are constituted from year to year. In proportion to our numbers, therefore, our growth is not so slow as is generally imagined."

IT has been resolved by the Evangelical Christians in Germany not to hold the usual meeting of the Kirchentag in Berlin this year, as was intended originally, but to make arrangements for holding the Conference more in harmony with the great results of the recent Franco-German war of 1870-71. An invitation has accordingly been issued, signed by between two hundred and three hundred Christians of all views and of all German countries (including some of the most advanced Lutherans, but all standing on the positive ground of faith), for a Conference of Evangelical men of the German Empire, to meet in Berlin, from the tenth to the twelfth of October. It is anticipated that many laymen will take part in the proceedings.

THE work of the Southern Baptist Convention in Italy is growing in its proportions and in interest. Besides, the church of forty or more baptized believers in Rome, a second church has been organized in the city of Bari, on the Adriatic, a place containing eighty thousand inhabitants, where there are now seventy-five baptized communicants and a Baptist pastor. Some of these members are persons of education and influence. A school has been opened in Rome for native preachers, and calls are sent from various parts of Italy for Baptist workers. Eight or ten evangelists of colporteurs are at work in Italy in the interest of the Southern Baptist Convention, and thirty thousand copies of the Scriptures have been distributed. Italy is at present in a most interesting state, and there is great encouragement in many parts of it for the evangelical laborer to carry abroad the precious seed of the gospel.

IN THE interior parts of Southern Africa it is reported by Mr. Moffat that many thousands are learning to read. Some of these people manifest the greatest zeal to obtain a copy of the word of God. Some, who cannot read themselves, bring their children with them who have learned the art, and plead for a Bible or Testament that may speak to them of Christ and the way of salvation. The results wrought by the gospel among these people are very wonderful. Christianity seems to have given an impulse to civilization, commerce and the arts of life. Through a single station the value of $350,000 in articles of British manufacture goes abroad among the dark-skinned tribes. The natives have British plows by hundreds, dress in European style, and buy and read books calculated to give them knowledge of life, science and the way of salvation. A missionary visiting Abeokuta and Ibadan speaks of being present at an assembly where more than five hundred and sixty Christians, all natives, joined fervently and intelligently in the public worship of God.

GOD AND BUSINESS.

God's blessing is the condition of all real success in life. All planning must take this contingency into the account. In choosing the place of our sojourn and the business to be pursued, and in embarking upon any enterprise, the dependence is absolute. There are many ways in which Providence can intervene to break up the schemes we have devised. It happens continually that men are disappointed in their purposes and that, somehow, their ways are turned upside down. Their expectations have been reasonable, they have moved forward with the certainty of accomplishing their undertakings, but something turns up to overwhelm them with disappointment. The merchant, in the language of the old time atheists says: "To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and yet gain." The thought of an overruling hand does not enter the mind, while the busy devices of gain are being formed. Thus, with the professional man, the mechanic, the farmer. There are contingencies, of course, that may mar the well considered programme, but God is not distinctly recognized. His connection with practical affairs, if admitted at all, is of a most indirect, distant, and complex character. If our plans are within the limits of honesty, God is not supposed to meddle with us, or to care about what we aim at.

Yet, if life and health are in his keeping, and if the material universe is under His control, our welfare hangs upon His will. To change our domicile, to enter upon business, to make a fortune, to continue here or there, depend upon the divine favor. A single death, a shipwreck, an earthquake's shock, the breath of pestilence, or revulsions in trade defying calculation, may sweep away all. Our most certain projects should be taken in hand with this qualification always clearly felt. This will lead us to consider other ends than those of gain and ambition. The question, in addition to earthly profit, will be the favorableness to our spiritual welfare and to our greatest usefulness. The probabilities of wealth will be balanced along with those of "the true riches" and the openings for a prosperous religious life. The kingdom of God should be first in our seeking, so that the study of temporal interests comes in as a secondary matter. If we think of God in the selection of a profession or business, or in the change of our home, we shall think of Him as approving only what is evidently best for His work and our own salvation. While we feel that The Father of lights is not an indifferent spectator of our affairs, we should settle upon no business which compromises the interests of the soul, or that is likely to call down upon us the divine displeasure. The Christian will locate himself with a view to religion as well as business, and will seek for a field where he can, not only make money, but also be of most service to the church. We fear that many who are engaged in trade would be condemned if they were to apply the test. There is whisky mixed up with their commodities, Sabbath hours are encroached upon, and hurtful associations and questionable methods are involved. Put this clause into the copartnership or into the proposed business, and it is dissolved at once. "If the Lord will," like Ithuriel's spear, reveals the satanic character of many a plausible transaction.

The recognition of God in business may not lead to what the world rates as success. It will, however, induce sober expectations in submission to Him who dispenses the fortunes of life in wisdom and mercy. The presumption of counting upon life as something assured will not be allowed, and the probabilities of failure will be calmly entertained. Conscious of a consecrated purpose, and diligently using the means, the result may disappoint, but God's finger will be seen in the failure as in the success. His will, for purposes of discipline, and for purposes too wide for our present comprehension, has been to cross our path and to upset our plans. Few, even of the good and upright, live to consummate their ideals, or, if living, are permitted to realize their hopes. Success may be rightfully desired, gain may be sought piously, and yet it is best that we should often be baffled in our efforts. We are not to speak or think as though the whole matter were in our own hands, but rather to plan and hope in entire reliance upon Him who may, in infinite mercy, deny what our industry and sagacity have claimed as a right. Men labor and speculate, sow and reap, save and invest, but the Lord gives and also takes away. His providence does not sleep while we are awake, nor is He without a will where we are intent upon accumulation. The schemes of men are thwarted, their lives are "cut off as the tops of the ears of corn," and a broken shaft tells the story of premature death. God's will is a condition ever present, and to plan with reference to its existence, secures a resignation and sobriety which sweeten the cup of adversity. In this conception of an all-disposing Providence failure is true success, and what seems to be a blight is the highest prosperity. The shivered idol has given place to Him who dwells between the cherubim, and the apparently shattered column, so far from being broken, lifts its head within the realms of light.

The perverseness which is blindly bent upon the attainment of selfish ends may be punished by its very success. With no reference to God's will, men may insist upon having their own way. Their wishes for pleasure and fortune are fulfilled, but they have gained the world at the expense of their souls. Thus the rebellious lusts of the Israelites were rebuked: "And He gave them their request, but sent leanness into their soul." Men may reject the idea of Providence, or they may insist upon having its dispensations in accordance with their desires, and God permits them to possess what their unbelieving hearts craved. Their request is granted, but the immortal soul is a perpetual waste and an everlasting desolation. This willful planning without God could not be visited by a heavier judgment. We have been dictatorial and independent, and our very prosperity recoils at last upon us in the frightful forms of wordly delirium and utter indifference to the eternal future. Temporal fortune gained in entire submission to God, and by means accordant with His will, proves a blessing. The spirit in which it is made will pervade its use and disposal. But the godless and heady soul is impoverished by riches, and is hanging weights to himself which will sink him deeper into perdition.

"If the Lord will" is the saving clause in all our purposes and undertakings. He is over all, and wiser and better than all. A life of business actively so directed will be one of sober expectation, of serene submission, of incorruptible integrity. It will be a life of trust, in which every endeavor has a consecrated motive. Besides capital, energy and sagacity, the will of the Lord comes in as a most important item in the estimate. In that will, as bearing upon our affairs, lie questions which we cannot solve for ourselves, and which we may cheerfully leave in the hands of a faithful Creator. If the fruits of toil slip from our grasp; if the prize for which we contend is never reached; if, after worry and embarrassment, financial ruin overtake us, there will be sunshine left. On the other hand, if the expected reward is attained, and plenty and profusion wait upon our care, there will be no poison in the cup of our joy. God will be in all to print His bow upon the retiring storm and to throw a mantle of glory over the threatening sky, or to cast a subdued and hallowed radiance upon the fields of our abounding prosperity.

More About Centenary College.

Mr. Editor: I am glad to report that the plan of holding Centenary meetings in behalf of the college is a success. I have assisted in holding two or three, and have raised from one hundred to four hundred dollars at each, and in each neighborhood have secured one or more pupils. I suggest to the preachers the following facts, which they can use in bringing the subject before their congregations:

1. Health. No epidemic has ever prevailed there.

2. It is the only Protestant college of any promise in the extreme Southwest. We have there a property, when repaired, worth two hundred thousand dollars, and well adapted to educational purposes.

3. We have a first class faculty in every respect.

4. While board and tuition in other places is from two hundred and fifty to four hundred and fifty dollars, at Centenary it is only from one hundred and ninety to two hundred and ten dollars, with use of apparatus, laboratory, etc.

5. Our students board in private families of intelligence and high moral worth, and are not subject to the hurtful influences of the "Steward's Hall."

6. It is a home institution; and the time has arrived when we must build up our own schools and educate our children at home.

7. It is the great necessity of our church, as a means of educating young men whom God may call to the sacred office of the ministry. Centenary formerly sent out from eight to ten polished heralds every year. Now we need in the two conferences at least one hundred young men to fill the waste places. Our people are perishing for the "word of life."

8. Of one hundred and three alumni of Centenary, now living, over ninety are first class men in the different avocations of life in which they have engaged.

9. Of the number of young men in attendance during the last term, I am credibly informed that not one was in the habit of swearing, drinking or gambling.

10. If, for the want of the paltry sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, we allow Centenary to fail, we will lose the property there by wreck and ruin; and, for a generation, we cannot expect to build up a school that will compare at all with Centenary.

11. We are entirely free from every liability to the State of Louisiana, and have before us an open field to build up one of the finest schools on the continent.

12. The facilities and helps to an education at Centenary are unsurpassed. While other schools in Virginia and other States have a larger number of students than she has, still, from the fact that at Centenary each student comes directly under the instruction of the professors and not merely of tutors, he has an advantage far superior to those attending those very large and numerously patronized colleges.

Other potent arguments will arise in the minds of the brethren, suggested by circumstances. Students charged from time of entry.

Brethren, one united effort, and the work is done.

General Minutes.—We have received from the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tennessee, the Minutes of the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for the year 1870.

District and Church Conferences.

BY BISHOP M'TYEIRE.

Mr. Editor: Beginning in January and ending in the latter days of August, I have presided this year over fourteen District Conferences, distributed through nine Annual Conferences, and extending from North Missouri to Middle Alabama. Only four of these convocations were held in places that have heretofore entertained a session of an Annual Conference. I propose to offer some reflections on the state of the church, upon this basis of observation and induction.

The District Conference has taken its position in our economy for good. It has come to stay. By every token, it is one of the providential institutes of Methodism. Differing in its elements and aims from the official meeting of the same name that was tried, and that failed, a half a century ago, it will have a different history. Without interfering with the Quarterly Conference on the one hand, or the Annual Conference on the other, but helping both, the District Conference does a work of its own, an important work, which neither of them could do.

Last year, while the Annual Conferences were determining the lay constituency of this intermediate body, I heard one uniform objection raised to a liberal basis of representation: "You will make the District Conference too large. It cannot go, where it ought to go, into the smaller towns where an Annual Conference is never seen."

Needless fear. I have met the brethren where the ex-officio rule prevails, making all the members of the Quarterly Conferences within its bounds members of the District Conferences; and where the congregations were allowed sparingly to send up delegates; and where both these plans were in part combined—and I have yet to see an attendance so large as the people expected or were prepared to entertain. More embarrassment has resulted from the disappointment, not to say dissatisfaction, of hospitable folks, who having provided bed and board for a half-dozen guests, have been put off with one or none, than from finding a home for any friend and his wife who happened in.

This meeting holds but a few days, and is eminently social and religious, and almost any community is sufficiently elastic to stand the pressure of it. An executive body does not require numbers for its interest or force; but it is otherwise where men meet to interchange views, to diffuse ideas, and to mold public opinion. While, therefore, I would advise that membership in the District Conference be always so regulated as to carry with it a privilege, an honor, and a responsibility, I also advise the most liberal basis of constituency compatible with such regulation.

Committees on all subjects that engage attention have sometimes been used; at other times matters as they rise have been treated in Committee of the Whole. Each method has its advantages. Business is more thoroughly digested by the first method; facts are arrived at, sifted, arrayed, analyzed; and that bane of ecclesiastical meetings is avoided—generalities, vague generalities; discussion, without being suppressed, is more pertinent and drives to a conclusion; and an undue and questionable range of topics is restrained. I have seen a few good-natured flings at these committees by brethren who had adopted a different style of proceeding—as that their reports "aped" Annual Conference reports, etc. Use a less invidious word, and why not? These formal consultations between the three estates, traveling preachers, local preachers and laymen, are smoothing the way in the higher judicatories. One of the older Bishops has called attention to an improvement in the Annual Conferences at this point. A committee can now be raised in them almost at random, that will bring you in a well written report on any subject in due form; and this could not always have been said. Let us at least keep the way open to use this method, without tying ourselves to any.

Allow me to congratulate you, Mr. Editor, and your cotemporaries, on your escape from printing these reports. The secretaries are furnishing capital condensations of the proceedings, and good reading it is.

How various the experiences of the pastors on the Church Conference! Some of them think they see a Baptist cat in that tub of Methodist meal. They don't say so, but that they have a prejudice is evident, and also whence it comes. We have no objection to our Baptist brethren taking up Methodist experience meetings, or open communion, which they are doing in some places, and are welcome to do everywhere. But in truth, our Church Conference differs from theirs in many essential items. It is not the same thing, but another. In one point they agree. There is a moral power in the local church verifying its identity, realizing its personal consciousness, seeing itself together. We have been used to this in the class meeting and the love-feast; it has been our glorying among ourselves and our reproach before the world. Now, the Church Conference is on this same old Methodist principle—only with less of the devotional and more of the practical. It is in analogy with our system, the completion of the ecclesiastical organism from general, annual, district and quarterly, down to the Church Conference. And where brethren have taken hold of it heartily, and not by the wrong handle, good has resulted. Instances have been given where half-dead societies, hanging loosely together, have been compacted and invigorated by the Church Conference. Even in the country appointments, where it is thought most difficult of introduction, the membership has been knit together and braced, as one spiritual body, and schemes of mercy as well as propagandism have been systematically undertaken. It is a mistake, that there are no poor in country churches who need to be helped. I trust that we shall see benefit and diffusion of blessing from the "conversations" on this subject. The following are the main points in the reports of brethren who have succeeded:

1. Have the meeting well advertised.

2. Speak of it as though you expected something to come of it.

3. Hold it, when practicable, in the country on Saturday, in connection with the two days' (sacramental) meetings.

4. Know what you are going to do before you meet. Organize for success. Have an understanding with brethren who are to make and support motions, etc.

5. Do not attempt to do everything in one meeting. Do only what needs to be done now, on the schedule.

The uniform testimony is that after the first meeting has been held and the matter understood, the next will be looked forward to with pleasure.

I have emphasized this matter in my visitation of the districts, not only because the church, in its wisdom, has made the law, but I look to this society meeting for a corrective of a tendency which is setting in upon us. The tendency is to run everything into the sermon and the public service of the sanctuary. The minor means of grace and evangelical activities are falling into desuetude, even in places where large congregations are reported. We must have the society—the local church—at work. Men and women, old and young, on commissions of holy industry and enterprise, must be going out and coming in under the sanction of the church and its direction. We can hardly keep up a prayer meeting in some enlightened communities that pay liberally for the gospel—that is, to hear sermons. There are so few who will lead in public prayer.

I am a believer in the various gifts, the charismata, of 1 Cor. xii. That church is rich indeed that has them, and well divided out. These gifts need recognition and appointed sphere, and they need "stirring up." This local Conference, this society meeting, operates well in this direction. He is the best church worker who can enlist co-workers.

Let me give a significant fact or two in this connection. In enrolling the members of the District Conference, claiming seats ex-officio, I have directed that the office or the offices each holds be put down. Some of these rolls are a study, and they are suggestive. They show a lack of healthful distribution. There is congestion. Many are idle, and a few willing workers are trying vainly to do it all. One man holds two or three offices, and his equally strong neighbors, none. A brother sat down with us this summer, in one of the District Conferences, opposite whose name were initials which indicated that he was local preacher, class leader, trustee, steward and Sunday school superintendent. He came from what is known among us as a large and strong church!—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Death of Dr. Bonnell.—With profound sorrow, says the Southern Christian Advocate, we announce the death of the beloved president of Wesleyan Female College, Rev. Dr. J. M. Bonnell. The sad event occurred on Saturday night, September 30, at about half-past eleven o'clock—occasioned, as we are informed, by paralysis of the heart. The sudden calling away of this eminent servant of the church, fills with sorrow the entire community. An extended notice will appear in a future issue of the Advocate. We have only space just now to make the forgoing announcement.

Dr. Cummins, president of Wesleyan University, announces that ladies will hereafter be admitted to that institution on the same conditions as young men.

THE WEST POINT CHAPLAI

In noticing in the Observer o tenth of August, the recomme tion of the Board of Visitors t West Point Military Academy the subject of the chaplaincy, i remarked:

"It has been long felt that Episcopal denomination has h disproportionate share of the c laincies in the national ser How it stands at the present ment, we do not know."

Since then we have learned it has been with the West P chaplainoy from the foundatio the Academy. The following s mont comes from one of the o professors there. About twe nominations have ever been r sented in the chaplaincy, the P copal and the Presbyterian. table will show the names of incumbents, the terms, respecti of their service, and the ord their occupancy:

Chaplain	Picton, Presbyterian	7
..	McIlvaine, Episcopalian	2
..	Warren, ..	10
..	Adams, ..	2
..	Parks, ..	4
..	Sprole, Presbyterian	9
..	French, Episcopalian	15

The last-named, the Rev. W. French, D.D., was appoi August 16, 1856, by Jefferson D then Secretary of War. He w the time of appointment, rect the church in Washington where Mr. Davis attended. French has been practically aside from duty a portion of time for the last two or three y so that he was not able to at service on the Sabbath, nor to charge his professional duties. I ing this period, the pulpit was plied by Episcopal clergymen gaged from Sabbath to Sabb generally from New York city, the duties of the professorship discharged, two years ago, by Br Lieutenant Colonel Charles C. sons. The professorship embra ethics and law.

Rev. John Forsyth, D.D., rece appointed chaplain, will be, if should accept, the third Presb rian who has filled the post. Sprole, who preceded Dr. Fre was also a pastor in Washing city, at the time of his appointm At the time Dr. McIlvaine Episcopal Bishop of Ohio) chaplain, Leonidas Polk, cousi the late President Polk, was a c and under the ministry of Dr. Ilvaine, was brought into the E copal Church. Mr. Polk sub quently became Bishop of the E copal Church in Louisiana, and the breaking out of the rebellion is well remembered, entered Southern army, became a M General, and was killed dur General Sherman's march to lanta.

From the above table, it appe that the whole period of the ch laincy covers fifty-one years. these, it has been filled by Epi palians thirty-five years, and Presbyterians sixteen years.—York Observer.

CONFERENCE ITEMS.

Columbia Conference.—We obliged to our young Bishop, Keener, says the Nashville Christ Advocate, for prompt returns fr Oregon. The session of the Colu bia Conference, over which he p sided, was held at Santiam ca ground, September 6–10. W. Finley was secretary. Two we admitted on trial: T. V. B. Embr G. Curtis. John Walton was continued at his own request. N. Goucher, T. Hervey, G. Cust (local), were ordained deacons. M. Elton was expelled. There 5 local preachers and 1033 me bers—as we count—not 11 1014. School Books.—The book depot, at No. 112 Camp street, New Orleans, has facilities for supplying school books to merchants and schools on terms which the agent feels sure will meet the views of the closest purchasers who are posted in market prices. He has the patronage of a number of the largest and most prosperous colleges and schools in Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas, Alabama and Arkansas, and, in several instances, the presidents and principals of these institutions have not given him their patronage until after having corresponded with the publishers in Northern cities and learned that they can buy at the very best rates offered by them, and save the difference in cost of transportation, as well as the delay and greater risk in remitting.

Rev. H. F. Johnson, President of Whitworth Female College, who thoroughly investigates everything connected with economy, as well as the comforts and advancement of his pupils, will excuse us for making the following extract from a recent letter on this point. He says: "I recently wrote to a large number of book houses for catalogues and terms, and have received answers. No house made a better proposition than you do except one. That house proposes to sell books for library on same terms as it does to book dealers, on the ground that none in this part of the country deal with it. I will send you an order as soon as I can make out my list."

Our new price list of school books for 1871 and 1872 will be ready this week and will be sent to teachers and merchants on application to

Rev. Wm. V. Tudor was promptly at his post on the first of this month, and was welcomed by a full house at the Carondelet Street church. He returns from his trip abroad in improved health, and has resumed his ministrations with renewed vigor and power. In common with our readers, we are under many obligations for the entertaining correspondence he has furnished us, and we shall hope to have frequent contributions from his pen in the future. Bro. Tudor brings with him a most acceptable transfer, one of the fairest and best, whose presence among us receives the heartiest welcome of her husband's many friends. We congratulate our brother and sister on the auspicious occasion, and wish them a long and happy companionship, and abundant happiness and usefulness in our midst.

We regret to learn that the wife of Rev. John A. Miller, of the Louisiana Annual Conference, died suddenly on the twenty-third of September, while in attendance at the Mount Zion camp meeting, near Homer, Claiborne parish, Louisiana. Sister Miller was an exemplary Christian, a help to her husband, and a valuable member of society. We sincerely sympathize with Bro. Miller in his bereavement.

A City Nearly Burnt Up.—In our news columns we give some items concerning the great fire at Chicago. Such a conflagration has not occurred for a hundred years in any of the cities of the world. We had not thought it possible for a large city, with organized fire department and water facilities, to be so nearly destroyed. We are sure that our people will respond generously and promptly to the call for aid to the sufferers. The details of the disaster are heartrending in the extremest degree.

Tableaux.—The ladies are preparing to give a tableaux exhibition, with refreshments, for the benefit of the Louisiana Avenue Methodist Church. The tableaux will be given on the evenings of the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth instant, at the Lyceum Hall, St. Charles street. This church needs and deserves help, and we hope the friends of the cause will give all encouragement and substantial aid.

An excellent old woman showed an old nail as one of her greatest treasures, saying: "I prize it, because it shuts out the world." She used it to fasten the latch of the door when she went alone to pray.

MILLIONS FOR DRINK.

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, Dr. Young, has just written a letter to Rev. W. M. Thayer, secretary of the Massachusetts Temperance Alliance, giving him the aggregate annual value of the sales of liquors in the United States. He says: "I am now extremely careful in publishing an estimate of these sales. As a consistent temperance man (and boy) for forty-one years, my experience and observation have convinced me that on this question, as well as on all others, 'honesty (of statement) is the best policy,' and I have no sympathy with the pernicious maxim that 'the end justifies the means.' I wish to impress upon the youth now fighting under the temperance banner, as well as upon all other persons, that it is always safe to do right. Temperance, in common with almost every good work, has suffered from the intemperate zeal of its advocates, and from no cause to a greater extent, perhaps, than from the exaggerated statements of alleged facts. Whenever a temperance lecturer tells the sellers and users of intoxicating liquors that the annual sales amount to from 1600 to 2000 millions, (sometimes it is stated sufficient to pay off our national debt, nearly 2400 millions, or $60 for every man, woman and child in the country), every intelligent hearer knows that it is a gross exaggeration, and has, therefore, no confidence in the statements of such a man. An enterprising rum-seller, whose victims are exposed to public gaze, does more for the temperance cause, I firmly believe, than an advocate who uses such exaggerations.

"It may be stated that during the last fiscal year the receipts from retail liquor dealers who paid $25 each for license amounted to $3,650,000, indicating that there were 156,000 retailers of liquors in the United States. By including those who escaped paying license fees, estimated at 4000, the number is increased to 150,000, who, on an average, sold at least $4000 worth of liquors each, making $600,000,000, as before stated. These figures are sufficiently startling, and need no exaggeration. Six hundred millions of dollars! The minds of few persons can comprehend this vast sum, which is worse than wasted every year. It would pay for 100,000,000 barrels of flour, averaging two and a half barrels of flour to every man, woman and child in the country. This flour, if placed in wagons, ten barrels in each, would require 10,000,000 teams, which, allowed eight yards to each, would extend 45,455 miles, nearly twice round the earth. If the sum were in $1 notes it would take 100 persons one year to count them. If spread on the surface of the ground, so that no spaces should be left between the notes, the area covered would be 20,146 acres, forming a parallelogram of six by a little over five and a half miles, the walk round it being more than twenty-two and a half miles!

"As you have made no inquiries in relation to tobacco and cigars, I furnish no estimate of the annual consumption of these articles, but volunteer the information that the influx of Chinese has introduced a new luxury, viz: Opium, prepared for smoking, the importation of which for the last fiscal year was 315,121 pounds, of the value of $1,926,915."

Rev. G. W. Wood.—This venerable preacher, a member of the Pacific Conference, died about the middle of September. A correspondent of the Spectator says:

He truly "died at his post," for he breathed his last while in his buggy on his way back to this place to attend to his ministerial labors.

He had been quite unwell much of the time for the past month, but having regained his health to some extent, he was making his way back, in the discharge of his duties to this portion of his flock, when he fell a victim to disease, only a few miles from his destination. We were summoned in haste to see him, but before we reached him the old soldier's spirit had departed. Mortality alone remained.

While we stood gazing upon his calm and tranquil visage, which seemed to indicate little else than natural sleep, we beheld in its outlines that sweet submission to his Master's will, which characterized his life and work.

The immediate cause of his death was congestion of the lungs. We had previously attended him for a pulmonary trouble, and frequently remonstrated with him about the impropriety of preaching so often, but his good humored reply was: "I will have the satisfaction of dying with the harness on."

Readville Seminary.—Attention is called to the advertisement of this excellent school for young ladies. It is located in Baton Rouge, and is under the direction of a most accomplished Christian lady, who has been for many years successfully engaged in the education of girls.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

The Sunday School Magazine for November is already on our table. A first rate number. Reminiscential is by Dr. R. A. Young; Science, Falsely So Called, is by the late Judge Longstreet; The Call and Trials of a Young Preacher is an extract from a sermon of Bishop Pierce; Illustrative Readings and Notes for teachers and Bible students are excellent, and worth a dozen times more than the cost of the magazine. We hope every family has a copy of Our Sunday School Magazine, and that our Sunday school teachers are all supplied with it.

With the October number, the Southern Farm and Home completes its second volume. It is a valuable agricultural journal, handsomely printed and well edited. Published by J. W. Burke & Co., Macon, Georgia, at two dollars per annum.

Die Modenwelt for October is a superb number. Plates, patterns and engravings very fine. Those in quest of a periodical, illustrating the latest styles and fashions, will find this satisfactory. Published by S. T. Taylor, New York.

The October number of the Southern Methodist Home Altar contains several excellent articles. This periodical is devoted to the subject of Christian perfection. Published at McMinnville, Tennessee, at one dollar per annum.

The Southern Magazine for October has Spider-Web Papers, The German Sied of Early Days, The Nearest Peril of England, A New Heresy, and other articles in prose and verse.

Appleton's Journal of October 14, besides the usual amount of valuable literary matter, contains a number of well executed illustrations of scenery on the Tennessee river.

The University Monthly for September is late in reaching us. It is an interesting number, and well worth purchasing and reading.

The Southern Field and Factory for the present month is duly to hand. An excellent agricultural journal, well edited and published.

Married.

By Rev. W. A. Montgomery, at the house of Mrs. English, Newbern, Alabama, October 4, 1871, Mr. B. F. Pollard and Miss Mary English.

On the evening of October 1, at the residence of Rev. Charles W. McAllister, by the Rev. S. H. Cooper, J. M. Carmichael, Esq. and Miss Mary Smith, all of Dale county, Alabama.

Obituaries.

Died in triumph, August 14, in the twenty-sixth year of his age, Alexander Sale Porter, eldest son of Jacob C. and Sarah A. Porter.

The life as well as death of this noble young Christian is well worthy of record among those of God's chosen. He had, for years, been a consistent member of the Methodist Church, an humble, faithful believer from earliest boyhood, whom all honored as a true and manly nature, while advancing years found him the strength and comfort of his parents, and a worthy example to his brothers and sisters. Seldom could be found a soul uniting more beautifully the gentleness which makes great, and the greatness which makes gentle.

He was called from the bloom of life, after an illness of only three days, to pass through the trial and triumph of death, but was found with lamp trimmed and burning, as one waiting for his Lord. His father, feeling his hours were numbered, asked him: "My son, if God should see fit to take you away, are you willing to die?" He replied: "I do not want to die. I had rather live, and do more good in the world—but I can trust all to my precious Saviour." Calling the family around, he calmly bade them good-bye, exacting a promise from each that they should meet him in heaven, and sending messages of love and farewell, as well as admonitions, to distant friends. He then united in singing "Lead me to the Rock which is higher than I" in a strong, full voice. His mind was clear and unclouded to the last, for which he expressed great thankfulness, saying: "I have always prayed to be conscious at my death hour, and this, I believe, is in answer to my prayers." Again he joyfully exclaimed "I am near the gates of heaven." Thus with rich glimpses of the glory beyond, he passed on through the Dark Valley. But Death held one pang for him, in leaving his young wife, only five months a bride, and now so nearly a widow. Into the hands of his "precious Saviour"—to Him who is Husband of the Widow—he trustfully committed her, in hope of the blissful hereafter. May God lighten her affliction by bringing her very near to Himself. Surely, the Father speaks to the living through so blessed a death.

"There's a region afar from earth,
Should be very happy to-day.
For a great soul, ripe for its birth,
Has gone from this world away.
O tender heart, that is still!
You will falter with trouble no more,
Nor know of the good or the ill
Of a frantic world's uproar!
Nor heed the great or the small
Of a strange, bewildering life
That often seems dust and ashes all,
And is mostly a rapid strife.
Clouds sail and waters flow,
And our souls must journey on,
But it cannot be ill to go
The way that thou art gone."

Mrs. Louisa Wilkinson died at her home in Geneva county, Alabama, on the morning of August 8, 1871. She was the eldest daughter of Cyrus and Esther Swan, and was born in Newton county, Georgia, January 7, 1835. At the age of seventeen she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church; in 1852, she removed to Pike county, where she was married to Henry T. Wilkinson, June 16, 1861.

Mrs. Wilkinson, from her earliest connection with the church to the day of her death, was exemplary in the walks of Christianity, always devoted to the cause of the Master. There is a sacred, though a mournful pleasure in recording the departure of one from the dark environs of this life, when sustained by such an unfaltering hope, when there is such a glorious triumph of Christian trust over the last assault of the Destroyer. Thirty-six hours before her death she appeared rapidly sinking, when she attempted to sing, which, however, was imperfectly done, yet enough was understood to know that she sang of a heavenly home. When asked by her husband if she thought she had a home in heaven, she roused herself from the cold stupor of death that was stealing over her, and replied: "A home in heaven! I thought that I was already in heaven." She said that no shadow of doubt crossed her mind as to her future happiness, and in this blissful persuasion she passed away.

Mrs. Wilkinson left no children to mourn the irreparable loss of a mother, but in the affections of a husband and many relatives and friends there is a void caused by this dispensation that years have no power to fill. But why weep for the happy dead, or lament for the ransomed soul, and wish it back from its home in unending fruition to the dreary mutations of time. Oh! let those who are struggling along the narrow way renew their determination, that they may at last, like this released saint, go shouting over Death's tumultuous waves to the better land, where "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying."

My brother, Robert Cameron, was born in Pickens county, Alabama, April 26, 1836, and died in the same county, August 25, 1871. At the early age of fifteen he was most happily and soundly converted at Hog Branch camp ground. So far as the writer knows, and he was intimately associated with him up to manhood, there never was a blemish on his moral or Christian character, while his religious experience was rich and full. Cheerfulness was his peculiar characteristic, and he retained this as long as there was consciousness. Many of his comrades in the late war will remember that he never complained under the greatest fatigues and privations, but was ever cheerful himself and had a word of cheer for others. He had been a great sufferer at times since the war, caused by a contusion in the head made by the fragment of a shell. This, perhaps, shortened his years by many. His last sickness was short, but painful, and during this he had joyful moments, when he quoted the precious words: "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," and other passages of Scripture, and spoke of the rest he was soon to enter. To that rest, we doubt not, he has gone, to join a sainted father, who has been waiting for him for fifteen years, and another brother, John Alexander, who passed, in great triumph, the waters of death the twelfth of March, 1867. The deceased leaves a widow and two precious children to mourn their loss. May God sustain and comfort them in this, their sad bereavement.

Lewis Dudley, youngest son of Patrick and Matilda Sharkey, was born in Leake county, Mississippi, July 12, 1850, and died August 5, 1871, aged twenty-one years and twenty-three days.

His father died while he was small, and his mother died last year. Consequently his mental and religious training was intrusted to the care of his only surviving brother, Clay Sharkey, who acted the part of brother and father, with great credit to himself and profit to the deceased.

Though not a member of any church, he was universally beloved, and was one of the strongest believers in the Christian religion I almost ever met. For many years he had been a member of the Sabbath school in Brownsville, Hinds county, Mississippi, where he received impressions that were obliterated only in the ordeal of death. Though called away suddenly by heart disease, he fell as a young man, blessed with a praying mother and the hallowed influence of the Sunday school, would fall—in full hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave.

He now sleeps by the side of his sainted mother, where he must rest until Christ, "who has become the first fruits of them that sleep," shall come to gather up his "jewels." Farewell, friend and brother, for a short time! May thy dying be the means of calling many to life.

James M. Weems.

In Memory of Miss M. Emma Morrisselte, daughter of George and I. Morrisselte, who died at Choctaw Corner, Clarke county, Alabama, at the residence of Mrs. Isabella Morrisselte, August 20, 1871. She was born February 28, 1845. Her disease was long and violent, but she bore it with the patience of Him whose imitator she became, resting in the arms with child like confidence, knowing that "He doeth all things well." A short time before her death she united herself with the Methodist Church. As the hour drew near, her hope and confidence grew brighter, her eyes seemed to kindle with the radiance of heaven, and her tongue to catch inspiration from some attending spirit, whispering the music and eloquence of the land of bliss. During her illness she was visited by many of the citizens of our village, to all of whom she, in the most clear and impressive manner, spoke of her consciousness of pardoned sin, her bright hope of a blessed immortality, and requested them to meet her in glory. Weep not, dear mother, sister and brother, your loss is her gain.

After the burial of dear Emma, I visited the bereaved mother, and while the tears bedewed her cheek she rejoiced in the comfort of religion. Religion bore her aloft on its transporting wings, and regaled her soul with sweet supplies of heavenly manna, and pointed her aloft to a happy reunion in the "glory land."

[We sincerely sympathize with Brother and Sister Bradley in their late bereavement. The afflicted father sends us the following notice of the death of his little son.—Ed:]

Died, September 14, 1871, at seven o'clock in the evening, of congestive fever, James H. Bradley, son of Rev. James E. and Annie Bradley, aged three years one month and eleven days.

Thus another beautiful, precious bud has been torn from the parent stem by the sickly winds of disease. Only last Sabbath our darling boy was in the full blush of health and childish joy. Then, for the first time, he came with his primer in his little chubby hand, and said to his mother: "Come, mamma, let's go to Sunday school." To-day, he is gathered with the angels, at the river "that flows by the throne of God." No more shall we hear the ringing of his little voice, nor the falling of his little feet, nor feel the sweet love embrace and good-night kiss till the great resurrection morning, when he shall come forth to be ours again, and forever. Hence our hope is flooded with golden beams.

J. E. B.

Floyd, Carroll Parish, Sept. 15, 1871.

Died, near Pensacola, Florida, August 24, 1871, Mrs. Mardon H. McVoy, wife of Joseph McVoy, and daughter of James and Elizabeth Bryan, formerly of Halifax, Nova Scotia, aged twenty-two years and four months. For some time she had been suffering from a slow but steady disease, which kept the fact constantly before her that she must soon die, but it occasioned no alarm. Her trust was in Jesus, and when asked by her loved ones if they should send for a minister to pray with and for her, she quietly remarked: "No; I have made my peace with God and am ready to go." And thus, with calm resignation, she leaned her head on Jesus' breast and breathed her life out sweetly there. She leaves a husband and a little boy, two years old, whom we commend to the prayers of God's people, that the chain now severed may be reunited in heaven.

TITHE MONEY.

An unknown contributor sends one dollar, "tithe money," with the request that it shall "be used for the benefit of the Methodist Church," and we have turned the same over to the Morgan Street Sabbath School, to be forwarded with the next remittance of said school to the China Mission. R. J. HARP.

In remitting, Agents who have accounts with the Book concern, as well as the Advocate, should, in all cases, state to which account the amount remitted is to be applied.

Instructions for shipping should be full and explicit. A little care in this respect may prevent weeks of delay, for which we cannot be held responsible, when it results from haste or carelessness in the instructions.

The Celebrated Argyle Bitters Tactus for the People.—These Bitters, which are now a household word in every family, are deservedly ranked among the most successful and efficacious remedies now used.

Gently stimulant, delightfully refreshing and invigorating, they promote the digestive functions, regulate the liver and spleen, prevents hytrophy or inaction; they increase the vital functions and maintain the chylopoietic viscera in their normal condition of health, when once established.

No fabulous properties or magical effects are claimed for them: they are simply a pure unadulterated Tonic, Alterative and Stimulant.

One essential element of their success is the effect they possess of lessening the inordinate thirst for strong drinks, so often engendered by the use of vile nostrums and vicious compounds, arrogantly and ignorantly called "Bitters" to cover their deadly effects.

Ask your neighbor about the Argyle Bitters, and in nine cases out of ten, he will tell you "to do as he has done for years, always to keep them on hand for family use, for they are good to take."

These Bitters can bear the addition of one-third water, and then be stronger in all their essential properties than any other Bitter in the market; and to ladies and children, we recommend their dilution with water, when taken. oct12 1m

The Child's Corner.

OUR BOYS.

Our boys are very noisy,
The way they sing and shout.
It nearly drives one crazy
When there's company about.
But mother says, be patient,
That noise is not a crime,
And we can bear confusion,
If they won't drink wine.

Our boys are very careless,
their boots are everywhere,
The r coats are on the piano
And their books upon a chair.
But mother says, be patient.
They will learn in time,
And we can bear disorder,
If they won't drink wine.

Our boys are very thoughtless,
They're always teasing us.
And often leave her crying
When she waited for a kiss.
But mother says, be patient.
They didn't think that time;
And we can wait for kisses,
If they won't drink wine.

Our boys are very foolish,
Father thinks, about their dress,
The number of their neckties,
I'm sure you couldn't guess.
But mother says, be patient,
That she has known the time
When he could be quite stylish,
And—they don't drink wine.

Our boys have many follies
Which try us every day,
Yet from the "wine that moketh"
They have kept their hands away.
Then should we not be patient,
And trust the teacher, Time,
And every day be thankful
That they don't drink wine?

A CHILDS PRAYER.

Dear Father, who art everywhere,
Please teach Thy little child to pray
For the things which most she needs,
And to be kept from evil deeds.

Give me a heart, for Jesus' sake,
That's free from thoughts that I should hate;
And may my playmates ever find
That I am loving, true and kind.

Oh, make my life a useful one,
Like that of Christ, Thine own sweet Son;
Bless, too, the friends to me so dear,
And keep them to Thyself most near.

And guide me safely through the day,
Lest from Thy side Thy lamb should stray,
And in the dark, lone hours of night,
Dear Father, keep me in Thy sight.

Why Robin Became a Temperance Man.

There was a little kitchen, a little table, a little dinner, and a little girl—though she was fifteen—and then there was Robin; but Robin was not little at all—though he was fifteen, too, and the little girl's twin brother—he was handsome, tall and stalwart, and about twice as large as his sweet little sister Ruth.

People said that it was fear that had stunted Ruth Lyon's growth; for her father was a drunkard, and in his fits of drunken rage, she seemed to be the sole object of his wrath and abuse; but Robin was growing up now, and his father did not dare to contend with the brave, manly boy, who sprang upon him like a lion, indeed, if the father dared even to touch the little sister, whom Robin loved better than any one else in the world.

The little dinner, though simple, was savory, and well cooked; but Robin could not eat. Poor Robin, he was very unhappy! "Your dinner is very nice, Ruth," he said at length, after gulping down a few mouthfuls at long intervals, "but I must go now;" and he pushed back his chair, and started for his hat, as if in haste to be gone.

But Ruth sprang after him. "O Robin," she cried, with her little hand on his arm, "haven't you a holiday this afternoon, and won't you stay with me? Mother isn't coming home till night, and I'm sort of afraid to stay alone, on account of father; besides, you haven't helped me in my garden this long time—O please, Robin!"

The tears were in Ruth's eyes when she finished, for Robin had changed sadly in the last few months. Alas, the poor boy inherited his father's love for liquor! Many a time he had told Ruth that he had such a craving for it, that if he once tasted it, he feared it would cause his ruin. And now—in these last few months, he had been tempted to taste it; he had even been brought home intoxicated, and Ruth feared that ruin was inevitable. "O please!" she urged again, as Robin hesitated.

"I can't, Ruth," he said at length, "I promised the fellows I would go with them this afternoon."

"But Robin, it's so dangerous for you to go with them," pleaded Ruth timidly.

"I know it, I know it!" cried Robin fiercely, "but I can't help it! I told you how it would be, Ruth, if I tasted it. Now I have taken the first step, and I shall go down, down, down, just as father has done." And he took his hat, and started for the door again.

"O no, no!" cried Ruth, clinging to him, "God will not let it come to that. Perhaps you can't help, but God can. O Robin, ask him! He will help you."

Ah little beseeching face and loving words were too much? "Well, at any rate I will stay with you this afternoon," said Robin, with a penitent caress, "so get your hoe and rake, and we will put that garden in the finest order possible."

But Ruth was not satisfied. Robin did not want to ask God to help him, and who else could?

However, she said no more, being wise enough to know that too many words would not be effective, and procured the hoe and rake with dispatch.

For an hour the pair worked happily together; but just as Robin began to feel a little tired with his unaccustomed labor, a party of his comrades came along, and loaning over the fence, began to urge him to come with them.

"O Robin, you promised me!" said Ruth, in a low tone.

"But I promised them first," replied Robin, beginning to waver.

"But a bad promise is better broken than kept, and then if father should come!" added Ruth in a still lower tone.

"I wouldn't worry about him," said Robin soothingly; "I guess he won't come, and mother will be at home soon. Ruth, I must go," he added wildly, as a struggle began between conscience and appetite, "I must have one glass, just one, I promise you it shall be but one!—you have no idea what a raging burning thirst torments me—after that I will come back, I promise—but now I must go!" And off he darted—poor miserable Robin.

Ruth bent over her flowers, and watered them with bitter, scalding tears. A few months before, Robin would never leave her alone, if he thought there was any danger that she would be exposed to her father's brutality. "O God," she cried, in the agony of her heart, "can nothing be done to save my Robin—my poor, handsome, generous Robin? O, if I could only die to save him!"

No answer came from the serene blue sky, and some children were going by laughing merrily; but through the little gate there came a cruel, hardened man, with an ugly scowl on his face, as he glanced at the little girl—his own daughter—who was bending over her flowers. She did not hear the click of the gate—so absorbed was she in own bitter thoughts—and the man walked slowly and stealthily along, till he stood close at her side; then giving her a brutal kick, he exclaimed: "What are you at, here in my garden? I'll teach you a thing or two, you good-for-nothing girl!" and seizing the hoe, which Robin had dropped to join his comrades, he belabored her with rude, heavy blows, over her head and back, till she sank in a little cowering, fainting heap to the earth.

But Robin had not gone far down the street when something impelled him to turn round, just as his father staggered out of the gate. His better feelings were roused—he rushed back to his sister's aid, fearing the worst; and, alas, those fears were realized! "O, if I had never left her," he moaned, as he took up the little senseless form, and carried it into the house.

"Speak to me, O speak to me, Ruth," he cried, as he laid her on the bed, and rubbed her hands, and bathed her bleeding face. But there was no answer.

At length, however, the sweet eyes unclosed, and looked up at him wistfully.

"O speak to me, darling, darling little Ruth!" cried Robin, kneeling at her bedside in an agony; "tell me you forgive me!"

She made an effort to raise her poor bruised head, but she could not; then she managed to gasp out—"Promise"—her eyes said the rest.

"Yes, yes, I promised before God," said Robin, solemnly.

"Ask God to help," murmured Ruth once more.

When Mrs. Lyon—who had been hastily summoned—came home, she found her dear little daughter—dead, and Robin kneeling by the bedside, praying as he never prayed before, that God would help him to keep the promise made to his little murdered sister—never to taste another drop of liquor as long as he lived. The good God heard, and answered, and helped poor Robin. And so he became a temperance man.—Tracy Town in the Congregationalist.

What Will He Become?

This question is often asked by parents in regard to their sons, and by the friends of many young men. And, although there is no definite rule for ascertaining, we may get some idea of what a young man will become by observing his actions and works.

Solomon said, many centuries ago, that "even a child is known by his work, whether it be good or whether it be evil." Therefore, when you see a boy slow to go to school, indifferent about learning, and glad of every opportunity to neglect his lessons, you may take it for granted that he will be a blockhead.

When you see a boy anxious to spend money, and who spends every cent as soon as he gets it, you may know that he will be a spendthrift.

When you see a boy hoarding up his pennies, and unwilling to part with them to any good purpose, you may set it down that he will be a miser.

When you see a boy willing to taste strong drink, you may rightly suppose that he will become a drunkard.

When a boy is disrespectful to his parents, disobedient to his teacher, and unkind to his friends and playmates, it is a sign that he will never be of much account.

When you see a boy looking out for himself, and unwilling to share good things with others, it is a sign that he will grow up a selfish man.

When you hear a boy using profane language, you may take it for a sign that he will become a wicked and profligate man.

When you see boys rude to each other, you may know that they will become disagreeable men.

When you see boys pouting and grumbling when told to do anything, and always displeased when they have any work to perform, it is a sign that they will be good-for-nothing men.

But when you see boys that are kind and obliging to each other, obedient and respectful to their parents, attentive to their studies and duties, it is a sign that they will become good and useful men.

When you see a boy that loves his Bible, and is well acquainted with it, it is a sign of great future blessing from Almighty God.

When you see a boy that stays away from theatres, grog-shops, ball-rooms, and gambling-houses, it is a sign that he will grow up a man in principle, knowledge and goodness.

When you see a boy practising the virtues of morality and Christianity, you may know that he will become an honor to himself and family, useful to his country; and the glory of his Maker.

Although great changes sometimes take place in the character, these signs, as a general rule, hold gold.—Pupil.

Walter and the Judge.

One day, passing through Washington Market, New York, Walter observed a gentleman making payment for some purchases who, in so doing, dropped a bank-note. A draft of air blew it toward the boy, while the gentleman passed on, ignorant of his loss. In a few moments, however, he was overtaken by the boy, who said, as he held up the bill: "You've lost some money, sir."

It was a fifty-dollar note. The gentleman, whom we shall call Judge Russell, looked surprised, but on examining his pocket-book, found that it was so, and handing the lad a smaller bill, said: "You're an honest little fellow. Take this."

"No, sir, thank you," replied the boy, firmly.

In his astonishment Mr. Russell surveyed the boy from head to foot. He was evidently poor, for his clothes bore the indications of poverty. The Judge said:

"Why, my boy, what is the reason you will not take the money?"

"Because I did not earn it, sir. I don't think my mother would like me to take pay for doing as I would be done by."

"A fine little fellow! Would you like to live with me and be a lawyer?" said the Judge.

"Yes, sir," replied the boy, as they parted. About two months after, a boy was shown into the Judge's study, who came up to him and asked: "Are you ready for me now, sir?"

"For what, child?" asked the Judge, who now recognized the finder of the bank-note.

"Why, to have me live with you and learn to be a lawyer," replied the lad.

The Judge now recollected that these were his own words to the boy, and, struck with the artlessness of the little fellow, he restrained his mirth and asked: "What do your parents say?"

"I have no father; but my mother says you are a good man, and that God has answered her prayers in providing a good place for me; and here is a letter from her, sir."

The Judge was much moved, and more so after reading the letter, containing the mother's committal of "her precious child." Consulting with his wife, she became much interested in the facts, and was greatly pleased with the boy. The result was he was adopted, and ultimately became eminent in the profession, and the comfort of his foster parents in their declining years.—Sunday Visitor.

The Dew-Drop.

I went out one morning early to see the dew-drops; there was one on every blade of grass. I stooped down and looked at them, and the grass said: "Are you come out to see me?"

"No, to see the dew-drops."

A little sparkling drop shook himself up. "What," said he, "what was that?"

"Come out to see you, beautiful dew-drop," I said.

"What for?"

"I love to see the blue sky reflected in your bosom."

"That is because I am pure," said the dew-drop; "heaven is always reflected in a pure bosom. You cannot see heaven in the bosom of muddy water, nor in the heart of a wicked child. Tell the children who love Jesus to be pure, even as He is pure."

I picked up the blade of grass to look closer at him. Just then the sun began to rise, and the dew-drop changed from blue-heaven color to glowing sunlight. It shone like a little sun as I held it, and looked lovelier than ever.

"Beautiful!" I said.

The little drop smiled. "The day is breaking, and the good sun is changing me into the likeness of himself. Tell your little Christians, when Jesus shall appear they shall be like Him. But the day is breaking—the sun is drawing me—I'm going, going—"

"Don't go yet," I said; "stay and talk to me."

"He is sending down his long sunbeam-fingers. I feel them drawing me. I'm going."

"Stay, little dew-drop," I said; "stay and talk with me."

"Only in the night I live on earth, and when day breaks I flee away to heaven on the beams of light. Christians are the dew-drops of Jesus. They, too, stay on earth while the night lasts, and when heaven's day breaks, and the shadows flee away, Jesus will draw up his dew-drops to Himself. I'm going up to the calm heaven—up to the glorious sun."

It grew brighter, and heavenlier, and smaller. I looked, and looked, till I looked in vain; the dew-drop was gone.

The Influence of Bad Company.

One day, Robert's father saw him playing with some boys who were rude and unmannerly. He had observed for some time a change for the worse in his son, and now he knew the cause. He was very sorry; but he said nothing to Robert at the time.

In the evening he brought from the garden six rosy-cheeked apples, put them on a plate, and presented them to Robert. He was much pleased at his father's kindness, and thanked him.

"You must lay them aside for a few days, that they may become mellow," said the father, and Robert cheerfully placed the plate with the apples in his mother's store-room.

Just as he was putting them aside, his father laid on the plate a seventh apple, which was quite rotten, and desired him to allow it to remain there.

"But, father," said Robert, "the rotten apple will spoil all the others."

"Do you think so? Why should not the fresh apples rather make the rotten one fresh?" said his father. And with these words he shut the door of the room.

Eight days afterward, he asked his son to open the door and take out the apples. But what a sight presented itself! The six apples, which had been so sound and rosy-cheeked, were now quite rotten, and spread a bad smell through the room.

"Father!" cried he, "did I not tell you that the rotten apple would spoil the good ones? You did not listen to me."

"My boy," said the father, "have I not told you often that the company of bad children will make you bad, yet you do not listen to me. See in the state of the apples that which will happen to you if you keep company with wicked boys."

Robert did not forget the lesson. When any bad boys asked him to play with them, he thought of the rotten apples and kept himself apart from them.

A Cure for Anger.

Two little sisters—one seven and the other five years old—were playing together, when a little difference arose between them. Lucy, the elder, feeling that anger was rising, said: "I am getting angry; I had better go out of the room for a few minutes." So she went out, but soon returned, and all the angry feelings were gone. How she spent the few minutes, I think most of our little readers will know. Lucy had not read her Bible in vain; she knew the meaning of these sweet and encouraging words: "Ask, and it shall be given;" and many times had she proved them true when fighting against her naturally hasty temper. How many sad scenes would be avoided if all children would follow the example of little Lucy.

If any one offend you, before answering try to call to mind this golden sentence: "A soft answer turneth away wrath: but grievous words stir up anger." And, if you attend to it, you will save yourself hours of regret and repentance.—Children's Friend.

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

WORK FOR OCTOBER—The Plantation. Cotton picking will now demand a large share of attention, and must be pushed forward vigorously during all favorable weather. The fierce winds and beating rains will come, ere long; and the cotton crop should be mainly gathered, ginned and made ready for market before that time.

Corn should, also, be carefully gathered and housed, as soon as possible, to prevent the ravages of the weevil. Branches of the common elder (sambucus canadensis), scattered through the barn and about the crib, may be used as a detergent for this often very troublesome insect.

Pumpkins should be carefully gathered and stored on rail scaffolds, above ground, and under shelter. Boiled up with coarse meal or bran into mush, they form an excellent food for fattening hogs or cattle; and when dried and properly cooked, they enter into many of the nice and palatable winter dishes of the good and skillful housewife.

Fodder stacks, put up previous to the late storms, may need re-topping or the erection of a stout board canopy over them as a guard against coming gales. If you have barn room, it will be advisable to house all the fodder you can, about the last of this month, or early in November.

The second growth of crab grass hay may yet be cut and saved, and all fresh grass that has sprung up since the autumns rains, is still available. The old grass, partially withered and seedless, is of little or no value, and can only be used as litter or bedding. It is worth saving for that purpose and for manure, if the time can be spared from more important work.

Sweet potatoes should be dug in dry weather, as soon as ripe, and before the first frosts, and great care must be taken in housing or banking them properly for winter use. The old conical banks, containing twenty or twenty-five bushels each, built up on dry ground, the potatoes covered with pine straw, cornstalks, and about a foot of earth, with ventilating hole on top, and the whole capped with a plank shelter and well fenced in, answer an excellent purpose, where there are no regular potato-houses on the farm. We generally allow our potatoes to lie in heaps twenty-four or forty-eight hours, before we put them up in the banks or houses, in order that they may pass through the first "heating" process—though we have banked them an hour or two after digging, and kept them in perfection.

Small grain, such as rye, oats, barley, or wheat in the drill, for spring forage, must now be put in. These crops will not succeed on thin, poor, shallow-plowed land; and should be carefully let alone if you are not prepared to manure heavily, plow deeply and pulverize finely. If you sow broadcast, first get your ground in perfect order, sow plenty of seed, brush it in evenly and thoroughly, but lightly; and then roll the surface level, so that the scythe or cradle may meet with no obstruction when your crop is cut. On land well manured and properly prepared, (as above indicated), rye or barley will make at least two tons of excellent forage or hay to the acre, and may be cut early in the spring, just before the ear is formed. For small lots, however, we prefer sowing rye, barley, or wheat in the drill, as the yield is greater, if well manured and properly managed. Clover, Lucerne, Tall Oat and other grasses may now be sown, so as to get a vigorous start before the severe weather sets in. Garden borders may be planted in Lucerne, and if highly manured the crop will bear repeated cuttings, and prove both useful and ornamental.—Our Home Journal.

CURE FOR THE BOLL-WORM.—The Aberdeen (Miss.) Examiner says: Mr. James D. Tatum, of Aberdeen, one of our oldest citizens, has discovered an effectual bar to the depredations of the boll-worm. Last year, he put up nine martin boxes, which were immediately taken possession of by hundreds of martins, who entered upon duty as destroyers of the millers, who deposited the eggs that produce the destructive boll-worms. He informs us that he did not find a single boll-worm in his hundred acres of cotton. Putting up martin boxes at convenient positions throughout their plantations, planters will be able to wage a war of extermination against the most dreaded enemy of the South. It costs little or nothing to try the experiment, and there is no good reason to suppose that the martin will not be as destructive to the enemies that threaten the field as the English sparrow, while it is much more harmless.

If stock are furnished with a good pasturage, with a variety of grasses, a good supply of cool, running water, both to drink and to bathe in, and a moderate supply of grain in some form, they are in warm weather in their element, and are then in the best condition to ward off disease and make rapid and profitable growth.

It should always be borne in mind that there is an unending, active competition now in farming as in every other pursuit, and he who would be successful must be on the lookout to secure all the assistance he can procure, all the advantage that science, inventive genius and research can offer, to make his labor profitable, and to enhance the fertility of his land.

It is said that if all that the dogs of this country eat was fed to the swine, it would make fifty million dollars' worth of pork. Add to this the value of sheep they destroy, and something of an idea of the curse of dogs can be obtained.

Any farmer who can support himself on a farm comfortably, and make it pay a net income of seven per cent on its cost, is far ahead in competence of the citizen who lives in a brown-stone front on a magnificent salary, and has to spend it all for life and "appearances."

The meadow rue is a stately plant, with a fine stalk of feathery white flowers. It does not bloom until late in June, and continues to flower through July. Its foliage is deeply serrated like the locust, but more finely cut, and the other sides of the leaves are of a silvery whiteness, so that it is frequently called silver leaf. No spirea excels it in beauty and grace. Did it come from Japan, and were it a high-priced novelty, it would be sought for by all flower lovers.

The use of plaster or gypsum, a compound of sulphuric acid and lime, as a manure, has become common in this country as well as in Europe. It has been attempted in some parts of country, however, where its use was unsuccessful. Some have supposed this to arise from its being one of the original constituents of the soil, which derived no advantage from the addition of a new quantity. The existence of salt in those lands, upon which plaster produced little or no effect, has been proved by analysis.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

HOW TO STOP TOBACCO-CHEWING.—It is said that the chewing of coarsely-cut gentian root after every meal will cure the taste for tobacco.

PUREE OF SQUASH.—Cut the squash or pumpkin into small pieces, and stew it with a little salt. Rub it through a sieve and make it like green pea puree, with butter, cream, pepper and salt.

TO KEEP BUTTER SWEET.—No better plan has been devised to keep butter sweet than to put it in clean jars and cover it with strong brine. No kind of vessel, cask or tub will answer so well as a jar. In this way it can be kept fresh and sweet for twelve months.

TO KEEP QUINCES.—Gather the fruit at the usual time, then put carefully into barrels so as not to bruise, rejecting all but the perfectly sound; then fill with water, head up, and put in the cellar. They will keep all winter, retaining all the peculiar qualities and flavor of fresh quinces.

SPICED APPLES.—Eight pounds of apples, pared, four pounds of sugar, one quart of vinegar, one ounce stick cinnamon, half-ounce of cloves. Boil the sugar, vinegar and spices together; put the apples when boiling, and let them remain until tender (about twenty minutes). Take them out and put them in a jar. Boil down the syrup until it is thick, and pour it over.

TOMATO CATSUP.—Peel and slice one peck of tomatoes, and stew until perfectly soft. Then strain them through a colander, and then through a sieve. Add salt and whole peppers to taste, and a few cloves and one onion chopped or grated. Boil until it is half-boiled away, then bottle and seal. This quantity will fill two quart-bottles.

GREEN PEA PUREE.—Soak one quart of peas in boiling water for an hour. Take them out and put them in fresh boiling water to cook, with a pinch of salt, and a bit of celery, if procurable. When well cooked, mash them and rub through a sieve. Put in a piece of butter half the size of an egg, a little pepper and a pinch of salt, and half a pint of cream, and warm up for the table. All purees are better for a foundation of beefsteak.

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in the most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our Instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $850—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of truly unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity and freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. Schele De Vere, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

[From the New Orleans Price Current.]

The abrogation of the quarantine at Galveston and other Gulf ports has imparted an active impulse to nearly every branch of trade, and, with a more lively market and increased competition among buyers, holders have been enabled to establish an advance of 12½@2 c. ₱ bbl in flour, 1@1½c. ₱ bushel in corn, 25 to 37½c. ₱ bbl in pork, and ¼ to ½c. ₱ lb in bacon. Our leading staple, on the contrary, under the influence of a decided decline at Liverpool and New York, has given way ½c. in good ordinary and the lower grades, and ¼c. in low middling and the better qualities. The sales have been fair, but, operations being restricted by light receipts, the business has been of much less extent than at the corresponding date last year.

The weather was clear and pleasant on Saturday and Sunday, but on Monday it was unsettled and rainy. On Tuesday it was clear and warm. The recent storm appears to have confined its violence to the narrow belt along the Gulf coast. Further in the interior it was rainy, but without the heavy blow which pervaded this vicinity. Where it was most severe serious damage was done to the cane, to such an extent that very few now anticipate a larger yield than last year—145,000 hhds. The cotton in the same region was also badly injured, but only a limited portion of the lands being planted for that crop, it can have very little influence in the general result.

The river is now thirteen feet six inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the sixth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi..... bales	6,426
Lake	15
Mobile	2,786
Texas	485
Total	9,712

On Saturday the movement was checked by discouraging news, and buyers claiming greater concessions than factors were willing to admit, but the sales, nevertheless, embraced 900 bales, without any quotable variation in good ordinary and the lower grades, ¼c. in low middling and the higher grades. On Monday with a better supply the business was of more liberal extent embracing 1,400 bales, but the demand was by no means general, the bulk of the business being confined to three buyers, and, in accordance with other markets, factors were compelled to submit to further reductions of about ¼c. in low middling and the better qualities, and ⅛c. in good ordinary and the lower grades. On Tuesday the market opened with a more general demand, and an apparent disposition among factors to meet it freely. The sales were consequently of a liberal extent during the morning, partly at previous rates and partly at a falling off of ⅛c. but later in the day it was difficult to obtain any concessions from Monday's figures. The sales summed up 2,000 bales.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas), are 28,023 bales, against 54,313 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 95,198 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 12,960 bales to Great Britain, of 1,978 to France, and a decrease of 1,234 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Low Ordinary	13½ to 14½
Ordinary	15 to 16
Good ordinary	17½ to 18½
Low middling	18½ to 18¾
Middling	19 to —
Strict middling	19½ to 19¾

SUGAR.—The first of the new crop received this season. On Monday the ninth instant 15 hhds new crop sugar, were received per steamer British Johnson, the first this season. It came from Mr. John Flather's Orleans plantation, just below the city, consigned to Mr. P. Maspero. It classed good fair, open kettle, and sold to Messrs. A. Thomson & Co. at 11½c. ₱ lb. Last year the first receipts of the new crop were on the seventeenth of October, when the steamer W. S. Pike brought 9 hhds from Mrs. Devall's plantation, near Baton Rouge, consigned to Messrs. E. K. Converse & Co. It classed centrifugal and sold at 12½c. ₱ lb. The steamer Bart Ablo also brought on the same day 4 hhds fair, good style, from Bayou Lafourche, consigned to Messrs. Boulligny & Esclapon, which sold at 11¼c., and 5 hhds good fair, also from Bayou Lafourche, consigned to Messrs. P. J. Pavy & Co. and sold for 12¼c. ₱ lb. The market for the old crop has closed for the season, though 10 and 31 hhds ord. choice yellow clarified sold at 12½c. ₱ lb. Previously a few hhds old white clarified sold on the landing at 13c. and some choice yellow at 12¾c. ₱ lb. Some Porto Rico sold in the sheds at 10¼c. ₱ lb.

MOLASSES.—The receipts of new this season consist mostly of syrup. It comes in small lots but does not sell very rapidly. The sales on Wednesday and Thursday comprised 26 bbls, including some lots left over from previous supplies, at 55; 66 and 72½c. for fair and good syrup and 85c. for choice molasses, and 15 half bbls at 50c. for common syrup and 55c. for thin. On Tuesday 20 bbls prime new molasses sold at 76c., 12 bbls and one-half bbl new syrup sold on private terms, and 21 bbls new syrup at 60c. ₱ gallon. There is a good stock on hand of refinery molasses, and a fair business is doing in it at 28@60c. ₱ gallon for refinery reboiled as in quality, and 90c.@$1 for golden syrup.

FLOUR—Is in good demand and prices have advanced. Treble extra is scarce and there is little or no superfine and double extra in the market. These are the grades most in demand. The stock on hand consists mostly of choice extra. The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 4200 bbls, in lots, at $6 50 @$6 80 for some on its merits; $7 50 for treble extra; $7 50@$7 75 for good treble extra, and $8@$9 for choice extra. On Tuesday holders had good control of the stock and it was held firmly under limit for higher prices. There is not much demand, however, and the sales were confined to 1000 bbls, in small lots, at $6 74 for superfine, $7 for double extra, and $7 50@$7 50 for treble extra. Superfine is quoted at $5 85@$6, double extra $7, treble extra $7 87½@$7 50, good treble $7 75, choice and family extra $8@$9 ₱ bbl.

CORN—Is in light supply and prices have advanced with a good demand. The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 4000 sacks at 84@85c. for yellow and white mixed, and 85@86c. for white. On Tuesday prices were again firmer and 2500 sacks sold, in lots, at 86c. for new white, soft; 82½c. for new red; 84c. for mixed; 85c. for yellow and 85@87c. for white.

OATS.—Prices for oats have also advanced with a light supply and good demand. The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 6500 sacks, in lots, at 53c. for inferior and some in small sacks; and 54, 55, 56 and 57 for prime to choice, 56 and 57 being the outside prices on Monday. On Tuesday prices were still higher, and 1800 sacks sold at 57@58c. ₱ bushel.

MONETARY.

The sales of silver have been confined to $1,500 in American half-dollars on Monday at 100¼, and 25000 on Tuesday at 100½. American half-dollars are now quoted at 100@100¼ and Mexican dollars nominal at 1@1¼ cent premium in gold.

LADIES' FAIR.

On the seventeenth of October proximo, the ladies of the Methodist Episcopal Church South will give a fair at Shreveport, to assist them in raising means to build a parsonage. Any aid extended them in donations of needlework, toys, paintings or money by their friends in New Orleans can be left with Bro. Robert J. Harp, No. 112 Camp street.

CAMP MEETING.

There will be a camp meeting, fifteen miles south of Natchitoches, in Natchitoches parish, commencing on Friday, the twentieth day of October, at Friendship church. The people are expected and requested to come with provisions and tents, in order to entertain themselves. The ministers are invited, and will be provided for. R. PARVIN, P. C.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Dolhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

Under a burning sun, where fevers, bilious affections and Fevers of various descriptions so generally prevail,

Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient

Has been successful beyond all precedent. Hence, the physicians of the tropics have given their emphatic sanction, prescribing it in preference to every other aperient known.

The patients, of course, gladly acquiesce. Hence this preparation is one of the most delightful as well as mild and cooling cathartics that chemistry has yet devised, and possesses all the medicinal virtues of the far-famed Carlsbad Seltzer Spa. It is a powder that only requires the addition of water to produce in an instant a delicious, effervescent beverage, as cooling as an invaluable medicine. Ask for and accept none but the genuine.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FOREIGN.

KINGSTON, JAMAICA, Oct. 7, via Havana, Oct. 11.—The steamer Ashwall brings the following from Central and South America:

Advices from Panama state that the Italian residents of Lima are making great preparations to celebrate the anniversary of the occupation of Rome by the national troops. The President was advised by the clergy to issue an order forbidding the demonstration.

The order caused great indignation. The students of Lima resolved to get up a celebration of their own, and on the day they assembled in the public square. While the editor of the Nacional was delivering an oration, the troops rushed from the sides of the square and charged the crowd. Though no resistance was made, many were wounded and five hundred were dragged to prison, among them the Bolivian Consul and the secretary of the Chilian legation. Great excitement was caused by this outrage.

There were fears of an outbreak. The Italian flag was ordered down everywhere, and mounted police patroled the streets. Night came without any further disturbance. It is believed that the affair would not end here. A counter demonstration was made by the clerical party on the next day. The procession passed through the streets, carrying a life-size portrait of the Pope. When it halted in the square, a large number of people gathered around the portrait to go through the ceremony of kissing the feet.

It was then discovered that the picture had been smeared with turpentine. The sacrilege had caused the indignation of the Catholics, and the feeling is very bitter against the Italians. One of them was believed to be the author of the outrage, and would have been killed if discovered.

The steamer Rising Star sailed yesterday for New York from Guyaquil, with a large quantity of cusparango bark for the State Department at Washington.

SHANGHAI, Oct. 11.—There is a great flood in the Tien Tsin. Ten thousand square miles of territory under water.

There have been terrible typhoons at Hong Kong and along the coast.

The city of Hong Koug is threatened with inundation.

LONDON, Oct. 13.—The losses of the Liverpool companies by the Chicago conflagration aggregate £420,000.

The strike at Newcastle still continues. Several were hurt in a riot, which the police easily suppressed.

Ex-Empress Eugenie will shortly return to Chiselhurst.

The health of Queen Victoria is improving.

MUNICH, Oct. 14.—There was an important debate to-day in the lower house of the Bavarian Reichsrath on the subject of the papal infallibility. The Minister of Worship and Public Instructions, replying to interpellations by a number of deputies heretofore reported in these dispatches, said that the State had at all times the right to make changes in the laws relating to the church.

The church having declared a change of principles, and infallibility being a doctrine dangerous to the State, the government had resolved to protect any and all of its citizens who cannot accept the infallibility of the Pope as an article of faith. The government would still consider such persons as Catholics, and it would oppose any encroachment by the church upon the principles of the civil constitution. Moreover, the minister declared the sentiment of the King and Council of State favored the separation of the religious and political branches of the government, and the complete independence of each.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 16, noon.—Cotton market firm. Estimated sales 12,000 bales, 3000 of which are for export and speculation. Uplands 9⅞@9⅞d., Orleans 10@10¼d.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—The steamer City of Paris, from New York for Liverpool, is off Cape Clear, broke down. Steamers have gone to her assistance. A strong breeze is blowing, but there is no apprehension for her safety.

Two steamers collided in the Clyde. Five lives lost.

LONDON, Oct. 16, noon.—Consols 92⅞. 5-20's of 1862 90⅛.

KINGSTON, Oct. 16.—All vessels have been delayed by the storm. Many dragged their anchors, and some ran ashore.

MONTREAL, Oct. 16.—There was a terrific gale after a heavy rain yesterday. Serious damage was done to property. The roof of the new St. George church started during the services, and the people rushed out in the middle of prayers. The cathedral spire rocked like a ship-mast.

Miss Anne Lowe, daughter of John Lowe, of the Gazette, was killed by a falling tree.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 17.—The cholera is again epidemic. There have been sixty deaths in two days, nine of whom were Englishmen.

HAVANA, Oct. 17.—A vessel from Vera Cruz has arrived, bringing late dates from the Mexican capital.

Juarez has been re-elected President by Congress, receiving one hundred and eight votes—all that were cast. The opposition abstained from voting.

Everything was quiet in the city.

The telegraph wires between the capital and Matamoros had been cut by Trevino.

DOMESTIC.

CINCINNATI, October 11.—Returns continue to show Republican gains. They claim the State by 20,000 to 30,000 and joint ballot by 12 to 15 majority.

Private advices say Chicago is under martial law. The soldiers are making no arrests, but kill the turbulent on the spot.

Seven incendiaries are reported shot and hung, who were taken while attempting to fire buildings.

Sixty-four bodies have been recovered.

GALVESTON, Oct. 11.—The congressional election returns from the remaining nine counties in the third district swell Giddings's majority 4411. This includes his majority of 1630 in the counties of Limestone and Trenton, which are under martial law. No further returns have been received from other districts; they are conceded, however, to have gone Democratic by handsome majorities.

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 11.—Mayor Bien telegraphs that several towns in the lumber district on Green Bay have been burned. Prestige village and Sugar Bush settlement were destroyed Sunday night and Monday. It is reported that upward of two hundred persons perished in the flames.

INDIANAPOLIS, Oct. 11.—Rev. Dr. Eddy, who just arrived from Chicago, reports the loss of both life and property beyond conception.

The people are starving by the thousands, and not less than eighty thousand are homeless.

Prepared food and clothing are urgently needed. Thus far the supplies sent have not lessened the peril of starvation.

Garroting and thieving are frequent at night.

CHICAGO, Oct. 11.—Forty-one persons were shot in making arrests last night. The station houses are filled.

Ninety bodies have been recovered from the ruins.

Quite a number of persons have died from exposure.

The Relief Committee have impressed all kinds of vehicles to carry water and provisions.

Immense supplies of provisions, much cooked, are coming in. The committee have telegraphed some points to stop. Ten thousand blankets came from Cincinnati.

The Common Council have arranged prices for food, with heavy penalties for violation.

MARINET, Wis., Oct. 11.—To the Mayor of Milwaukee: A horrible calamity has befallen the lumbering towns on Green Bay. Peshtigo Village, mills and Sugar Bush settlement were entirely swept away on Sunday night and yesterday. From one to three hundred lives were lost. The bodies are horribly burned. Whole families perished, and scores are lying around dead, waiting for the horrified living to bury them. Medical aid must be sent at once to save the destitute people.

GREEN BAY, Wis., Oct. 11.—Menominee is out of danger. Two mills were burned. A heavy rain last night saved the place.

Most of Winnecome was burned, together with sixty or seventy persons. The balance saved their lives by rushing into the lake.

4 P. M.—Abner Kirby has just arrived from Menominee, and reports all right.

DETROIT, MICH., Oct. 11.—The news from St. Clair and Huron counties in this State is of the most distressing character. All that portion of the State east of Saginaw Bay and north of a point forty miles above Port Huron, has been completely swept by fire.

A number of lives are ascertained to have perished, and probably we have not heard the worst. The flourishing villages of Forrestville, White Rock, Elm Creek, Sand Beach and Huron City are entirely destroyed. Rock Falls and Port Hope are partially burned. Nothing has yet been heard from Port Austin or Port Crescent, but it is hardly possible they escaped.

At many of these towns were large stores, many of which were filled with winter stocks, extensive saw mills, shingle mills, docks covered with lumber, all of which are swept away. It is said there is but one dock left on the shore about Forrestville. A steamer, which left Port Huron last night for the relief of sufferers, returned this evening, bringing back some forty men, women and children, five of whom are severely burned.

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—The coroner held inquests on sixty-four bodies yesterday. Only two were recognized—Henry Ullmann and Peter O'Brien. Twenty of the bodies were taken from the basements of two houses.

The Franklin Insurance Company, which lost six hundred thousand dollars, telegraphs they well pay in full.

The Illinois Legislature assembles to-morrow.

A careful estimate makes the number to be cared for during the winter seventy thousand.

The Republican this morning issued a half sheet, and the Tribune an entire sheet, filled with advertisements and announcements of merchants' change of localities.

There are eighty dead bodies now in the Morgue.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 12.—Protestant Episcopal Convention.—Declaration of the Bishops in Council, October 11, 1871: We, the subscribed bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, being asked, in order to the quieting of the consciences of sundry members of the said church, do declare that in our opinion the word "regenerate" is not there so used as to determine that a moral change in the subject of baptism is wrought by the sacrament.

This declaration is signed by all the bishops.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 12.—The following dispatch was received to-day by Archbishop Spaulding, of this city:

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—To Archbishop Spaulding, Baltimore, Maryland: The Cathedral, six churches, orphan asylums, hospitals, House of Good Shepherd, schools, charitable institutions and the Bishop's house are all in ruins.

Over one hundred thousand people are homeless. I beg you for a general collection in your churches next Sunday. The superintendent of telegraph asks you to repeat this message to the prelates of the country, as our wires are too crowded and few. Request all remittances to be made to yourself.

THOMAS FOLEY,
Bishop of Chicago.

DETROIT, Oct. 13.—Full particulars of the burning of Manistee, on Sunday night, are received. About ten o'clock the fire engine gave out, after which the flames raged without resistance through the helpless town, the wind blowing a gale all night.

The loss is estimated at nearly a million of dollars, on which there is but $80,000 insurance.

The sufferings of the people are beyond description, Manistee being so far beyond immediate connection that considerable time passed before their wants could be made known.

The people of Grand Rapids and Grand Haven promptly supplied their immediate necessities, and Senator Ferry and the Mayor of Grand Rapids have issued an earnest appeal to the people of the whole State for aid. They say the latest news from Manistee more than confirms all previous reports of the suffering there existing.

The necessities of the people are imperative. They need immediately flour, meal and clothing. Direct all supplies to Senator Ferry, Grand Haven.

All the telegraph offices along the lake shore have been burned.

R. B. Hubbard, at Huron City, shot all his fine horses and cattle to prevent their perishing by fire. A light rain yesterday seems to have caused the fire to abate.

Charles Scott, of Hope College, perished in the flames. Also a minister, whose name has not been ascertained.

LOUISVILLE, Oct. 12.—The woods and houses are burning along the New Albany and Chicago railroad.

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—Eight elevators are saved. The loss of grain will foot two million bushels.

The Liverpool, London and Globe Insurance Companies have ordered the immediate payment of their losses, aggregating $6,000,000.

The Commerce Company at Albany, with a loss of $450,000, has been placed in the hands of a receiver.

Evidence accumulates that the loss of life is greater than at first estimated.

It is rumored and believed by some that the banker Ublman was murdered.

An unpleasantness exists between the mayor and Common Council regarding the management of affairs.

An organization has been effected for the management of the relief contributions. It consists of the Chicago Relief and Aid Society, an old established institution, assisted by prominent citizens. Bills will be audited by a committee. The funds collected should be remitted direct to or held subject to the order of the Chicago Relief and Aid Committee, and signed by R. B. Mason.

Three laborers were killed this morning by a falling wall.

The following proclamation has just been furnished the Associated Press:

The mayor of Chicago is happy to be able to announce the city remains quite and peaceable. There is no lawlessness, incendiaries or riotous conduct. Order reigns supreme; life and property are as secure as before the burning of the city. The government in all its departments is now in full and complete operation.

None of our inhabitants are without shelter of some kind. Food to relieve present necessities has flowed in upon us in abundance from all quarters, but a long winter is before us and we shall need all that sympathizing humanity can render. Such expressions of sympathy and generous aid which have been called forth by our great calamity have never been equaled in the history of the world. It has cheered and encouraged our citizens; business has largely been resumed; of the two thousand acres of ruins many prominent buildings are being erected, and the noted energy of our citizens is being everywhere displayed. In the name of our citizens I tender the heartfelt thanks to all who have so nobly and generously sympathized and aided us in our distress. R. B. MASON, Mayor.

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—The Tribune says: There can be no doubt as to the course to pursue with incendiaries caught in the act. The fate of such miscreants should be certain and sure.

The opening of the safes and vaults continues. In most instances, so far, their contents are found more or less preserved, but in some cases heaps of charred leaves and melted tin boxes are all that are found.

The rain which commenced at midnight continues, and has extinguished the remaining fires, saving many thousand tons of coal and quelling apprehensions of further fires.

The gold in the customhouse was melted and the green box destroyed.

JANESVILLE, Wis., Oct. 14.—Governor Fairchild telegraphs that the appalling calamity caused by fire has not been exaggerated.

Over three thousand men, women and children are now destitute. The loss of life has been very great, not less than five hundred persons have been burned at Peshtigo and vicinity, and three hundred on the eastern shore. Scores of men, women and children are now in temporary hospitals, burned and maimed.

SAN FRANCISCO, October 16.—The United States steamer Colorado struck a rock and has gone into the dock for repairs.

SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 16.—A heavy storm prevailed here Saturday night. Houses were prostrated, trains delayed and telegraph wires blown down.

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 16.—Later accounts confirm previous disastrous reports from the Northwest. The loss of life in the neighborhood of Peshtigo will reach one thousand two hundred. Fifteen per cent of those injured die. The only escape from the fire was in the water, where maddened cattle drowned many persons who had taken refuge there.

The population of Peshtigo was two thousand, one-third of whom perished.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Oct. 16.—There were seven distinct fires here Saturday night; six being incendiary.

CHICAGO, Oct. 16.—A severe gale passed over this city Saturday night, prostrating walls, etc. Fortunately the storm was preceded by a heavy fall of rain, preventing further damage by fire.

The banks open for business to-morrow, and will pay depositors in full. All branches of trade are rapidly locating.

There is wonderful activity in the southern division. Thousands are at work removing the debris and erecting temporary buildings, etc. Every laboring man willing to work finds plenty to do and liberal wages.

The action of the banks in resolving to resume immediately inspires confidence.

The stories about wooden pavements burning up are exaggerations.

The number of dead bodies discovered is less than one hundred and twenty-five. A large mass of persons supposed to have been lost are alive and well.

The Board of Trade has not yet decided upon the future location of its building.

The Rush Medical College resumed its usual course in the City Hospital to-day.

The postmaster announces that the money order department of the Chicago postoffice is in operation and ready to pay all orders promptly. Postmasters making deposits should remit national bank drafts on New York, or send currency by registered letters.

The banks here pay fifteen per cent at once, and will resume regular business on the seventeenth.

R. H. Hurlbut, Comptroller of Currency, certifies to the solvency of the Chicago national banks.

Advices from the Northwest grow hourly worse.

NEW YORK, Oct. 16.—Fifty insurance presidents were consulting to-day. Miller, State Superintendent, addressed the meeting, saying if any were compelled to go into liquidation, he would do his best to protect the interests of insurers, but wanted a frank and candid statement.

President Oakey, just from Chicago, considered the losses there understated. The Chicago companies could not pay more than ten or fifteen per cent. He stated all the New York companies would pay their losses.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR: Our college exercises opened on the second instant, and we are now under way, with more than twice as many students as was had at the opening last year. Letters from various parts of the country advise us of the coming of others also.

Rev. B. F. White, our agent, reports success in his efforts to collect funds for the buildings. He has no doubt of his ability to secure the entire sum needful for the contemplated repairs.

The contractor will begin operations in about ten days, and if our friends, who have given us notes and pledges, will only be prompt in payment, the whole work will soon be completed.

We hope the ministers of our two conferences, and the friends of the college generally, will unite in an earnest effort to procure for us a full number of students.

C. G. ANDREWS, President.
JACKSON, LA., October 11, 1871.

D. H. HOLMES.—The well-known and favorite dry goods establishment of D. H. Holmes, at No. 155 Canal street and No. 15 Bourbon street, is one of the attractions of New Orleans. His immense store, having been thoroughly repaired and painted in the most tasteful style, is one of the most beautiful we have ever seen. The long experience and acute judgment of Mr. Holmes in the selection of stock, we are sure, will leave nothing wanting to make it one of the first class establishments in the country in all that constitutes a splendid assortment of goods. The proverbial urbanity and good taste of the business manager, Mr. Hoffman, with a corps of polite and attentive clerks, adds greatly to the pleasure of shopping at this establishment. Persons may send orders from the country with confidence that they will be faithfully attended to.

CRESCENT MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.—We call attention to the advertisement of this popular and well conducted company, which appears in this issue.

JOHN MITCHELL BONNELL, D.D.

The community of Macon was inexpressibly shocked, on Sunday morning, October 1, to learn that this eminent minister and educator, had died suddenly near Saturday's midnight. Many remembered seeing him on the streets, in the afternoon of the latter day, in his usual health. To show how sudden the shock—he had conducted Dr. Pierce, who arrived after nightfall at the Wesleyan Female College, to his chamber, within little more than an hour of his death, in unusually exuberant spirits, for one ordinarily so quite as Dr. Bonnell; and his venerable friend learned on awakening at dawn, that the parting "good night" would find its corresponding "good morning" greeting only after the rising of both on the eternal day. From waiting on Dr. Pierce, he returned to a little company of friends, who were gathering at the college to the opening of the session on the ensuing Monday, tarried with them awhile, and, leaving Mrs. Bonnell behind, retired to his own room. Mrs. Bonnell following a few minutes later found him ready for bed, yet sitting up and complaining of distressing nausea. It soon grew into intense pain, in the region of the heart, and the physician was sent for, while his devoted wife got him to bed and used such simple remedies as were at hand, hoping to allay the pain. The anguish soon became great, and suddenly he seemed to sink. She hurried to call Prof. Bass from his room, but before he could dress himself and reach his honored colleague, he was pulseless. A few more gasps—a feeble fluttering on the verge of life, and all of earth was over.

Thus died one of the best and most lovely of men. The only premonition he had of this sad issue, so far as we know, was a slight paralysis of the tongue, which interfered with distinct articulation, and which his friends observed was of late months so increasing as very greatly to embarrass him in his public services. He took this as a promonitory symptom of the disease which ended his father's life, and thus spoke of it occasionally to his friends, though neither he nor they anticipated so near and sad a result.

Except for an absence of three or four years, just before he was called to the high place he held at his death, Dr. Bonnell has been at work in Georgia since early manhood, as preacher of the gospel, and, principally, as an educator of its young ladies. In the college where he died, as co-laborer with the writer, he gave such satisfaction that, when a vacancy in the presidency occurred eleven years ago, he was recalled from Alabama to fill it. Born on the sixteenth of April, 1820, in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, reared principally in Philadelphia, he graduated at about eighteen years of age, at Jefferson College, Washington, Pennsylvania, and came to Georgia before he reached his majority and began his life work. Though reared a strict Presbyterian, he passed through a period of religious doubt approximating to disbelief, but he fell in here with the Methodists, and his doubts were dissipated less by reasoning than by an exhibition of the power of religion, which soon led to a happy experience, that transformed him into an earnest Christian worker. This was at Greenville, Georgia, in 1842. He soon began to preach, and joined the Georgia Conference in 1845. But his brethren early recognized his eminent fitness for the teacher's vocation, and the Methodist institutions of Georgia became the field of his labors.—Southern Christian Advocate.

A GENEROUS RESPONSE.—We learn from the Recording Secretary of the New Orleans Typographical Union that in answer to an appeal made to the printers of this city by their suffering craftsmen of Chicago, the sum of five hundred dollars was immediately forwarded to the President of the Chicago Printers' Union, as a donation toward relieving the distress and necessities of the printers of that unfortunate city. This action speaks well for the printers of this city, and should be followed by other associations of our generous metropolis.

IF A MAN IS TO FIND LIFE, he must find it elsewhere than in a deceitful and sterile view of himself. A look, a simple look, converts. And the same look, daily and hourly renewed, renews the heart's brave purpose.

THE BEAUTIFUL PEARL.

BY REV. DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

Pearl of the ocean,
Gem of the sea,
Jewel of beauty,
Purchased for me;
Jesus once bought it,
Paid with his path;
This was the cost of it—
Jesus was slain!
Pearl of the ocean, mine it shall be,
Beautiful jewel, purchased for me.

Sin hath deformed me,
I am so vile;
How can He love me,
Give me His smile?
Over my heart-bruise,
Bleeding with sin,
Jesus has laid it
Shining within!
Pearl of the ocean, mine it shall be,
Beautiful jewel, purchased for me.

Nothing to give for it
Have I but sin;
I will receive it,
Wear it within.
Jesus, Redeemer,
Dwell in my heart;
Never, O never
From me depart.
Pearl of the ocean, mine it shall be,
Beautiful jewel, purchased for me.

DREAMS.

BY JOSEPHINE POLLARD.

O lovely visions! ye have led
My soul through valleys dank with mist,
O'er sandy plain, through river bed,
To hill-tops crowned with amethyst.

With ye I've wandered near the skies,
And for my jewels had the stars;
And caught a glimpse of Paradise,
Across the sunset's golden bars.

Each day has had a brighter glow;
Each night been full of morning gleams;
And life, from first to last, I know
Has been the sweeter for my dreams!

O visions sweet! my longing heart
With love and hope is comforted,
And when these welcome guests depart,
And leave me dreamless—write me dead.

FROM CALCASIEU, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: In some rambling among the grand forests of pine in this western portion of our State, preaching the word, I found much to interest and a good deal that has cast a shadow over the heart. The statistics gathered have been embodied in a report, addressed to the District Conference, as a basis for a memorial to the Annual Conference, in regard to the destitution hereabouts. These statements, plain, and only giving facts, are enough to crimson the cheek of every lover of the Saviour. The world has its standard to measure the limits separating between the line, where its devotees must cease to wear a bold front and cover themselves with shame; and the gospel, too, has its standard. If, therefore, the children of the world submit to the world's judgment, by how much more should the children of the kingdom fear to pass the line of their Lord. It is not intended to repeat the facts set forth in said report at this time, but to give you some of the outside incidents of the trip.

Everywhere our reception was cordial in the extreme, and more invitations were extended to us than either time or circumstances permitted to accept. The people turned out with great cheerfulness, and manifested that kind of heart—a desire for the Word of Life, calculated to cheer the heart of any one. No hanging back, nor excuse making, but in heat, and even neglecting farm and home duties, they manifested the hungering and thirsting spirit mentioned by our Lord. Ladies came on foot one and two miles, and others on horseback ten and twelve miles. Men hoary with age, and those with the dew of youth, heard that the gospel was to be preached, and they came forth like doves from their cotes.

Who could feel otherwise than joyful with such a demonstration, and have you none in your section who feel that it would be a glorious mission to break the bread of life to such a people? They are poor, but to such the gospel is welcome. Their natures have not been hardened by the cold formality of the world, nor their hearts taught to suppress an honest conviction. Their ear is not shut to a reception of the truth, but the truth finds ingress and touches the innermost chambers of their souls, and is received honestly. May God's blessing rest upon this people, almost forgotten and overlooked.

One humble servant of the Lord was found, who, under the severest physical impediments and sufferings, was doing what he could for the Master. His line of travel extended three hundred miles, and this he made each month. Shame rest upon the able-bodied and physically perfect, who seek not to enter the harvest field, ready for the sickle, anxious for the reapers, and perishing for the bread of life; and heavier shame upon those, among the reapers, who look for shady groves by gentle flowing streams, whose eyes delight in flowers and the soft allurements of crowded temples, where refinement sits bedizened in silk and purple. They have forgotten Laodicea.

Permit me to give you one incident, which, if traced back to its beginning, may help some profound casuist to solve a riddle, now perploxing the mind of an exalted personage. At one of the gatherings, in the solitude of the grand old forest, were two persons. The lady was deeply affected, and, after the service, procured a copy of the Word, that she might search in order to become wise; the other belonged to the sterner sex, and during the day appeared deeply interested. Being an invited guest, in the same family with the writer, upon reaching the hospitable roof, he was anxious for information. Among other things, he asked: "Do you open your churches to all and permit the attendants to occupy any seat not appropriated?" The answer was: Yes. "Do you charge the parents for baptizing their children?" Answer: No. "Do you attend the sick and perform the last rites over the departed free of charge?" Answer: Yes. "Then, sir, I and my neighbors have been educated in a school, whose teachings are not like yours. But does not the Bible authorize the servants at the altar to charge for services, such as I have mentioned?" Answer: I have never found the place where such instruction is given. "Well, sir, I have learned some truth this day, and am sure that my heart did not indicate falsely to me the need of something. I had not yet attained to, for it has often whispered, you are not in the right way." With many inquiries, in regard to the teachings of our Saviour, and a serious desire to be led to the light, he closed the evening's talk by giving this incident as the beginning of the process of thought which led him to suspect the truth of what he had been taught. A neighbor of his died late in the fall of the past year, and some three months after the widow sent to the officiating priest a request to celebrate a funeral service at her house in behalf of her deceased husband. The bearer of the message was asked if she had sent the money to pay for this service, and being told no, then, said the priest, she must either send the money or give some good person as security. One of the friends offered himself as securiy, was accepted, and the service was performed at a cost of eight dollars to the widow. This, said my companion, seemed so foreign to what religion should be, that, in my opinion, there must be some better side to it, and I thank you for your simple statement of what the gospel is, and will endeavor to walk by its light. The point for the casuists is this! When a body of men, calling themselves spiritual guides, leave the way in which God has commanded them to walk, and shut their eyes and stop their ears, not to see light nor hear truth, how can they dare to express surprise if the Author of all true religion deserts them in the time of trial? The head of the church to which this priest belongs tells the world, "all is lost," and fails to see the reason. It is simply because he, as his servant under him, denies the true power of religion and resorts to all manner of worldly schemes for the support of themselves and their system, instead of putting their trust in God and doing His will in His own appointed way. But, thanks be to this blessed King, several of these poor deluded people have, by the simple power of the Cross, been brought into the light, and now rejoice in the liberty wherewith Christ make them free. This simple fact, and its statement, has carried me beyond the limits I had set; but feeling deeply the great need there is for true evangelical preaching, and having seen the wide field lying desolate, yet anxious for the Word, I have been constrained to continue. My good brother, shall this always be? Is there not material in our church abundantly qualified to teach the way in which the soul must journey in order to reach the blessed haven at last? Has the arm of Christ become weary or shortened that it can no longer bear up the sheep? Not so. But is it not rather that the sheep no longer hear and obey the voice of the good Shepherd? These people are willing, both to hear and also to give of their substance. Prepare, then, to send laborers into this part of the vineyard the coming year.

INDAMORA.

LAKE CHARLES, Aug. 4, 1871.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: In compliance with a resolution adopted by the third Quarterly Conference of this circuit, held at Asbury church, on Saturday before the fourth Sabbath in August, the stewards and official members of the circuit met at Liberty church on Saturday, the thirtieth day of September, 1871, to adopt the measures, in their judgment, best calculated to promote the financial interests of the circuit.

After divine service, the meeting was organized by calling Rev. J. M. Johnson to the chair, and appointing George Fontaine secretary.

A short time was occupied in the discussion of the condition of the finances of the circuit, and the urgent necessity for the adoption of such measures, as best calculated to improve the same; all of which were characterized by a spirit of harmony, and the manifestation of a deep interest on the part of all present, for the financial as well as the spiritual interest of the church.

The following resolutions were offered and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this organization be called the Lower Peach Tree Pastoral Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and that it be made a permanent organization to meet twice in each ecclesiastical year, once just before the meeting of the Annual Conference, and once as soon after its adjournment as practicable.

Resolved, That a president, vice president, secretary and treasurer be elected to serve twelve months from the date of election; that it shall be the duty of the president to preside at the meetings of the association; that of the vice president to act in the absence of the president; that of the secretary to keep a record of the proceeding of the meetings, a list of the names of the members, and an account of the amount paid by each member of the association to him or to the stewards of the different charges (whose duties it shall be to furnish the secretary with the name and the amount received by them for the support of the ministry, whether by members of this association or otherwise), and pay the same over to the treasurer and take his receipt for the same; that of the treasurer to receive, receipt for and pay out any money that may come into his hands, as directed by the association.

Resolved, That this association, in order to promote the interests of the circuit, and secure to it a continuation of the favorable consideration of the bishop in sending us good, worthy and efficient pastors, obligates itself to pay five hundred dollars for the support of the pastor, and one hundred dollars for the support of the presiding elder, in the event of a failure on the part of the stewards to collect that amount of the assessment made at the first Quarterly Conference of each year from the different charges on the circuit.

Resolved, That the foregoing resolution shall be so construed as to influence the stewards in making the assessment or abate their efforts to raise the full amount of the same, if it be greater than the amount therein stated.

Resolved, That in the event of a failure on the part of the stewards to collect from the different charges on the circuit the amount of six hundred dollars, as stated in resolution third, the deficit be paid by this association.

Resolved, That all amounts collected by the stewards, after the meeting of this association, before the meeting of the Annual Conference, as arrearages, be applied to reimburse the members of this association for the amount paid to supply the deficit, or, in the event of no deficit, to be applied to make up the assessment, and be passed to the credit of the charge represented by the stewards collecting the same.

Resolved, That this association appoint a committee, whose duty it shall be to procure board for the pastor, before his arrival on the work.

Resolved, That we recommend a strict adherence to the law of the church, as laid down in the Discipline, and urge upon the pastor the necessity of a close observance of its requirements, more especially with reference to the holding of church meetings and the organizing of Sabbath schools, and pledge ourselves to cooperate with and assist him in the discharge of these very important duties.

Resolved, That every member of this association be required to subscribe to the rules and regulations governing the same, and that we invite and solicit any member of the church to become a member of the same, who will comply with the requirements of this resolution.

Resolved, That the foregoing resolutions are not intended to conflict, in any way, with the rules and regulations governing the stewards in the Discipline, but have for their object only the advancement of the spiritual and financial interests of the church.

Resolved, That the secretary be directed to furnish the stewards of the different churches on the circuit with a copy of these resolutions, and the stewards be requested to solicit members for this association.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing resolutions and the proceedings of the meeting be forwarded to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE with a request to publish the same.

The following persons were then elected to fill the offices of this association for the next year: Rev. George Watson, president; Dr. James, Southall, vice president; George Fontaine, secretary, and J. J. Hestle, treasurer.

The meeting then adjourned to meet at Mount Andrew, on the Saturday before the fourth Sabbath in November.

J. M. JOHNSON, Chairman.
GEORGE FONTAINE, Secretary.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

East Pascagoula Camp Ground, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed our camp meeting at Salem, and are happy to report that the Master revealed himself at every service. For nearly fifty years, the kind people of this community have assembled annually, renewed their camp fires, spread their tables and sacrificed to the Lord. The number of hallelujahs that have gone up from the altar, the grove, and around her camp fires these many years, from hearts renewed by grace, will never be revealed until the opening of the great camp meeting above. There, with the myriads of glorified saints, hundreds will arise and date their spiritual freedom, as given at one of these annual feasts, at the same time claiming some one of the many ministers, that have prayed in her altar and preached from her pulpit, as their spiritual fathers. Many have already crossed the river, that were converted here, and many are now on the way. Some of her preachers have also been transferred to that land above, and have presented their trophies to the Great Bishop of souls. Bros. Hearn, Dormon, Bond and Carter, no doubt, have met many there whom they led here to the healing fountain. A number of the ministers of the old Alabama Conference were spiritually born while attending her feasts, and received that greatest of all commissions: Go preach My gospel.

The result of this meeting we know not. Seed were sown that will bring forth fruit for generations to come. Thirty-three professed religion, many of whom were members of the church. Sixteen were admitted by taking the solemn vows prescribed. Backsliders were reclaimed, and Zion's banners, that have long been trailing in the dust, raised aloft. The church is revived. On the last night we had the best of the wine. Penitents, with many happy Christians, lingered at the altar until after two o'clock. Crowds came forward and promised that in the future they would serve the Lord, many of whom promised in the future to hold prayers with their families. Bros. Urquhart, Leith, Wimbish and Morris did good work in the pulpit and altar. All praise to Him from whom all blessings flow.

U. B. PHILIPS.

EAST PASCAGOULA CIRCUIT, Oct 3, 1871.

Carthage Circuit, Jackson District, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed the sixth protracted meeting on this circuit. Many precious souls have realized the priceless joy of the "new creation." We have been blessed. We have been lifted up. About forty conversions and seventy-eight accessions to the church. I have yet two meetings to hold. My first meeting was held at Rocky Point, embracing the third Sabbath in July. Eight accessions to the church, the membership much revived and several new converts. The next was at Salem, embracing the first Sabbath in August. Five accessions, several conversions, and we organized a prayer meeting. Next, at Goshen, embracing the third Sabbath in August. Ten accessions, some membership and the church much revived. Our third quarterly meeting was held at Comday, embracing the second Sabbath in September, and was protracted. We had the timely assistance of our presiding older, Bro. H. H. Montgomery, and S. D. Terry. This was a glorious meeting. Twenty-eight accessions, several conversions, and the membership was much revived. The brethren preached with power, and the Lord blessed their efforts. On Saturday, Bro. Montgomery preached an awakening sermon on the subject of Christian duty. The result of that effort was the organizing of a prayer meeting to meet every week. So, you see, that much good can yet be effected by those good old soldiers of the cross, if, indeed, the dewy freshness of life's young morn be passed with them. The meridian splendor of the noonday sun is yet more penetrating and powerful in his beams, the opinion of "Junior," of the Nashville Christian Advocate, to the contrary, notwithstanding. We held a meeting at this place, embracing the third Sabbath in September. We were assisted by Bros. S. D. Terry, O. H. P. Davis and Collins, of the Sulphur Springs circuit. This was a glorious revival. Twenty-one accessions and nearly as many conversions. With the exception of three or four, all the accessions here were Sabbath school scholars, and the dear children and young people have organized two prayer meetings. Our last was at Oak Hill, embracing the fourth Sabbath in September. The church was much revived and six accessions. You see, I have four prayer meetings, and I expect to organize a prayer meeting at every church on my work, except one. Unto God be glory and honor, now and forever. Yours very truly,

J. M. WEEMS, P. C.

CARTHAGE, Oct. 4, 1871.

Newton Station, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Lord has been reviving His work on the Garlandsville circuit recently. On the ninth of September our third quarterly meeting commenced at Hickory station. Bro. Williams, the presiding elder, preached with acceptability and power. The congregations were large, and the word did not "return void," but accomplished a great work upon the hearts of the people. Bro. Williams remained until Thursday morning, when he took his leave, but we did not remain alone long. On Friday morning, Bro. Bartlett, a local preacher who has been many years in the great work, and knows how to do the labor assigned to him by his Master, came to our assistance, and labored very efficiently and acceptably. He is very infirm, and cannot stand on his feet to preach, but sits when he delivers his message. The meeting closed Tuesday night, the nineteenth, Bro. Bartlett having left in the morning. There were about twenty-two conversions and thirty-one accessions to the church. We went from Hickory to Spring Hill, about six miles south of that place, and held a meeting, which lasted nine days, at which we had quite a number of conversions and twenty-four accessions. The meeting closed with a large number of penitents at the altar, and some of them weeping bitterly on account of sin. May God convert them soon. At this meeting, Bro. Cox, a local preacher, assisted. His labors were very efficient. May God continue the good work. Your brother in Christ,

G. W. BAYLY.

Elmore Circuit, Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I commenced protracted meetings in July, and have continued up to the present. One hundred and thirty-two have joined on the circuit. We have many thanks to give Bros. Stearns and J. Glenn, local preachers, and our presiding elder, William Shapard, for their help in the good work of the Lord. Almost the whole circuit is on holy fire from the Lord. To God belongs all the praise.

R. F. PERDUE, P. C.

WHAT THE POPE DREADS.—When a deputation of French Catholics had presented their congratulations to the Pope, on the occasion of his anniversary, he returned his acknowledgments, but added:

"Nevertheless, I must speak the truth to France. There is in France a more formidable evil than the revolution, a more formidable evil than the Commune with its men let loose from hell, who flung fire about Paris, and that is Catholic Liberalism."

Could arrogant bigotry go further? Shameful that a pope, boasting of his infallibility, should denounce the thoughtful reverent students of the Word of God, as more to be dreaded than the sacrilegious, atheistic wretches who sacked the churches of Paris, and murdered the archbishop and scores of priests in cold blood!—Christian Observer.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.—The financial year of the American Board has just closed with a debt of $4000. This result is truly wonderful, and gives occasion for profound gratitude. No longer ago than the previous week, it looked at the Missionary House as though the debt might be $40,000.

ROMISH TAX GATHERER.—Under the heading of "An Assiduous Ecclesiastic" the Journal of Commerce of the fifteenth ultimo says:

"Comptroller Connolley having signed a warrant for $50,000 (in conjunction with Mayor Hall) for the payment of the various city laborers for the past six weeks, the city paymaster yesterday paid the men their wages, being $2 50 per day. Father S. W. Corrigan stood at the door of the City Chamberlain's office, receiving contributions from the laborers as soon as they were paid off; these donations ranging from ten cents to $1. The funds contributed are to be applied to the building of a church in Cork, Ireland, in pursuance of a movement started by Father Matthew. It did not transpire how much the reverend father collected up to the time of closing the office, nor by what authority he was collecting this money."

AS SHIPS BECALMED.

BY ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH.

As ships becalmed at eve, that lay
With canvas drooping, side by side,
Two towers of sail, at dawn of day
Are scarce long leagues apart descried.

When fell the night, up sprang the breeze,
And all the darkling hours they plied;
Nor dreamt but each the selfsame seas
By each was cleaving, side by side.

E'en so—but why the tale reveal
Of those whom, year by year unchanged,
Brief absence joined anew, to feel,
Astounded, soul from soul estranged?

At dead of night their sails were filled,
And onward each rejoicing steered;
Ah! neither blame, for neither willed
Or wist what first with dawn appeared.

To veer, how vain! On, onward strain,
Brave barks!—In light, in darkness too!
Through winds and tides one compass guides:
To that and your own selves be true.

But O blithe breeze! and O great seas!
Though ne'er that earliest parting past,
On your wide plain they join again,
Together lead them home at last.

One port, methought, alike they sought—
One purpose hold where'er they fare;
O bounding breeze, O rushing seas,
At last, at last, unite them there.

SONG FROM GŒTHE.

Many thousand stars are burning
Brightly in the vault of night;
Many an earth-worn heart is yearning
Upward with a fond delight.

Stars of beauty, stars of glory,
Radiant wanderers of the sky;
Weary of the world's sad story,
Ever would we gaze on high.

CHRIST STILLING THE TEMPEST.

Critics, with that keen eye for flaws which we can only admire at a respectful distance, have been much concerned at that various and different terms in which the three evangelists record the outcry of the alarmed disciples. Luke reports that they cried: "Master, Master, we perish!" Mark, that they cried: "Master, carest Thou not that we perish?" Matthew, that they cried: "Lord, save us, we perish!" And these three cries do obviously denote different states of mind.

The critical concern has deepened when the various reports of Christ's reply to this various appeal have been compared. Mark reports that He said: "How is it that ye have no faith?" Luke, that He said: "Where is your faith?" Matthew, that He said: "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?"

On the ground of these serious variations in their several reports, the accuracy, and even the veracity, of the evangelists has been impugned! One almost scorns to answer such a charge, since it betrays an entire absence of that acumen and historical imagination which are the prime requisites of the critical art. Were a dozen men, imperiled and alarmed by darkness and tempest, sinking in a sinking boat, bound, or likely, to use precisely the same words, to wake their friend with an accordant chant as though they were uttering a liturgical response? Were they not likely to be animated by a common feeling, indeed, but a feeling which would vary according to their several characters, and to express that feeling in any words that came first to their lips? Was it improbable that some of them should say: "Master, Master, we perish!" feeling that to Him it was enough merely to state their danger, and marking its urgency by their repetition of the word "Master?" Was it improbable that others of them, half frantic with fear, should upbraid Him even as they appealed to Him, and cry reproachfully: "Master, carest Thou not that we perish?" Was it improbable that still others should retain their confidence in His power and grace, even in that supreme moment, and cry: "Lord, save us, we perish?" Instead of caviling at these variations, we should rather be thankful for them, since they indicate the different characters of the men who were with Christ in the vessel, and make our conception of the scene at once more graphic and complete. Instead of urging them as an argument against the veracity or accuracy of the evangelists, in the fact that these men portray themselves in the undignified posture of fear, that they confess how much they were lacking in faith, we ought rather to find new proofs of their honesty and the transparent fidelity of their reports.

But if the disciples broke on the Master with three different cries, can we suppose that He made them three distinct answers? O fools and slow of heart that we are to ask, or to be troubled by such questions as that! Grant that our Lord answered their various appeal with a single sentence, and that no one of the evangelists has given us the exact words He used—what then? He recognized the separate tones of their appeal; He read and responded to the thoughts of all their hearts. He spake to them by voice, and look, and gesture no less than by His words. And as they listened to His single sentence, what more natural than that each of them should find in it an exact response to his mood? "How is it that ye have no faith?" "Where is your faith?" "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?" No faith, little faith, unready faith, i. e., faith laid aside for the moment and out of reach—this is what the different disciples heard in His rebuke, whatever the actual form He gave it. Was it not natural, inevitable? Can you not tell, almost as certainly as though you had been in the boat with them, which of the disciples would bear one rebuke, and which another? Are you not sure, for instance, that slow, skeptical Thomas, in so sore a strait, would have no faith, and give all up for lost? and that Peter, in so sudden a strait, would be apt to find his faith had slipped for the instant beyond his reach? while John, even in so sudden and sore a strait, would have a little faith—faith enough to keep him from upbraiding the Lord, and to impel the appeal: "Lord, save us, we perish?"

And, after all, however various the tones or words the apostles heard, or thought they heard, they all learned the great lesson of the Master's rebuke. Read which of the gospels you will, you feel that the gist and substance of the rebuke was, that there was no need for fear while He was with them; that if they had bad faith, or faith enough, they would not have feared. This is the great lesson of the rebuke, the common lesson—that faith is the conquering opposite of fear. Suppose the worst bad come to the worst with them; suppose the boat had filled and gone down, and the whole apostolic company had been drowned in the tempest—what harm would that have done them? It would but have taken them home. We might have been the poorer for it, but not they; our loss would have been their gain. Why, even we, every time we stand beside the grave in which we have laid a brother's dust, give God our hearty thanks for that it has pleased Him of His great mercy "to deliver this our brother out of the miseries of this sinful world," and from "the burden of the flesh," to dwell with Him "in joy and felicity." Do we mean what we say? What, then, have we to fear? We have overcome "the last enemy." We should not fear, if only we had faith, or more than a little faith, or if our faith were ready to our hand. Faith makes the unseen realities visible and clear to us. Faith makes eternal truths present facts. It shows us that loss is gain, that to lose our life is to find it, that to lay aside the burden of the flesh is to be clothed upon with a spiritual and incorrupt body, that to leave the cares of time is to enter on the pleasures which are forevermore. And, therefore, perfect faith, like perfect love, casts out fear. Christ never feared anything; He did not fear poverty, change, loss or death, nor the leper's touch, nor the spring of the demoniac who clanked his broken chain among the tombs, nor the wild wrestle of wind and sea; why should we fear aught that may befall us when death itself will but take us to "God, who is our home?" Might not the Master well rebuke us, and say, with mingled surprise and regret: "How is it that ye have no faith?" or, "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?"

BIBLICAL PREACHING.

The following is the substance of some remarks made by Prof. J. M. Hoppin at the last meeting of the General Association of Connecticut, in New Haven:

"I may say that as one who is striving to teach others how to preach, I sincerely desire to come at the true secret of successful preaching, and to learn from every source. I should be willing to cast every theory of my own to the winds, however I might cherish it, did I think it was not the true and apostolic method of preaching; did I think it would not be followed with Christ's blessing.

"I believe in the Biblical method of preaching above any other; and I believe we must return to that, essentially, before any great power or effectiveness will be gained. 'The pulpit has lost, or is losing its power,' is now the cry. If this is not true, it is of no consequence—if it is true, the reason of this loss of effectiveness comes from the fact that the true source of power has been neglected, and false methods have been adopted ending in barrenness and death. I need not tell an audience like this, that in the history of the church the reformation of the people has always followed the reformation of preaching; and the reformation of preaching has always sprung from a return to the Word of God as the source both of the subject-matter and the inspiration. So it was in all reformed countries in the reformation of the sixteenth century, and so it always will be.

"And so it is with us now. We also may go away from the Bible while professing as Protestants to make it our main source of truth. We may become preachers of man's word instead of God's word. We may substitute systems and doctrines of our own in the place of the actual teachings of Christ; or we may preach and we may worship the Bible in such a narrow way, that we shall become ministers of the letter that killeth instead of the spirit that makes alive.

"I believe that the Biblical method is the true one because it is the historical method. The sermon, as we now call it, had once no place in preaching. Preaching was once a simple answer to the question: 'Tell us, friends and brethren, what you know about Christ—about the facts of his life—about what he said and taught—about his death and what it imported.' It was then a laying open or exposition of the documents relating to that life and death—of the histories and the letters, after the first eye-witnesses had passed away; and this continued to be mainly the method of preaching through the earliest ages down until philosophy and rhetoric usurped the place of Biblical truth.

"I believe it is the true mode, because in such preaching there is the spiritually instructing and renewing element, which makes it the real bread of life. One may adulterate this bread of life by theological and metaphysical preaching, as well as by sensational preaching. I know very well that religion has its philosophical side. I know very well that metaphysics must enter into instructive preaching. I care not how much thought there is in a sermon, the more thought the better—but to make preaching a matter of thought; to take a theme as a mere topic of thought, and to treat it for that end; to set forth an interesting thought, and to build up a noble argument and there to leave it; this is, after all, the exhibition of human genius and intellectual prowess; and I care not who does this, if this is all, there is no word of God in it to feed the soul.

"I suggest that every one who intends to be, or who is, a preacher, should make a life-work of the systematic and comprehensive study of the Scriptures. Here is the foundation, certainly next to the preparation of the heart. I think there is a great want here. I am afraid that ministers depend too much upon reading and general studies, very good and important in themselves—but the study of the Scriptures is their great work. And to study the Scriptures only as a necessity—to study a text and its context merely to make a sermon out of it, is not enough; for what made the great preachers of old? It was that they were mighty in the Scriptures—they had studied the Bible comprehensively, as a daily work, as their life-work.

"And the second suggestion is a more general adoption of the exegetical methods of preaching. I mean the genuine sort. I do not mean one that excludes human thought, and tact, and genius. I think that a great deal of ourselves, of our own thinking, and of our own living and experience, must be mixed up with this mode of preaching, and it must be natural, free, large and interesting, and not mere digging at the roots of grammar. I would have it interspersed with tropical preaching and with enough of sound theology to keep the public mind wholesome and right, but I would have the main staple of preaching not theological but Biblical, springing from original study of the Word. The great fault of exegetical preaching is that it is made too bald. We do not wish to have the processes of scholarship exhibited in the pulpit. We do not wish to have things explained which need no explanation. We would wish to see the grand underlying truth of many, perhaps detached passages—of a whole chapter, or book it may be—grasped, and the deeper unity of the whole brought out, not a dry exposition, to which we have added nothing and from which we have gotten nothing. The deep, rich, sweet, divine lessons of the Bible, both moral and spiritual, should be brought out from all their dead forms of antique words, and made to stand forth in living beauty."

THE DRAINING OF THE TIBER.

The interest excited by the project, attributed to the Italian government, of subjecting the bed of old Tiber to a complete investigation, in order to disinter therefrom the treasures of ancient art and wealth which it is supposed still to conceal, is likely to increase rather than diminish as the scheme is further developed and becomes more familiar to the imagination. * * * But how far is the thorough draining of the Tiber likely to reward the public spirit of its projectors? That is the question to which the answer can, after all, be only conjectural, although there is probability enough to render the indulgence of even splendid hopes permissible. There is, it must be confessed, a good deal of popular exaggeration in the current language about the great elevation of the modern soil above the strata of ancient Roman ruins, with their deposits of values which may be supposed to be buried below, particularly when applied to the Tiber. It seems to be thought that its venerable mud might be dug down to an indefinite depth, with a constantly increasing probability of hitting on some vein of abandoned statues, gems, or other relics of priceless art. But there is an obvious limit to these anticipations, and a near one. Whatever change of levels may have taken place in parts of Rome, whether by the gradual elevation of soil or by earthquakes, it is pretty certain that the surface of the Mediterranean remains at the same height as in classical times. Now, the surface of the Tiber at Rome is just thirty-three feet above the Mediterranean; such, at least, was the result of Sir George Shuckburgh's measurements in the last century, which have been generally relied on since, the point taken being apparently that where the river leaves the city. That the level of the Tiber is a little higher now than in ancient times we know, because at mean height it half covers the arch whence issues the Cloaca Maxima; but it must be very little, for the Tiber is in places some twenty feet deep, its bottom consequently very little above the sea level. It is difficult, therefore, to believe in any great accumulation of silt there. The rapid stream must have swept it steadily away age after age, and, probably, left whatever solid substances had been thrown into it within such easy reach that superficial exploration—in the course of fourteen hundred years since the desolation began—has had every facility for recovering them. Moreover, although the spoliation of Rome has been a favorite theme of the poets and historians, it is not easy to point out any epoch at which such spoliation actually took place under circumstances which would render it probable that much of the spoil got thrown into the river. Alaric certainly did not "loot" Rome, although he has the credit of it; Genseric, the Vandal, certainly did; but then Genseric came by sea, and had a fleet in the Tiber at his disposal, on board which, historians tell us, he carefully conveyed all the articles which he thought worth removing. Among these were certain treasures which have excited more of modern curiosity than any others—those carried away by Titus from Jerusalem and lodged in Rome. Who, asks one of our cotemporaries, can say that the Tiber may not even now contain the "seven-branched candlestick" of the Temple? We are afraid it can be predicted with a strong approach to certainty that it never will be found there. Its history, and that of its accompanying vases and other valuables, is a riddle from first to last. It is supposed to be represented, as we all know, on the arch of Titus; but this modern skepticism has questioned, for the following among other reasons, that on the foot of the sculptured candlestick sea-monsters, eagles and other animals are placed, by no means in accordance with the severity of the Temple worship of the One God. However this may be, Genseric certainly took away these spoils of Jerusalem with him; for Procopius describes a part of them as ornamenting that sovereign's palace at Carcassonne in the south of France. Other portions of the sacred prey were left by the same monarch at Carthage, were Belisarius found them a century later, and carried them in triumph, with his Vandal booty, to Constantinople. Tradition reports that a venerable Jew, who had influence in the palace of Justinian, persuaded that emperor, under superstitious terrors, to remove them once more, and send them back to the holy spot from whence they were originally brought by Titus. The watchful, persevering eye of the Hebrew race had evidently kept them in view for five hundred years. But at this point, says Gregorovius, the German antiquarian describer of mediæval Rome, we entirely lose sight of them. If they really found their way back to Jerusalem, they must have become the prey of the Saracens, and wandered somewhere into the recesses of the "boundless East," probably to be destroyed as idolatrous. Yet another tradition declares that the great Church of the Lateran preserved not only the seven-branched candlestick, but Aaron's rod and priestly habiliments, the golden urn which hold the manna, and we know not what curiosities besides—a bold experiment, no doubt, on the credulity of Roman Christians, and still more of pilgrims, in the dark ages.—Pall Mall Budget.

THE GODDESS OF REASON.—It may not be generally known that the woman who, in the Reign of Terror, personified the "Goddess of Reason," died in Alsace but a few years ago. In a note of Prof. Farrar, in his late admirable Hulsean lecture, he says: "The unfortunate 'Goddess of Reason,' who had been adored with bacchanalian dances, as she sat in white robes, blue mantle and red cap, with a pike in her hand, on the altar of Notre Dame, died so late as September 30, 1863, ninety years old, idiotic, blind, and a beggar in Alsace."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE California Methodist Episcopal Conference has resolved "that the method of raising the deficiency of pastors' salaries by mortgaging church property, or giving trustees' note, is at variance with a sound financial policy, and calculated to seriously embarrass, if not endanger, our churches or parsonages, and we most earnestly recommend that this practice may at once and forever cease."

PETER CARTWRIGHT, the venerable Methodist minister, celebrated his eighty-seventh birthday on the first instant, at Pleasant Plains, Sangamon county, Illinois, surrounded by one hundred and twenty children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. He is reported to be more than usually feeble, and gradually failing. This venerable and widely-known father in the ministry entered the itinerant work in 1804—sixty-seven years ago. He has never consented to take a superannuated relation, having long since resolved to die "in the harness."

THE country lying back from the Republic of Liberia in Western Africa is regarded as an important and hopeful field for missionary labors. It is elevated and healthy. The prevalent language is the Arabic, which is spoken and written by Mohammedans, evidently from the East, and who are spoken of as faithful in the observance of their religion, and earnest in propagating it. They are quite superior to the tribes about them. As the Bible is now printed in the Arabic, who knows but these Mohammedans are preparing the way for the introduction and rapid spread of the gospel in the heart of Africa?

ARISTARCHUS CHAMPION, of Rochester, New York, whose death has recently been announced, was very benevolent during his life time. He gave large sums to the temperance cause, and to philanthropic institutions. His will has just been proved, and his property is estimated at $300,000. He bequeathes one-half of all his real and personal property to the American Bible Society. The remainder of his property, with the exception of $1000, he bequeathes to the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, under the control of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States. The will is to be contested.

THE Memphis Presbyterian gleans from the minutes of the Southern General Assembly that fifty-nine of the churches have received on profession twenty or more members each. The largest number was received by the church at Bristol, Tennessee, seventy-eight. The next largest was Shelbyville, Tennessee, sixty-six. The largest number by any presbytery was received by Lexington, two hundred and sixty-seven; and the next by Nashville presbytery, two hundred and twenty-eight. The average receipt of members is about one hundred to each presbytery, or seven members to every two churches, and about six and a half per cent. on previous membership.

SINGULAR STATEMENT.—Secretary Clark, of the Missionary House, informs the Congregationalist, that while upon his recent journeyings, he fell into company with the Hon. William H. Seward, who made to him a very important statement affecting our missionary interests in China. It was to the effect that the phrase, "and other places," in the treaty between our government and China, upon which we base our right to prosecute missionary work outside the ports particularly named, is a forgery. The statement of Mr. Seward is that it was interpolated by French Jesuits after the treaty had received the signature of the Chinese government, and before it was acted upon by our own.

THE new Greek church, says the New York Methodist, so long talked of in this city, is about to be erected on Lexington avenue, between Fifty-first and Fifty-second streets, and just east of the Roman Catholic Male Orphan Asylum on Fifth avenue. It is designed to be no mean representative of Russian architecture. The cost of the edifice, it is estimated, will be about $250,000, which will be defrayed by the Russian treasury in St. Petersburg. The church, though attached to the Russian Legation in the United States, will be directly under the supervision of the Metropolitan of St. Petersburg, and will in no way be connected with the diocese of the only resident Greek bishop in the United States, at San Francisco.

CHRISTIAN unity seems to be making more rapid progress on the other side of the water than in this country. The English journals report the extraordinary circumstance that the archbishop of York lately officiated in the parish church of Glengarry, and conducted the service according to the forms of the church of Scotland. The bishop of Winchester conducted the service in a similar manner in Glengarry parish church on the Sunday previous. The Queen, who is the head of the Church of England, uniformly attends the Presbyterian service while she is in Scotland; but the archbishop and bishop have gone a step further, in preaching in a Presbyterian church, and conducting the service after the Presbyterian forms.
New York Observer.

A SPLIT IN THE ROMISH CHURCH.—The Rev. Dr. Stryker, of Rome, New York, wrote several weeks ago to the Christian Intelligencer: "I claim, as all your readers do, to belong to the Holy Catholic Church. When I went to Rome, last year, some of my friends called me a Roman Catholic, which in one sense was true. But I have now something to tell you which is not a joke, but a very important and interesting fact. The German Catholics in our city have recently had a split, and one party, who may be called more evangelical than the other, have broken away from the bishop, and are building an independent church. They laid the corner-stone of their new church edifice last Thursday, and strange to say invited the Presbyterian Bishop to make an address. I very much regret that my vacation plans would not admit of my being present, and performing the service. These people are intelligent, and have secured a priest and pastor who is of the order of Dr. Dollinger. Who knows how this will spread and where it will end?"

THE Boston Advertiser has been studying the minutes of the General Association of the Congregational churches of Massachusetts, with the following results: "This, the largest of the religious denominations of our State, is still vigorously holding on its way. Its churches are scattered all over the Commonwealth, and, except in a few of the hill towns, are gradually increasing in size and in strength. The gain in membership for the past year has been only a little more than five hundred, but for a long time there has been a steady gain; and it may surprise those who, in the rapid growth of other denominations, have been accustomed to think of Congregationalism as perhaps on the wane, to learn that during the last forty years there has been a net gain of one hundred and fifty-six churches; and in the membership a gain of more than a hundred per cent. In 1830 there were three hundred and forty-seven churches, with a membership of thirty-seven thousand nine hundred and eighty-seven; now there are five hundred and three churches, with a membership of eighty thousand five hundred and eighty-three. In Sabbath schools the increase has been still more marked. While in 1830 there were only thirty-four thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven enrolled as members, the report now shows an aggregate of ninety thousand eight hundred and fifty-one. Meanwhile, there has been but little gain comparatively from abroad, while a vast multitude have gone out to find new churches all over the West; so that the record is, on the whole, a fair one. The number of ministers reported is five hundred and ninety-seven, and, it would seem, should furnish a fair supply for five hundred churches."

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The following interesting items are from an abstract of the last annual report: Life directors constituted 64, life members 1880, new auxiliaries enrolled 110, agents superintending the Society's work in this country 33, with 23 assistants. County agents employed by auxiliaries 221, Bible visitors who have worked gratuitously 23,138, agents in foreign lands, three, with forty colporteurs. The receipts for the year were $729,464 70; including $408,888 72 for Bibles and Testaments, $39,416 34 from the building fund, $101,078 82 from legacies, $169,659 83 from donations, and $10,420 99 from sundry items. The payments have been $651,135 31. The sum necessary to meet the outstanding engagements of the Society is estimated at $70,000. Volumes printed at the Bible House 1,031,800. Printed and purchased abroad, 164,997. Total, 1,196,727 volumes. Volumes issued 1,107,727, including 938,548 from the Bible House, and 169,179 abroad; the latter representing some 58 different languages and dialects. Entire number of volumes, issued during fifty-five years, 27,680,098. Number of families visited 644,476; number of families found destitute of the Bible 72,306, destitute families supplied 38,558, destitute individuals supplied in addition 28,607. The summary of work done during the past five years, since the re-supply was begun, is as follows: Number of families visited 2,990,119, number of families found destitute of the Bible 283,186, destitute families supplied 228,807. The disproportion between the number of destitute families and the number supplied, is due largely to the fact that Romanists so generally refuse the Scriptures. To the distribution effected directly by the society and its auxiliaries must be added the thousands of volumes circulated through other benevolent institutions to which grants of books have been made.

AFTER CONVERSION.

After conversion, we are anxious to know what sort of Christians the young converts are making. It is a new field of experience, and a new test of character arises. It is the opening of another probation, and an entrance upon an untried career. Of the babe, we wonder "what manner of child shall this be?" and of the child we may have our hopes and fears as to the mature man. When a new calling is chosen, we wait to see how the matter turns out, and regard it as somewhat of an experiment until time determines. A vessel leaves port upon her first voyage, and her behavior and seaworthiness remain in doubt until she has encountered the gales and billows. We may have our conjectures, but we do not know the soldier and his qualities until he stands amidst the dangers and hardships of the campaign. Christianity is no longer an experiment in itself, but how the new-born soul will move off under its light and revelations is to be seen. Besides the failures of some to hold fast and to run to the end, there are various types of the religious character. We may ponder the probabilities of final salvation, remembering that the righteous are scarcely saved, and we may have our solicitude about the style of Christian in those who persevere.

The consistency and permanence of the profession depends much upon the reality of conversion. Serious convictions, occasional religious excitements, and a determined purpose to lead a new life, die out more easily than the power of a new creation. With experiences far short of a change of heart, many unite with the church and never reach a regenerated state. They do right, as far as they go, but resting in the outward means, or mistaking the fact that they are yet unconverted, a relapse to worldliness soon overtakes them. As a general thing, souls truly renewed by the Holy Ghost do not readily and immediately fall. The safety of the contrite and concerned is almost assured by conversion. No amount of awakening, no bonds of church fellowship, no degree of moral training, gives anything like the hope that is yielded by a clear conversion. We are not certain that the converted child will successfully pass the ordeal that awaits him, but the assurance is indefinitely increased. The strongest point of all is secured when this mighty change is wrought. The saving grace of God is too deep and powerful to be like the morning cloud or the early dew. It has a root and persistence which may be overcome, but which is altogether unlike the vapors of a shallow and imperfect conviction. Delusion may be mixed up with real and sincere religious feeling, and these may bear men along with the tide of temporary interest, but their speedy declension is not from converting grace. There may be seriousness and concern enough to keep them out of sin and in the church for a while, but the root of conversion is wanting. The sinner advanced in years, with habits of vice fastened upon him, is beyond reformation until the Spirit of God transforms his nature. Even then, there is danger that old habits may revive, but his security is a hundred fold greater than any well-meant expedients of moral obligation can make it. In our vigilant warnings against the danger of backslidings and apostacy, we should be careful not to undervalue the genuine experience of the new birth. Better far to frankly admit that the majority of our children, who stray away from the church, were practically strangers to vital godliness, and that multitudes who leave our revival services, to be heard of no more in active religious life, never felt the resurrection power.

We take it for granted that the most of these who are converted make Christians of some kind. They will retain their places in the church and become more or less spiritual and useful believers. The question of their perseverance is not so immediate as the manner of their development in the kingdom of heaven. The type of Christian that the young convert is to be is the subject of solicitude. Will he strike out boldly and bravely for Christ, take his stand as a worker and helper, and take up his cross at the family altar and in the prayer meeting? or will he be a backward and inert attachment to the society, and scarcely known and felt in the living enterprises of the church? The manner of the new-born child may be that of a deep and evergrowing faith, of a love that burns warmer and brighter, and of a zeal that becomes more consuming with the length of years. He may push on to the heights of the spiritual life, "perfecting holiness in the fear of God," and his path may be like the shining light opening up to the perfect day. On the other hand, the soul may move in a lower plane, ever learning and never coming to the complete knowledge of the things of God. It may remain in the babyhood of grace, incapable of assimilating the strong meat of gospel truth, and a stranger to the power and joy of spiritual manhood. What sort of Christians, what kind of church members are our young converts making?

As in everything else, it is vastly important to begin right in this race for glory. The first steps after conversion are apt to determine the kind of Christians we are to be, whether we are to be strong or weak, eminent in usefulness, or drones in the hive; whether we are to "mount up with wings as eagles," or to dwell in the dust. Christ's yoke cannot be too soon put on in the performance of every duty, nor can his burden, though light in comparison with sin, be shirked without infinite damage. It is better to put on the harness in the beginning. To hesitate, to hold back or to flinch, is to miss our opportunity, and to cast a deep shadow over the future. The spirit of fear is to bondage, and utterly opposed to the spirit of adoption. The cry of Abba: Father is a song of power, of love, and of a sound mind. Courage is the first grace after faith in the jeweled chain of progress. What sort of a member will he make who has but lately tasted of the good Word of God and the power of the world to come, and who is now uttering his vows in the presence of the congregation? Everything depends on how he starts, the way in which he takes hold, the firmness and completeness of his consecration. If he cannot now pluck out the right eye, he can never do it. If he now falls back "with the stuff," he will probably stay there, and never be found with the standards of battle at the front. Cowardice, inaction and selfishness become vicious habits soon, and weigh down and paralyze the soul. Failing at the first step, the young believer goes limping and impotent all his days. What he did not begin to do at first, he finds himself more and more unable to perform ever after.

Conversion is an end and also a beginning. It is here that the long sought peace is found, that rest to the soul is felt. It is the end of condemnation and of a course of sin and unbelief. But it is the beginning of a new life, the stripping for a race, and the bugle blast which signals our first onset in the holy war. Salvation, planted within, is to be worked out with fear and trembling. The Spirit's work in us is to be developed more and more, and our work for Christ is to call into play our self-denial, our patience, humility, and everything that we have. After conversion comes the test of our love, and the fiery trials which separate the dross from the gold. As grace reigns, fresh disclosures of depravity to be overcome are made, and in the highest raptures of a sanctified spirit we realize that Christ's blood alone cleanses from all sin.

CALIFORNIA.

The Golden Gate, the Grapes and the Giant Red Woods of California.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 2, 1871.

If I remember correctly, the steamer was just entering the Golden Gate as I closed my last letter. A few days since, I met a very intelligent, well-traveled man of means, and amateur tract distributor, who thought this Gate one of the great sights of his life, though he had just returned from the far-famed Yosemite Valley, where a single rock rises sheer four thousand feet, and was full of its inspiration. These cliffs of sharp, bare rock, rising to the height of several hundred feet on each side of a narrow entrance to a bay, sixty miles long and fifteen wide, is indeed a most noticeable feature of this rugged sea coast. That it should long since have been called "Golden" was singular, for through it hundreds of millions of gold have since passed. It is not unlikely that the knowledge of the existence of this precious metal, in small quantities, has been long known to the Indians and the Jesuits, and may have given rise to the name. The bays and inlets of this vast harbor are studded with beautiful retreats, and the steamers ply back and forth to the towns which have grown up on its shores. Its waters are deep and placid. In looking at them, one catches an idea of the clear coral-sheltered lakes that edge the islands of the Pacific. Large flocks of seagulls and heavy-looking pelicans congregate in its shallower parts, or fly about flapping a few times, and then sailing very near the mirror surface, as if admiring themselves in the flood. Quite a number of ships and steamers ride at anchor in front of the city, and its wharves are packed with all kinds of sea-going craft, loading for every part of the world.

Of San Francisco, I shall remark nothing at present, only that as I first saw it in the early evening. I felt as a boy who, for the first time, is half way through the Arabian Nights. Such a bewildering glare of lights, and grand showy windows, filled with all imaginable things, burst upon me. The shops of Paris, New York and Philadelphia were equaled, may be surpassed, by the magic scene of gorgeously displayed and captivating shapes of wealth. It would be an admirable test of obedience to be able to walk about among these places and covet nothing. But the eye is not filled with seeing, nor the heart with possessing.

After a day in the city, I passed on to a camp meeting near Stockton. This is a great climate for outdoor meetings. Not fearing rain, camps can be improvised at small cost. They do not entertain after the old Alabama style of camping, but one boarding place accommodates the bulk of visitors at moderate prices. We had good audiences and some converts. It gave me a fine opportunity to become acquainted with our preachers and people of that region. I found them true-hearted Southern Methodists. Many from Missouri, some from Tennessee and the States further South greeted me most affectionately.

From this point, by the special kindness of the brethren, I found myself on the way to the Calaveras Big-Trees. The grade was up all the way. First, a series of hills and valleys; then an ascent and a second range of hills and valleys, both sparsely inhabited—producing large flocks of tame turkeys, hay, barley and grapes. The turkeys eat grass seed and grasshoppers, and constitute the main reliance of some families. Of the grapes, I may say, speaking within bounds, that I bought ten cents worth, ate enormously of them for two days, and gave the balance to a clever little boy. I handed the grape-grower twenty-five cents; as he could not make change, he offered to give me more grapes, but I declined, my buggy being sufficiently loaded already. And such grapes! sweet, juicy, without any the least lingering trace of either acid or tannin. In all these statements, if there be any doubt created in the mind of the reader, I refer him to one-half of the whole college of our General Superintendents. Of all the luscious kinds of summer grapes, the White Muscat, Tokay, Hamburg, and a dozen other varieties, the Native or Mission Grape is, to my taste, the most refreshing. If this record is not made now, from all accounts it will be lost sight of in the still richer vineyards of the Los Angeles country.

After a drive of sixty miles, we found ourselves far up in the Calaveras ranges. Within a quarter of a mile of the Redwoods there is no symptom that indicates that you are near the largest growth of trees in the world. All at once they burst upon you. The road to the hotel lays right between two of them. Expecting to see a height that towered far above and beyond all trees around, I was somewhat disappointed at first. The firs and pines just about these notable cedars are also very high and large of their kind. The first surprise that I had was upon learning that there were more than three or four of these giants; that within a hundred acres there were some fifty or more. I saw at least thirty that afternoon. Several of them are lying on the ground. These thrown down by storm, and one cut down—the finest one, from all accounts, in this group. Cut down for Boston! That is, the bark was taken off in sections for the benefit of that well-known center of universal brotherhood. This finest tree of the world is, as its trunk lies on the ground, clear of bark, twenty-two feet in diameter; the bark would bring it up to twenty-four feet, and this diameter is taken at the height of twelve feet from the ground. If you measure the spurs of the body, the diameter would exceed thirty feet. The wood is red, like the heart of our cedar, aromatic and very solid. It is durable as cedar, in the ground or out of it, splits easily and straight. It was cut off by boring, and after it was cut still stood. It then required ten men for fourteen days (they say) to throw it over by wedging it off its base. The stump of this tree is housed, and the house is an octagon of thirty feet—very good size for a country church. If it had been Sabbath, I should have preached in it from: "The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed * * * but when it is grown it is the greatest among herbs." The seed of this species of tree is not larger than a millet seed. At two hundred feet from its base it is over ten feet in diameter, and it then ascends higher one hundred and fifty feet. What a just comparison between the vital force of such vegetable life and that of the Spirit! its beginning so slight and inconsiderable, its end so immense and glorious. Surely, we may find the surpassing beauty of the Saviour's parable in these monarchs of the forest. The amazing strength of a growth that lifts a circumference of thirty feet of solid wood two hundred feet in the air without a limb; a living shaft, tapering from a base of sixty feet to thirty feet, at one-half its whole height, impresses the mind with wonder and awe. To stand at the base of these trees and look up, fills me with the thought of Him who made them. The bark is the color of freshly cut oak bark—a lively reddish brown. It is huge in its folds and remarkably regular. In some instances, it is fluted up and down, which gives the tree a grand columnar expression. As there were several gentlemen along who had tape in hand, I speak accurately of the measurement of these trees—the "Mother of the Forest" seventy-eight feet round; "Father of the Forest"—down, supposed to have been over four hundred feet high; one called "Sheridan," three hundred and thirty-seven feet high—by actual measure. They have given names to many of these trees, that will eke out a short-lived fame for some of the heroes of the last war. I was especially delighted at a group of three giant Red-woods, that stand in the same place and sprang from the same root. They are each full eighteen feet in diameter, straight as an arrow, and run up side by side for three hundred feet, only two or three feet apart.

Another group of these sublime sons of the forest has been discovered within two years, called the South Grove, some seven miles from this one. I saw a party that had just returned from a trip there—tape in hand. They declared that the trees we were looking at were "nothing"—that is, they were pretty fair trees to one who had seen no larger; but nothing to the South Grove. Here I stop; it will not do to tell all; sometimes the half is more than the whole. I say, therefore, nothing further, only that they found a man living inside of a tree, in a good large room (fifteen feet square), surrounded with his dogs, gun and mule; his name being, of course, Smith. Smith had just killed a cougar—which then lay in the cabin—measuring seven and a half feet.

THE CONFLAGRATION.

As the details of the Chicago fire come in, we find that the extent has not been overstated. Whether the loss of property be one or two hundred millions, it is inconceivably great. The loss of life reaches several hundred, and the seriously injured may count up as many as one or two thousand. The amount of suffering from hunger, cold and sickness is beyond calculation, and the mental distress occasioned by the suspense, and the sudden fall from affluence to utter poverty cannot be measured. While this terrible calamity has brought out some of the most detestable exhibitions of depravity and crime, it has also revealed some of the highest and most beautiful traits of Christian civilization.

The benevolence of Europe and America has been aroused, and is moving with beneficent alacrity to relieve the stricken city. Munificent gifts and generous donations from individuals and corporations are flowing in with generous profusion. Money, clothing and food are going thither lavishly in quantities to meet the present wants of the destitute. Such an exhibition of sympathy and substantial beneficence gives us a better opinion of our race, and strengthens our hopes of the future of humanity. The sudden misfortunes of the people disclose an energy and enterprise which already begins to rise above the depressing shock of calamity. There is cheerfulness and hope amid the ashes and wreck, and an unconquerable determination to build up and regain what has been lost.

The moral of the catastrophe scarcely needs to be indicated. Where colossal fortunes vanish in an hour, and the successful accumulations of a lifetime are lost in a puff of flame and smoke, nothing more is required to demonstrate the vanity of trusting "in uncertain riches." The worshipers of Mammon, who glory in material progress alone, and who boast of the triumphs of their worldly enterprise, can now pause to think. The wild and almost crazy pursuit of money, and the vain glory and boasting in the splendid achievements of business tact and sagacity, are at least reduced to sober reflection for the moment. How much pride, avarice and worldliness have been rebuked by this dispensation of Providence is not for us to compute. The lesson, however, is of universal application. All of our great cities, and all the world, need the admonition. There is no absolute security for earthly pelf, and such visitations are calculated to break up the illusions of our spiritual idolatry. The proudest and most durable monuments of art and wealth crumble to dust; and the sun that goes down upon a populous metropolis, gilding its palaces, mansions and spires with its parting splend rises upon a waste of blackened w and smoking ruins.

CATHERINE SHAW.

This venerable woman died New Orleans on the twenty-ninth September, in her one hundred eighth year. Her father, Thom Yarrow, was an Englishman, w married and lived for some time South Carolina. Her parents mov to Natchez, and while at Pensaco on their way West, Catherine w born, in 1763. They reached Natch country some time in 1764, where grew up to womanhood. When abo sixteen years of age, she was marri to Valentine T. Dalton, a lieutenan artillery in the Revolutionary arm Some years later, probably soon af the close of the war, she moved w her husband to Baton Rouge, Lo isiana, and lived on a plantati near that place for a considera time. Lieutenant Dalton died abo the beginning of the present ce tury. Her second marriage was Andrew Shaw, and was solemniz by a Catholic priest, in the vicinity Baton Rouge. About one year aft their marriage, Mr. Shaw left hom for some distant destination on bus ness, and never returned. It w supposed that he died shortly afte his departure, but whether by di ease or violence was never known From that time, say about 1806, un til her death, Sister Shaw remaine a widow. Three children were th issue of her marriage with Lieuten ant Dalton. Her first born, a daugh ter, died in infancy; her second, son, is now living in Mexico, age ninety-one; her third and last child Julia Dalton, always living with her after years of suffering, died in 186 in her sixty-ninth year. Some year after the loss of her second husband she removed to Vicksburg, Mississip pi; and subsequently, as she thought in 1830, came to New Orleans. This is the best outline we have been able to make of her personal history, the most of which we have taken from her own statements, made to us sev eral years ago. There are, probably, errors in the dates, but the time and place of her birth and the order of the events are, no doubt, correct.

Her religious experience was one of remarkable interest. According to her own statement, she was converted in 1812. She was then still living near Baton Rouge, her second husband had but recently been taken from her, and she was in great trouble and perplexity of mind. At that time she had never seen a Protestant minister, and had never conversed with any one on the subject of religion. She happened upon a copy of Henry's Sermons, and by reading these sermons, she was led to conviction of sin and secret prayer. Whether these were the sermons of Philip Henry, or of his son Matthew, the commentator, is uncertain. Where the book came from, and how it got there, does not appear; but it was providentially sent to awaken and point this anxious soul to the Lamb of God. It would seem that at this time she did not even have a copy of the Bible. In her anguish of spirit she consulted a Catholic priest, who could give her no satisfaction, and advised her to study the Catechism. After weeks and months of deep concern, she found the blessing while praying alone in the woods. At first she knew not what to make of it. She was suddenly filled with peace, her burden was gone, and she returned to the house with a light and joyous heart. Months after this strange and rapturous experience, and still wondering and rejoicing, she fell in with some pious Baptists, to whom she related the circumstances of the inexplicable change, and who told her that it was conversion. She gladly followed their instruction, was baptized and became a member of the Baptist church. When she came to New Orleans, there was no Baptist organization in the city, and she joined the Methodist Church. Here she found congenial Christian fellowship, and became deeply attached to the doctrines and usages of Methodism. At the time there was but one Methodist society in New Orleans, worshiping in a little frame building on Gravier street, and having but forty-six white members and one hundred and thirty-five colored. William M. Curtiss was preacher in charge. The Mississippi Conference then embraced Mississippi, Louisiana and Alabama, and the total white membership of all was less than twelve thousand. In 1834, another appointment was formed far up town, called the "Lafayette Mission." Subsequently it was called Upper Faubourg and Lafayette. It was probably located on St. Mary street, of the present Fourth District, and was the beginning and germ of the large and prosperous church on Felicity street. R. D. Smith was the first pastor, appointed in 1834. Alexander Talley was the next preacher, and, in subsequent years, Joseph Travis, S. W. Speer, L. Campbell, W. H. Watkins and others.

For nearly forty years she was a member of this charge, and was probably about the last of the band whose names were on the original record. For twenty years, she has worshiped regularly at the Felicity Street Church, and has rarely missed Sunday morning service until within the past year. Her hearing having failed to a considerable extent, she had for twelve months past been in the habit of attending only on the first Sabbath of the month, when the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. The first Sunday of August last she was in her accustomed place, and for the last time received the bread and wine from her pastor's hands. She always sat in the same pew, came early and usually left immediately after the last prayer, rarely waiting for the doxology or benediction. This she did to avoid the press, and seemingly that she might have only the company of her own thoughts. Her pastors will remember her as the best of hearers, sitting before them with devout attention, clad in the old time costume, her face a marvel of wrinkles and of intelligence, and her eyes glistening and undimmed by years. She always brought a large hymn book under her arm, and used it without the aid of glasses, keeping it in hand throughout the service, and carrying it away with her as some priceless treasure. Slightly formed and shrunken by age, her step was quick and even elastic, and her last walk to church was as brisk as it had been a generation ago.

Sister Shaw was a joyous Christian, always happy in God, and cheerful. Her greatest trial was in waiting to be called home. In sickness, her only anxiety was that it might not be her last, and we have seen her weep at the thought of getting well. In her last sickness this seemed to be a joy and comfort that the Saviour had come for her. She read her Bible, hymn book and the ADVOCATE constantly, and was in the habit of reading devotional and religious works with care and deep thought. In her sickness she enjoyed uninterrupted communion with God, and the thread of consciousness and assurance remained unbroken as she peacefully glided into the heavenly glory. She lived in a humble abode of her own, and received a small pension from the government. Her wants were few, and she managed to give away nearly all of her income. John Wesley was not more frugal, nor more unselfishly liberal. One of the very poorest, we know but few who gave so much for the church and benevolent purposes, and her last gift, but a short time before she died, was a very substantial donation to the superannuated preachers of the Louisiana Conference. What our great Methodist founder determined on for himself, she literally carried out, giving all away, except so much as might be necessary to pay the expense of her burial. Her little cottage on Annunciation street, where she lived so long, and where her pilgrimage ended, was a resort of great interest to her many devout friends. It was to them a place of peculiar sanctity, and nearer heaven than any other spot. There she was always glad to have a prayer meeting, and to see her pastors and religious acquaintances. They usually found her busy as a bee with her sewing, her old Bible close at hand, and with a heart singing with joy. Expressions of religious rapture and of gratitude were always flowing from her lips. It was a privilege and a blessing to spend a half hour in her company, and a precious means of grace. She maintained to the last a lively interest in the church, and nothing gave her such delight as to hear of the conversion of souls. A model of industry and economy, her life was one of habitual prayer and praise. For many, many years she had been waiting for her change, and when it came, her passage home was as sweet and beautiful as the dawn of a spring morning. The earthly house was shivered and broken by more than a century of conflicts and toils, but the spirit was still fresh with the dews of grace when it parted from the wasted tabernacle of clay.

BUCK'S BRILLIANT STOVE.—This excellent cooking stove is on sale at the establishment of the agent, H. Haller, Esq., No. 49 Camp street, whose advertisement appears on our fifth page. Those who wish to purchase will do well to investigate the merits of the Brilliant before buying. Mr. Haller is also agent for the celebrated Ringen Washer.

SUTTON & POWELL.—The many friends of the well-known firm of Sutton & Powell will be pleased to learn that these gentlemen continue the commission business at No. 186 Common street. See their card in another column.

CUT THIS OUT AND KEEP IT.—Franklin Dyre, a highly respectable and intelligent farmer of Galena, Kent county, Maryland, gives the following as a sure cure for the bite of a mad dog. As will be seen, he has tested it with the most gratifying results:

"Elecampane is a plant well known to our gardens. Immediately after being bitten, take one and a half ounce of the root of the plant—the green root is perhaps preferable, but the dried will answer, and may be found in our drug store, and was used by me—slice or bruise, put it into a pint of fresh milk, boil down to a half pint, strain, and when cold, drink it, fasting at least six hours afterward. The next morning, fasting, repeat the dose prepared as the last, and this will be sufficient. It is recommended that after each dose, nothing be eaten for six hours.

"I have a son who was bitten by a mad dog eighteen years ago, and four other children in the neighborhood were also bitten; they took the above dose, and are alive and well well to this day. And I have known a number of others, who were bitten, and applied the same remedy. It is supposed the root contains a principle which, being taken up by the blood in its circulation, counteracts or neutralizes the deadly effects of the virus of hydrophobia.

"I feel so much confidence in this simple remedy, that I am willing you should give my name in connection with this statement."

Obituaries.

CLARA EUGENIA, only daughter of G. M. and M. E. Gilmore, was born near Shubuta, Mississippi, November 13, 1869, and died August 28, 1871, in Jasper county, Mississippi.

She was a lovely child, sweet and gentle in her disposition, affectionate to all. She met every one with a smile, and was loved by every one who saw her. Clara was the sunshine of the household; her papa's pride, her mamma's treasure. G. M. GILMORE.

Sister NEESOME, of Summit, Mississippi, died at her residence, August 7, 1871.

Born in Amite county, August 4, 1808, she gave her heart to the Lord in childhood, and by the grace of God, kept it upon the altar of sacrifice until the Master said: "It is enough, come up higher." Sister Neesome's walk with God was not "o'er flowery beds of ease." It was her lot to honor God by suffering His will, going to heaven through great tribulations. Her last illness, of four months' confinement, she received as the sure dissolving of "this earthly tabernacle." When nearing the portals of eternity, a few moments before death, her pastor, Rev. George Bright, called to administer the consolations of our blessed religion. Finding her in a sinking condition, he remarked: "I had better not read and have prayer." She heard the remark, and instantly requested the privilege of joining once more in the worship of God on earth. About fifteen minutes before her death she opened her eyes, then closed them again, saying: "I have seen enough of this world. I now want to see my Lord, up yonder." I visited her a few weeks before death, and, after a free and searching conversation upon the future, felt satisfied that "all was well." "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

ROBERT B. DOWNER.

Departed this life, at the residence of his father, in Rankin county, Mississippi, August 31, 1871, WILLIAM FRENCH, son of Dr. Richard and Ellen French, aged twenty-eight years one month and a day.

The subject of this sketch joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1861, while Rev. William Price was in charge, of which he lived an exemplary member until the day of his death. He nobly responded to the call of his country, volunteered in the cause of the war, where he contracted chronic diarrhœa, which caused him to linger under its withering effects until it terminated his days. He fell asleep but a short time before the protracted meeting was commenced at the church of which he was a member, and of which he had hoped to be able to take part; but God knows what is best. He does all things well. His pastor visited him a short time before his death, talked and prayed with him, which he seemed to appreciate very much. He did not seem to murmur or complain, but was submissive to the will of his Heavenly Father. His faith in God was sufficient, bearing him to Pisgah's top to see the promised land beyond the Jordan of death. He bore his afflictions as becometh an heir of heaven, died as he had lived, sleeps in the tomb with a sainted mother, leaves an aged father and two brothers and two sisters he had to mourn his loss. Weep not, as those who have no hope. He has fallen as a faithful soldier at his post, not to be disturbed till the trump of God shall arouse him on the resurrection morn, to come forth and receive his crown and hear the welcome applause: "Come in, ye blessed of my Father, as thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." G. M. L.

RICHARD TAYLOR CLOUGHTON, son of J. L. and S. E. Cloughton, was born in Dallas county, Alabama, December 3, 1854, and died September 6, 1871. His father, James L. Cloughton, is well known to the readers of the ADVOCATE, and especially to the members of the old Alabama Conference, with whom many of them have often found a resting-place, for his house has ever been a home for Methodist ministers. He has been fighting the good fight of faith for more than forty years, and is still at his post. How true it is that "those whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth." This clause of Holy Writ has been verified in this good man's life.

Richard, the subject of this notice, was one of the most promising young men in the community in which he lived. He possessed the elements of a useful man; he appeared to have more firmness than is usually allotted to the young; he could say, with the English nobleman's daughter:

"No room for mirth or trifling here,
For worldly hope or worldly fear,
If life so soon is gone."

He was kind and accommodating to all. It was to him that his parents hoped to look in their declining years. But alas! how vain are all human expectations. "God moves in a mysterious way, His wonders to perform." Richard was, in infancy, given to God in holy baptism by his parents, who believe in "training up a child in the way he should go, so that when old he might not depart from it." He could not say, as many have said: "I never heard my father pray;" for it has been his father's custom, ever since he has had a family, to have family prayer, morning and night. I do not know that Richard ever made a public profession of religion, yet he seemed to enjoy some of the comforts that religion alone can give. Some two years ago, he was formally received into the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and was a consistent member to the day of his death. I spoke to him, a few weeks before he was taken sick, in reference to his religious duties, and he told me that he had regular hours for prayer, and that he was trying to get to heaven. He was sick but a very short time, and said but little, if anything, about dying during his illness; yet, judging from the life he lived, we would say to the afflicted ones that they weep not as those that have no hope. J. W. V.

Mr. LITTLETON COLE was born in Clark county, Georgia, September 23, 1810, and died in Northport, Alabama, August 7, 1871. He was converted at a camp meeting at the Hargrove Camp Ground, in Pickens county, Alabama, July 22, 1826, and joined the Methodist church, in which he lived an exemplary and useful member until his death. He was a good citizen, a kind husband, an affectionate father, and a devoted Christian. In all the relations of life he was faithful. For thirty-five years he acted as class leader and circuit steward, and well did he fill these offices in the church. He possessed a strong, natural intellect, untiring energy, and solid piety. He had almost constant communion with God, and, at all times and in all places, he demonstrated the character of the true Christian. He was chaste in conversation, prudent and upright in deportment, and liberal to the extent of his ability.

A great man in Israel has fallen, for in point of piety and usefulness, Bro. Cole was truly a great man. In 1868 and 1870 he was elected by the District Conference a delegate to the Annual Conference, and faithfully did he perform his duties as such. Last June he was again elected a delegate to the Annual Conference by the Tuscaloosa District Conference. He was devoted to the interests of the church, and was always at the post of duty, and when death came he was ready. He lingered a few weeks, and in his sickness as in his health he had sweet communion with God. He gave every assurance of his preparation for death and his resignation to the will of God. He complained not a word during his sickness. He requested his family not to weep, for if he died all was right. He spoke calmly of death, and assured his friends that he was "going home." Bro. Cole lived happy and was useful, and died triumphant. He met death with a smile, and now he rests from his labors, and his works do follow him.

EVAN NICHOLSON.

The following tribute of respect was passed by the Fourth Quarterly Conference of the Northport circuit, North Alabama Conference, September 9, 1871:

WHEREAS, Almighty God, in His infinite wisdom, has taken from us Bro. LITTLETON COLE, who was, for about forty-five years, a member of our church, and for thirty-five years a member of the Quarterly Conference of this circuit, therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Cole the community has lost one of its best citizens, the church a faithful and useful member, and this Quarterly Conference one of its most efficient members.

Resolved, That from a deep sense of our loss, and in view of our love and esteem for our deceased brother, that the presiding elder—Rev. J. D. Anthony be and he is unanimously requested by the members of this conference to preach a memorial sermon of Bro. Cole on to-morrow (Sabbath) at eleven o'clock.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the family of our deceased brother in their irreparable loss, and that a copy of these resolutions be furnished them.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the journals of this Quarterly Conference, and that a copy of them be sent to the New Orleans CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Nashville Christian Advocate for publication.

The Celebrated Argyle Bitters.—TRUTHS FOR THE PEOPLE.—These Bitters, which are now a household word in every family, are deservedly ranked among the most successful and efficacious remedies now used.

Gently stimulant, delightfully refreshing and invigorating, they promote the digestive functions, regulate the liver and spleen, prevents hypophy or inaction; they increase the vital functions and maintain the chylopoietic viscera in their normal condition of health, when once established.

No fabulous properties or magical effects are claimed for them; they are simply a pure unadulterated Tonic, Alterative and Stimulant.

One essential element of their success is the effect they possess of lessening the inordinate thirst for strong drinks, so often engendered by the use of vile nostrums and vicious compounds, arrogantly and ignorantly called "Bitters" to cover their deadly effects.

Ask your neighbor about the Argyle Bitters, and in nine cases out of ten, he will tell you "to do as he has done for years, always to keep them on hand for family use, for they are good to take."

These Bitters can bear the addition of one-third water, and then be stronger in all their essential properties than any other Bitter in the market; and to ladies and children, we recommend their dilution with water, when taken. oct12 1m

The Child's Corner.

"WILLIE WHEAT"

BY THE REV. E. W. PEET.

On a bright April morn,
When the winter was gone,
And the birds their cares were singing,
Their song of all ages,
Were free from their cages,
And their laugh on the air was ringing.

With merry merry joy,
A happy little boy,
As he listened to the songs so sweet,
Caught the sound of his name,
Through the air, as it came,
And a little bird said: "Willie Wheat!"

With a bright, sunny face,
And a quick dancing pace,
To his home, his kind mother to greet,
With a strange, strange story—
To him it was glory—
That a bird should have called Willie Wheat.

"Willie Wheat, Willie Wheat,"
"O the song, 'tis so sweet"
Said the child, in his innocent glee,
In ecstasy of joy.
Then asked the smiling boy,
"My little bird, mamma, may it be?"

"O yes, my darling child,"
In sweet accents so mild,
Did his mother the present convey;
The reply to his heart,
Did new pleasure impart,
As he bounded away to his play.

"Willie Wheat, Willie Wheat,"
Still the child did repeat.
As the bird sang in notes wild and free;
"Willie Wheat, Willie Wheat,"
Were accents very sweet,
To the child in his innocent glee.

When its notes can be heard,
"O, that's my little bird!"
Says the child, with its heart full of glee.
"He is calling my name;
O 'tis the very same,
That mamma, dear mamma, gave to me."

How innocent the joy,
Of the sweet little boy,
As his heart leaps with silent delight!
May his soul never know
Sad adversity's blow,
Mid the shades of affection's dark night.

We may from this story—
'Tis no allegory—
Learn a lesson in tones very mild.
O what a tiny thing,
Much happiness can bring
To the heart of a dear little child!

"THEY THAT SEEK ME EARLY SHALL FIND ME."

Little readers, God is calling to you every day through His word, through kind teachers and ministers of the gospel to come to Him. Every sin you commit takes you further from God and heaven; and if you continue on in your sins you will never reach that happy home which He has prepared for those that love Him. When you hear the Saviour saying to you in the tenderest accents of His love: "Child, give me thy heart," will you not listen to His voice? If you come to Jesus now, He will take you in His arms and bless you, and make you happy while you live, and when you die will take you to dwell with Him forever.

"Then lift your little hands in prayer;
The Saviour bids you come;
Safe in His bosom He will bear
The lambs to His bright home.

"Then lay your little hand in His;
He'll lead you gently on,
Through trials of a world like this,
To scenes of bliss beyond."

Old School Presbyterian.

KEEP ON TRYING.

'Tis no use of bewailing
Our want of success;
And all unavailing
Are tears of distress.
The soul that is cheerful
Will struggle through all;
But the heart that is fearful
Is fated to fall.

Over the Ocean.

"Come Toddles, come dearie, its time to be up."

"Yes-em," came sleepily from the pillow, and the next thing the little drowsy head knew, it was nodding on mother's shoulder, while dear nurse Judy had seized one foot and was rapidly drawing on a stocking.

It was broad daylight now, and Teddy had been dressed and out on the stoop waiting for the carriage for almost an hour, while the late beams of a warm November sun had all that time been trying to get under the closed eye-lids of his sister. I don't think this sleepiness was much to be wondered at, even if there were two or three trunks and big boxes in the hall, packed and waiting the coming of the great rumbling express, that was to carry them down to the ship that lay swinging at her moorings, trying to act as if she were not conscious that in a little while she would spread her broad, white sails and glide off into the great blue ocean that lay beyond the bay.

The night before this great day in the little people's lives, Toddles had been overlooked in the coming in and going out of all the company who had come to say "good-bye." She had always gone to bed very early in the evening, and, as a consequence, would generally rouse the whole household long before they had taken their last nap—so you see this late sleeping had some cause. If you had asked Toddles where she was going, she would have said: "To see my fodder, in Demelyaller," and I don't believe you would have been a bit the wiser for the answer. So I'll tell you.

Her mother, Judy, her brother Teddy and herself, together with the great strapped trunks and boxes, were all going on board of the big ship, and out on the broad Atlantic, where they were to spend many days and nights, and finally drop anchor off the coast of South America, where the father of these little people lived. Wasn't the day on which they should start on such a trip worthy of being called great in the lives of these children, to whom a day's sail up the Hudson was enough to set them talking like magpies for a week?

When they reached the ship and stepped on board, there was so much to look at that Teddy and Toddles actually sat down on a bench for five minutes, without speaking or moving. There were men running up and down the decks with bundles, and barrels, and boxes, and ropes; men standing still and shouting; and men, men, men all over. They soon found out that the ship had three tall masts, a boom, a cabin and a wheel. Some things puzzled Toddles, and if she had seen any one of the many men standing still long enough to answer her questions, she would certainly have asked him what those words meant, and where they were on the ship, and what was "the good o' 'em." She found out, though, before night, from one of the sailors named "Jack," with whom she formed a very close friendship, which lasted all through the voyage. They were all very seasick the first week, except Teddy; and as the two children had had the mumps, and measles, and scarlet fever together, Toddles couldn't understand why she was so sick, while Teddy was having such a good time. Finally, Judy felt well enough to sit up, and take off the clothing in which Toddles had lain down when the sickness first came on, and dress her all in fresh, clean clothes, and then they both crept up on deck. What a grand sight they saw! Nothing but the great blue ocean, rolling and tossing all aronnd them.

Toddles said, after she had looked for a long time:

"Who'd think, Judy, that these beautiful little waves would make a body feel so sick."

Judy laughed, and said she guessed they would think so now, after the last week's experience. Then seating the little girl on a great coil of rope in one corner of the deck, she went down to see if she could help Toddle's mother up into the cool air.

Looking over the side of the ship, she could see the water bubble and sparkle, and they cut through it with a rush and a dash. How fast they went! The wind was blowing and the sun was shining, and Toddles came to the conclusion, now that the sickness was over, that it "paid to be out on the ocean."

Just then a man came along, holding a long line, with a piece of lead attached to it. Toddles looked up, and saw that it was Jack. He nodded pleasantly to her, and she sprang up to go to him; but she could hardly walk straight, because the ship rocked so. Jack took hold of her, and helped her to where she could hold on to a rope-ladder that came down from the mast to the side of the deck. Then they had a pleasant chat, and he told her that he was going to find out how fast the ship was going, by throwing that line overboard. He explained it all to her, but she didn't quite understand just how he did it, though she watched him very closely. I think she would have asked him many more questions, if just then her mother had not come up on deck, looking so pale and sick that Toddles forgot everything else but her comfort. The fresh cool air, however, soon worked a great change, and Teddy coming up, took Toddles off to the kitchen to introduce her to his friend, the cook. They didn't call it the kitchen, but the "galley," and it wasn't a bit like the kitchens in New York; it was so small, and everything had to be fastened down to keep it in place.

"Come, Toddles, and see what the captain's doing, said Teddy, after they had examined everything in the vicinity of the galley; and staggering laughingly from side to side of the rolling ship, they reached the place where the captain stood, holding an odd-looking instrument to his eye, and looking straight up at the sun.

"Please tell me what you're doing, captain?

"Looking at the sun."

"What for?" again asked Toddles.

"Because, when I see the position of the sun, I can tell our relative locality," answered the captain, with an amused twinkle in his eye.

"O," said Toddles, with a puzzled look. She saw he was "poking fun" at her, and she made up her mind that he wasn't half as nice as Jack, and that she'd put that "what for" question away with some others that she knew would be answered when she reached "Demelyaller."

Those were the longest three weeks and a half that the little people ever lived, because every day and hour was so full of something new and interesting. Sitting down to dinner, on chairs that were fastened to the floor, and eating from a table where all the dishes were secured in what Toddles called "little pig pens of wood," was so odd, that if the strong salt breeze had not given her such an appetite, I'm afraid she might often have suffered her food to go untasted. They saw numbers of flying-fish, that used to dart out of the water and look "almost like a bird." Once one of them flew right up into Toddles' very face, and frightened her so that she reeled off her stool on deck before she could tell what was the matter.

There was a young man on board who was very funny, and who took a great deal of notice of the children; and one day he threw a line over the back of the ship, that they called the "stern," and Toddles helped him pull up a great fish, larger than any she had ever seen before, called a "dolphin." She used to "help" the sailors, too, when they pulled the ropes; and she learned to chime in with her little voice in the "Yo, heave a ho," and the other songs that they sung. They had a terrible storm one day, and when night came on Toddles did wish she was home, or somewhere on the dry, firm land. They had been shut up all day in the cabin, and the wind did shriek and moan so, and neither the captain nor the mate had been down stairs since breakfast, and it was so dark that it was just dismal. There was such a noise and shouting up stairs that Toddles made up her mind that she would just slip up and take a look, before her mother forbade her going. She eased her conscience by saying to herself that it "wasn't disobedience, because her mother didn't say anything." But if it "wasn't," she watched her chance when her mother and Judy were busy, and quietly opened the door and stole out. She found an old oil-skin cape on the steps, and by dint of much tugging and pulling she managed to get under it, and then opening the door at the head of the step she held the cloak together with her teeth, kept a tight grasp on each side of the doorway, and soon forgot "mother and "disobedience" in the awful sight. It didn't seem possible that it was the same ocean and sky that she had looked on yesterday. The ship tossed and the waters washed over the decks, and Toddles' feet were soon wet, but she never noticed that. There was such a roar and surge that the captain and the mate called out to each other, and to the men, through great, wide-mouthed trumpets. I don't know how long she would have stood and looked, if she had not felt Judy's hand on her ankle, pulling her rather suddenly down, oil-skin cape and all, and she entered the cabin in such thick, damp darkness, when the cape went over her head, that I verily believe she thought they were going down to the bottom of the ocean. But though they passed a terrible night, the sun came out so cheerily that the troubled waters and the black sky acted as if they were ashamed of their passion and tempest, and gradually quieted down. I haven't time to tell you how the rest of the days passed, but they were all like some strange new chapter in a delightful book. I think Toddles was almost sorry when one morning she woke up and found that the ship had stopped, and that they were really anchored before "Demelyaller." But when Judy wrapped her up in a big shawl, never stopping to dress her, for fear she'd lose some of the beautiful sight that they'd all been up looking at, and carried her on deck, and she saw the odd people and trees on the shore, and the beautiful sun rising, she said, turning to her mother and Teddy: "I'm dreadful glad we've come, it looks like a first rate place. I'm going to dress and go ashore. "Come on, Judy, and help me," and disappeared down the cabin steps.—Evangelist.

The Frozen Eagle.

An eagle once flew over some ice valleys and espied a dead body lying on the ice. He came swooping down upon it, and was so long feasting upon the carcass, that when he would fly away again, he found his wings frozen to the ice.

So when we become very much engaged with the things of this world, we find that our thoughts cannot fly heavenward. We are like the eagle chained to the ice.

When we spend all the week thinking and planning over a beautiful dress or hat we are to wear to church or Sabbath school on God's day, we shall find we have little heart for the precious hymns and Bible lessons we shall hear. The Sabbath will be a wasted day to us. We must not set our hearts on these good things, or we shall make idols of them. You all remember what God says in the first commandment.

Some children think as much of feasting as this eagle did. Rich food and dainties of all sorts, are their constant craving. When they possess a few pennies, instead of spending them on something of use, buying a good book, or subscribing to a beautiful paper, which would give them joy every week or month through the year—or, better still, in giving some comfort to one of Christ's needy children, they hasten right away to the confectioner's, and spend it for sweets.

Such children's hearts are chained to the ice. They grow more and more earthly as they grow older. Self-indulgence of this sort spoils one for a scholar or a Christian. It was not the way our Saviour lived. "He pleased not himself," that He might bring salvation to us. Let us learn to deny ourselves for the sake of others, and hold so lightly the good things of this life, that when God may see fit to take them, we shall not be cast down, because He leaves us something better in its place, even His precious love in our hearts.—The Presbyterian.

The Boy and the Circus.

A circus came to town, and everybody knows how the music and the grand tent and horses set all the boys agog. Shillings and sixpences are in great demand; and many a choice bit of money have the circus riders carried away, which was meant for better purposes. A little boy was seen looking round the circus tent with a great deal of curiosity.

"Hallo, Johnny," said a man who knew him, "going to the circus?"

"No, sir," answered Johnny, "father don't like 'em."

"Oh! well, I'll give you money to go, Johnny," said the man.

"Father don't approve of them," answered Johnny.

"Well, go in for once, and I'll pay for you."

"No, sir, said Johnny; "my father would give me money if he thought 'twere best. Besides, I've got two shillings in my strong-box—twice enough to go."

"I'd go, Johnny, for once; it's wonderful the way the horses do," said the man. Your father needn't know it."

"I shan't," said the boy.

"Now, why?" asked the man.

"'Cause," said Jonny, "after I've been I couldn't look my father right in the eye, and I can now."

Johnny was right. A disobedient boy can never look his father "right in the eye." And children ought always to remember that God sees them, let them go where they will. They can never get out of the reach of His all-seeing eye.—Methodist.

Is It Not Profanity?

"Swear not at all!" A word to girls and young ladies.

You would not swear? The thought is horrible! Yet you say, perhaps, such words as "Mercy!" "Goodness!" "Gracious!" "Kingdom!" and the like, in common conversation. I have heard many such expressions fall trippingly from rosy lips.

Mercy, goodness and grace are attributes of God. In this view of the case, if it is not profanity, it is very near it to use them as expletives.

A very small bit of charcoal will soil a very white dress. The instinct of purity in woman should warn her away from even the least stain of indelicacy.

At the very least these are idle words, and idle words are sinful.

Let your conversation be simple, straightforward, and free from anything which even threatens to break the third commandment.—Sunday School Times.

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

MANUFACTURE OF SUGAR FROM SORGHUM CANE.—In the first place, it is necessary to filter the juice of the plant as it comes from the mill. A bag filter or one made of a blanket placed in a basket will answer the purpose. Next we have to add a sufficiency of the milk of lime, that is lime slacked mixed with water, to the juice to render it slightly alkaline, as shown by changing reddened litmus paper to a blue color. A small excess of lime is not injurious. Then boil the juice for fifteen minutes, a thick greenish scum rapidly collects on the surface, which should be removed by a skimmer, and then the liquid filtered again. It will now be of a pale straw color, and ready for evaporation. The juice should now be boiled down rapidly, to about half its original bulk, after which the fire should be kept low, and the evaporation carried on with great caution to prevent burning at the bottom of the evaporators. Portions of the syrup should be taken out from time to time, to see if it is dense enough to crystalize. It should be about as thick as sugar-house molasses or tar.

When the syrup has reached this condition, it may be withdrawn from the evaporating pans and placed in tubs or pans to granulate. Crystals of sugar will begin to form in from three to five days, and sometimes nearly the whole mass will granulate, leaving but little molasses to be drained off. The sugar may then be scooped out into conical shaped bags made of coarse open cloth, which are to be hung up over the receiver for molasses; the drainage being aided by warmth, it will be useful to keep the temperature at about eighty or ninety degrees Fahrenheit.

After some days the sugar may be removed from the bags, and will be found to be good brown sugar.

The method here described is a common and cheap one, such as any farmer may employ. A very large proportion of the farmers will be satisfied with good syrup from the plant. They may obtain it by following the method above described, or omit the lime, and have a lighter colored acidulous syrup, not liable to granulate on account of the acid matter. The unripe cane may be made into molasses and alcohol.—Extract from Wall's Manual of Agriculture.

FISH AS A MANURE.—At a discussion before the New York Farmers' Club, Dr. J. V. C. Smith said that fish was a very good manure for worn out lands. Their use for this purpose was suggested to the Puritans of New England by an Indian, who told them that the way the natives managed to raise corn was by puttings three herrings into each hill. The Doctor also remarked that the great value of the overflowing of the Nile was the fact that the deposit it left on the land was composed of millions of infusorial animals. This fertilizing material, so rich in animal matter, had made Egypt the granary of the old world. He also alluded to the custom of burying dead animals near trees, so that they may derive the benefit of the fertilizing matter contained in the muscles, and the phosphates in the bones as the bodies decay. Mr. Bruen told how a friend of his bought a farm of poor land for two thousand dollars. This farm was manured with moss bunkers, spread over thickly and plowed under, after which a crop of wheat was sowed. The proceeds were forty bushels to the acre on seventy acres, which he sold for one dollar and fifty cents per bushel, and thus paid for the place twice over with the first crop, and it was the fish that did it. Dr. Growell said that where moss bunkers were used continually, the land becomes sour after the third year, and will not produce a crop. The same result is noticed with fish guano.

PECAN TREES.—Last autumn I received by mail (postage eighty cents) a small tin box, sent to me from Texas, containing thirty pecan nuts mixed with ashes. The nuts were buried in the ground, at a depth of five inches. I have now twenty-six pecan trees more than a foot high. Having knowledge of a pecan tree north of Philadelphia that is forty years old, and bids fair to live for a century longer, it appeared to be of importance that it should be generally known that this valuable nut-bearing tree would thrive in a northern locality. For beauty and size, this tree recommends itself. It has a long tap-root, and the better mode would be to plant the nut where you wish the tree to stand, or to transplant in the fall of the first year. All nuts must be buried as soon as possible after falling, or kept in moist earth until planted. When dry they will not germinate. Obtain the largest and best varieties. Request some friend in a Southern State along the Mississippi to fill up an ordinary tin can with the fresh nuts and a little earth, and inclose a dollar for postage, and you will soon have an opportunity of testing the truth of the above statement.—Washington Correspondence in the Country Gentleman.

LICE ON HOGS.—In answer to a recent inquiry in the Rural New Yorker for a remedy for lice on hogs, allow me to say that I have had an experience of twelve years with breeding hogs. The past five years I have used the following, which will clean off the lice in two days: Put about one gill of kerosene oil in any old dish, and with a paint brush or old woolen rag rub the oil up and down the back of the animal and behind the foreleg and on the flank. Be particular about the last two places, for it is where the lice deposit their eggs, which, if not destroyed, will hatch out in about five days. If it be a black hog, these eggs can be plainly seen, being about the size of timothy seed, and laying close to the skin, fast to the hair. No one need fear to use the oil freely, as it will not injure the hog in the least. Hot water will not kill these lice, for I have seen them crawl after the hog had been scalded in a barrel after being butchered.—R. Woodruff, in Rural New Yorker.

RED CLOVER.—The reports from the prairies this season, settle beyond a doubt or peradventure the question as to whether our soil and climate are adapted to the growth of clover. The red clover of Monroe county cannot be excelled by that of any land under the sun, either in yield or quality.

Its culture is becoming general, and all who have sown it are well satisfied; to mention all of those who have succeeded admirably would fill a column—on one prairie farm in the county, that of Mr. John Holliday, who has a clover field of about twenty acres, the stand is pronounced by all who have seen it, to exceed anything that ever came under their observation in Kentucky, Tennessee or Virginia.—Field and Factory.

HOW TO QUIET BEES.—A farmer says: I have used wormwood for several years for quieting bees, with the best of success. Take old cotton cloth, a foot square, spread out and lay on the wormwood about one-fourth of an inch thick; roll it up tight and snug, and tie securely.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

BURNS.—Equal parts of linseed oil and lime water are invaluable as a cure for a scald or burn, and every house should contain a bottle ready for use.

CURE FOR A FELON.—As soon as the parts begin to swell, get tincture of lobelia and wrap the parts affected with a cloth, saturated thoroughly with the tincture, and the felon will be dead.

MOLASSES POUND CAKE.—Two teacups of molasses, two of brown sugar, one cup of butter, one of milk, two spoonfuls of ginger, six eggs, one teaspoonful of salaratus; make as stiff as pound cake.

DRESSING FOR A TURKEY.—The crumbs of one large loaf of bread, rubbed up fine, two eggs, half a teacup of butter, one teacupful of celery chopped fine, one teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of ground pepper. This is delicious.

SUGAR COOKIES WITHOUT EGGS.—Two cups sugar, one cup butter, one cup sweet milk, one teaspoonful soda, two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar, sifted in the flour; spice to suit the taste, and flour to make it thick enough to roll easy; rub butter and sugar in the dry flour, then wet and roll out; using no eggs.

RICH MINCE PIES.—Eight pounds of beef, one pound suet, two pounds currants, two pounds raisins, one-half peck apples, two ounces ground cloves, two ounces allspice, one-half ounce mace, one ounce nutmegs, three-quarter pound citron, one-quarter pound cinnamon, eight pounds sugar, half a gallon sweet cider, six lemons.

OYSTER SOUP.—Three quarts of opened oysters; three pints of milk. Boil the oysters in their own liquor, with a very little powdered mace, Cayenne pepper, and a piece of butter the size of an egg. When the oysters have become plump, add the milk; this must be done carefull, to prevent curdling; stew the whole with powdered and sifted crackers.

TOOTHACHE.—The English Mechanic gives the following curious remedy for toothache: Put a piece of quicklime, as big as a walnut, in a pint of water in a bottle. Clean the teeth with a little of it every morning, rinsing the mouth with clean water afterward. If the teeth are good it will preserve them and keep away toothache; if the teeth are gone, it will harden the gums so that they will masticate crusts and all.

Scientific.

FOOD FOR ROOTS AND FOR THOUGHT. When the resting-place of Roger Williams and his wife was uncovered, after a lapse of one hundred and eighty-three years, it was found that an apple-tree in the vicinity had sent a strong root to each grave. The layer of the two roots had embraced the skull of the founder of Rhode Island, passed down the back-bone, and then divided itself into two, passing down the length of the extremities. This is interesting, but nothing new in the natural history of roots. They seem to have an almost instinct in traversing the soil in search of the richest food, or of water supplies. It is not enough to say that a root which has struck a vein of richness will from that very cause grow rank and strong. This has something to do with the effect, but does not explain the undoubted fact that roots will traverse barriers, positively without food, in stretching out for what they are after beyond. A plant in a common flower-pot gives us an excellent illustration. The roots will pass out of the hole in the bottom, traversing nothing but air in the reach after fresh soil; so they will also pass over the rim without any earth in contact; only it seems necessary that there should be earth within reaching distance or the effort will not be made. There is plainly something more at work in the problem of plant life than the simple play of what are called the mechanical forces.

EMERGENCIES.—In the case of an explosion, by which hot water and steam are thrown upon a crowd of human beings, the injuries are both external and internal. The after chances of life or death in the victims depend often very much on whether internal injury has been inflicted by breathing the steam. As many are constantly exposed in traveling to dangers from this source, it is well to have a clear idea beforehand of what one ought to do on such an occasion. There is often a possibility of forefending internal, and consequently fatal, mischief by instantly holding the breath, or clapping some article of woolen across the face. The steam will go suddenly as it comes, and the protection of the lungs is needed for only an instant, but that instant is critical. All people cannot have presence of mind, but many can prepare themselves for moments of danger by dwelling often beforehand on thoughts of what they must do on certain occasions. The action will then come almost naturally. A certain man once had it so fixed on his mind that a blanket was best the thing to extinguish clothes when on fire, that he left a poor girl burning in the wind till she burned to death, while he was searching the house for a blanket. He had no presence of mind, but his previous planning was good as far as it went. The misfortune was that he had not planned to fixed it in his mind also, that in the absence of any blanket or other covering immediately at hand, the victim should be thrown out and rolled on the ground. A little previous training of the thoughts how to work in emergencies will do no one harm, and may save life.

LUMINOUS FLAMES AND SOUNDS.—Among the curiosities of physical science is the well known fact that luminous flames are very sensitive to sound, exhibiting different phenomena under different circumstances. An ingenious savant proposes to turn this to practical account, and for this purpose has devised an apparatus, consisting of two upright copper rods, one of which at its upper extremity, has a metal band attached at a right angle, and consisting of thin layers of gold, silver, and platinum welded together. When exposed to the heat, the bands expand unequally, and bend to one side, thereby coming in contact with a platinum point, which is attached to another bar, so as to stand about four-tenths of an inch from the hands. Both ends are connected with the poles of a small electrical battery, in the circuit of which an electrical bell is introduced in a distant part of the room, and which sounds whenever the circuit is closed. A flame is brought to about ten inches from the metal band, and on removing it a distance of ten or fifteen yards from the flame, and whistling, the same answers immediately, by becoming broader and shorter. In this way it comes into contiguity with the metal band, and this curving to one side as it is heated by the flame, touches the platinum point, closes the current, and we hear the distant bells sound each time in answer to the whistle. In a similar manner the cry of a child in its cradle, at night, may be carried to the room of its parents; and by a somewhat similar arrangement, a thief, attempting to open a door with a key, can sound a distant alarm bell, if he makes the least noise. It is even possible to arrange an apparatus resembling this, by means of which, in a fog or by night, the approach of a boat or vessel can be detected at a great distance, by the sounding of a bell in the captain's cabin.

EXHALATION OF PLANTS.—The functions of the leaf are such that during its exposure to sunlight it gives off exhalations both of gas and vapor. It decomposes carbonic acid gas, absorbing the carbon and setting free the other component, oxygen gas; at the same time it concentrates the sap of the plant by carrying off its surplus water through the pores of the leaf in the form of vapor. During active vegetation the quantity of water exhaled by the leaves is very great. Botanists have carefully measured the extent of this exhalation in certain plants. Several experiments of Hales and others may here be noted. A sunflower three and a half feet high, presenting a surface of thirty-nine square feet, exposed to the air and light, was found to perspire at the rate of from twenty to thirty ounces, avoirdupois, during every twelve hours, or about seventeen times more than the amount perspired by an ordinary-sized man during the same time. An apple tree with twelve square feet of foliage was found to perspire nine ounces of water per day, and a vine of about the same surface from five to six ounces.

Recent experiments by Dr. MacNab with the laurel cherry prove that its leaves contain about sixty-three per cent. of water. Sunlight was found to be more efficient than chloride of lime or sulphuric acid in abstracting water from the leaf. In light of any kind the under surface of the leaf was found to perspire more water than the upper surface. At night the process is arrested, and even in the shade only two per cent. of the water in the leaf passed off per hour in a dry atmosphere, while in a saturated atmosphere exhalation ceased. It seems obvious that this function of the leaf must have great effect in modifying climate. Experiments in India and Africa in planting extensive forests in territory deficient in moisture have shown that within a few years the number of rainy days during the year has increased at least fourfold.

TIME IN MENTAL ACTION.—Many experiments have been made to determine the time required for the transmission of impressions to the brain through the senses, and making responses to the same. Mr. T. C. Mendenhall reports to the American Journal of Science a series of experiments of his own. His mode is to make sudden impressions on the sight, the hearing and the sense of feeling. The exact time is automatically registered by means of electricity, and the subject of the experiment is instantly to respond by touching an electrical key which also makes a register, and between the two is a certain interval of time. This interval is supposed to represent, proximately, the time it takes for the brain to receive information from without and act accordingly; and by taking a great many trials and averaging the results, a tolerably correct conclusion may be reached. A table of reduced results in one individual, of from forty to eighty trials under each head, is as follows:

	SECONDS
Response to the appearance of a card	.292
Response to the appearance of an electric light	.203
Response to a sound	.138
Response to a touch upon the forehead	.107
Response to a touch upon the hand	.117

A complication was added by obliging the person to strike one key with the right hand on seeing a white card, and another with the left hand on seeing a red card. The necessity for such a decision increased the time to .443 seconds; and again, in deciding between a circle and a triangle, to .494 seconds. In deciding between the musical C and E, and C and C above, the times were .335 and .427 respectively. Mr. Mendenhall has made some two thousand trials with different individuals. Quite different results were observed in the different cases, but, with one exception, all concurred in the above order as to relative quickness.—Christian Union.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the several Southern States, feel- ing the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—of School and College Text-books and educators named below, which are now issuing a complete series by the eminent Southern scholars

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. Schele DeVere, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. Gildersleeve, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. Carter, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LeConte, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. Johnston, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

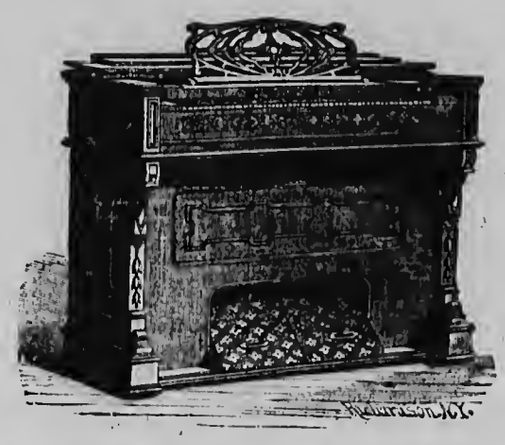
VICTORIOUS

—AT THE—

HOUSTON (TEXAS) STATE FAIR, MAY, 1871.



THE BLUE RIBBON AND DIPLOMA

—AWARDED TO—

PHILIP WERLEIN, OF NEW ORLEANS,

—FOR HIS TWO ENTRIES—

Best Piano (Cottage Square) and Best Organ made in United States,

OVER ALL COMPETITION.

The Silver-Tongue NEEDHAM ORGANS AND MELODEONS are the most approved, most elegantly cased, cheapest in the market, and of the most improved construction. Organs at $60, $75, $100 and $125 for six stops; and $150 for seven stops and upward.

Fine new Seven-Octave PIANOS, of different first-class makes, at $310 and upward. Second-hand Pianos, of good tone and good make, six-octave, at $75 to $100; 6½-octave, $125; 6¾-octave, $150; 6¾-octave, $175; seven-octave, $200 to $225—very good.

☞ Owing to extraordinary facilities, a large and well-established trade, very low rent and small expenses, persons can buy at a less price at this house than elsewhere in the South.

Reference is made to Bishop J. C. Keener, Rev. Linus Parker, D. D., and Rev. Robt. J. Harp, who have bought Pianos from this house.

PHILIP WERLEIN,

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

[From the New Orleans Price Current.]

The general market has exhibited a fair degree of animation since our last report, nearly every branch of the wholesale trade participating over the prevailing activity. In Western produce we notice a good demand for flour at steady prices. Corn also has continued in favor of sellers, white and yellow showing an advance of 2@3c. ₱ bushel. Pork has been dull, but without any quotable decline. Bacon also has shown but little animation, and ruled more in favor of buyers. We notice further receipts of new sugar, including 40 hhds on Monday and 39 hhds on Tuesday, most of which met a ready sale at full prices, for which we refer to our regular report. New molasses and syrup have come forward more freely, and sold from the landing at rather easier prices.

The weather was clear and warm on Saturday, but on Sunday it was cloudy and showery. On Monday it continued cloudy and threatening, but without rain, and on Tuesday it was cloudy in the morning, but subsequently clear. We hear of nothing of much moment from the country, and infer that the frost noticed last week has done no damage to the cotton worthy of notice, and that the laborers are busily engaged in picking. The few reports received, however, give no indications of any disposition to lessen previous estimates of the falling off compared with last year.

The river is now fourteen feet two inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the thirteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.	9,227
Lake		49
Mobile		2,435
Texas		36
Total		11,787

On Saturday, under threatening frost reports, the demand was more active and although operations were restricted by scant supplies, 3000 bales changed hands at an advance of 1@¼c. in good ordinary and low middling, and ¼c. in the higher grades. Factors' tables were pretty well cleared and many old and mixed lots previously neglected were taken at comparatively full prices, leaving the market with but little of such descriptions remaining unsold. On Monday the supply having been greatly reduced by Saturday's heavy business, much less scope was afforded to buyers, but the demand nevertheless continued strong and the sales summed up 2150 bales. Prices exhibited some irregularity, showing considerable buoyancy during the morning, with some transactions at an improvement, but subsequently ruling more in favor of buyers and closing with Saturday's advance hardly maintained. On Tuesday the market was depressed by a further marked reduction in foreign exchange, a decline of ¼c. at New York, and discouraging accounts from Liverpool, but as it was partially sustained by the activity of the demand and the scant supply, the falling off was only ¼c. and the sales embraced 2450 bales. The Agricultural Bureau dispatch was not received until after the close of business.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas), are 42,556 bales, against 77,168 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 91,959 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 4913 to France, and a decrease of 2475 to Great Britain, and 1234 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Good ordinary	18¼ to 18¾
Low middling	18¾ to 19
Middling	— to 19¼
Strict middling	— to 19½

SUGAR.—On Saturday there were no receipts of new and there was no movement worthy of note, but on Monday 10 hhds of the new crop were received, nearly all of which was sold at 11¾c. for fully fair open kettle; 11¾c. for centrifugal, and 12¼c. for light yellow clarified. Some old yellow clarified sold at 12c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday there were receipts of 39 hhds new sugar, of which about 20 hhds were sold, in lots, at 10¼c. for seconds, 11¼@11¾c. for centrifugal, and 12¾c. for yellow clarified. Some white clarified, old, sold at 12¼c. ₱ lb.

MOLASSES.—Supplies of the new are commencing to come in more freely. They are not disposed of readily, however, as the demand has not started. The receipts on Wednesday and Thursday embracing about 187 bbls were sold at 55@57½c. for thin syrup, 62½c. for fair do, 65c. for good do, 70c. for prime do, 75@80c. for choice do, 35@40c. for centrifugal molasses, 65c. for red molasses, 67½@70c. for prime molasses, and 72½@75c. for strictly prime do. On Tuesday 85 bbls and 31 half bbls new molasses were received, 46 bbls of which were sold at 66c. for fair molasses and 71c. for prime.

FLOUR.—The market has been quiet but steady and firm although there is not much demand. Superfine, double and low treble extra is scarce and in request while the stock consists mostly of choice extra. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 2500 bbls, in lots, at $4 75 for common, $5 25 for fine, $6 75 for single extra, $7 10@$7 12½ for double extra, $7 25@$7 50 for treble extra, $7 62½@$7 75 for choice treble extra and $8@$8 75 for choice and family extra. On Tuesday there was some demand for export, but the stock is mostly held at figures above the limits of orders, hence the market is dull.

CORN—Is in light supply and prices have further advanced with a good demand. The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 4500 sacks at 87c for yellow, in large sacks, 88c for yellow, 89@90c for white and yellow mixed, and 95c for choice white. On Tuesday there was a scarcity, the demand was active and prices ruled still higher, 3000 sacks were sold at 92½c for red and yellow, 95c for yellow and mixed, and 97½@$1 for white.

OATS.—Are in fair supply and moderate demand. Some 1500 sacks were sold on Saturday and Monday at 55c ₱ bushel for St. Louis and 55@60c for Galena. On Tuesday 600 sacks sold at 58@60c ₱ bushel for St. Louis and Galena.

BRAN.—Is scarce and is held at $1 50 ₱ 100 lbs.

HAMS.—The market is in better supply, and prices have weakened. Choice sugar-cured are now quoted at 18½@19c., fair 16@17c ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request and fluctuated with the New York market, closing at a net decline of ⅛@¼c., opening on Saturday at 114¼@114¾ (against 114¾ at New York), and closing at 114@114¼, (against 114¾ at New York); opening on Monday at 113⅞@114⅛, (against 113¾ at New York), and closing at 113⅞@113⅞, (against 113¾ at New York); and opening on Tuesday at 113¾@113¾, (against 113¾ at New York), and closing at 113⅝@113¾ (against 113¾).

The sales of silver have been confined to $2500 in American half-dollars on Saturday at 109½. American half-dollars are now quoted at 109@109¼ and Mexican dollars nominal at 1½@1¾ ₱ cent premium in gold.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fishor T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

Under a burning sun, where Bilious affections and Fevers of various descriptions so generally prevail,

Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient

Has been successful beyond all parallel. Hence, the physicians of the tropics give their emphatic sanction, prescribing it in preference to every other aperient in use. The patients, of course, gladly acquiesce, for this preparation is one of the most delightful as well as mild and cooling cathartics chemistry has yet devised, and possesses every medicinal virtue of the far-famed Germania Seltzer Spa. It is a powder that only requires the addition of water to produce in an instant a delicious, effervescent beverage, as well as an invaluable medicine. Ask for and accept none but the genuine.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—Later advices from Teheran show that "Persia is still suffering from famine and pestilence, and the disorganization and disturbance, which those calamities have induced. The province of Khorassan has been invaded and plundered by warlike tribes. Insurrections have broken out in various quarters, which the government finds it difficult or impossible to quell. The province of Frars is in open rebellion, and the government troops have been driven from Shiros, the capital of the province, which is now held by the rebels."

GOTHA, Oct. 20.—Full reports of the last German expedition to the North Pole have arrived, and state that the expedition was successful. The Polar Sea was discovered free of ice and swarming with whales.

DOMESTIC.

CHICAGO, Oct. 18.—The number of inquests since the ninth instant, to date, is ninety-two.

Good order continues throughout the city.

Lumber is selling at old prices, the attempt at extortion having ignominiously failed.

All the banks are operating again, and the deposits exceed the withdrawals. Drafts on the savings banks are very light.

Many contracts for rebuilding have been consummated; contracts involve the construction of entire blocks.

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.—The steamer Alps, from Rio de Janeiro, brings a report that the bill abolishing slavery in Brazil passed the Senate overwhelmingly.

SHREVEPORT, Oct. 19.—The railroad convention, which met here yesterday, was largely attended, and the session harmonious. Representatives from St. Louis, Memphis, Vicksburg, Kansas, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas and Louisiana. Great interest is manifested. Reports were read favoring an early completion of the Pacific railroad, connecting with Memphis and other points, and the adoption of prompt measures for the improvement of the navigation of Red river. The convention goes to Marshall, Texas, to-morrow.

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 20.—The Door County Advocate contains a full account of the loss of life and property by the great fires in that county. Up to the night of the eighth the fires had been raging through the towns of Brussels, Union, Gardner, Forestville, Clay, Banks, Neseranpee, Sturgeon Bay and Sebastopol, burning fences and timber, but leaving houses untouched. At nine o'clock Sunday night a tornado swept the towns from the southeast, beginning at Belgian, sweeping through the towns of Union and Gardner, the western part of Sebastopol and the east shore of the bay, consuming every building in its path.

At Williamson's Mill everything was burned and most awful destruction of human life ensued. Out of eighty persons at the mill, fifty-seven were burned to death. The few survivers tell horrible tales of the scene after the fire. Forty-five bodies were found in a potato patch. Others were found scattered in various places. Many were disfigured in a terrible manner, and in some cases beyond recognition.

This great destruction was the work of but fifteen minutes, and was effected by a tornado that burned Peshtigo, and one thousand two hundred human beings and a number of other losses of life are reported in other places. Twenty-two were burned at Brussels. There is scarcely a house or barn standing in the line of the fire.

NEW YORK, Oct. 21.—To-day the largest single contract for railroad construction ever made in the United States was closed by the executive officer of the Mobile and Northwestern Railroad Company. The contract is for the entire line from Mobile to Helena, Arkansas, three hundred and fifty miles, and is to be completed by December 31, 1873. Will commence work at once, and put five thousand men on as rapidly as they can be gathered, The iron for a large section of the road is now being made in Great Britain.

SALT LAKE, Oct. 22.—Verdict in Hawkins' case, charge, adultery, is guilty. The penalty is three to twenty years' imprisonment. This is considered the test case, and virtually places the polygamist at the mercy of the first wife, who, under the act, is the only person who can proceed against him.

MACON, GA., Oct. 23.—The exhibition at the State Fair is the largest ever held in the South. The city is thronged with visitors. All the incoming trains are crowded with visitors. Accommodations have been provided for all.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Oct. 23.—Over one thousand dollars is offered for the best bale of cotton exhibited at the Alabama State Fair, commencing October 31, and continuing five days.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Oct. 23.—Extensive fires in the swamps in Monroe, Orleans, Niagara, Genesee, Wayne and Seneca counties. The wind is blowing a gale. Smoke compels the use of lamps here to-day.

AUBURN, Oct. 23.—Three acres of woods, known as Chestnut Ridge, near this city, was burned to-day.

DETROIT, Oct. 24.—An earnest appeal to the people of the country has been issued asking relief for the people of the burnt districts of Michigan. There are twelve or fifteen thousand houseless, without the means to supply the necessaries for the winter. Fires are still raging in various parts of the State and are doing great damage. Aid must reach the sufferers soon, as water communication is the only means of reaching them and that is soon to be cut off.

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—Cotton is firm. Octobers are quoted at 18 3-16, and Novembers at 18 5-16.

Sterling is firm, and rules at 8¾ net.

It is believed that the Liverpool cotton market has touched bottom.

Paris advices report money stringent, and funds lower.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 24.—During three weeks of October there were nine hundred and forty-two cases of small-pox and one hundred and fifty-one deaths. The disease is abating. Thousands are vaccinated daily.

THE STANDARD.

This excellent religious paper has been on our exchange list for a good while, and we cheerfully comply with the request to insert the following notice:

OFFICE OF THE STANDARD,
No. 13 Harmon Court, Chicago, Ill.

Editor of Christian Advocate:

DEAR SIR—The terrible fire in Chicago has destroyed all our printing material and presses, as well as all the newspaper offices in the city.

We had the good fortune to save the Standard subscription list and account books; all besides is in ashes. The accumulations of years has been swept away in a night. The loss is great, but we expect very soon to resume the publication of the Standard, probably next week.

In these circumstances we avail ourselves of that fraternal good will among our brethren of the press, of which we feel entirely sure in asking them to state these facts for the information of our friends. We take this opportunity to remind our subscribers of the pressing need of immediate payment, on the part of any in arrears. Any not in arrears disposed to help the Standard and the cause it represents, are assured that such help at this time will be gratefully received. Everything necessary to print the Standard must be purchased anew, while at the same time our own resources are buried in the ruins caused by the terrible fire. Under these circumstances we trust we shall not appeal to our friends in vain.

The office of the Standard will be for the present at No. 13 Harmon Court. Respectfully, CHURCH & GOODMAN, Publishers.

YESTERDAY AFTERNOON, the eighteenth instant, says the Picayune, a well-dressed individual, apparently a business man, entered the banking house of Pike, Brother & Co., on Camp, between Common and Canal streets, and asked for the bank box of Messrs. Nalle & Cammack, presenting a check for the same. Supposing he was entitled to it, and having no cause to excite their suspicion, it was given over the counter, and the person at once left the bank, carrying with him the box and its contents.

It was almost immediately ascertained that the box had left the custody of the bank without proper authority, and an investigation revealed the fact that another daring and successful robbery had been perpetrated, despite the vigilance of all interested to prevent it.

SATAN hinders Christians more by discouraging them with showing them their perpetual shortcomings and failures, and their sad want of conformity to Jesus, with all its sad results, than in any other way.

IN EVERY COMPANY, remember you profess to be a member of Christ, a child of God, a temple of the Holy Ghost.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Lobuchia Mission, North Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Grant me a small space in your paper to let your numerous readers know what wonders the Lord is doing for the people on Lobuchia mission, in North Mississippi Conference. I took charge of that mission on the first Sunday in March last, after it had been forsaken by Bro. A. R. Hines, with a trembling hand, but knowing that the Lord had promised to reward the faithful, and I have now closed a series of protracted meetings on said mission, which has resulted in the conversion of over one hundred precious souls. I commenced a protracted meeting at Providence; had nobody to help me but one brother, that could pray in public, and God graciously blessed us, and there were twenty converted and seventeen joined the church, and among the number was an aged sinner, to-wit: Fourscore and five years old. Our meeting lasted five days, and we broke down for the want of ministerial aid; so we closed, but the work is still going on there, and souls are being converted at the prayer meetings. Again, I commenced a protracted meeting at Macedonia. On said work, under very unfavorable weather, but, between the showers, the people would come out and we would preach to them, and God would send the Word to their hearts and they would repent and believe, and when the Almighty saw that the people were ripe, He locked up the clouds and withheld the rains and poured His Spirit ont upon the people, and graciously revived His work. In these ends of the earth our meeting lasted eight days, during which time there were seventy-five converted, between the ages of seventy-five and ten years old. We joined into the Methodist Church forty-eight, and the others joined the Baptist, and the revival is still going on at that place. We have a young men's prayer meeting every Wednesday night. At that meeting there were two young men converted, who say that they are called to preach the gospel, and they are showing their faith by their works. My third protracted meeting was at a church which we call Rooks. It lasted three days only, as I got sick, but God revived the church and converted some, and four joined the church, though it was a gracious time while it did last. My fourth was at Hurricane, it lasted four days. God graciously revived His work in the church, converted about nine souls, and eight joined the church. My fifth protracted meeting was at Oak Hill. I was sick and did not attend it, but Bro. J. M. Weems, of the Carthage work, Mississippi Conference, carried it on four days. God poured out His Spirit, revived His work, converted six souls and six joined the church. I have abundant reason to return God thanks that He has heard my prayers and saved these precious souls. Yours in Christ, J. L. SCARBOROUGH, P. C.

Linwood Camp Meeting, Spring Hill Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: This camp meeting began on twenty-second of September and closed on the twenty-ninth. The power of God was manifested in the conviction and conversion of sinners almost from the commencement. Fifty-two joined the church, and a greater number of conversions. But few tent-holders. How shall this vast multitude be fed, that flocked in on Saturday and Sunday? The noble-hearted tent-holders met the emergency with their characteristic liberality. An effort was made to have a harbor built. The scarcity of money, and the high price demanded by mechanics, prevented, yet the neighborhood met and built one, so Linwood camp ground may be considered permanent. Another is appointed to commence on Friday, before the fourth Sabbath in September, 1872. We held a love-feast meeting one morning while this was in progress. Nearly all the old members who spoke, claimed that it was at a camp meeting they were converted. Mr. Editor, I want you to urge the camp meeting subject upon your readers, so that there may be one held on every circuit in the Mississippi Conference next year. I think it would be profitable for towns and cities to pitch their tents at some good spring, a few miles from the bustle and noise of the place, and worship God. Two tent-holders went to the camp meeting unconverted, but they went home happy Christians. Father and Mother Tinsleys, aged and infirm, with all their living children, were present. The last one was converted at this meeting. Favored children these, to be blessed with so devoted a mother.

We were deprived of the presence and counsel of Sister Robinson, who died suddenly last April. She attended the other two held at this place. Husband and sons and daughters tented on the ground, all, except two, rejoicing in prospect of meeting wife and mother, where sorrow, sighing and separations are no more.

William B. Hayes, the presiding elder, was present in his Master's strength. Bays, Holland, Ellis and Brogan, Professors Cooper and Smith, the two latter ministers of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, all preached in "demonstration of the Spirit and of power."

The Lord has been good to us in this part of His vineyard. There was a good revival in this school (Spring Hill), under the supervision of Prof. Cooper. Thirty conversions in the school, fifteen joined the Methodist, the other fifteen divided between the Old School and Cumberland Presbyterians and Baptists. Professor Cooper has agreed to teach two children of the pastor of this charge (Spring Hill circuit) so long as he lives at this school. Pray for us. JAMES M. GANN.

Eufaula District Conference, Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: The Eufaula District Conference held its session at Midway, September 19-23, Rev. J. L. Cotton, presiding elder, in the chair. The various interests of the church were inquired into, especially the support of the ministry, the education of the young, and the spiritual condition of the church. The membership of the church, as evidenced by the reports, have not discharged their full duty in the maintenance of their pastors. Some churches have acted more nobly than others, having paid their preachers one-half, and more, of their salaries.

Special attention has been given to the education of the youth of the district. Flourishing Sabbath schools are to be found almost everywhere, most of them using the system of uniform lessons. Fine secular schools, under the management of religious teachers, are scattered all over the district.

The spiritual condition of the church is improving. Many gracious revivals and a number of accessions to the church during the year. A strong disposition manifested to revive old Methodism throughout the district. A committee was appointed to locate a district camp ground. There was a gracious outpouring of the Spirit during the conference and after its close. Forty-six accessions to the church at Midway.

I had the pleasure of meeting Dr. A. S. Andrews, of Mobile, president of the Southern University, located at Greensboro, Rev. W. A. McCarty, who represented the interest of the East Alabama Male College, and the venerable Dr. W. H. Ellison, of Union Springs, all of whom are lights in the Southern Methodist Church.

The following are the delegates elect to the annual conference, to be held at Mobile, Alabama: Rev. D. M. Banks, Major J. F. Culver, Dr. T. J. S. Kimbrough and A. V. Lee. Alternates: Dr. J. E. Crews and Colonel E. S. Ott. The next district conference will be held at Clayton.

The visitors and members of the conference will ever remember the kindness and hospitality of the good people of Midway. Fraternally,

ALTO V. LEE, Secretary.

CLAYTON, ALA., Oct 6, 1871.

North Warren Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Please say to your many readers that, in His gracious visitations, the good Lord did not forget us on the North Warren circuit. Assisted by efficient brethren—who have no need that their names be published—I have held four protracted meetings, one at each appointment, all of which were well attended by unusually attentive congregations, and the "Lord was present to own and bless." Many were awakened. Several were "born of the Spirit" and "made to rejoice in the love of God." Some who had been seeking the Lord for years were happily astonished to find "how freely Jesus can forgive." Others were reclaimed from backslidings, the church generally built up, and about thirty added to her ranks. One very noted feature of the good work in this part of the "vineyard" is the voluntary return of many who, during and since the war, had yielded to the temptations of the times and gone almost hopelessly away from the church and its ordinances. These came up from all directions, inquiring after the class books, to see if they still were in church. I have never seen so general an interest pervading the minds of the people. We often feel prompted to say, truly: "The set time to favor Zion is come."

Yours in Christ, P. HOWARD.

Scotland Chapel Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Since the report of our glorious meeting at Scotland chapel, two or three weeks ago, I have had very interesting meetings at two other points on my circuit, Liberty and Walnut Grove churches. At each of these churches we enjoyed a season of refreshing to the people of God. The number added to the church at these places did not come up to our expectation, but permanent good, I trust, was effected that will tell happily hereafter. Only two were admitted at Liberty, and twelve at Walnut Grove. The spiritual condition of the circuit has greatly improved within the last two months; but the finances are woefully behind. The people have made short crops. Money is scarce. The preachers, the missionary and other benevolent enterprises of the church must pay the forfeit.

Yours truly, H. J. HARRIS.

Fayette Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Our fourth quarterly conference will be held to-morrow, and I have the names of fifty persons to report who have been received into the church during the past quarter. Six of these have been received by letter, and forty-four in due form on profession of faith. We have seventeen more applications for membership. Many have been happily converted. This religious movement is almost entirely confined to the young people, and that of the most substantial class of people we have in our country. We have had the pleasure of receiving about twenty intelligent young men into the church. May the Lord lay His hands upon some of them and thrust them out into the ministry! The old Fayette circuit, we rejoice to say, is in a healthy, improving condition. W. B. LEWIS, P. C.

FAYETTE, MISS., Oct. 13, 1871.

New Iberia, Louisiana Conference.

MR. EDITOR: We received yesterday thirty-eight persons into the church at this place. This is the largest addition ever made to this church at once, and was the result of a week's service, just closed. Between twenty and twenty-five were converted, and the church greatly revived.

Bros. A. E. Goodwyn, of Opelousas, and George Bright, of the Mississippi Conference, did good service at the beginning of the meeting, for which they have our thanks.

W. C. HAISLIP.

NEW IBERIA, LA., Oct. 16, 1871.

Lower Peach Tree Circuit, Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I have had three protracted meetings on my charge, at two of them the membership of the church was, I trust, greatly revived, twelve accessions to the church, six or eight conversions. In fact I think there is a better day ahead for the Lower Peach Tree circuit. J. M. JOHNSTON.

CONFERENCE ITEMS.

KENTUCKY CONFERENCE.—The Kentucky Conference held its session at Paris, Kentucky, from the twenty-seventh of September to the third of October. Bishop Wightman presided, and the Rev. T. F. Vanmeter was secretary. We are obliged to his promptitude for the minutes.

C. F. Humphrey, T. F. Taliaferro, R. D. Poole, John Reeves, T. E. Burr, J. H. Hagar, P. H. Fishburne, Cornelius Foster, were admitted on trial. G. N. McMahon was discontinued. J. N. Current, D. W. Robertson, J. Holmes, S. S. Goodman, were admitted into full connection. W. J. Snively, R. H. Reed, B. Arbogast, A. Minor, R. S. Robbins, G. C. Kelly, G. Froh, probationers, were received by transfer. G. N. Buffington, S. S. Goodman, were elected and ordained deacons. R. D. Allen, J. Hamilton, R. D. Poole, local, were elected and ordained deacons—W. M. Crow, W. Beverly, elected deacons. G. D. Turner, elected and ordained elder. W. J. Carson, elected elder. C. I. Gollard, T. R. Malone, J. C. Hardy, W. C. Atmore, L. C. Danley, J. Sandusky, W. Bickers, C. T. Widney, superannuated. W. H. Parker, P. Taylor, died. All the characters of the preachers passed except that of H. R. Blaisdell—whose case was referred to the presiding elder of the Maysville District for investigation. White members 18,423, increase 1110, colored 202, decrease 23, local preachers 117, increase 3; infants baptized 476, adults 1608; Sunday schools 143, teachers 984, scholars 6858; necessary for claimants 2200, collected $1,726 13; for missions $3,318 28. The next session is to be at Harrodsburg, Kentucky. It will afford us pleasure to publish report, resolutions, etc., when furnished by the secretary. By a communication of the book agent it will be seen that the session was one of great interest and harmony of action. The Rev. G. W. Brush, of the Louisville Conference was in attendance. He visited the Conference in the interest of a noble institution, which ought to receive the cordial and liberal patronage of Kentucky Methodists—and it doubtless will. We allude to the "Methodist Widows' and Orphans' Home of Kentucky." The object of the institution is to provide and sustain, in or near Louisville, a home for destitute widows and orphans of deceased members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and others who may be placed under its charge, to be regarded as under the patronage of the Louisville Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Brush desired recognition from the Kentucky Conference. Of this proposed charity James S. Lithgow is president. Adjunct to the Parent Society is a Ladies' Association, of which Mrs. John Bull is president. The Rev. Robert Hiner presented the following preamble and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

In view of the history and present condition of the Widows' and Orphans' Home of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in the State of Kentucky, as presented us by the Rev. G. W. Brush, and as contained in the copies of the charter and by-laws and rules of order which he has presented to this Conference, we ask leave to present the following:

Resolved, That the Kentucky Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, receive with pleasure the information thus furnished in regard to the organization of an institution in said church, so inseparable from the principles and practices of the Christian religion.

Resolved, That the organization, by order of the Board of Managers of the Ladies' Department of the Widows' and Orphans' Home, indicates to us the wisdom of said board, and will, under God, go far, we doubt not, to insure the final success of the noble enterprise.

Resolved, That this Conference will, with gratitude to God for the existence of such institutions in our land, co-operate with the Louisville Conference in its patronage of the Widows' and Orphans' Home of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in the State of Kentucky.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.—The Tennessee Conference held its session at Lebanon, October 4 to 9. Bishop Pierce presided with his usual ability. Dr. Young was, of course, chosen secretary. The Revs. W. Mooney, G. P. Jackson, T. J. Duncan and J. W. Cullom, were elected assistant secretaries.

The following were admitted on trial: H. J. Ivie, W. A. Gill, W. B. Woodward, T. H. Woodward, W. M. Rippey, W. J. Wright, J. M. Jordan, J. H. Chambliss, B. F. Jackson, G. D. Byrne, J. A. McFerrin, J. O. Blanton, A. A. Allison, S. A. Feltner, J. C. Mials. Admitted into full connection: W. J. Hale, T. B. Fisher, S. A. Ellis, J. W. Hill, W. M. Doyle, R. P. Roland, Alanson Brown, J. H. Strayhorn, J. B. Jordan, D. C. Miles, H. S. Ledbetter, A. J. Ford. Readmitted: John Rains, R. H. Rogers. Received by transfer: John H. Nichols. Traveling preachers elected and ordained elders: T. B. Fisher, S. A. Ellis, T. H. Hinson, R. P. Gray, T. J. Duncan, G. M. Sanders, P. C. Gaston, A. T. Goodloe. Local preachers elected elders: J. B. Alloway, Jos. Bybee, D. P. Armstrong, D. J. Powell, J. C. Mials, J. G. Smithson, T. L. Duncan, J. M. Dulaney. Located: J. T. W. Davis, J. R. Randle, Superannuated: S. L. Orman, J. A. Jones, A. J. B. Foster, J. D. Winn, Stanford Lassiter, J. W. Tarrant, Golman Green, Thomas Madden. A. S. Riggs, died. White members, 36,459, increase 2670, colored 143, decrease 30—the colored members having joined the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America; local preachers 317, increase 15. Baptized infants 892, increase 225, adults 2732, increase 1151. Sunday schools 356, teachers 2127, scholars 17,009. Necessary for claimants $3000, collected $2075 40. For missions $3411 40. The next session is to be at Nashville.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY. OCTOBER 26, 1871.

OUR BELOVED HAVE DEPARTED.

Our beloved have departed,
While we tarry, broken-hearted,
In the dreary, empty house;
They have ended life's brief story,
They have reached the home of glory,
Over death victorious!

Hush that sobbing, weep more lightly,—
On we travel, daily, nightly,
To the rest that they have found:
Are we are not upon the river,
Sailing fast, to meet forever
On more holy, happy ground?

On we haste to home invited,
There with friends to be united
In a surer bond than here:
Meeting soon, and meet forever!
Glorious hope! forsake us never,
For thy glimmering light is dear.

Ah! the way is shining clearer,
As we journey ever nearer
To the everlasting home;
Comrades who await our landing,
Friends who round the throne are standing,
We salute you, and we come.

WAITING.

BY JEAN INGELOW.

Grand is the leisure of the earth;
She gives her happy myriads birth,
And after harvest fears not dearth,
But goes to sleep in snow wreaths dim.
Dread is the leisure up above,
The while He sits whose name is love,
And waits, as Noah did, the dove,
To see if she would fly to him.

He waits for us, while, houseless things,
We beat about with bruised wings
On the dark floods and water springs,
The ruined world, the desolate sea;
With open windows from the prime,
All night, all day, He waits sublime,
Until the fullness of the time
Decreed from His eternity.

A PASTORAL LETTER.

Mr. Editor: Pastoral letters have been of utility to the churches. They have emanated from ecclesiastical bodies, from bishops, etc. Finding some things in his district, which needed correction, a certain presiding elder has sent letters to the churches in certain circuits in his charge, which have been read to the members and congregations. The report is that they have done good. It is believed that extracts from one of these letters, if published in the Christian Advocate, would be beneficial to other people; so I send some extracts for your paper, if you think proper to publish.

—— —— P. E.

To the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, on —— circuit, —— Conference:

Dear Brothers and Sisters—The Discipline of our church, pages 67, 68, in answer to the question: "What are the duties of a presiding elder?" Answers: 1. "To travel through his appointed district, in order to preach and to oversee the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church." 6. "To take care that every part of the Discipline be enforced in his district."

As Methodists, we profess to be "united, in order to pray together, to receive the word of exhortation, to watch over one another in love, that we may help each other to work out our salvation."

The General Rules of our church say: "It is expected of all who continue in our church, that they should continue to evidence their desire of salvation: First, by doing no harm, by avoiding evil of every kind, especially that which is most generally practiced. Second, by doing good, by being in every kind merciful after their power, as they have opportunity; doing good of every possible sort, and, as far as possible, to all men: 1. To their bodies, and 2. To their souls. Third, by attending upon all the ordinances of God. Such are: The public worship of God; the ministry of the Word, either read or expounded; the supper of the Lord; family and private prayer; searching the Scriptures, and fasting or abstinence."

Beloved brothers and sisters, do you try to keep these General Rules? Do you keep the Sabbath holy, and try always to attend the public worship of God and ministry of His word? Or do you visit and receive visitors on that day? Are you conscientious and punctual in your attendance on the public worship of God? or do you allow small things and trivial things to keep you away? If you, for light excuses, absent yourselves from the public means of grace, your own sad experiences teach you that you have lost—spiritually—greatly lost.

Are you punctual and regular in attending the Lord's Supper? This is an important mean, ordained by the Saviour, and cannot be neglected without great spiritual loss to the neglector.

Do you pray in your families? Pray with them every morning and evening? As parents, you cannot discharge the duties enjoined upon you, without discharging this duty. As husbands and wives you cannot discharge your relative duties without family prayer. Early impressions are said to be more lasting than later ones. How important, then, to have proper religious impressions made on the minds of children, of very young children? If you have not taken up the Cross, so as to discharge this duty, allow me, brothers and sisters, to urge you, by every consideration of spiritual and religious interest to yourselves and children, to begin at once. Have a certain hour for morning worship, and a certain hour for evening worship. By thus attending to this duty, you will soon see that every other duty will bend to this, and persons in the family will work to that duty.

Private prayer is essential to the proper development of Christian graces and principles in the soul. In the use of this mean we become strong for the public duties of life. But to be successful in this good work, we must have a rule and a certain hour for it. Most, if not all, of God's holy children have made it a point to pray in secret at least three times a day. Have your times, dear brothers and sisters, for this good work. Keep to those times, and God will bless you abundantly with His holy spirit and grace.

The daily reading and study of the Holy Scriptures is an essential mean in our efforts to grow in grace. They will be food upon which the mind can feed. The exceeding great and precious promises of the Bible are for our encouragement, comfort and consolation. Then read some portion of that blessed Word every day. Meditate on it day and night. So shall you be fed with marrow and fatness.

The rules of the church require us to observe at least a quarterly fast—on the Friday before each Quarterly Meeting. Such a day ought to be observed religiously—not by still pursuing the usual business of farm, shop, office or merchandise. God's charge against Israel of old was, that they exacted all their labor on the fast days. Therefore, their fasts were not accepted, and they were not blessed. If all our members would observe these quarterly fasts religiously, our cause would be greatly advanced by our personal religious enjoyment and power in the community. Brothers and sisters, will you try to do this duty as well as all others to which I have called your attention in this letter?

Allow me to call your attention to the social meetings, prayer meetings, class meetings and love-feasts. These are certainly of great utility in advancing spiritual religion in a community, as well as the personal experiences of individual members, and the social advantages of all the members, so that the "mutual faith of all" is increased and used to edification. The Discipline provides that love-feasts shall be held quarterly (I presume in each church or congregation), or at such other times (more than quarterly, I suppose), as the preacher in charge may consider expedient. These meetings have been of great utility to our church, and would be so still, if our people would attend them.

Then the church conferences are of great utility to the church, and ought to be attended by all the members, male and female, that they may hear the reports of the preachers, of the class leaders, of the Sunday school superintendents and of the stewards, and may hear all the inquiries in reference to all the interests of the church. They ought to hear the roll called, that they may know who are the members of the church, and from the reports made of them know how they are getting along.

Allow me, brothers and sisters, to urge every one of you to get a copy of the new Discipline and read it through carefully; and read the General Rules of our church before each Quarterly Meeting and communion day at your church. Study and practice these rules, that you may love your church, its institutions and peculiarities, its members and ministers. If we live up to the rules of the church and teachings of the Bible, we will enjoy religion and be happy.

Allow me, brothers and sisters, to call your attention to the financial interests of your circuit. They are important and necessary to your existence as an organization. "How shall they hear without a preacher?" is a Bible question. How shall they serve the church without a support? is a question that presents itself to the thinking part of the community and church. Men are called of God to preach the gospel; and men have to be fed, clothed, have means of conveyance, and have home and means of supporting their families. All these cannot be had without money. And the Saviour said of his ministers: "They are worthy of their hire;" "they are worthy of their reward;" "they are worthy of their meat." Worthy of it; entitled to it. God hath ordained: "That they who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel"—that is, be supported by those who hear the preaching. "Let him that is taught in the Word communicate unto Him that teacheth in all good things," says Paul in Gal. vi, 6. The Divine assessment for this object is one-tenth of all you make. And the plan for collecting is, that every one of you lay by on the first day of the week as God hath prospered you. That is the rule. The plan, as recommended by the lay delegates, and adopted by our conference at its session in 1868, was that the steward should estimate what was necessary for the pastor, the presiding elder, the bishops and conference collection, and assess each member of the church as his or her ability might be, so as to make up this aggregate; this assessment to be read to the church conference, and the members to say what they would pay, if they thought they had been assessed too much; and then divide the amount they agreed to pay into twelve parts, and pay one-twelfth each month. Where this has been done, the churches have met these claims punctually. But on your circuit the stewards have not adopted any plan that has system in it. They have, as a Board, assessed each separate church, but the steward for each church has not assessed his members, and called on them for monthly or quarterly collections of these amounts. The result is, that your circuit is further behind in its finances than any other in the district; for a membership of over three hundred members have paid up to the third Quarterly Meeting but about forty-seven and a half cents each for their pastor and presiding elder. I do not doubt but three members of your circuit could be selected, who ought to have paid as much as the whole circuit has paid. In fact, I learn that one member had paid about one-half of all that was paid—thus all the other members had paid only about twenty-five cents each. That was the average, while only a few paid the whole. So in other places. Brothers and sisters, there must be improvement on this subject, or your circuit will go down soon, and be among the things that were. A plan for assessment, and quarterly payment of the assessment by each member of the church, is the only plan that will bring up your finances to the full extent of the necessities of the case. And there is need of this, as the stewards report to me that the largest part of the membership do not pay anything for the gospel. Every member ought to pay as God has blessed or prospered in temporal matters—ought to give as a mean of grace.

Brothers and sisters, will you permit me, in my place, to urge an improvement in this important duty? How can your pastor and his family live on so small a pittance as you have paid him this year? None of you stint your families to that extent, nor in anything, to enable you to pay your pastors. I beg of you, then, to deny yourselves a little that your pastor may be supported and not starved or forced to some other business for a support.

Yours in the gospel,

—— —— P. E.

LETTER FROM KEACHIE, LA.

Mr. Editor: Were every other evidence of Christianity unsatisfactory, there is one, i. e., "the spirit bearing witness," perfectly convincing. The Spirit's work is the consummatum est of redemption. Without it, the mediatorial sovereignty of Christ would become an imaginary dignity, existing only in the minds of subtle doctors. The only true historical evidences of Christianity—the inspired writings—closed in the first century, while its experimental evidences are still spreading, and soon will span all oceans, reaching every clime, until every one shall know the Lord. Creation, redemption and adoption, the shadowings of the Holy Trinity—the three moral wonders of the universe—"which things the angels desire to look into." How insignificant do natural and artificial wonders appear before these. Many have obtained these evidences during the present year on Keachie circuit. On the ninetenth of August we began a meeting at Belle Bower church. The Monday following, Bro. McKee joined us, and remained three days, accomplishing much good in and through the Lord. The meeting continued until the evening of the thirtieth, twelve days in all, with no assistance but that rendered by Bro. McKee. The whole church—with scarcely an exception—was blessed. The oldest members—old Georgia Methodists—testified that it was the most wonderful outpouring of the Holy Ghost they had ever witnessed. There were fifty-two accessions, twenty-five baptisms and thirty-two conversions. A young man's prayer meeting has been organized, and a large number of them have taken up the Cross. Some we trust will answer the heavenly calling, as serious impressions have been acknowledged.

Indulge us in a few reflections. God calls a young man to preach, and he starts—to school. Does he obey the call? Not when "the King's business requireth haste." If God calls a man to preach, we are sure he does not call him to go to school. If God calls a man to preach, it is the surest sign in the world that he is qualified. A learned ministry—learned throughout—is a nuisance in the church. There should be a tithing there of who are learned, but the world at large is unlearned, and we therefore fear that learned preachers would have no place to labor. It would be as great a waste of energies to send a thoroughly educated man to an illiterate people, as to send a tyro to a metropolis. The people would suffer in both cases alike! Begin with the Gnostic heresy that rent the church in the first century, and follow heresies down until now, and they are all the fruits of a vain, ostentatious learning. The famous academies were often the scenes of disgraceful riot, occasioned by the subtletics of learning. The arguments for a learned ministry are the most plausible, but indeed the most sophistical we ever read. "We must have denominational influence"—as if our faith stood "in the wisdom of men and not in the power of God." "Times are changing"—as if that was anything new or wonderful. "The apostles were educated men"—as if that assumption had the force of sound argument, or were indeed true. "Infidelity is rampant"—as if the sword of the Spirit and the Word of God were not sufficient to decapitate the whole system, etc. The only way in which we would collect money to educate a young preacher, would be to get a horse and riggings, about fifty dollars worth of books (the Conference course), and tell him to go—and if he were any account he would acquire knowledge fast enough, and if he were no account, education would do him no good. If God wants learned men in the ministry, they are already educated, and he can call them.

Captain Y. W. Graves is dead. He was a sincere friend, a safe counselor, a kind neighbor and a public spirited man. As a Christian, he will be the greatest loss to our community. Dr. Beazely will furnish you with an obituary soon.

Our presiding elder is at his post, "running to and fro," while knowledge is increasing under his administration. By the energy and enterprise of Bro. McKee, we hope soon to see our presiding elder on a new horse.

Please, Mr. Editor, let us spoil a small square of your paper. On the eighteenth of July last, the Goliah of "the Iron Wheel" tribe "defied the armies of the Lord" in and around Keachie. Waiting not for the slingers and archers, he rushed headforemost against the immutable foundations of the Lutheran and Wesleyan reformations. Brains fell in every direction, but the rocks were unshaken. "Whosoever falleth on these stones shall be broken." Were they to succeed in toppling over these lofty towers of truth, the falling stones would "grind them to powder." It is passingly strange how a man, whose tongue and eyes grow eloquent when depicting the character and virtues of Jezebel, could be so popular among the ladies. As he is universally uncharitable, we propose to him a standing text: "Master, we saw one casting out devils, who followed not us, and we forbid him," hanging the whole discourse upon the latter clause. Methodists prefer to be the subjects rather than the authors of such lawless abuse. The only laurels won by this nervous son of Roger Williams, in these parts, was to insult one of his maternal half brothers, a son of the famous regenerator, Alexander Campbell! In spite of all their "floods of water," we have had a severe drouth, that has left us lately, but with short crops. The negroes around Keachie were delighted last Sabbath by an epistle, purporting to be from Christ. The letter was found under a large stove, which was turned over by a nursing child. It was printed, and first sold at five dollars a copy, and has been reduced since to fifteen cents a copy. It is a sure protection from sudden death. Such is the story told them by these imported swindling carpet-bagger preachers, who sold upward of four hundred of these missives around Keachie. These are the "suffering (?) missionaries," of whom there is such fulsome eulogy in every Radical paper. "From such, good Lord deliver us." Union with such is impossible. Mr. Editor, let your trumpet give a certain sound; your paper is having influence in the Southwest. May God bless both you and us, your poor delinquent brethren and subscribers.

PRAIRIE.

Keachie, La., Oct. 6, 1871.

ITINERANCY.

Mr. Editor: In the last number of our New Orleans Christian Advocate, I find a very pathetic communication from one of our "Senior Itinerant," which forcibly impressed me, calling out the warmest sympathies of my heart; recognizing, as I immediately did, a friend and much loved pastor of other years. Truly, he has passed through all the vicissitudes, every phase and feature of the itinerant life, knowing more of its shadows than its sunshine, reaping but little joy and many discomforts, making great sacrifices, enduring severe hardships, suffering, perchance, cruel and bitter reproaches, ordeals of agonizing self-conflicts, a wanderer over the face of the earth, without habitation or lands; and now, to fill the cup of woe, "old age" is advancing, with all its concomitant infirmities, and still "no foot of ground," or "vine clad cottage," wherein to spend his declining years in complacent reflection upon a life well-spent in the service of that God, who has so wonderfully and mercifully preserved him and his "large family" through so many years of itinerant pilgrimage. Now, if the gospel be not true, and if in this life only we have hope, then the itinerant is, of all men, the most foolish, and we may well exclaim: Hard, indeed, is the life of such a man! But we have not discarded the Bible. The goal is at the end of the race, and a gentle whisper from Calvary says: "In my Father's house are many mansions." No itinerant can embark upon a smooth sea; he must needs expect, yea, prepare himself for stormy weather, rough breakers, and sometimes shipwreck, for "in the world ye shall have tribulation." The Word implies no settled habitation. Houses and lands would clog the itinerant wheel; religion must be the business of his life, for strictly speaking, after all, it is the only thing necessary, all things besides are comparatively little to the purposes of life, and it must be that religion which Christ and his apostles taught. Mr. John Wesley wrote to Mr. Whitefield, upon a certain occasion, saying: "Do you ask me what you shall have?" His answer was most emphatic: "Food to eat, and raiment to wear, a house to lay your head in, such as your Lord had not, and a crown of glory that fadeth not away." Itineracy has been the glory of Methodism. She attributes her glory to-day, and her prosperity to this cause alone. The fervent prayers and zealous labors of the Oxford "holy club" was to establish a firm basis, and now, shall the pomp and vain glory of the world, love of promotion, self-interest or anything else, separate us from the love of God? causing us to forget our holy vows, thereby bringing upon us the sin of apostacy. No! never. But let us gird on the whole armor of the gospel, and let our itinerancy be genuine, and our lives a living, holy exemplification of our solemn, sacred vows; and our daily prayers be that God may strengthen our system, until the itinerant foot has trod the soil from pole to pole, and spread the gospel and unfurled the banner of peace to every nation. I do not believe in forgetting or neglecting, to any extent, our superannuated ministers. The church must be instructed and taught to feel her obligations to them, sufficiently at least, to maintain them in their age and feebleness. Arouse her pride, and let her feel that they are hers, still loved and revered for past faithfulness and usefulness. It may be that God has mercifully spared all of "Senior Itinerant's" children, for the purpose of taking care of him, when the church fails to do it. God made provision for them when they were young, and all united in one household band, and enabled you, even in the itinerancy, to spend "hundreds of dollars upon their education;" and now, if they forsake you and leave you to suffer want, or the church neglects you, God never will. Where is thy faith? Peter walked well at first; doubting made him begin to sink. Do not lose sight of the great truth, that "all things shall work together for good to them that love God." Moses chose rather to suffer affliction, etc.

"Here, then, I doubt no more,
But in His pleasure rest,
Whose wisdom, love and truth and power
Engage to make me blest."

Forget the heavy burdens of the past, look not behind thee; but press forward to joy unspeakable and full of glory, and quietly go on in the work of the Lord; for eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive of the glory that shall be revealed hereafter to the faithful followers of Christ.

"FLETCH."

THE ONLY REMEDY.

Mr. Editor: I was just on the eve of leaving home for my quarterly meeting, when the Advocate of October 5 came to hand, and I stopped a moment to scan its contents. All my sympathies, yea, my soul, was stirred by reading the confession of a drunkard. O, how anxious I felt, and still feel to see, converse and go with him to the Cross, where, when every other means fail, strength and grace may be obtained; for it is said, that if two of you shall agree on earth in anything, ye ask in My name, it shall be done for you of my Father in heaven. My dear unknown friend says he has prayed, but at the same time admits that it was not in confidence that God would hear and heal. Remember, when the disciples failed, on a certain occasion, to cast out an evil spirit, and inquired why? Our Lord replied: "Howbeit, this kind goeth not out, but by fasting and prayer." I have known some saved by ordinary means, but in some others there is nothing but divine grace in the thorough conversion of the soul can overcome an established or fixed passion or appetite, and such is, doubtless, your correspondent. O, with what anguish of soul did I go to him who said: "Though your sins be red as scarlet they shall be," etc., and I took the case of my poor drunken brother in earnest prayer, and still I expect to always for him. O, my brethe not upon the wine when it giv color in the cup. Your only is to leave the association of who drink, and approach no where they drink; gather a you those who abstain, and ever ye desire when ye pray, b and ye shall have it. O, at th impulse on reading the conf had I known where to find th len ons. I felt like running t ter him, or pull him away fro destroyer. O, God, hear m him, and save for Thy son's No more antidote, no medici substitute, no human str pledge, resolution, in such can save now. But all of sanctified, and the soul renova the Holy Ghost, is now th hope, and thank God that, t Jesus Christ, the reformatio and will be accomplished. in much haste, with pencil our friend call on me in my or at my humble home.

Yours in Christ, J. Nicho

MORAL STATE OF CHILDREN.

BY BISHOP E. M. MARVIN.

...f original sin is "engendered of ...e offspring of Adam," of course ...ant children came into the world ...der the taint of it. But many ...rious questions arise out of their ...lation to the New Covenant. Some ...em to infer that through Christ ...ey are relieved at their very birth ...f the depravity which otherwise ...ey had inherited from Adam. So ...r as I can understand it, those ...ho held this view consider infants ...being in fact delivered both from ...e curse and taint of sin—both ...om guilt and depravity. The ...eory seems to be, that they are ...elieved of all the direct conse...uences of the fall until they com...it actual sin.

From all which it is inferred that ...hildren may be so brought up as ...ever to fall into sin, and never to ...orfeit their innocency. Upon this ...eory it must be held possible for ...en to pass through life faultless. ...f the Atonement puts each indi...idual exactly on the footing of ...dam before the fall, then each in...ividual has the same power to pass ...is probation without the commis...ion of sin that Adam had.

To this theory there are several ...tal objections. It is clear that the ...hild is not on the same footing ...with the first man at his creation. ...That his relations to the law and ...government of God are as advan...tageous in the end and with respect ...to his own destiny, I do not for a ...moment doubt. But that in every ...respect his attitude is the same as ...Adam's was at the creation is cer...tainly not true.

1. There is a vast difference of intellectual capacity and knowledge. The infant at first has no knowledge, and his capacity to acquire knowledge increases very slowly. In the first man knowledge seems to have been intuitive, as appears in the familiar instance of his giving names to the beasts as they came before him. The whole narrative implies a high degree of intelligence in the first man.

2. He was in intelligent intercourse with God. He conversed directly with his Maker. This shows an elevation of spiritual nature in most striking contrast with a little child. In the child the physical nature is strongly ascendant, the spiritual being dormant.

3. The first man was not under the doom of physical death until after he fell. "Unto dust shalt thou return" was not spoken to him until after he had sinned. Not until after that was the tree of life guarded from his approach.

4. The child now inherits the earth under the curse which doomed it to bring forth thorns and briers, yielding bread reluctantly to the sweat of man's brow.

I give these only as specimens of the differences between the first man before he sinned and the little child before it falls into conscious transgression. They will serve to show how vast is the disparity. The Atonement does not place the newborn babe just where Adam stood. The cross may place him upon the whole, and with respect to final results, in as advantageous a relation. But at first he is under many painful and humiliating disabilities. He is in a depraved condition.

As to the question, whether a child might attain to manhood and pass through his probationary term without sin, we are perfectly safe in saying that none ever do. "If we say that we have not sinned, we make Him a liar, and His word is not in us." The plague spot never fails to appear.

It is a great mistake to suppose that a child growing up may glide gently and easily into a holy life. Cross-bearing and self-denial are in every case essential incidents of godly living. Natural propensities are never developed into holiness. They must be overcome. "The old man" must be "crucified with the affections and lusts." The "blank paper" theory is contradictory alike of Scripture and experience. Our very nature is infected, and from childhood up "the leprosy lies deep within."

But are not such as die in infancy saved? No one doubts that. Then, when is the dying infant regenerated?

I do not know, and for a very good reason. The Bible has given no definite information on the subject. But there will ever be a class of eager persons in the world who will never be content to let those questions rest upon which God has not spoken. His silence seems to provoke their curiosity. The question, as to when a child dying in infancy becomes regenerate, is of no practical importance whatever.

Two things are clear. One is, that those who die in infancy are saved; the other, that all who reach maturity early, betray depraved propensities. There are no exceptions. The strong statement of Scripture is scarcely hyperbolical; "they go astray as soon as they are born, speaking lies."

But you object that our Lord said: "Of such is the kingdom of God." Certainly, then, they are not depraved, for the Saviour would not have said that the kingdom of God was constituted of such as were depraved.

Upon this I remark, first: That no isolated passages are to be so interpreted as to contradict the entire tenor of Scripture doctrine on any point.

This is a uniform law of exegesis.

In all those passages which treat directly of human nature at large, and as it is related to the fall, and as it appears from our very birth, the fact of our native depravity is affirmed with a formality and emphasis that cannot be denied nor questioned. Now, what our Saviour said of children when he was treating of other matters is not to be interpreted to contradict the formal and uniform statements of the word of God where it treats immediately of this question.

The Saviour would rebuke the worldly and vain ambition of His disciples. He sets a little child in their midst—a little child who knows absolutely nothing of such schemes. Here is one trait in the child which may illustrate a fact in the kingdom of God for instruction and rebuke to His wrangling disciples. In another case, parents bring their children to Christ, and are rebuked by His disciples, as if it were an impertinence to ask his attention to these "crying babies." But He, "much displeased" to see how His disciples disparage the little children, bestows on them the most tender attention, and says, "of such is my kingdom." Far be it from me to overlook them, for among them I find the very constituency of my kingdom. My blood is shed for them, so that if they die before the commission of actual sin they shall be saved. Their angels behold the face of my Father.

There are, indeed, several traits in little children that most strikingly illustrate the Christian character. For instance, they are single-minded in pursuing their purposes. The trouble with us in serving God often is, that we do not pursue His service with a single eye. We adjust our conduct not wholly to the will of God, but partly to the expectations of our acquaintances. Or the attraction of wealth draws us into divergence from the right line of duty. The little child whose heart is set upon some object, pursues it without any consciousness of observation. There is no more striking or beautiful illustration of the single eye with which the Christian is expected and commanded to follow Christ.

The feeling of confidence and love which a little child has toward its father illustrates more nearly than anything else on earth, perhaps, the true feeling of the children of God toward Him, the heavenly Father.

But underneath all this is the fact of spiritual depravity. These beautiful natural traits do not imply spiritual purity. There are many beautiful natural affections even among lower orders of animals. But this is something very different from a heart right with God. When a man has the true child-feeling, the genuine filial spirit toward God, he is a Christian. Yet, nevertheless, so little has the child himself this feeling toward God that it is only by a slow and laborious process that he comes to know or care anything about God. In fact, when he does come to know of God and His will, he becomes also conscious of deep natural propensities adverse to His character and claims.

When the child comes to undertake a life of holiness, as he approaches maturity and gains some insight into the nature of God and of His law, he finds both his own nature and surrounding conditions against the effort. He is himself depraved, and his life is cast upon depraved conditions. "The world" and "the flesh" are equally in league with "the devil."

So far from the nature of the child being pure to begin with, and as a basis of spiritual development, he is to find when he comes to some intelligent perception of the Christian life that self-denial is a prime condition of following Christ. Christian virtue is not the spontaneous outgrowth of "infantile innocency." Very far from it. The old man is there to be crucified with the affections and lusts.

True, there are facts in connection with childhood which render proper Christian training very effective.

The sensibilities are acute, and through them much may be effected. The young mind is credulous, and may be pre-occupied with the truth of the gospel. Indeed, if the Christian parent makes proper use of his advantage he will intrench the truth deeply and almost unassailably in the child's mind. Then there is the power and authority of the parent over the child. Where parental authority is properly established and maintained all the early years of life are wielded by the parent. In the most powerful manner the child may be thus turned and impelled toward a holy life.

The Christian training which goes upon the supposition that the child is good enough without being born again, that proceeds upon the idea of imbred purity instead of inbred sin, may make formalists, but it can never make true Christians. The transforming power of the Holy Spirit must be felt in the heart. Nothing short of this is to taken for true religion.

I have no doubt that children properly trained may often be converted at so early an age that they may not be able to analyze the acts of consciousness, nor to know the character of the emotions of the new life. Such persons are often perplexed in after years by the clear cut, and often startling experience of those who had grown to maturity in sin. Yet no matter how early the work may be accomplished, this work of the Spirit must be done.

The question is often asked, may a child be so trained as never to come into actual exposure to the wrath of God—never to lose infantile justification. May he not at the instant of sufficient intelligence exercise faith and be converted, thus passing immediately out of the state of infant irresponsibility into intelligent Christian life? I doubt not that this is possible—nay, that it is often realized. But none the less is the child born again at that moment than if the work had been delayed until he was fifty years old.

All Christian experience refers to a depraved condition. It is salvation realized in consciousness. It is deliverance from a sinful state. The child passing into the period of responsibility must be saved.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

Propensity for Intoxicants Taken Away.

TESTIMONIALS AT THE WATER STREET MISSION, NEW YORK.

On Sabbath afternoon, September 24, a congregation assembled in the mission hall, or chapel, to hear a sermon from Rev. William H. Boole.

Among those attracted thither were two from whom Mr. Boole thought it might be profitable to others to hear. Possibly he might also have foreseen what proved to be true, that it would be no less profitable for these two to hear from some others present. The meeting was opened for prayer and testimony, instead of preaching.

After several earnest prayers and spirited hymns, Mr. Boole touched feelingly and beautifully upon the encouraging results of the mission as entirely overbalancing whatever discouragements they had been called to meet, and mentioning several who had been saved from deep degradation and sin and had already passed in peace and triumph to heaven.

Rev. Dr. Woodruff followed with some precious lessons in salvation taught him in scenes witnessed by him recently in England, Scotland and Palestine.

Another spoke of the precious power of Jesus to save from sin in general and from particular propensities to sin, and illustrated this by the fact that he himself had been saved from a long-indulged propensity for tobacco.

The usual time for closing had come, but the flood-gates of memory and feeling were opened, and so many rose to speak that Mr. Boole did not find it easy to stop the tide, and was finally compelled to close peremptorily by singing:

"All hail, the power of Jesus' name!"

Meanwhile several extraordinary testimonies were given. Wonderful they would have been anywhere else. Oh, what a sensation they would have made in any up-town church!

One said he had been saved from awful degradation and a long course of drunkenness.

After his conversion he had still suffered from terrible thirst for intoxicating drink. His resolutions and prayers failed to save him from it.

His vows and pledges were equally unavailing. At last, in despair of himself, he cast all on Jesus, and prayed him to take the appetite away. That was ten years ago, and from that hour the propensity to drink was entirely gone. Since then he had sometimes been, he feared, a little noisy, and when asked if he was drunk he answered: "Yes, but not with wine. I was filled with the Spirit."

Another said he had been the wickedest man in the world, John Allen not excepted; fourteen years a river-man, twice in Sing Sing, a terrible drunkard; but the Lord had saved him through and through. The propensity to drink had been perfectly taken away. When he had been weakest Jesus made him strongest.

Another, a woman, now a Bible-reader, said, though yet young, she had been old in sin—a slave to drink.

But Jesus had saved her. She, too, could witness to the power of Christ to cure entirely the propensity for intoxicants!

The testimony of these three witnesses concerning themselves is corroborated by those who know them well and have the utmost confidence in them.—Christian at Work.

"THE PIOUS MONKS of St. Bernard," though perched pretty high upon the Alps, about nine thousand feet, are not altogether destitute of creature comforts. A recent traveler says: "Here are fifteen or twenty fine-looking men, from eighteen to thirty-five, whose surroundings are at least comparatively comfortable, with a plenty of servants, and all supported from government funds. Instead of a bare sustenance we find the monks enjoying a six o'clock dinner of six courses, with wines in plenty. And this in dead of winter, when economy would seem necessary if ever. Instead of periling their lives in searching for benighted travelers they seek such only in the morning, and then by proxy, the servants and the dogs only being sent out for the purpose! And so live the "pious monks of St. Bernard." Their sacrifice, then, is in exchanging a life of frivolity for one of retirement; or, in many cases, yielding a life of manual labor for the privilege of giving themselves wholly to their books, a fine library being always at their disposal—and expenses paid. Among the most unpleasant things connected with this monastery hitherto, has been the necessary isolation of the inmates during all the winter months from the outside world, but by a recent arrangement a hardy mountaineer in government service carries the mail to the hospice alternate days. Besides this, a telegraph line is already completed to a point far up the mountain, and is expected to reach the hospice sometime the present summer.

DEATH OF THE REV. JOSIAH ROBERTS. This aged servant of God and the church, departed this life, September 14, 1871, at Dr. Bell's, near Bethesda camp ground, Independence county, Arkansas, where he was engaged in a most interesting meeting. On Monday night, he preached and administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. This was his last act of ministerial labor. The Great Shepherd soon called him from labor to his reward above. Truly a prince and a great man has fallen among us. We miss him, we mourn him, but we mourn not as those who have no hope. He was seventy-one years old; fifty years he was a local minister in the Methodist Church. Early in life he moved from Tennessee to Georgia, where he remained until about seventeen years ago, when he removed to North Arkansas. He preached a great deal; really, he loved to preach. Last year he was employed by the presiding elder, Rev. B. Lee, on the Batesville circuit, and this year on the Bethesda circuit. His labors were blessed.—Western Methodist.

BISHOP KEENER.—The San Francisco Spectator of September 28 says:

The Bishop has just arrived from Oregon. His trip was fatiguing, but pleasant, and his health has been preserved. Among other things he gave us an account of the Columbia Conference missionary meeting, which was a most successful affair—about $250 were raised, and a fine missionary spirit prevailed. By-the-way, our Oregon brethren have not given us an account of their Conference session, as we hoped they would. Bishop Keener left this city on Friday to attend the camp meeting at Linden. He stopped at Stockton, and preached on Friday night. He will return here this week, pay a flying visit to Santa Rosa, to see the college and its surroundings, and will preach in Minna Street church next Sunday, morning and evening. So it will be seen that his time is not spent in idleness.

MUSICIANS are proverbially sensitive, and the Holy Father has had the misfortune to exasperate one of them. While the Abbe Liszt, the greatest of pianists, was playing one of his best compositions in his presence, his Holiness went to sleep. Liszt was so enraged that he left Rome, never to revisit it during the lifetime of Pio Nono.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Italian Evangelical journal, L'Eco della Verita, recently received a letter from a priest in the south of Italy, asking for a certain number of Protestant books, and proposing to say a stipulated number of masses as payment for them!

A NEW BUILDING is erecting in Hartford for the Women's Christian Association of that city. It is intended as a home where young women may be provided with wholesome food and comfortable and pleasant lodgings at such prices as may be within their means.

METHODISM IN COPENHAGEN.—Rev. J. Cramer, of the Legation of the United States at Copenhagen, writes in a private note: "Methodism is progressing slowly in Copenhagen. It seems to flourish better in other parts of Denmark than here. The Sunday school connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church here needs a library."

DR. COTE writes to the Religious Herald that the Baptist church in Rome has been prosecuted before the civil courts, at the instigation of the priests, on the plea that its meetings are immoral and ought to be prohibited. The immorality consists in attacking the errors of the papacy. The trial is exciting great interest in the city.

THE granting of religious liberty in Saxony, Germany, by statute, in 1870, has given rise to increased activity among the Methodist missionaries of that country. Before the act of 1870 the State forbade the organization of independent churches, and forcibly repressed all dissenting bodies of Christians. The new liberty has enlarged the enterprise of the mission workers.

THE General Assembly of the Evangelical churches of Spain convened in Sevilla, April 12, to treat of union among the various Christian congregations already existing in Spain. The number of congregations represented in the assembly was thirteen. The basis of the union was approved and the union agreed to. A meeting was appointed for November 15, to complete the negotiations for union.

AN EPISCOPAL CLERGYMAN calls attention, in the Chicago Tribune, to the great gains which his denomination has made, at the expense of the other churches. He says: "Not only is it true that about two-thirds of the clergy of the church are recruits from other religious bodies, but a majority of our bishops were originally from the ranks of denominational clergy. A single bishop has reported that two hundred and seven out of two hundred and eighty-five clergymen ordained by him came from other religious bodies."

THE Lutherans have been overtaken by the woman movement. At a meeting of the Tenth District Conference of the Synod of Pennsylvania it was voted: "1. That it is desirable to re-establish the office of deaconess in our congregations. 2. That believing and intelligent women should be regularly appointed by the congregations and formally inducted into office. 3. That the Synod should instruct its liturgical committee to prepare a form for the installation of such officers and a general statement of the duties to be attended to by them."

IN INDIA, says the Bengal Christian Herald of July 7, 1871, a regular inquiry has been lately set on foot as to the minimum marriageable age of Bengali girls. Medical celebrities (Hindoo and English) were invited to enlighten the public on the question. Their judgment varies somewhat, though not extensively. With the exception of Dr. Dey, who fixes the minimum at fourteen, the referees are unanimous in determining that in no case ought it to be set below sixteen. This is a most important matter in its bearing, not only upon the condition of women through the empire, but upon the progress of the entire missionary work.

THE CRADLE OF CHRISTIANITY.—The Mission church at Nazareth has been completed. Nazareth has now a population of some seven thousand souls, among whom nominal Christians largely predominate, one-fifth only being Mohammedans. The plain of Jezreel to the south and east is inhabited by Moslems. Here, too, come periodically the wandering Bedouins, and the Druses on the southern slopes of Lebanon are within reach. Thus from the lowly spot where our Saviour passed the most of his earthly life, his gospel can be widely preached to the Moslems, wandering Bedouins, Druses and nominal Christians of the corrupt churches of the East.

AT THE recent meeting of the Wesleyan "Missionary Committee of Review," held in Manchester, England, there was a strong gathering of friends, and a good supply not only of strong sense to grapple with the great topics and difficult questions presented, but of strong hearts full of liberality. A Mr. Fernley, of Southport, showed his satisfaction with the report from Italy by offering twenty-five thousand dollars to provide a suitable place of worship in Rome; and a Mr. Heald no sooner heard that than he offered another twenty-five thousand dollars, in part also for the Italian work. The debt on this Wesleyan Society is fast melting away. In 1865 it had reached the burdensome amount of one hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars.

AT THE Universalist National Convention held in Philadelphia, it was announced that thirteen out of twenty-one State Conventions have approved of the Gloucester constitution, and that no adverse vote has as yet appeared. The session was therefore organized under the provisions of the new law. The number of pupils reported in Sunday schools was 38,824, showing a net gain 2504. The value of church property is $5,808,213, while the indebtedness has been reduced $297,802, leaving an indebtedness of $500,054. Church edifices have been erected during the year to the amount of $298,382, while $48,546 have been raised for schools and colleges, and $80,685 for missions and charities, together with $19,500 for miscellaneous purposes, making an aggregate of $734,255, which added to $948,537 reported last year makes the result of centenary work feet up to $1,682,792.

REV. JOHN T. GULICK, of the A. B. C. F. M. Mission in North China, now in this country, advocates the immediate establishment of a mission to the Mongols, a population of from three million to six million, lying outside of and north from China proper. Methodist missionaries in China are looking in the same direction. I. N. Wheeler, superintendent of Methodist missions at Pekin, dating at Kalgan, a city of one hundred thousand inhabitants, says: "I hope we will be reinforced in such numbers as soon to be able to set apart two men for the work in Mongolia and Manchuria. We must occupy this vast territory, for the door of entrance is wide open. The American Board have a station in Kalgan, and the brethren here are beginning to see the first fruits of their labors." Seven native Chinese preachers will be admitted into the several conferences of the current conference year, among the Methodists in the United States; four have already been, and three more are to be admitted—one each in the Vermont, Black River and Baltimore Conferences. These all have served a probation and passed an examination in the studies assigned them, and received approval and recommendation.

BAPTISM IN THE MEDITERRANEAN.—Rev. Mr. Knapp, writing to the Missionary Magazine, says he baptized several in the Mediterranean, and that it was a season of great interest. He says: "It was the first time I had baptized in the Mediterranean, though Bro. Calleja had done it often. You can conceive the thoughts and feelings I had, as standing on the shore about a mile above the city, under a towering cliff called the Cantera, I gave out the hymn:

"I'm but a traveler here,
Heaven is my home."

We sang it with our faces toward Corinth, Ephesus, Antioch and Jerusalem. O what a day for Spain! The primitive church, and the primitive baptism coming home again. Why, it is one of the many marvels of this latter day. While we were singing, the people in the neighboring houses came streaming down, taking their position on the jutting rocks, and above on the lower projections of the Cantera. There were the hardy fisherman of the coast, his wife and children, dressed in gala, for it was Sunday, the feast-day of Spain. The gospel is achieving great things in Spain. Protestantism must triumph there.

THE London Missionary Chronicle, for September, contains interesting notices of the Lagoon Islands, which are reckoned "out stations" of the Samoan Mission by the London Missionary Society. Native teachers have been placed on some of them, and in 1870, on the occasion of the visit of the John Williams to Samoa, the Rev. S. J. Whitmee, of Upolu, was deputed by his brethren to proceed in her on a visit to many of these specks in the wide waters. On the first at which he touched he found a community of twenty-seven souls brought together by a citizen of the United States, who has taken possession of this island, about three miles in diameter, and is patriarch thereof. The next island had two hundred and twenty-three inhabitants, sixty of whom are Catholics, and one hundred and sixty-three Protestants. Here Mr. Whitmee presided at church meeting, and admitted twenty-seven members. These islands have been the hunting-grounds of the Peruvian slavers, and the population has been frightfully diminished by their ravages. Some of these islands are completely Christianized. At one called Vaitupu the inhabitants, who number three hundred and seventy-six, were delighted to see the missionary ship, and gave Mr. Whitmee a hearty reception.

SERVING TABLES.

It was in reference to the handling and disbursement of benevolent contributions that the apostles took exceptions when they declared: "It is not reason that we should leave the Word of God and serve tables." It was not an objection to the management of their domestic affairs, nor to labor and business connected with their own support. It was church finances which they characterized as the serving of tables, and which they regarded as an unreasonable diversion from their proper calling as ministers of the gospel. Prayer and the ministry of the Word demanded their time and strength, and it was fitting and necessary to the effective performance of their work, that others should take charge of the temporal interests of the church. So far as this particular instance goes, it has no immediate application to those preachers who, amidst their ministerial duties, are engaged in secular pursuits for the maintenance of their families. Serving tables they are, but not precisely the tables that the apostles found so onerous and so incompatible with their praying and preaching.

We might suppose that collecting and distributing money for the poor, and for religious purposes generally, was most suitable to their pious employment. But they judged otherwise, and turned the responsibility over to the seven deacons. They probably saw that God had called some to attend to the spiritual business of the church, and that others were called to administer in temporal matters. We admit the apparent necessity laid upon preachers to officer our colleges and schools, to manage the publishing interests, to edit papers, and to perform the labor of agents in raising money for religions enterprises; but still this is the original import of serving tables, and the very things which the apostles felt they were not called to do. It is an admitted evil that so many effective preachers are taken from the pastorate to fill positions which have little or nothing to do with their preaching functions, and which could be as well filled by devoted laymen. Not only are they altogether withdrawn from pastoral labors, but, as a rule, their power and usefulness in the pulpit are greatly impaired. We have rarely seen the man whose preaching has not deteriorated while occupied with other church business than that which was proper to the direct and spiritual duties of his ministry. The maximum of effectiveness can only be attained by a close and absorbing attention to this one thing. Circumstances of temperament and education may modify this conclusion in some degree, but it is generally true. The fact that the service is intimately connected with religions and benevolent objects, does not altogether relieve the case. The encroachment upon the time and thought is nearly the same as in the management of personal concerns. Building churches, publishing books, endowing colleges and conducting newspapers are all vital religious interests, but the commission to preach the gospel does not embrace them. These are the works of the church through its lay instrumentalities. To impose them upon those who have been set apart to "the ministry of the Word" is not reason, though it may be a lamentable necessity. The preacher is expected to be a man of all work, and as things now are, he must be, if he keeps his head above water and sustains himself in his appointed charge. He must do much of the financiering, build churches and parsonages, look after debts and repairs, and supervise the benevolent and educational enterprises. To give himself "continually to prayer and to the ministry of the Word" is out of the question. He must do what ought to be done by stewards, trustees and other laymen, or it will not be attended to. Paul did this sort of work, raised collections and disbursed the money, and put his hand to everything, because there was no help for it. He would not have hesitated to become an agent, a publisher or a house builder on occasion. Like our modern preachers, he would have submitted, though under protest, to the necessities of the case.

There is a more excellent way, which the church of the distant future may possibly realize, in which the pulpit and pastorate will be released from this drain upon their resources and efficiency. Preaching and the cure of souls will then be kept to themselves, as enough to occupy those who have been ordained to these duties, and devoted laymen will be found to do the work which lies outside of the minister's specific and engrossing vocation. In the good time coming physical disabilities may retire a man from pastoral labor to some other department of usefulness, but, in the main, there will be forthcoming "men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business." There will be men who recognize their call, not to the ministry of the Word, but to devote themselves to the temporal affairs of the church, and who will bring to these important duties the talent, self-denial and zeal which are exhibited in the best type of ministerial consecration. The ranks of the ministry might be strengthened at once, if we could obtain godly laymen to take the places of those preachers who have been detailed to "serve tables." There are scores, and perhaps hundreds, of preachers in our church to-day who are doing laymen's work, and are to that extent diverted from their proper vocation.

As the lay element becomes potential in the legislation and government of the church, we may hope that it may also be felt in relieving the ministry of this embarrassment. The introduction of laymen into our councils, and investing them with their new responsibilities, will doubtless lead in time to this result. They will be in a position to see what is wanted of them, and to heed the call which is made upon them for a more direct participation in the activities and enterprises of the church. Much that the preachers are compelled to do, they can do better, and while they relieve one arm of the service, they will greatly improve and strengthen the other. When we see a man of ability and influence taking hold of church business, and giving himself heartily up to it, we feel that consecrating hands might well be laid upon him. It may not be the fault of the laity altogether that the supply of such men is so meager. The ministry has something to do in looking them out, and in bringing them forward. Let the obligation and the want be clearly seen, and something will be achieved toward meeting the demand. Men of one work, who are not preachers, men who can serve tables, and thus relieve an embarrassed ministry, are scarcely less needed than an increase of preachers. The field is about as white to harvest for the one class of laborers as for the other.

The Pacific Methodist College and the Pacific Conference.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 12, 1871.

Directly upon returning from the "big trees," I went to see another big thing—the Pacific Methodist College, located at Santa Rosa. Considering everything, it is a grand affair. I wish that every part of the church was as well off in its educational interests as is the Methodist Episcopal Church South at this point. This may surprise those who have not been on the spot. But the college building is most admirably built, is highly ornate, and is the best arranged for the uses of a school that I have ever seen. It filled me with a glow of pride, and convinced me, for the seventh time, that men can usually accomplish whatever they think they can. I surveyed it first by moonlight, after preaching. There it stood, the expression of youthful vitality; worth five such buildings as Dr. Fisk had at Wilbraham. Then, with lamp in hand, we went over the inside. Every part showed liberal ideas and good taste. The friends at Santa Rosa have strong backs, and their views are full of life. The amount necessary to finish paying for the building will all be got out of Sonoma county—every cent of it—and the general territory of the conference will be looked to for a liberal endowment. It has one hundred and sixty students; four professors—all active, capable and experienced teachers.

The Pacific Conference met at San Jose, on the fourth instant. This beautiful town is in a valley, at the end of the San Francisco bay. Imagine Lake Pontchartrain long instead of round, surrounded by valleys, foot hills, and back of these, mountains; let there be an opening a mile wide in the lake shore between two high jagged rocks leading out to the sea, and you may have some notion of this magnificent bay. Between San Jose and the sea there is a range of mountains. These break off the raw winds of the Pacific. Here reigns a constant Louisiana October; never too cool and seldom too warm. Railroads run up from this point on each side of the bay along the valley, in the direction of San Francisco. A good many Southern people have settled in the valley of Santa Clara, in and about San Jose; and, if I were living on the Pacific coast, I should probably be found at this point. Never was there a finer climate for a white man who wishes to do his own work—breezy enough and bracing enough for plowing or harvesting. I shall say nothing more about fruits, only that I baptized a plump little babe, named Paul Stockton, and I wish you could have seen the basket of grapes his father sent me on the occasion—enough to last a boarding-house a week, and of the richest variety and flavor: the Muscatel, Rose of Pern, Summer Grape, Concord, White Muscat and others, names not known.

The conference was a pleasant surprise to me all the way through. Its strength in men of age and experience, the number of its churches and parsonages, the elastic readiness with which it met difficulties, and its staple of effective protracted-meeting-element gave me a view of the Methodist Episcopal Church South on this coast I was far from having at my first acquaintance with it, and as it presented itself upon my arrival. For instance, it has twice as many parsonages as the Mississippi Conference, and three times as many as the Louisiana. Its list of claims and receipts would compare favorably with either. It had become somewhat moody; an idea that nobody in the East ever thought of them, that this coast was isolated, and that the failures of the past, at certain points, could never be counteracted successfully. Then, too, the incessant love, lively interference and gratuitous counsel of the Northern Methodists, hereabouts, have required so much watching, not to say praying, that there was enough to superinduce some morbidness of temper. (I am eating grapes just now, not sour ones.) Well, all these things have resulted in giving the Conference a good edge, in addition to its other good qualities. There were admitted on trial Rufus F. Allen, Alfred Ewing Layson, A. F. Trousdale. I send you a list of the appointments. The Old Debt had never been assumed by the Conference fully, but amounts had been forwarded during the year for that purpose. The balance of the same, assessed to this conference, was three hundred and seventy-five dollars. This was raised by the preachers in a short time—not quite as swiftly as Dr. Winfield raised that at Little Rock last year, but in less than a quarter of an hour—by the same watch. The Visalia school was involved and about to be sacrificed, when the amount required to relieve it—two thousand one hundred dollars—was taken up by ten preachers on the conference floor, in about the same time. At the missionary meeting on Saturday night things were more deliberate—our missionary veins do not bleed as freely as they should—but four hundred and one dollars were raised at that meeting for missions. Now, putting all these things together, it seems to me that those birds, that have been wheeling about and waiting to pick the eyes and bones of this conference, had as well fly off. The conference determined to change the publisher of the Spectator, and elected Mr. Wick B. Parsons both publisher and editor. It also incorporated into the management of the paper publishing committees from Columbia and Los Angeles.

On next Sabbath I dedicate a church at Bayview, and on my return from Los Angeles Conference, another at Gilroy. A letter, just received from Bro. Spurlock, brings intelligence of a revival going on at Los Nictos—where the Los Augeles Conference is to meet—and that eighty-two have been converted.

I omitted to say that the entire session of the Pacific Conference was characterized by perfect harmony and a good religious atmosphere. Mourners were at the altar, and both preachers and people enjoyed the fellowship of the saints, which a Methodist Conference rarely fails to provide.

THE SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.—We are glad to learn, in a note from President Andrews, that this institution, at Greensboro, opened on the fourth instant, with flattering prospects. We have no doubt that Dr. Andrews will realize his most sanguine expectations. The University is doing a great work, and the preachers and people are becoming more and more enlisted in its support. Dr. Andrews says:

You may say to the friends of the Southern University that the opening of the session on the fourth day of October was the finest that we have had since the war. The star of this noble institution is rising, and we hope, at no distant day, to see her halls filled with hundreds of young men. Then she will become what her founders fondly hoped that she would one day be—the glory of Methodism in this country, and her intellectual children the lights of the church in their day and generation. Alabama, Tennessee, Louisiana and Arkansas are represented in the pupils now in attendance.

We learn from the Southern Christian Advocate that Rev. A. J. Woldridge, of the Florida Conference, died in the triumphs of the faith on the third instant.

GOD'S WORK must be done in a good spirit, and according to the rule of God's word.

AN EDUCATED MINISTRY.

BY BISHOP M'TYEIRE.

Amidst the many things that inspire hope and admiration and gratitude, there is one aspect of the situation that causes solicitude. I have tried to quiet it, to dispel it, to reason it away, to hope against it, but it steadily grows on me; observation and reflection increase it. To be direct, I mean the small proportion of educated and fully qualified men in our present ministry, and the lack of any adequate appliances among us for securing a proper supply of such men in the ministry of the future.

In two notable instances, the fathers of American Methodism ate sour grapes, and the teeth of their children are set on edge. The early itinerants were mainly bachelors. Marrying and locating went together as the rule. The country was in a condition to pay but little—the preachers needed but little. This was well—providential, in the beginning; but evidently it could not so continue, if the church was to have development and continuance. It was an incident of the times. The mistake was in defending it as a principle. Assailed by enemies on every hand, they made a virtue, a boast, of this temporary expedient, and justified it on too broad a ground. It came to be understood that Methodism was not only a true gospel, but a cheap one. The idea of a paid ministry was synonymous with that of a mercenary ministry. Dearly have we answered for it. Like all errors, this one had to be corrected, and slow has been the process. This boomerang has been flying back in our faces for forty years, while the Methodist Church has been trying to get on the higher ground of God's ordinance, that they who consecrate themselves to the preaching of the gospel are entitled to live by it. Old members there are who persistently reckon what they contribute to the support of their pastor as a gift, a charity. Conscientious congregations do not scruple to settle with him at fifty cents on the dollar.

Wesleyan Methodism holds the true theory on ministerial education. It has never made the classics or graduation in a theological school the sine qua non for any grade of the ministry. I am confident even to boldness on this subject. I would be willing to go before a jury of unprejudiced and intelligent men, selected by the advocates of the opposite theory, and undertake to prove that it is impracticable, unreasonable, unphilosophical and unscriptural. The gospel will never be preached, nor the world converted, if we wait fastidiously for such thorough preparation of all the instruments. Many men are truly called to preach who must be classed as uneducated, and circumstances prevent their rising out of that class. And yet their ministry has been owned of God. It has found a large proportion of the world, as it is well adapted to be operated on by its instrumentality. The seal of the Master is set too plainly on such a ministry for us to doubt its right. Methodism owes too much to it to allow it to be questioned. As a church we have openly espoused it, used it, vindicated it.

But here was a mistake—in replying to opponents our zealous defenders in the past have sometimes leaned to an extreme, and permitted us to be put in a false position. The idea of an educated ministry got confounded in the popular mind with that of a man-made ministry. It came somehow to be understood that a thorough human preparation for the duties of the sacred office was incompatible with a divine call. It was popular to make contemptuous allusions to theological institutes, or seminaries, as "preacher-factories." All this was unfortunate, and we are paying the penalty. That we advocate the divine vocation, and the eminent usefulness of unlearned ministers, does not logically make us the opponents of a learned ministry. We hold to both, and we have use for both; and they are not incongruous elements of the same ecclesiastical body.

One may say: "Take, in a city or State, any number of preachers representing those churches that lay the greatest stress on an educated ministry, and we will show you an equal number of Methodist preachers of equal reputation, learning and power."

Granted—but we ought to have more, for we have perhaps ten times as many members as they. Our scriptural doctrines and powerful economy of propagandism have moved us up to a position which involves greater responsibilities and possibilities than any which confront those churches. We have not felt that the measure of our duty was reached by merely keeping even with them in other respects, and why in this?

Those who merely attend the sessions of annual conferences, or frequent college commencements, and city churches, cannot conceive of the poverty of the pulpit and pastorate in that kind of material desiderated. And unless we bestir ourselves, there is, in the not distant future, a great want traveling to meet us, like an armed man. Why build large and tasteful houses of worship if you are making no provision for men to fill the pulpits? Let us spend some of the money and the labor here.

In confirmation of these views I have gathered facts, some of which it was my purpose to present, but at this point my pen hesitates. It might grieve a generation of God's children—it might give the enemy occasion to blaspheme. This is my church, and these are my brethren. And yet, unless something is published by ourselves, however painful on this subject, we shall never get rid of that self-complacency and glorification that lies in the path of progress.

Last July the British Conference, after an account of their conversion and call to preach, accepted fifty-one young men for the itinerant ministry, and straightway distributed them among the theological institutes of the connection, where, under the influence and training of the best and wisest men, they are to be more thoroughly furnished, and thence called out into the regular pastorate. We should have put them at once in charge of circuits and stations—a procedure not only hazardous, but so wasteful of precious material that it reminds one of grinding up our seed-corn. The Wesleyans may have occasional fluctuations in their membership, but evidently the spirituality of the ministry is not lessened by its excellent system of preparation. They, too, license unedncated men to preach, and to great benefit; but no church without the guidance of educated minds could have taken the position held by the Wesleyans to-day. They preach, and publish and write, and occupy platforms with the foremost. They have compelled the recognition of learned dissenters and of the haughty establishment, and their "holy gospel" is recognized along with themselves. They have projected and carry on a foreign missionary system that is the admiration of Christendom. At home they are felt for good—permeating all classes, above and below. Mere zeal of soul, and earnest bodily exercise, and imperfectly ennunciated truth, could not accomplish this. They had no prejudice to overcome, for Wesley, Coke, Fletcher, and such like, were before them—men in whom the Holy Spirit dwelt with learning, and by whose educated minds the true faith was defined and defended.

The Northern Methodists have three first class theological institutions—Boston, Madison and Chicago. Our neighbors, the Southern Presbyterians, have at Hampden Sydney, Virginia, and at Columbia, South Carolina, two excellent seminaries. The Southern Baptists also have in Greenville, South Carolina, an ably officered institute for giving the higher education and fuller preparation to such young ministers as may be able to avail themselves of its advantages; and they are projecting another in Kentucky. But Southern Methodism, with wealth and opportunities and responsibilities in her wide and inviting sphere—equaled by none—is doing comparatively nothing—waiting passively for such favors as chance may bring in the fast approaching day of unequal contest.

When I consider these things I am troubled. I wake at night and think on this subject, and cannot sleep. My solicitude will be shared by him who knows what transpires in the place where appointments are fixed, and hears the importunate demands for educated preachers which cannot be met, because the supply is not at hand. Or let him go abroad among the districts, and hear and sound the people, and reconnoiter the situation, and he will see that in many respects we have even now advanced to a line beyond which we cannot go with present appliances, and have occupied positions which we may hardly hold.

Our colleges are sending out a few young men every year—"polished shafts." We gladly receive them; but what are they among so many? For more specific results, not strictly academic, the church has been looking to the Biblical schools announced in connection with them. I cannot speak in terms too high of the noble and unselfish faculties who, under every discouragement, have kept open these ill-supported colleges, and offer tuition free to every young man looking to the ministry. But the expectations of the church, I do not think, have been met by these Biblical school attachments. I am sure they are not meeting its wants. They have shown defect at two points:

1. Valuable as are the facilities afforded, many young men who, with a year or two of study, would make acceptable and useful ministers, cannot avail themselves of them; they cannot advance the money to pay board and other necessary expenses.

2. These improvised Biblical chairs even where existing in fact and not merely in name, are not themselves so furnished as to meet the wants of candidates who are able to afford, and who can take on, and who desire to have, the highest theological culture. They must go without it, to our loss and theirs—or subject themselves and us to the mortification of going outside of their own church institutions.

To these two points, it seems to me, the church should be directing attention. If anybody has money to give or lend to the Lord, let him or her consider this. Was there ever such an opportunity for the rich to lay the foundation for immortality in well-doing?

We have the material, an abundance of the best material that ever church was blessed with. Who will help to prepare it for the utmost usefulness?—Nashville Christian Advocate.

LETTER FROM TEXAS.

Mr. Editor: It has now been five years since I transferred from the Mississippi to the Texas Conference, where I remained only one conference year, and transferred to this, the Northwest Texas Conference, where I expect to spend the remainder of my natural life.

All who move to Texas are not satisfied; hence, I do not say to any one, come to Texas, but I have seen much of the Southern States, and have traveled several thousand miles in Texas, and nowhere have I found any country that will compare with this for rich land, health, pleasant climate; in a word, a man can live and do well here with less effort than in any country I have ever lived.

No man coming to Texas should stop east of the Trinity River, and from Waco to Red River is my choice of country. Anywhere in that region we make from thirty to seventy-five bushels of corn per acre, and from one-half to one a half bale of cotton. The streams run from west to east, emptying into the Trinity, etc.; the water is the clearest and best I ever saw anywhere, but of it all the Waxahachie country is my choice. Society here is as good as at any place in Mississippi before the war. Our political condition is not good by any means, but, judging from my Mississippi papers, it is far superior to that of Mississippi. This is only attributable to the fact that there are not so many negroes in Northwest Texas. If I had space, I would give you my experience in getting to the polls to vote on last Tuesday, at Corsicana, the present terminus of the Central Railroad, and is the county seat of Navarro.

We have in this conference two schools directly under our control. Waco Female College, situated at the city of Waco, and has for its president Prof. R. P. Decbard. Last year I was chairman of the Conference Committee to visit that school at its annual examination. This gave me a good chance to see the inner workings of the school. It is a most excellent school, and has about two hundred scholars in attendance. The school property is worth thirty thousand dollars, and when we speak of money we always mean specie.

This year, I was chairman of the committee to visit Marviu College, located at Waxahachie. This is a conference male school, and is only two years old. The new large brick college is just completed; it is worth between thirty thousand and forty thousand dollars. The two years past with this school was a perfect success. We now occupy the new building, and have the Rev. J. W. P. McKenzie, D.D., for president. I was present at the opening of the September term. The school opened with one hundred and thirty scholars, and is now matriculating two hundred, with an every-day increase. We are out of debt, and having property largely above our outlay of money, and having an active agent in the field soliciting donations, we soon expect to endow it. It is not under the free school system, and as a member of the board of trustees, I shall endeavor to keep it just as it is; but, so far as I have heard, this is the feeling of all our people, as well as of the board of trustees.

There is an effort to build a University in Texas, which is to be done by the five conferences in Texas. The committee to locate have met two or three times, and every time a majority was in favor of locating at Waxahachie, but as it was not unanimous it was postponed. That committee meets at Corsicana, the seat of our conference, on the first day of November, which is the first day of conference.

We have another school at Corsicana, one at Butler, and one at Port Sullivan. All are said to be doing well; that at Corsicana I know is. I was present at the examination, and was much pleased with the school.

Our conference is alive to education, and, by the by, I have read No. 2 of Bro. Curtiss' article on education. I hope they will do much good. While on this subject, I will say, that during the last two years I received letters from five or six young men in Mississippi, who want to preach, feel that they must preach, but their education is not equivalent to the demands of the times, and yet they have not the means to pay their way. Some of them have been teaching, some clerking and some farming, to get means to educate themselves for the ministry. This has been noticed by a church with much less numerical and financial strength in Mississippi than ours, and propositions have been made to some of them to join them, and their board and tuition shall be gratuitous.

We have placed two young men from my work in Marvin College, to prepare them for the ministry, and I made arrangements, two weeks ago, for board for one of those young men in Mississippi, and wrote him to come on, and neither his board nor tuition should cost him anything; and I think I shall be able to make arrangements for every one of them to complete their education, free of cost. All young men preparing for the ministry get their tuition free of cost, also the children of itinerant preachers.

God has greatly blessed my efforts for the church in Texas this year. There have been between one and two hundred conversions, and one hundred and twenty accessions on my work this year. I have baptized above ninety adults and sixty-seven infants; have built four churches, which are estimated to be worth eleven thousand dollars specie; have, subscribed, $358 50 for home missions, above two hundred of which is paid in, and I expect to get it all on this round; for other church purposes about one hundred dollars. The total membership, including the new recruits, is three hundred and fifty-seven. My assessment is eight hundred and fifty dollars; it is not all paid in yet, but the stewards say it shall be.

The most of my time has been spent in the vicinity of Waxahachie, since I came to this conference.

Bro. William Price has bought property at Waxahachie, and located his family there for educational purposes. He is doing well in Texas, and is much beloved by his people.

Bro. Hale located at the last session of our conference, and is preparing to practice medicine.

Bro. T. J. Hudson lost his wife a few weeks ago, and is left with five little children. I greatly sympathize with him in his loss.

Bro. Akin bought a farm, and has located his family near Chatfield, on my circuit, and is traveling the Corsicana circuit this year. The locating of a railroad depot at Corsicana has caused such an immense immigration to that place, that it will be made a station next year.

More Facts About Centenary College.

Dear brethren of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences, please tell your people that if our friends and members in these two conferences, who send their sons to other and no better schools than Centenary, would patronize the Centenary, and give the amounts saved (by this change of schools) to Centenary for one single year, the sum would be sufficient to put our college in thorough repair. Tell them that if they will patronize Centenary, that they will keep their money at home, instead of sending it far away to circulate; and, by so doing, they will help their own brethren, build up their own college, leave a blessed legacy for their own offspring, build up their own country, and educate their own preachers, free from all the isms found elsewhere. Is not Methodism Christianity in earnest? Do we not need well-informed men to preach it? Our Baptist brethren are now educating sixty young men for the ministry, free of cost, at Clinton, Mississippi. Come, brethren, will you not imitate this good example? If so, just a mite, and old Centenary is prepared for the work. But do you say "Come and tell them yourself, you are the agent." Well, I wish I could, but time is lacking. I cannot see every congregation in the two conferences in one year, and must not wait for another. But it is of the utmost importance that every congregation hear and help, for in this way alone can the mass of our people be interested in its welfare, so as to give it support and patronage equal to its deservings. Do not forget a Centenary College meeting, and be sure to send one student to Jackson, Louisiana, and one hundred dollars to Col. D. T. Hardee, Clinton, Louisiana, who is treasurer of the building committee.

Yours, in Christ, B. F. White,
Agent Centenary College.

Rev. John Cousins, agent of the Wilberforce University, an institution under the control of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, devoted to the education of colored youth, and located near Xenia, Ohio, called on us this week. Mr. Cousins comes well endorsed, and the object of his agency is deserving of support from all who may be able to render assistance to the institution which he represents.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The members of the Alabama Conference, preachers and laymen, attending the next session of that body, to be held in Mobile, Alabama, commencing on Wednesday, the twenty-ninth of November, 1871, will, on reaching the city, assemble at the St. Francis Street Methodist church, on the corner of St. Francis and Joachim streets, where a committee will be ready to receive them and direct them to their homes for the session. The members of the conference who bring their wives must give us timely notice by letter, that provision may be made for them. The committee of the first and second year's course will meet their classes for the annual examination in the basement of the St. Francis Street Methodist church, and the committee of the third and fourth year's, as well as the committee to examine candidates for admission into the itinerancy, in the basement of the Franklin Street church, on Monday night at seven o'clock.

Smith, Cheatham & Co.—We take pleasure in calling attention to the advertisement of the above St. Louis firm. Mr. Smith is a native Virginian, but has been doing business in St. Louis for the past eighteen years; Mr. James W. Dranghon was born and raised in the parish of West Feliciana, Louisiana, and has resided for twenty years in the parish of Carroll; Mr. Cheatham is a native of Alabama, but raised principally in Mississippi, and has resided for twenty-seven years in Carroll parish, Louisiana. The two last mentioned gentlemen have been well and favorably known in the northeastern portion of our State, and the high esteem of their acquaintances in Louisiana will, doubtless, draw to the firm a deserved patronage.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

A Critical Greek and English Concordance of the New Testament. Prepared by Charles F. Hudson, under the direction of Horace L. Hastings. Revised and completed by Ezra Abbot, LL.D. Second Edition, Revised. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1871. The plan of this work is nearly the same as The Englishman's Greek Concordance, published by the Harpers more than twenty years ago. The latter is a large octavo, and too cumbersome to carry about. The present volume is a neat duodecimo, and can be put in pocket or portmanteau. The places where the original words occur are given without quoting the passage. Such a work is exceedingly valuable, and, in the shape and size here offered, will prove a great convenience. For sale by Eyrich, Canal street, New Orleans.

Saving Faith; Its Rationale: With a demonstration of its presence in the organic condition of Methodist Church membership. A treatise in two parts. By Rev. Israel Chamber Coyne, D.D. New York: Carlton & Lanahan. San Francisco: E. Thomas. Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden, 1871. The author's position is: "That the general rules, in their statement and amplification of the one only condition of membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church, do fairly and beyond question, imply the faith that is properly saving, which brings eternal salvation to all who keep it to the end." The volume, two hundred and twelve duodecimo pages, is devoted to the argument. The argument seems to be conducted with fairness and ability, and is entitled to a more careful examination than we can give it at present. We have always thought the Methodist condition of church membership, as exhibited in the general rules, implied as much saving faith as the import of the term as held and understood by other orthodox churches. Our condition of membership is, in this respect, as high as theirs, but that "a desire to flee from the wrath to come, and to be saved from sin," implies saving faith, is another matter. Without anticipating or prejudging the author's argument, we can heartily commend the book to the thoughtful and intelligent reader. If it does not convince, it will prove highly suggestive and instructive.

From the same publishers, Carlton & Lanahan, New York, we have received Misread Passages of Scripture. By J. Baldwin Brown, B. A. This book also calls for a careful examination, because the author attempts the exposition of some of the most difficult and perplexing Scriptures. He has rescued several important passages from the popular perversion to which they have been subjected, and has brought out the true meaning of many curious and often misunderstood texts. Among other subjects he treats of The Principles of Christian Unity, Potter and Clay, God's Elect—the Elect Nation, The True Idea of Substitution, St. Paul and St. James, The Overthrow of Death.

At Last; A Christmas in the West Indies. By Charles Kingsley. Harper & Brothers. New York. An author of so much genius and power as Canon Kingsley is bound to write a book of great interest, and this volume of travel and observation in the West Indies is graphic, lively and generally instructive. We find some things in the book not to our mind, but we like to know what Mr. Kingsley thinks of many things, even when we believe him to be mistaken. The volume is a 12mo of four hundred and sixty-five pages, beautifully illustrated, and a most fascinating work altogether. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

Shakespeare's Comedy of the Tempest. Edited with notes by William J. Rolfe, A.M. New York: Harper & Bros., publishers, 1871. This is in uniform style and binding with the Merchant of Venice, issued by the same house some time ago. The series will give us the plays of the great dramatist in a most convenient form. The present volume contains copious notes, explanatory of the text, and is handsomely illustrated. From the publishers, through Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

Grandfather's Faith. By Julia A. Mathews. New York: Robert Carter & Bros., 1872. This beautifully bound volume is well written, and will prove a story of interest and profit to the young. It is especially for boys. We are indebted to R. J. Harp, of the Depository, 112 Camp street, for a copy.

From R. J. Harp, of the Depository, 112 Camp street, we have received three charming little volumes, published by Robert Carter & Bros., New York, to wit: The Rift in the Clouds, French Bessie and Shall We Know One Another? and other papers. The last is the smallest of the three, tiny in size, bound in green and gold, and adapted to the edification of grown people. Religious, and just the thing to read in the street cars or on a journey. French Bessie and the Rift in the Clouds belong to the Fireside Library series, and are happily suited to the religious instruction and entertainment of the young.

The Methodist Quarterly Review, October, 1871. D. D. Whedon, LL.D., editor; Carlton & Lanahan, publishers. The contents are as follows: Curtins's History of Greece, Christian Evidences from the Catacombs, Early Methodism in the West, Vicarious Atonement, Church Property Questions in the South, Socrates. In the editorial department we have, as usual, a rare treat under the several heads of Synopsis of the Quarterlies, Foreign Religious Intelligence, Foreign Literary Intelligence, Quarterly Book Table.

The New Monthly Magazine has but lately reached us—the number for October. We have already given the table of contents and the editor's statements and correspondence, connected with his resignation. We more than ever dislike the idea of giving up the magazine. The editor has done well with the materials afforded him, and we believe the failure is not to be laid on him. We doubted the expediency of the publication when first discussed and ordered by the General Conference, because we thought thousands must be expended and two or three years pass, before it could be made self-supporting. Time and money are both needed, but as the Publishing House cannot afford to advance the latter and wait for re-imbursement, we see no alternative but the one contemplated. Unless the church rallies to the support, in a manner that we can scarcely hope, we suppose the publication will be discontinued at the end of the year.

Burke's Magazine for Boys and Girls is about the handsomest and best publication for the young issued any where in the country. The October number is well made up, and abounds in good things for the children.

The Galaxy is, as usual, in the van of the November magazines. We note in its table of contents: Barbarossa and Bismarck, Reminiscences of Lee and Jackson, Admiral Farragut at New Orleans. Drift Wood, Scientific Miscellany, Current Literature, Club Room and Nebulæ, are varied and entertaining.

Good Words, and Good Words for the Young, published by Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, are among the handsomest and most valuable publications that we receive. The October part of both of these periodicals is excellent, and worth more than the annual subscription price.

Church's Musical Visitor for October, a new monthly devoted to music and the fine arts, published by John Church & Co., No. 66 West Fourth street, Cincinnati, Ohio, has reached our table. The news is full and fresh, the editorials creditable, and the selections admirable. The arrangement is in fine taste, the typography first-class, the title page beautiful, and the whole one of the finest and cheapest musical publications in this country.

The Practical Planter for October has been received. Published at Memphis, Tennessee, at one dollar and a half per annum.

A CARD.

We return our heartfelt thanks to the official members of the Chrondelet Street Methodist Church for granting the use of the church and organ for our sacred concert; to the ladies and gentlemen who so kindly consented to sing in the choruses, and to all our friends for their aid and encouragement.

The Celebrated Argyle Bitters Truths for the People.—These Bitters, which are now a household word in every family, are deservedly ranked among the most successful and efficacious remedies now used.

Gently stimulant, delightfully refreshing and invigorating, they promote the digestive functions, regulate the liver and spleen, prevents hytrophy or inaction; they increase the vital functions and maintain the chylopoietic viscera in their normal condition of health, when once established.

No fabulous properties or magical effects are claimed for them; they are simply a pure unadulterated Tonic, Alterative and Stimulant.

One essential element of their success is the effect they possess of lessening the inordinate thirst for strong drinks, so often engendered by the use of vile nostrums and vicious compounds, arrogantly and ignorantly called "Bitters" to cover their deadly effects.

Ask your neighbor about the Argyle Bitters, and in nine cases out of ten, he will tell you "to do as he has done for years, always to keep them on hand for family use, for they are good to take."

These Bitters can bear the addition of one-third water, and then be stronger in all their essential properties than any other Bitter in the market; and to ladies and children, we recommend their dilution with water, when taken. oc12 1m

The Child's Corner.

A CHILD'S WORDS TO THE SEA.

BY EDGAR LAWLETT.

O, sea, you're very calm to-day,
You broad, blue, brilliant sea;
Willing to let your breakers play
Quite pleasantly with me.
And on where yonder white gull flies,
Where long waves break and sweep,
Willing to bear the graceful dips
As though you loved them well.

But I know what you were that night
When angry noises fast
When you spoke, I felt afraid
And shivered in my fright.
'Twas you; now don't deny it, pray,
With that mild song you sing:
I'll not believe a word you say,
You great deceitful thing!

You may have done, for all I know,
Some frightful mischief, too,
Have more dark secrets hid below
That breast so smooth and blue.
Perhaps poor sailors lost their lives
To please your horrid spite
Dear 'dear' you learned to widow wives,
Old sea, before last night!

You've lived so long, one might suppose
You were a little bit,
And able, when you temper rose,
To keep a curb on it.
Does Father Neptune, standing by,
Allow such capers? Ah,
Your ears would ache if you were I.

I somehow can't but love you, though;
Bad as your deeds may be;
For you've such winning ways, you know,
Beautiful, strong, strange sea!
Your mermaids must be happy girls,
With not a thing to do
But float about in weeds and pearls
And—pshaw! you've wet my shoe.

"FORBID THEM NOT."

BY MISS M. B. SLEIGHT.

There is no sweeter story told
In all the blessed Book,
Than how the Lord, within His arms,
The little children took.

We love Him for the tender touch
That made the leper whole,
And for the wondrous words that healed
The tired, sin-sick soul.

But closer to His loving self
Our human hearts are brought,
When for the little children's sake
Love's sweetest spell is wrought.

For their young eyes His sorrowing face
A smile of gladness wore
A smile that for His little ones
It weareth evermore.

The voice that silenced priest and scribe,
For them grew low and sweet,
And still for them His gentle lips
The loving words repeat.

"Forbid them not!" O blessed Christ,
We bring them unto Thee,
And pray that on their heads may rest
Thy benedictie!

Susie Gray, the Little Preacher.

"Oh, mamma, may me, please—Neddie says me may—me means—he says he will—if you'll let me—Aunt Susie—oh, dear!—me's in such a hurry—me's all mixed up!"

"Well, my dear," said Mrs. Gray; "perhaps I can help you out of your trouble. You want to go to see Aunt Susie, don't you?"

"Yes'to—me do—very much," gasped the little girl, falling into baby speech in her earnestness. "And Neddie—"

"And brother Neddie says he will take you if I do not object. Is that what you wanted to say?"

"Yes'm; me remember now—if you had no 'jeckshuns,' he said."

"Yes, mother, do let us go," said Ned, who had come in just in time to hear Susie's last words. "Don't have any 'jeckshuns.' I'll promise to take first rate care of Susie; and you know aunty is always glad to see her little namesake."

"I am perfectly willing that you should go, my children," answered Mrs. Gray; "but Ned, as you are the oldest, you must be all the more careful; and I prefer that you should go by the upper path, even though it is a little longer. The lower one is too near the edge of the brook for me to feel perfectly easy about you?"

"Why, mother," exclaimed Ned, while a flush of wounded feeling tinged his cheek, "can't you trust me? Don't you think I can keep Susie straight in the path?"

"Yes, my boy, I do trust you; yet," said Mrs. Gray, as she looked somewhat sadly into the fresh, boyish face looking so bravely and earnestly into her's, "there are many things that seem very simple until we try them, and it is not an easy thing in life to walk always without stumbling in any path. We can never be sure of ourselves, dear, for sometimes a little thing no more than a butterfly's wing dazzles our eyes, and we slip. So be careful, my son, and take the upper path."

"Yes, mother," answered Ned, rather soberly; for though his boyish ardor could not sympathize with his mother's views, her manner had subdued his enthusiasm, and while believing she was without doubt right—for Ned had all a noble-hearted boy's loyalty to his mother—yet underneath all other thoughts was the idea that he would be a "cad for Jem," if he wasn't able to keep a little girl like her from tumbling into the brook.

Susie was very fond of carrying some little gift to Aunty Sue, and Mrs. Gray always gave a basket into her charge. Clasping the handle tightly in her wee hands, no one was allowed to interfere with her burden, until, with an air of gravity, comical enough in so small a body, she would deposit her gift safely in Aunt Susie's hands. To-day her treasure consisted of a basket filled with delicious strawberries; and though the day was very pleasant, as she walked carefully along by Ned's side and chatted to him of her enjoyment, her mind was full of the "bootiful strawberries," and she could think of little else. Soon the end of the journey was reached, and Aunty Sue, catching the sound of the gate, came with pleasant words of welcome to greet her visitors.

"Me brought bootiful berries to aunty," prattled little Sue.

"Thank you, dear," said aunty; "but I am more glad to kiss your bright red cheeks; now come in and tell me all about mamma and dollies and all your pets."

"Mamma is quite well, and sends her love; but doll Mamy has been a very bad girl, aunty, she wan away and I had to 'hip her."

"Poor Mamy," said Aunt Sue, sorrowfully; "does she stay at home now?"

"Yes'm, she do; but, aunty," and the little mother's face grew grave as she spoke, "doll baby Bessie was real sick, and I had to send for the doctor."

"Indeed!" sympathizingly said Aunt Susie, "and did the doctor cure her?"

"Oh, no, aunty dear; he killed her wight away."

Aunty's peal of laughter at the unconscious satire was aided by Ned; though why should they find anything funny in so great a sorrow to Susie, was beyond her understanding. So desiring to change the subject, feeling rather hungry after her long walk, yet remembering her mamma had often told her it was impolite to ask for anything to eat, in a meek way she looked up and said:

"Aunty has everybody ate up all that nice sponge cake you had the other day?"

"No, dear," was the reply, "thank you for remembering me of my want of hospitality. Here is plenty for yourself and Ned. I hope you will enjoy it."

"Yes'm, me do," was Susie's answer, somewhat smothered by the large mouthful she had just taken. Ned was not unwilling to join her, and soon the sponge cake vanished. Then a few more words with Aunt Susie, and the children started for their walk home.

Merrily danced Susie, swinging her empty basket and calling to Ned to catch her, which he seemed to find no easy task, as she tripped along. Suddenly, with a scream of delight, Susie pointed to a bush of laurel in full bloom just beyond. "Me want bootiful flowers, me does, Ned!"

"All right, sister, you shall have them," said Ned. Forgetting entirely his mother's words: "Keep on the upper path," with one bound he sprang into the lower path. The flowers were farther than they seemed, and Ned, his eyes filled with the beautiful color, had forgotten Susie as well as his mother's words. Just as his hand clasped the flowers, he heard a scream of fright, and turning hastily, was shocked to see Susie had lost her footing and was rolling down the hill; one moment more, and she would be in the brook. But Ned, fully conscious of her danger, jumped to save her. Both hands caught her dress as she passed, and though the force with which she had fallen dragged Ned a little further, he was able to stop just on the edge of the brook. Poor Susie was sadly frightened and carried the marks on face and hands of many thorns, while conscious-stricken Ned did his best to comfort her. After bathing her face and hands, so sadly scratched they mounted to the upper path and turned toward home. Then the full meaning of his mother's words rushed into Ned's mind, and so keenly did he feel their power that, turning to Susie, he hastily said:

"Susie, I'm so ashamed of myself, please don't tell mother; nobody saw us. And I promise never to forget what mother says."

Very quiet was little Susie as she walked along, then looking up into Ned's face, she said: "But, Neddie, God saw us, 'cause He sees in the dark and everywhere, and I guess He'd like us to tell mamma."

"That's true, Susie," said Ned seriously; "you are a dear little preacher to your naughty, careless brother. I'll tell mother the first thing when we get home." And he kept his word, blaming himself heartily.

"Now, mother," said Ned, when his story was ended, "I know what you mean by keeping in the right path; I was a long ways on the wrong one, when I told Susie not to tell you what had happened, but when she said, 'God saw us,' she brought me right back, and now I'll ask Him to help me keep there."

Ned has grown to be a man now, and has done much good in the world; but he says he shall never forget that first sermon of his "Little Preacher," Susie Gray.—New York Observer.

Willie's Sunday.—A Story for Boys.

"What shall I do to-day, sir?"

"Whatever you please. The day is your own, and you can do with it exactly what you like."

It was Willie's first Sunday in town. He was a country boy, and had passed all his life in a village; but now he was in a situation, and had left his home. It was Monday morning, when he said "Good-bye" to his father and mother, and it had seemed a very long week, for everything was so strange and unlike his home.

He had rather looked forward to Sunday, and now it had come. He waited with his cap in hand, expecting his master or mistress to tell him where to go; but as neither seemed to take any notice of him, at last he had spoken.

It seemed a very strange thing to Willie that he should receive such an answer. The day was his own, and he might do what he pleased with it!

That was very unlike the old Sunday at home! He had always to go to school, having first learned a verse or two from the Scripture, and a hymn; and when school was over he was expected to sit beside his parents in the house of God, and behave properly. He remembered that on one or two occasions he wished he might do as he liked with the day, when other boys were going to search for birds' eggs or blackberries. But he was never able to take the day for his own pleasure, because his mother would have been so grieved, and his father so angry.

But now a Sunday had come, and he might do what he liked with it. His master had told him so, and that was enough.

"What shall I do with this Sunday?" was the question, which of course came into his mind.

It seemed to be answered for him.

"Willie, come for a walk with me," said another boy, who lived at the same place.

"Where are you going?"

"Into the park. It is such fun there."

"Fun?"

Well, every boy likes fun. But fun on Sunday did not seem right to Willie.

"Will you come, Willie?"

"I don't know. That is not how I spent Sunday at home."

"O, never mind that. Come along. You have seen nothing yet, and there's plenty to see."

Willie thought he would rather like to go, although his conscience said plainly enough: "Don't you go, Willie; you had much better not."

He put on his cap, and the two boys start together. A long way they went along the streets, meeting many well-dressed persons, evidently going to church and chapel, but meeting many others who did not look as if they meant to keep holy the Sabbath. After spending an hour or so in the park, Willie felt guilty and uneasy, and slipping away from his companion, he went out of the park and along the streets as quickly as he could go.

He went on until he came to a place where he heard an organ and voices singing a tune which he very well knew.

He stepped inside, and a gentleman seeing him, opened his pew-door, and beckoned him to come in.

O how thankful Willie felt when he found himself there. It was almost like home, and it was so beautiful and peaceful, so different from the noise and Sabbath-breaking he had just left, that he could almost have cried for joy.

"I shall not be afraid to write and tell my mother about this," he thought.

After the service was over, the gentleman spoke to him.

"What is your name, my boy?"

"William Smith, sir."

"Do you belong to any Bible class here?"

"No, sir; this is my first Sunday. I only came from the country this week."

"Will you come and dine with me?"

Willie hesitated. Although he was a brave boy, he was a little afraid of strangers.

"If you will come with me, I promise you a happy day. I will introduce you to some lads of the right sort, who will be glad to be your friends."

"Thank you, sir. I do not quite know what to do with myself to-day. I will go with you."

The gentleman kept his word. He soon found out all about Willie, and gave him a word or two of good advice. There were other boys at his house—Christian boys, who were not ashamed of their religion, and who welcomed Willie among them. The day was so happy that he was quite sorry when the evening came; but some of the boys walked home with him, and promised to meet him on the next Sunday.

"And now you have joined our class, you will know what to do with your Sundays. Good night, Willie."

"Good night. I shall write and tell my mother what good friends I have found, and what a happy Sunday I have spent."

How thankful Willie felt that night that he had not stayed in the park.—Zion's Herald.

"Keep the Gate Shut."

An English farmer was one day at work in his fields, when he saw a party of huntsmen riding about his farm. He had one field that he was specially anxious they should not ride over, as the crop was in a condition to be badly injured by the tramp of horses. So he dispatched one of his workmen to this field, telling him to shut the gate, and then keep watch over it, and on no account to suffer it to be opened. The boy went as he was bidden; but was scarcely at his post before the huntsmen came up, peremptorily ordering the gate to be opened. This the boy declined to do, stating the orders he had received, and his determination not to disobey them. Threats and bribes were offered, alike in vain, one after another came forward as spokesman, but all with the same result, the boy remained immovable in his determination not to open the gate. After a while, one of noble presence advanced, and said in commanding tones: "My boy, you do not know me. I am the Duke of Wellington, one not accustomed to be disobeyed; and I command you to open that gate, that I and my friends may pass through." The boy lifted his cap, and stood uncovered before the man whom all England delighted to honor, then answered firmly: "I am sure the Duke of Wellington would not wish me to disobey orders. I must keep this gate shut, nor suffer any one to pass but with my master's express permission."

Greatly pleased, the sturdy old warrior lifted his own hat, and said: "I honor the man or boy who can be neither bribed nor frightened into doing wrong. With an army of such soldiers I could conquer not only the French, but the world." And handing the boy a glittering sovereign, the old duke put spurs to his horse and galloped away, while the boy ran off to his work, shouting at the top of his voice: "Hurrah, hurrah! I've done what Napoleon couldn't do—I've kept out the Duke of Wellington."

Every boy is a gate-keeper, and his Master's command is "Be thou faithful unto death." Are you tempted to drink, to smoke or chew tobacco? Keep the gate of your mouth fast closed, and allow no evil company to enter. When evil companions would counsel you to break the Sabbath, to lie, to deal falsely, to disobey your parents, keep the gate of your ears fast shut against such enticements; and when the bold blasphemer would instil doubts of the great truths of revelation, then keep the door of your heart locked and barred against his infamous suggestions, remembering that it is only the fool who "hath said in his heart there is no God."

Charles Napier's Dog.

A good while ago, a boy named Charlie had a large dog, which was very fond of the water, and in hot weather he used to swim across the river near which the boy lived. One day the thought struck him that it would be fine fun to make the dog carry him across the river, so he tied a string to the dog's collar, and ran down with him to the water's edge, where he took off all his clothes, and holding hard by the dog's neck and the bit of string, he went into the water, and the dog pulled him across. After playing about on the other side for some time, they returned in the way they had come; but when Charlie looked for his clothes, he could find nothing but his shoes. The wind had blown all the rest into the water. The dog saw what had happened, and making his little master let go the string, by pretending to bite him, he dashed into the river, and brought out first the coat, and all the rest in succession. Charlie dressed and went home in his wet clothes, and told his mother what fun he and the dog had had. His mother told him that he did very wrong in going across the river as he had done, and that he should thank God for making the dog take him over and back again safely, for if the dog had made him let go in the river, he would most likely have sunk and been drowned. Little Charlie said: "Shall I thank God now, mamma?" and he kneeled down at his mother's knee, and thanked God; then getting up again, he threw his arms around the dog's neck, saying: "I thank you, too, dear doggie, for not letting go." Little Charlie became Admiral Sir Charles Napier.

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

EAST LESSON IN AGRICULTURAL CHEMISTRY.—The Kansas Farmer says: We stated in the last paper that clover was one of the best fertilizers we could use. We may not have made it clear why a plant that had grown out of a given soil could add anything to the fertility of that soil by being plowed under. We meant to convey the idea, whether we did or not, that a certain class of plants derived their support more largely from the atmosphere than others, and clover is one of the most prominent of this class. When dried, almost the entire weight of this plant is carbon, which it has obtained from the atmosphere; and this carbon, when turned under, acts as a receptacle for all manures holding them, until the roots of the corn or wheat plants need them.

Charcoal, which is carbon, has long been known and used as a disinfectant, and also as a filter for depriving water of its noxious qualities. It seems to have a special affinity for those matters that are valuable to plant life. Colonel Waring gives a very complete test of this. He says: "Take two barrels of pure sand. In one of them mix a handfull of finely pulverized charcoal, and pour on each barrel a pailfull of the black liquor from the manure pile. From the barrel of pure sand it will leach of in the same condition that it went in; while from the one with the charcoal in it, it will come out clear water, deprived of all its color and odors."

This explains, better than a whole volume, the effect of carbon in the soil.

Another manurial element, not rightly appreciated by most of the farmers, is drainage; and it is, in our judgment, the most important one the farmer has to consider.

It may be asked: Why the most important? For the reason that, however much manure may be applied to the soil, and however much care may be exercised in the selection of seeds, and however much labor be bestowed upon a crop, without some system of drainage we cannot produce the best results. The reasons for it are these: While water is an essential element of plant life and growth, yet an abundance of water about the roots of plants forms, among other deleterious substances, the black oxide of iron, which we have spoken of before, which is a plant poison.

Again, an excess of water prevents the free ingress of air, and consequently deprives the plant of a part of its sustenance. It also keeps the soil cold, which is not favorable to plant growth.

These are not all the reasons, but they are enough, to establish the necessity of drainage, for the best results in agriculture.

Drainage may be accomplished more or less effectively in various ways. Deep or subsoil plowing operates as drainage, and is chiefly beneficial from this fact. Back-furrowing in narrow lands helps to drain land, if care is taken in laying off the lands. But the most satisfactory and effective drainage is by means of ditch and tile.

It will be gathered from what we have said that the benefits derived from drainage are chiefly due to the fact that it allows the escape of water from the soil. This makes the soil more loose and friable; and this, in turn, permits the free access of heat and air, nature's great manurial elements. No farmer's boy can hardly have failed to notice the effect upon the soil of a mole burrow; how light and loose the soil above the track of these little pests. This is the precise effect of tile draining; only in the latter we have its benefits extending for yards upon either side of the drain.

For effective tile draining, some information is necessary. First, as to the kind of ground that needs draining, we would answer: All ground with a clay subsoil will be benefited by draining, whether it be high prairie or low bottom. Drains should be laid at a depth of about three feet, if the slope of the land will permit. A fall of one foot to the mile is considered sufficient for the free discharge of the water. In digging the ditch for laying the tile, make it no wider than is necessary for convenience; and it may be sloped down at the bottom to three or four inches in width. Make the bottom of the ditch perfectly smooth and level, that there may be no unequal strain upon the pipe.

The round tile are now used almost altogether, as they are cheaper than the old horse-shoe tile, and equally effective. For effective work, drains should be laid about forty or fifty feet apart.

In draining a hill, let the ditches be cut straight up and down the hill; and these small supply drains should empty into a main drain, pipe two and a half or three inches in diameter, at the foot of the hill, running at right angles with the supply drains.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

TO DRIVE AWAY ANTS.—It is stated that the little red ants, so troublesome to a household, will immediately leave a place where sea sand is sprinkled, or oyster shells are laid. Scatter sprigs of wormwood where black ants abound, and they will be driven away.

LEMON PIE.—Take one pound of raisins, one-half pound of suet, the juice and part of the peel of one lemon, grated fine; add one cup of sugar, and one-half cup of molasses, mix thoroughly. The above is sufficient for three pies, and should be made with top and bottom crusts.

MARY ANN CAKE.—Two cups of sugar, one cup of butter, six eggs, one cup of milk. Rub the butter and sugar together, and the beaten yolks of the eggs, then the milk with a teaspoonful of soda, then the whites of the eggs beaten stiff, adding flour with the eggs, sufficient to make it stiff as pound cake.

TO DYE WOOL.—For a drab color, to ten pounds of goods, take five ounces of camwood, eight ounces of fustic, and one ounce of logwood; boil one hour in a clean kettle, and sadden with one ounce of copperas. For a light silver drab, to ten pounds of woolen goods, take one ounce of logwood, one ounce of camwood, one-half ounce of fustic; sadden with one-fourth ounce of copperas.

CROUP.—A writer says that he regards turpentine as of the greatest advantage in the treatment and cure of croup. It should be mixed with sweet oil or goose grease (the latter is preferable) and the neck and breast bathed with it. This remedy gives almost instant relief. It is never given inwardly. Aconite, if taken in time, always breaks a light attack, but in severe cases resort to the above remedy.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN LINIMENT.—Take of alcohol two quarts, and add to it the following articles: Oils of sassafras, hemlock, spirits of turpentine, tincture of cayenne, catechu, guiac and landanum, each one ounce; tincture of myrrh, four ounces; oil of origanum, two ounces; oil of winter-green, half an ounce; gum camphor, two ounces; chloroform, one ounce and a half; mix all together, and apply as an external remedy for all kinds of pains and corns.

PROF. HITCHCOCK has recently cited the distribution of maritime plants about the shores of the Great Lakes of North America as a proof of oceanic submergence in the Champlain period—i. e., that following the glacial. It has been objected by Prof. Dana, in the American Journal of Science, that, considering the much greater number of shells and of other kinds of marino animal life that must have existed in those Champlain seas, their absence from the same regions all over the United States beyond a height of three hundred to six hundred feet above tide level in the more northeastern portions, is a better proof that the sea did not cover the continent in that period. It is hard to believe that there could have been thousands of miles of sea beaches across the continent, or hundreds of thousands of square miles of sea bottom, in an era of abundant marine life, and yet all—with the exceptions along the borders of the Atlantic, along the River (then gulf of) St. Lawrence, and on Lake Champlain (then an arm of that gulf)—without any traces of marine animal life.

IN AN ARTICLE in the American Journal of Science Prof. Rood shows how he obtained and measured sparks from the discharge of a Leyden jar, the duration of whose main constituent was only forty billionths of a second. "With their light distinct vision is possible. Thus, for example, the letters on a printed page are plainly to be seen; also, if a poraliscope be used, the cross and rings around the axes of crystals can be observed, with all their peculiarities and errors in the azimuth of the analyzing prism noticed.' "Hence, it is plain that forty billionths of a second is quite sufficient for the production on the retina of a strong and distinct impression; and, as the obliteration of the micromotic lines in the experiment referred to could only take place from the circumstance that the retina retains and combines a whole series of impressions whose joint duration is forty billionths of a second, it follows that a much smaller interval of time will suffice for vision. If we limit the number of views of the line presented to the eye in a single case to ten, it would result that four billionths of a second is sufficient for human vision, though the probability is that a far shorter time would answer as well, or nearly as well. All of which is not so wonderful, if we accept the doctrines of the undulatory theory of light; for, according to it, in four billionths of a second nearly two and a half millions of the mean undulations of light reach and act on the eye."

HOW LIFE originated on the earth Sir William Thompson attempts to answer by suggesting that it was introduced by germs inclosed in meteoric stones. He says: "The hypothesis that life originated on this earth through moss-grown fragments from the ruins of another world may seem wild and visionary. All I maintain is that it is not unscientific." Such a hypothesis may be as capable of proof as Darwin's theory of pangenesis, or the theory of the plurality of inhabited worlds. He says: "When a volcanic island springs up from the sea, and after a few years is found clothed with vegetation, we do not hesitate to assume that seed has been wafted to it through the air or floated to it on rafts. Is is not possible, and, if possible, is it not probable, that the beginning of vegetable life on the earth is to be similarly explained? Every year thousands, probably millions, of fragments of solid matter fall upon the earth. Whence came these fragments? What is the previous history of any one of them? Was it created in the beginning of time an amorphous mass? This idea is so unacceptable that, tacitly or explicity, all men discard it. It is often assumed that all, and it is certain that some meteoric stones are fragments which had been broken off from greater masses and launched free into space. Hence, and because we all confidently believe that there are at present and have been from time immemorial many worlds of life besides our own, we must regard it as probable in the highest degree that there are countless seed-bearing meteoric stones moving about through space. If at the present instant no life existed upon this earth, one such stone falling upon it might, by what we blindly call natural causes, lead to its becoming covered with vegetation. From the earth stocked with such vegetation as it could receive meteorically to the earth teeming with all the endless variety of plants and animals which now inhabit it the step is prodigious; yet, according to the doctrine of continuity, most ably laid before the association by a predecessor in this chair (Mr. Grove), all creatures now living on earth have proceeded by orderly evolution from some such origin."

IF WE EXERCISE FAITH, God will encourage it. Improve the promises, and God will ratify them.

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his confrères in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

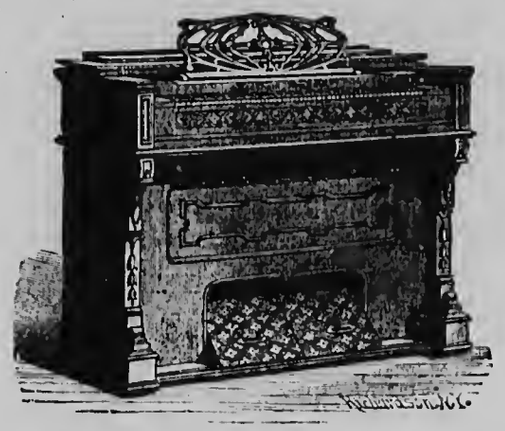
HOUSTON (TEXAS) STATE FAIR, MAY, 1871.



THE BLUE RIBBON AND DIPLOMA

—AWARDED TO—

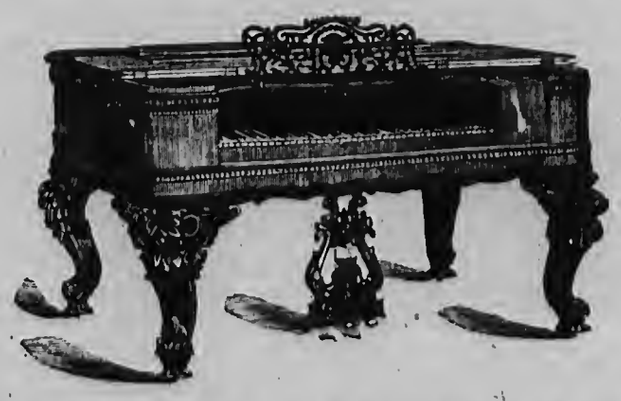
PHILIP WERLEIN, OF NEW ORLEANS,

—FOR HIS TWO ENTRIES—

Best Piano (Cottage Square) and Best Organ made in United States,

OVER ALL COMPETITION.

The Silver-Tongue NEEDHAM ORGANS AND MELODEONS are the most approved, most elegantly cased, cheapest in the market, and of the most improved construction. Organs at $60, $75, $100 and $125 for six stops; and $150 for seven stops and upward.



Fine new Seven-Octave PIANOS, of different first-class makes, at $310 and upward. Second-hand Pianos, of good tone and good make, six octave, at $75 to $100; 6¼-octave $125; 6¾-octave, $150; 6¾-octave, $175; seven-octave, $200 to $225—very good.

☞ Owing to extraordinary facilities, a large and well-established trade, very low rent and small expenses, persons can buy at a less price at this house than elsewhere in the South.

Reference is made to Bishop J. C. Keener, Rev. Linus Parker, D. D., and Rev. Robt. J. Harp, who have bought Pianos from this house.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

[From the New Orleans Price Current.]

We have no material change to notice in the general market since our last issue. Some branches of the wholesale trade have done a fair business in sales to country merchants and in filling orders, but from others we receive rather unsatisfactory reports. A more hopeful feeling has been excited by reports of a satisfactory rise in the upper Red River. Sugar and molasses have come forward less sparingly and met a ready sale, but at lower prices, which continue to give way as the supplies become more liberal. Western produce has shown but little activity and ruled at easier rates, flour giving way 25@37½c. ₱ bbl, new corn selling lower, but old maintaining its previous position, and bacon showing a decline of about ½c., but pork no quotable variation.

With the exception of a slight shower on Saturday, the weather has been clear and warm, not, however, without being occasionally overcast with indications of rain in the vicinity. Our accounts from the country present few new features, and the planters and country press certainly show no disposition to raise their cotton crop estimates. In the city, on the contrary, long crop calculations of 3,250,000 bales up to 3,333,000, and even 3,500,000 have been strengthened by the season being so favorable for picking. The general view, however, appears to be unchanged, 3,000,000 being still the popular estimate.

The river is now fourteen feet two inches below high water mark.

Cotton. The following are the arrivals since the twentieth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.. 11,023
Lake	64
Mobile	1,551
Texas	453
Total	13,091

On Saturday, with a moderate inquiry and unassuming accounts from Liverpool and New York, prices exhibited a decided downward tendency, which became more marked in the afternoon, the closing rates showing a decline of ⅛c. in low middling and ¼c. in the higher grades. The sales embraced 2000 bales. On Monday, the supply being better and factors evincing a readiness to meet the demand freely, buyers came forward with more spirit, but declining further concessions in accordance with the quotations at Liverpool and New York, and 3800 bales changed hands at prices showing a further falling off of ⅛@¼c. on the day, re subsequently, and a still greater reduction at the close, when good ordinary was quoted at 17½c., low middling at 18⅛@18¼c., middling at 18⅝, and strict middling at 18¾@18¹⁵⁄₁₆c., showing an irregular decline of ¼@⅜c. On Tuesday the market exhibited considerable irregularity, stiffening and weakening alternately in accordance with the Liverpool and New York dispatches, but the demand was both general and active and the sales summed up 3750 bales. Low middling sold as low as 17¾ and as high as 18⅛, strict do at 18 and 18⅛, Liverpool middling at 18⅛ and a strong style of middling as high as 18⅝, and strict middling at 18¾, and for a desirable list at 18¾c.

The receipts proper at this port, since the 1st of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas), are 61,458 bales, against 100,852 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 91,214 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 8197 to France, and a decrease of 1462 to Great Britain, and 4368 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Good ordinary	17½ to 17¾
Low middling	17⅞ to 18⅛
Middling	18¼ to 18⅜
Strict middling	to 18½

Sugar. The new crop is coming in more freely and the supplies are disposed of from day to day as received. The receipts on Saturday and Monday embracing 180 hhds, were sold at 6@6¾c. for inferior, 8c. for fair, 9¼c. for good fair, 10⅛@10½c. for centrifugal and 11@11¼c. for yellow clarified. On Tuesday the receipts were only partially landed, hence the sales were confined to 40 hhds at 8c. for inferior, 11¼c. for strictly prime to choice open-kettle, and 11@11¼c. for yellow clarified.

Molasses. The new crop is coming in more freely and meets with pretty ready sale. The receipts on Saturday and Monday were sold at 36@40 and 50c. for centrifugal and common, 52@56 for fair, 60@63c. for prime and 64@67c. for choice, the outside prices ruling on Saturday and the inside on Monday. On Tuesday the supplies sold at 15c. for common, and 61c. for prime.

Flour. The market is extremely dull. In fact there is little or no demand and prices are nominal. The stock consists mostly of choice extra. Treble extra is scarce and there is little or no superfine or double extra on hand. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 1800 bbls, in small or job lots, at $4 75 for common, $5 25 for fine, $6 12½ for superfine, $6 50 for single extra, $6 87½ for double extra, $7@$7 25 for treble extra, $7 37½@$7 50 for choice treble extra and $7 62½@$7 75 for choice and family extra. On Tuesday the market continued very dull and prices were so irregular and unsettled that we can scarcely give accurate quotations. Some 2000 bbls were sold, however, at $6 75 for double extra, $7 for treble extra and $7 25@$7 50 for choice treble extra, superfine is quoted at $6, double extra $6 75, treble extra $7@$7 12½, choice and family extra $7 25@$7 75 ₱ bbl.

Bran—Is scarce and is held at $1 50 ₱ 100 lbs. There is none on the landing. On Tuesday 150 sacks sold at $1 55 ₱ 100 lbs.

Pork—At the date of our last review there were sales, not then reported, of 820 bbls mess, in lots, at $14 62½@$14 75 ₱ bbl. Since then the market has been without animation. Holders have been asking $15 ₱ bbl, without any sales. On Tuesday mess was quoted at $14 75 ₱ bbl. It is retailing at $15 25@$15 50 ₱ bbl.

Dry Salt Meat—The market is bare of supplies. Shoulders are quoted nominally at 8c. ₱ lb. A few in the hands of dealers are retailing at 8½@8¾c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday some 10 casks shoulders sold, to arrive, at 8c. ₱ lb.

Lard is in light supply and the market is firm. Tierces are scarce and are quoted at 12@12½c.; kegs are dull at 12@12½c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request and fluctuated with the New York market, closing at a net decline of ⅛c., opening on Saturday at 112¼@112½ (against 112¾ at New York), and closing at 112⅛@114⅛, (against 112⅜ at New York); opening on Monday at 112½@112¾, (against 112¾ at New York), and closing at the opening rates (against 112⅜ at New York); and opening on Tuesday at 112½@112⅞ (against 112⅜ at New York), and closing at 112@112⅛ (against 111⅞).

The sales of silver have been confined to $860 in American half-dollars on Monday at 103½. American half-dollars are now quoted at 103@103½ and Mexican dollars nominal.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

San Francisco, Oct. 25.—Fires are raging in the coast counties from Los Angeles northward.

The People's Insnrance Company of San Francisco has suspended.

S. Brown, a native of Cynthiana, Kentnoky, snicided to-day. Canse, domestic tronbles.

In the applicatiou of Mrs. Fair in the court for a new trial, the hearing was postponed until the eleventh of November.

The Chinese at Los Angeles nnmber fifty men. A mob was determined to make them leave the town, and fired on thom from the roofs, killing one woman and several men.

Detroit, Oct. 25.—The State relief eommittee, in thoir appeal in behalf of the sufferers by fire, state that from twelvo to fifteen thonsand people of that State have lost everything, and that the fires are still burning, and new ones springing up. Money and supplies may be sent direct to the Michigan rolief committee, at Chicago.

Chicago, Oct. 25.—The banks are running smoothly.

Many Eastern and foreign companies are paying losses promptly.

The grain and live stock markets are brisk and as much doing as before the fire, and in lumber much more.

Mechanics of almost every class are in demand at good wages.

Baltimore, Oct. 26.—A canon designed to prevent the alienation of church property by those not in accord with the doctrine and principle of the Protestant Episcopal Church passed.

The following, regarding the Prayor Book, was adopted: The insertion of unauthorized italics, any change of punctnation, or musical notation, or additional words whatever, is unlawful. The convention meets at New York three years hence, and adjouns sine die at ten o'clock to-night.

The House of Bishops adopted the following, which was lost in the House of Clerical and Lay Delegates. The House of Bishops informed the House of Clerical and Lay Deputies that it had adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, The House of Clerical and Lay Deputies concurring, that the following canon be adopted and enacted:

"The elevation of the elements in the Holy Communion in such a manner as to expose them to the view of the people as objects to which adoration is to be made in or after the prayer of consecration, or in the act of administering them, or in carrying them to or from the communicants; and any gesture, posture or act implying snch adoration, and any ceromony not prescribed as part of the order of the administration of the Lord's Snpper or Holy Communion in the Book of Common Prayer, and the celebration or reception of the Holy Communion by any bishop or priest when no person receives with him; likewise the nse, at any administration of the Holy Communion, of any hymns, prayers, collects, epistles or worships other than those appointed in the authorized formularies of the church, or under section fourteenth of canon thirteenth, title one of the digest, are hereby forbiddon."

The following was adopted almost unanimously in the Lower House:

Resolved, The House of Bishops concurring, that this convention hereby express its decided condemnation of all ceremonies, observances and practices which are fitted to express a doctrine foreign to that set forth in the authorized standards of this church.

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House the paternal council and advice of our right reverend fathers, the bishops of the church, is deemed sufficient at this time to secure the suppression of all that is irregular and unseemly, and to promote greater uniformity in conducting the public worship of the church, and in the administration of the Holy Sacraments.

Salt Lake City, Oct. 27.—The Mormon papers are mild in tone. The Herald says: "It is a mistake to suppose the Mormons will give up their faith on conviction by the courts. No government on earth can crush out their religious belief."

John Meacham, a Mormon, is in custody for murder committed twelve years since.

It is rumored that there will be trouble to-morrow on the occasion of the sentence of Hawkins for adultery. The women seem to be most affected. Threatening letters were received to-day by the United States marshal.

Brigham Young left the city day before yesterday, and was reported last night at Battle Creek. George O. Cannon is also absent. He is said to be at San Francisco. There is evidently something important on hand among the Mormons, but the Gentiles generally do not believe any resistance to the government is meditated.

San Francisco, Oct. 27.—Eighteen dead and six seriously hurt Chinese were found at Los Angeles yesterday morning. The balance of the Chinese had fled. Their houses were plundered. Among the plunder $10,000 in gold was found.

Chicago, Oct. 27.—The city treasurer's safe was opened to-day. The contents were found undistinguishable.

An attempt was made to burn the Episcopal cathedral, corner Peoria and Washington streets.

The fire was extinguished with but little damage.

New York, Oct. 28.—The World's London special of to-day's date says: At a cabinet meeting, held to consider questions relating to the royal family, the Queen was asked to give her consent to the marriage of the Duke of Edinburg to a Russian princess; also for her consent to the establishment of a regency, with the Prince of Wales as regent. She refused her assent to either proposition. Subsequently she refused to affix the royal signature to public documents which were presented. The cabinet afterward continued the discussion of the question and regency, and a definite proposition was introduced to appoint a chancellor to sign in the place of the Queen.

Salt Lake, Oct. 28.—Hawkins, the polygamist, was to-day sentenced to a fine of $500 and imprisonment for three years. A notice of an appeal to the Supreme Court was given by the prisoner's counsel.

Warrants are out for Brigham Young and son, charged with murder in ordering the killing of Chas. Yates, in 1857.

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 30.—Governor Bullock, of this State, resigned his office, to take effect to-day, and at three o'clock this afternoon Benjamin Conley, president of the Senate, was installed as Governor.

Bullock's resignation was written before his flight to New York. Great excitement prevails.

Vicksburg, Oct. 30.—The Herald to-morrow will contain the sexton's report, showing only ten yellow fever deaths for the week ending at noon to-day.

The Herald will contain a statement showing the entire number of yellow fever deaths for the whole season to be only thirty-six, or less than one per diem.

There have been two deaths and two new cases in the last twenty-four hours.

Charleston, S. C., Oct. 30.—There have been two fever deaths in the past twenty-four hours.

Washington, Oct. 31.—The correspondence between the government and government officials in Utah indicates a determination to crush out polygamy.

New York, Oct. 31.—In the cotton market sellers predominate. November deliveries are quoted at 18$\frac{3}{8}$c., December at 18$\frac{5}{8}$c., January at 18$\frac{7}{8}$c. Spots are steady at 18$\frac{1}{4}$c.

Sterling is weak. Southern bills are more plenty. Prime bankers' rule at 8$\frac{3}{4}$.

Liverpool advices report cotton firmer, because of short crop rumors. Arrivals are hard.

In London financial affairs are represented to be looking brighter.

FOREIGN.

London, Oct. 25.—Miss Rye takes out one hundred and forty-five children, for homes in America, on the Nestorian.

Late Rio de Janeiro advices confirm the report of the final adoption by the Brazilian Parliament of the bill providing for the emancipation of slaves. A circular has been issued by the government to the authorities in all the departments, recommending the law to be put into immediate execution.

London, Oct. 26.—Baron Von Beust is preparing a note regarding the International Society, addressed to all the governments of Europe. The Prussian government will propose to the Reichsrath a law on the same subject. Eminent jurists and special functionaries are charged with the duty of drafting the law.

St. Petersburg, Oct. 27.—A general order of the war office directs the entire reorganization of the imperial army, and calling to arms the whole adult male population.

The order creates the numerical strength of the field and landwehr forces to a total of one million six hundred thousand men, sixty-six regiments of Cossacks not included. The order creates also a further military force of reserves, to be employed in the event of invasion.

London, Oct. 27.—Sir Roderick Murchison's funeral was attended by Gladstone, Prof. Huxley and other celebrities.

Madrid, Oct. 27.—Montpensier writes the president of the Cortes that he will take his seat in that body as soon as his daughter's health permits.

London, Oct. 28.—Vatican circles continue to give out that the Pope will shortly leave Rome unless the Due DeHemecourt is favorably instructed by the French. There is no probability of such instructions being given.

An allocution of the Pope has just been published, in which, while he recognizes the bishops appointed by the Italian government as possessing the requisite qualifications of their office, he solemnly repudiates Italy's guarantees, and protests against the invasion of the Holy See.

The allocution also condemns the course of Dr. Dollinger, and such as are following his example, in warring against the decisions of the Ecumonical Council.

Madrid, Oct. 28.—It was stated officially in the Cortes that the past year's cost of the Cuban war was $62,000,000.

A conspiracy was discovered among the troops at Barcelona, and twenty arrests had been made.

Rome, Oct. 28.—A conclave of cardinals to consider what action shall be taken in the event of the Pope's death, is shortly to be held at some point in France.

London, Oct. 31.—Prince Gortschakoff held a long interview with Emperor William, at Berlin, yesterday. He was subsequently in consultation with Bismarck.

The subject of these conferences is unknown.

President Thiers refuses to modify his ultimatum to England regarding a commercial treaty.

The English cabinet has held five councils within a week, at which the foreign policy of Great Britian was the main subject of discussion.

Reorganization of the English army is rapidly progressing. Regiments are being brought to the war standard, and an immense accumulation of war material is the result.

Brussels, Oct. 31.—The King of Belgium has made a donation of two thousand five hundred francs for the Chicago relief fund.

Madrid, Oct. 31.—Further arrests of conspirators have been made at Barcelona, and additional evidences have been drawn to light. Stores, arms, bombs and other warlike implements have been discovered. The International Society is at the bottom of the plot, and among the men arrested was one of the foremost members of that organization.

YELLOW FEVER.

Natchez.—On the twenty-second there were four deaths from yellow fever, and three on the twenty-third. The Democrat, of the twenty-fourth, gives the statistics of the disease as follows:

There are one hundred and forty-two cases of yellow fever in the whole city, about the same number which was sick last week; so there appears to be no increase in the number of cases. With regard to the type of the disease, it is impossible for us to say whether it has increased or diminished in violence. The mortuary report is the best index of that.

Vicksburg.—The Herald, of the twenty-sixth, reports:

We are glad to be able to note an improvement in the health of the city. There are but twenty-five cases of yellow fever now under treatment. Six new cases are reported for the last twenty-four hours, but no deaths.

The Mormon Question.—The policy of the government on this subject is represented by a Washington telegraphic correspondent as follows:

The government does not now apprehend any such difficulty in Utah as will require the presence in that Territory of any large number of troops. It is the opinion that if the Mormons had contemplated any active resistance they would not have let things progress so far as they have. Nevertheless, it will not be the policy of the government to push matters so far as to drive Brigham Young into open rebellion. It is stated that Judge McKean simply has instructions to so far vindicate the law as to stamp polygamy with illegality, and to afford protection to such women as may desire to escape from its influences.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Trenton Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

Mr. Editor: I have just closed my fifth and last protracted meeting. The Lord has been with us, and his people greatly refreshed by his presence. At Trinity we had some twenty-five conversions, thirty-two accessions and thirteen children baptized. Some few conversions and accessions at all the other appointments. Backsliders have been reclaimed, prayor meetings appointed, family altars erected, and, we trust, much and lasting good has been accomplished. L. P. Meador.

October 20, 1871.

Haynesville Circuit, Louisiana Conference.

Mr. Editor: The Haynesville circuit has been again visited with a gracious revival of religion. Immediately after our District Conference (the first of September) I commenced a series of protracted meetings. Some that I proposed holding were unavoidably disappointed; yet the good Lord wonderfully displayed his power at those meetings we were able to hold. The result has been upward of sixty conversions and about fifty accessions to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The spirit of prayer and class meetings has been very much revived. God grant that these means of grace, so necessary to the success of the gospel, may be kept up by all our societies. Your brother in Christ, John A. Miller.

Minden, La., Oct. 19, 1871.

Cane Creek, Arkansas.

Mr. Editor: Although we of the Arkansas Conference are not properly considered as patrons of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, yet having been in former years a patron and lover of the (to me) dear old sheet, I thought perhaps you would not object to give a little corner to chronicle the results of the labors of an old friend away out here in Arkansas. I ask this, too, for the encouragement of my old companions in the Mississippi Conference, many of whom do not know what has become of the "pine-knot preacher" of southwest Mississippi. Well, to begin, I came out here after the war was said to be over, and I came to this region of country (by the direction of God's providence) against my will. I was tried in the fire; but never mind about that. Two years ago last June I was invited to preach a sermon on baptism at Cane Creek. We then had about thirty members in that valley who dared to say they were Methodists. There was a high priest of hydrathoism there, and he made "war on the saints;" but in three months the high priest of the only church was induced to emigrate to more congenial regions. Truth still prevailed, and the cause of Methodism (evangelical truth) has been steadily onward and upward. I have just closed a forty-days' campaign in that valley, with an accession of about seventy members. We have organized three new churches—Rehobeth, with fifty-eight members, (where the gospel has never been preached before,) Shady Grove, with eighteen members, and Morrison's Bluff, (Mt. Carmel,) with twenty-four members, and we now have one hundred and seventy-four members in the valley, while the increase of the hydratheists this year has been about twelve. Truth is mighty and will prevail. Glory to God in the highest.

H. M. Youngblood.

Autauga Circuit, Alabama Conference.

Mr. Editor: God has abundantly blessed our labors and wonderfully revived his work on this circuit. Our first successful battle was fought at Hogg's Mill, the place now called Pleasant Valley, where we began preaching last February, in an upper story, without a member. Here we met the few we had previously collected together at this place, and all seemed to be armed and ready for the word "forward." Here, too, we met a noble band of co-laborers in the ministry, viz: Bros. Strider, Talley and Green, of our church, and Bro. Mills, of the Baptist Church, all of whom did faithful and effective service. The meeting lasted nine days, and resulted in twenty-three accessions to the church, and its permanent establishment at this new place. Our next meeting was the second attempt at this place. The meeting lasted five days, and resulted in a good many awakenings, two or three conversions, one accession and the abundant quickening of the church. Our next protracted service was held at Maplesville, a pleasant little village on the Selma, Rome and Dalton railroad, and which is another new appointment where we began preaching last February without a member. Here we met quite a large assemblage of Methodists, Baptists, Prosbyterians, Episcopalians and non-professors, all of whom had joined heart and hand, and built an arbor, made seats, altar and pulpit. It was a glorious meeting. It would have done you good to see that mixed multitude of Christians above mentioned, all laboring, praising and praying together, and all came around the communion table together except our Baptist brethren. How strange? They would not come. The meeting lasted nine days, and resulted in thirty accessions to the church and our thorough establishment at Maplesville. At Salem, Union and New Hope our meetings were equally successful, and in all we have had about one hundred and fifty additions to the church, and the circuit has been so enlarged as to desire a division into two circuits. At the three meetings last mentioned our true yoke-fellow, Bro. J. T. Roper, stood with us shoulder to shoulder, and preached with power, efficiency and acceptability. And now, in order that you may know our rovival is a real one, we will give you some figures. Financial figures are a better index to the spiritual state of a church than loud sponting. Last year, with a bountiful crop of cotton and corn, the whole circuit, for all church purposes, paid less than $200. This year, with less than a half crop of cotton or corn, we will pay our $2,000. This improvement has cost a vast amount of hard labor, earnest prayer and bitter tears; but all the glory be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. B. F. Blow, P. C.

Robinson's Springs, Ala., Oct. 26, 1871.

The receipts of the Treasury for the fiscal year last closed was considerably over six million five hundred thousand dollars. This includes back taxes in inconsiderable amounts for several years past, together with the legitimate revenue of 1870. Of this the current school fund exceeds half a million of dollars. This would enable the State to devote to public schools an assistance which no other State in the Union, of corresponding population and wealth, has devoted to this purpose. Yet it is a fact admitted by all that in no State has so little real help been afforded. It would be useless in this article to allude to the general mismanagement that has characterized the public schools. It would not alter the course which has persistently been pursued, or have a tendency to inaugurate a better system. But in view of the large revenue which the Treasury receives for this purpose, it is surprising that there is not a greater number of public schools and more assistance rendered them.

It is a fact, perhaps, not generally known, that the last General Assembly, under the head of "Compensation and Contingent Expenses," spent a little over six hundred and fifty thousand dollars. In the forthcoming report of the Auditor of Public Accounts, the interest tax fund, the levee fund, and floating debt liquidation fund will foot up considerably over three million dollars. Nearly, if not the entire amount of the appropriation for the payment of work done on the levees of the State, has been expended. A provions session of the Legislature, it will be recollected, had authorized the issue of three million dollars of bonds for this purpose.—Picayune.

With a standing army of thirty thousand men, General Sherman complains that he has not troops enough to protect the people on the Western frontier against the Indians. The Cincinnati Enquirer has been at pains to furnish the general with a statistical reason for the absence of means, for the proper and satisfactory performance of his responsible duty. Says the Enquirer:

"The truth is, the troops are in the South, to carry elections and to oppress the people, instead of being in the West, where alone they are needed. The selfish and cruel policy of the administration sacrifices the lives and property of the Western settlers. Just look at this distribution of force: South Carolina and Georgia have each four companies of infantry, Florida and Mississippi each three, Louisiana ten, Alabama six, Arkansas one, Tennessee eight, Texas forty. Most of the latter are, however, on the Indian frontier of that extensive State. There are ten companies in Kentucky.

What is it that goes up the hill and down the hill, and yet never moves? The road.

The Marianna District Conference.

Mr. Editor: Our district conference having closed its deliberations on Saturday last, and knowing the public interest in our religious and moral institutions, requested that the undersigned furnish the New Orleans Christian Advocate with a synopsis of its proceedings.

We regret exceedingly that other imperative duties and a want of traveling facilities prevented the presence of any one of our presidents, and the more so, since many of us never saw a Methodist bishop.

In his absence, however, we found, of course, an able and efficient substitute in our beloved presiding elder, Angus Dowling.

The members present also regretted the absence of so many pastors and other official members of the conference, and adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That there are no interests of more vital importance than an attendance of its members upon the district conference when convened, and it is the sense of the conference that it is the imperative duty of all its members, and especially its pastors, to attend its meetings.

It was ascertained, from the various reports submitted and received, that there was a wonderful display of divine favor and goodness in some of the charges, and that there was an increasing religious interest in the entire district.

In the discussions of the various questions coming up before the conference for its deliberations, the following preamble and resolutions were, from time to time, adopted.

On motion of Rev. W. H. Morris and J. J. Cassidy it was

Resolved, That this district conference concede the importance of pastoral visiting, and regard it as indispensable to the usefulness and success of the ministry.

Resolved, That though this kind of labor is very difficult of performance and of peculiar embarrassment, and although we, as pastors, have tried to do something in this direction, yet we will ask ourselves the question, as pastors, if we could not have done more of that kind of work than we have done?

Resolved, That we, as pastors, will try to do more pastoral visiting in the future than we have done in the past.

Preamble and resolution offered by Rev. D. C. Crook and Bro. N. P. Dowling, which were adopted:

Whereas, Since the popular amusements of our day is but another name for the amphitheater and Olympic games of the Grecians and other ancient heathens, and foster a gross, vicious and extravagant spirit, and a love of display and dress that leads its votaries into bankruptcy and intrigue, and is incompatible and antagonistic to the religion of our meek and lowly Saviour; be it therefore

Resolved, That the pastors and other official members of the Marianna District Conference enforce the Discipline and rules upon those engaging in these amusements, with a gentle, vigorous, but uncompromising determination.

Resolved, That the spirit of Methodism is defeated where these amusements are tolerated in church.

Rev. D. C. Crook and Bro. B. G. Alderman offered the following preamble and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Since the dealing in and drinking ardent spirits within the bounds of this district is sending thousands of our best citizens to early graves, and blunting and paralyzing the moral and mental powers of thousands now living;

Resolved, That as pastors and official members of the church, we make it a specialty to impress upon the minds of our people, both in our social and public ministry, the widespread destruction caused from this evil.

Resolved, That no one, who deals in ardent spirits as a beverage, should be deemed entitled to membership in our church.

The statistics exhibit three hundred and fifty-two accessions, the greater number having joined the church a few weeks previous to the meeting, hence, we hope our presiding elder will be able to report many more at the annual conference. The delegates elected to the annual conference were: Rev. John Dowling, Bro. N. P. Dowling, Dr. A. F. Powers and J. H. Crawford. Alternates, Rev. Charles F. Britten and Bro. L. M. Edwards.

Respectfully, D. C. Crook,
B. G. Alderman.

THE BOLD PILGRIM.

A SPIRITUAL SONG.

Come all ye wand'ring Pilgrims dear,
That's bound to Canaan's Land;
Fresh courage take, fight valiantly,
Stand fast with sword in hand.

Our Captain he has gone before,
The Father's only Son.
Then Pilgrims dear, pray don't you fear,
But let us follow on.

We have a gloomy wilderness,
To Canaan's peaceful shore;
A land of drouth, and pits, and snares,
Where chilly winds doth roar.

But Jesus will go with us there.
And guard us by the way;
If enemies examine us,
He'll teach us what to say.

Good morning, brother traveler,
Pray tell to me your name;
The place to which you're traveling,
Likewise from whence you came.

My name it is Bold Pilgrim,
To Canaan's Land I'm bound;
I'm from the howling wilderness,
From that enchanted ground.

Pray what is that upon your head,
That shines so clear and bright;
Also the cov'ring of your breast,
So dazzling to my sight?

What kind of shoes are those you wear,
On which you boldly stand,
Likewise the shining instrument
You bear in your right hand?

'Tis glorious Hope upon my head,
And on my breast my shield;
With this bright sword I mean to fight
Until I win the field.

My feet are shod with Gospel Peace,
On which I boldly stand:
I mean to fight until I die,
To gain fair Canaan's Land.

You'd better stay with me, young man,
And give your journey o'er;
Your Captain now is out of sight,
His face you'll see no more.

My name it is Apollyon,
This land belongs to me;
And for your arms and Pilgrim's dress,
I'll give it all to thee.

O no, says the bold Pilgrim,
Your offer I disdain,
A shining crown of glory
I shortly shall obtain.

If I do but hold out faithful,
To my dear Lord's command,
I jointly shall be heir with Him
In Canaan's richest Land.

Behold the murmuring rivers
Around the blissful shore,
With streams of dazzling glory,
Illuminate my soul.

The trees of life, of heav'nly fruit,
Behold how thick they stand;
O blow a gale, and bear my soul
To Canaan's richest Land.

WASTE PLACES BEING RESTORED.

MR. EDITOR: The first circuit formed in the Mississippi territory, by Tobias Gibson, in 1799, embraced a tract of country bordering on the Mississippi river, which, of late years, has been almost completely abandoned by the ministers of every denomination, except in the cities, larger towns and a few of the moderately populous neighborhoods. I can count more than twenty localities where we once had church buildings, regular preaching, and, at least, comparatively prosperous churches and congregations where we now have none. I have often looked upon this total abandonment of our holy places with inexpressible sadness. Many of our church buildings and camp-grounds are completely obliterated. Not a vestige remains to remind the passer-by of the wonders of divine grace displayed there in former years, in the awakening and conversion of sinners. Where once fields and forests resounded with the triumphant songs of the sacramental hosts, nothing of the sort now breaks the death-like stillness of the lambent air, except the whining ditty of the strolling negro. This desolation was not brought about by any marked apostacy in the church or unfaithfulness in the ministry; but was the result of circumstances contemporary with the history of the times. The lands, for twenty-five miles inward from the Mississippi river, were originally very fertile, and were formerly densely settled with a white population, affording good materials for all church purposes, and during the presence of this population were the chivalrous days of Methodism in these old river counties. But the more wealthy and prosperous cotton planters began to buy out the smaller ones, and continued the practice until there were not white people enough left, in many localities, to keep up a church or congregation, or a respectable school, and, gradually, one place after another was abandoned, until moral desolation reigned, almost unbroken, where once the fair fields of a pure Christianity were highly prosperous. The few church members left here and there transferred their membership to distant churches; and, previous to the war, when they had the means of conveyance, were often seen with their families at church. But having been reduced to poverty by the late war, and now being compelled to stay in the vicinity of their homes on the Sabbath, to protect what little they have left from the thieving portion of the negroes around them, they are almost entirely deprived of the public means of grace. A lady in Adams county, said to me some years ago: "It seems to me that we are falling back into a heathen state, for we often have to commit our dead to the grave without our usual funeral rites, because we have no minister within our reach." A gentleman, not long since, in Claiborne county, pointing to his little daughter, six years old, remarked with emotion: "That child has never heard a sermon in her life, nor seen any sort of public worship." And these are not isolated cases. But, blessed be God, in the midst of our extreme poverty and financial ruin, a brighter day begins to dawn upon the church. The descendants of our old religious families of a former generation are beginning to hunger for the word of life. They say: "We must have the preaching of the gospel re-established within reach of our families. We must have the Sabbath school introduced, that our children may be trained up to be the equals of their generation."

Much of the uncultivated land, which has been abandoned by the labor of the thriftless negro, is now open for the settlement of white families, and they are availing themselves of the privilege offered of the productive soil, fine range for stock, and contiguity to market, by moving into these waste places. Many of them are church members, and most of them the patrons of all Christian institutions; so that even now we begin to have respectable congregations in some of those gospel-forsaken neighborhoods.

At Grand Gulf, which was completely reduced to ashes by the Federal army, churches and all, we have lately re-established regular preaching in a warehouse, temporarily fitted up as a place of public worship. Rev. A. B. Nicholson, of Rocky Spring circuit, and Rev. D. A. J. Parker, incidentally assisted by other ministers, held a protracted meeting there not long since, and organized a church of about twenty members. The citizens intend to build themselves a house of worship soon. But few of the present generation know anything personally of dear old Shiloh church that stood, fifty years ago, about six or eight miles north of Port Gibson. It was a famous church in its day for quarterly and camp-meetings; but, in process of time, it had to succumb to the change of population, and was ultimately abandoned as a place of worship, and long and dreary was the night of gospel destitution, where, in the long past, such men as Winans, Lane, Hearn, Byrd and many others used to move the hearts of vast assemblies with the heavenly pathos of their evangelical sermons. But the Lord be praised for His remembrance of our forsaken Zion! The darkness is passing away, and the true light again begins to shine. The vicinity of Shiloh is being resettled with a thrifty white population, who feel that they must have church privileges within their reach. About midsummer, they erected a bush-arbor, and invited several preachers to hold a protracted meeting for them. The meeting commenced on the twenty-fourth of September, and continued with two services a day for eight days. God was with us of a truth. The work of the Spirit grew deeper and wider to the end of the meeting. The result was the organization of a church of forty members, all new members, except four or five. Such a time of baptizing and receiving into full fellowship, I have not had for many years.

And now, Mr. Editor, permit me to say that the main object I have in view in writing this communication is to call the attention of the members of the Mississippi Conference to the importance of reoccupying these waste places immediately, that we may take an even start with the new uprising and incoming population. It is true we will have, in many places, to commence in private dwellings, schoolhouses, and under bush-arbors, just as Tobias Gibson did seventy-one years ago; but with circumstances in our favor which he did not then enjoy. I know it will require preachers of a self-denying, adventurous and enterprising spirit to rehabilitate these moral wastes, for they will have to commence at the foundation, and do the work in detail, no doubt, amidst some discouragements; but it can be done successfully by holy and faithful men. A lady member of our church informed me, not long since, that a Catholic priest had noiselessly entered one of our abandoned neighborhoods, and visited and talked with the people privately, until he had collected fourteen persons into his church, and several of them the children of Protestant parents. Can we not find Methodist ministers who can and will do things in a similar way, until they lead scores into the true spiritual church of Jesus Christ?

INFANT BAPTISM.

MR. EDITOR: The thoughts that follow were called forth from a most worthy member of the Baptist church, that I would furnish him with a "Thus saith the Lord" for one practice of infant baptism. Their boast is, that our arguments for the practice are purely inferential, and not based upon any direct passage of Scripture. It is not our intention to derogate from the immense value, and sometimes irrefragable power of the inferential argument, but merely and charitably to humor that weakness of our brethren which is incapable of appreciating it.

There is such a passage, if we can only settle with certainty the meaning of one of its terms. That passage is: "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven," and the term referred to is: "The kingdom of Heaven."

I am well aware, in entering upon the following exegetical remarks, that there are exegesis of the passage far more able and complete than this can pretend to be, but they are found in voluminous works seldom read by the layman. I shall confine myself entirely to the establishment of the meaning of the phrase: "Kingdom of God." All expositors agree that, in many cases, the expression is used to signify Christ's kingdom upon earth or the church. Now, if we can establish the fact that Christ uses it in this text in the latter signification, we have a direct, unequivocal injunction from His own lips to receive children into the church—an injunction accompanied with strong denunciatory language in case of disobedience. It is stated that Christ was much displeased at His disciples' rebuke of those (their parents, of course), who brought them. No wonder that He was much displeased. The act of the disciples was the incipiency of a movement or theory, which, in its maturity, would annihilate one of the grand principles in the stone-work of God's spiritual church.

The church or kingdom of God idea has been the same in all ages, except that under the Jewish dispensation, it was not so completely and visibly developed in its spiritual manifestation, which lack of spiritual development was supplied by numerous types emblematic of, and containing germinally those higher spiritual forms to be ushered in by Christ. The types, of course, were done away when Christ cried out from Calvary: "It is finished," but every real spiritual entity, in their various stages of development, were of necessity retained; only cleansed of every cumbering and merely sensuous form. Now, there were many spiritual entities in the structure of Judaism; some of them as highly developed nearly as by Christ; such were some precepts of morality and the practical axioms of life, founded upon human relationship. Such things as the Jews could receive Moses gave them, while the more subtle spiritual distinctions he hid under types.

Now, there is one great spiritual principle of the church idea which the Jews could receive and act upon, and God (from the prominence given to it in the Old Testament) evidently considered it one of the most important and perennially essential of all the constituent principles of His church. I refer to the relationship of the family to the church. The church, then, and always is to be a congeries of families.

The almost unlimited moral leverage of parental and domestic influence was to be used evermore. Would God, in the policy of an infinite wisdom, throw away such a means? The first stone laid in the foundation of the church of God was the assertion of this principle. He said to Abraham: "Circumcise thy children, for I will be a God to thee and thy seed." Let no one-sided advocate of depravity, or the necessity of every one being born again, cry out in alarm at the danger of giving prominence to such a doctrine. There is no conflict. It is true every one must be born again; but, in order to that birth, must every divinely appointed barrier to the rushing stream of human depravity be removed, that the soul may become as guilty as possible, and thus fitted for the birth? We have thus proved that the induction of children into the church was founded upon a principle of spiritual economy perennially and intrinsically essential, and hence, to be used in all ages of the church.

Now, if these reflections be true, a great deal of light is thrown upon the above transaction of Christ and His apostles, with reference to children, and a deep significance given to His words. To paraphrase His words, He says to His disciples, with high displeasure: "Stop right here; go not a step further, lest you subvert, not only a Jewish custom, but a fundamental principle of My own kingdom. Not only is My kingdom constituted of such, but adult persons must become like them, in order to enter therein. These parents have brought their children to Me, the Messianic founder of a new kingdom, in conformity with a custom of their fathers, even as Abraham brought his children. It is a custom that must continue; a law that I shall not revoke."

Now, these words receive a high and emphatic signification from the fact that this act of Christ is a departure from His usual method. The attentive student of His life cannot fail to observe that Christ merely lays down the broad germinal principles of His kingdom. He never explores them to their remotest ramifications, never practically develops them. He leaves that to the future. "My kingdom is like unto a grain of mustard seed," afterward to become a tree. He appoints a ministry, but not its orders. He announces the Holy Ghost, but not its operations; baptism, but not its modes. He does, however, here announce its subjects; so great is the importance of the principle in His recognition. There is a context of the above passage powerfully confirmatory of the meaning we have given to the phrase "Kingdom of Heaven."

Dr. Watson has not noticed it. It immediately follows the account of the above transaction; in fact, is a part of it. Mark x, 16: "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall not enter therein." The condition of salvation is here spoken of, which condition must, of course, be performed here, in this life—that is, whoever expects to enter the kindom of heaven must do what a little child has already done, who has entered that kingdom. The condition must be performed here, even as a little child performs it here—i. e.—enters the church. Does not this passage incontestably fix the meaning of the above phrase, and thus constitute these words of Christ a direct and emphasized injunction to bring up children in the church? C. C.

FEW SUGGESTIONS ON REVIVALS.

MR. EDITOR: We have thought for a long time that some suitable suggestions upon the best method of conducting a revival meeting would be in place, and profitable.

From September till December we are occupied, in the main, in holding protracted and camp-meetings, and this becomes really the harvest season for the church, and during this time we expect her interests to be advanced more than at any other time. Hence, to conduct these meetings in the best way, and so as to do the most good, is a matter of very great importance. We propose to point out a few (as we conceive them to be) inaccuracies in the method usually observed in conducting these meetings, and would suggest what we think a better way.

For instance, at the close of the sermon, the preacher or some else will invite penitents to come to the altar for the prayers of the church, a revival song is called for, and, as soon as the singing commences, the preacher comes down from the pulpit, mounts a bench or chair, the congregation (if at camp-meeting) stand on their seats, instead of sitting on them, and he carries on an impassioned exhortation, no one understanding a word he says; nor does it appear that he wants them to understand, as he usually closes when the singing stops.

This practice, in our judgment, is worse than useless confusion.

Would it not be a better way, at the close of the sermon, if penitents are invited, to sing an appropriate hymn, and not talk any more till the singing is done?

This would prevent confusion, and give the mind an opportunity to appropriate the truth to which it had been listening. Again, it would be well enough, when any one in the congregation is discovered to be serious, for some to go quietly to them and solicit them to come to the altar; but to go up and down the aisles and through the congregation, as our manner sometimes is, and urge everybody to the altar, in our judgment, is not the best. We have known lewd men, of the baser sort, under just such circumstances, go to the altar so that the preacher might be encouraged to continue the meeting. They were well fed there and enjoyed the company, and, as they say: "Did not think it much harm in playing off on the preacher."

As a general thing, penitents are kept kneeling at the altar too long; they become fatigued and uncomfortable, their position is not favorable, either for thought or prayer. The whole service is not unfrequently protracted to too great a length.

The body must have the necessary rest and recreation, that the interest of the soul may be properly attended to. J. P.

THE DRUNKARD REFORMED.

MR. EDITOR: I see in your paper of the fifth instant, an article entitled, "A Drunkard's Confession," the writer of which confesses himself a drunkard, and earnestly desires advice on the subject of a reformation. He says: "A temperate man has but a poor appreciation of a drunkard's feelings; in fact, he knows nothing about them. I have many friends, like myself, who would be glad to become sober men, if they knew how. All drunkards are cowards upon that subject. There is a fascination about drinking whisky, which I cannot even describe myself. I know and feel its evil effects. I see plainly the unhappiness it causes my family and friends. I feel my own degradation and shame, and, with all these facts staring me in the face, I cannot refrain. You will say, that it is for the want of true moral courage. You are right; it is, I know it. There is not one drunkard in a hundred who has moral courage at all, and I am not an exception."

I sincerely sympathize with this person, and, indeed, with all who have become enslaved by intemperance; and as I have recently met with a remedy prescribed by a writer in the Phrenological Journal, which strikes me with great force, I send it to you for his benefit, and that of others, who may be alike unfortunate. I quote from the article as follows: "In nearly all cases of intemperance, whether from the use of alcoholic liquors, opium or tobacco, the habit is formed gradually. At first, the stomach and brain revolt at it. The intoxication is a confused state of mind, a kind of insanity which is exceedingly disagreeable. The first cigar makes the boy sick and pale, with a deathly horror of tobacco. The beginner learns to take a less amount, and to stop before he goes to excess. After a while he can endure half a cigar, then a whole one, until at last he can smoke ten hours in a day. Every day the nervous system comes more and more to depend on the narcotic, until, if it were suddenly withdrawn, there would be such prostration as finds no parallel, except in the repentant devotees of those other twin evils, opium and alcohol.

"If the health, force, resolution and moral purpose of a man depend largely upon the integrity of the nervous system, and that system has become demoralized by the use of the stimulant or the narcotic, and thereby the man has become a slave to the habit, how can he effectually achieve his emancipation but by restoring that system to its normal condition? And how can this be done? Some have a comparatively insensitive nervous system, and strong and vigorous constitutions, and, consequently, stimulants and narcotics do not take so complete a hold on them, as would be the case with a more susceptible nature. Such persons, if the habit be not of too long standing, can cut it off at once; can rise and declare immediate emancipation, and stand by that declaration until the system recuperates and secures its former balance. They can stifle the practice and endure the self-denial until nature restores the nervous system. Of these there may be five in a hundred; but the more sensitive ninety-five may form excellent resolutions, only, in most cases, to break them.

"As the effects of rum and tobacco on the system create a disease, the way to conquer the habit is to cure the disease. The first and most important requisite to this result is to rectify the habit of living. Plain and simple food, without spices, mustard, etc., should be adopted. In other words nourish, but do not stimulate the system in any way. The patient should sleep abundantly, to rest the nerves and brain. If it be tobacco which the patient would be rid of, let him ascertain how much satisfies him for a week, and reduce the amount by, say one-tenth, for the use of the next week, and so each subsequent week, using but nine-tenths as much as was used the week previous. In this way the amount taken will be so gradually reduced that nature will be able, week by week, to fill up the vacuum as fast as the narcotic is withdrawn. In three months time the amount will have been so much reduced, and the system so far restored to normal condition thereby, that a manly resolve to sweep away the last vestige of the habit forever, may be taken with a fair hope—indeed with a positive assurance—of success. Such a reformation, faithfully carried forward with religious integrity, will bring the man to freedom from the dominion of the habit, and to soundness and health of constitution.

"The same rule will apply to the use of opium or alcoholic liquors, and if faithfully followed will surely bring about a permanent reform.

"Thousands of men, like unhappy flies struggling in a spider's web, would gladly be free; but having been taught only sudden abandonment as a means of reform, and having a hundred times tried and failed, could and would adopt a systematic and gradual abandonment of their bane, and we believe ninety in a hundred of such, even unaided by the warm support of temperate friends, would come off victors. No man more than the slave of habit is aware of the evil of it, or more than he, abhors it and himself for his weakness and folly; but this does not put out the fire, does not cure the disease, does not liberate him.

"Those who for years have practiced eating arsenic become able to use a quantity that would kill six men who are unaccustomed to it; yet, if they quit the habit suddenly, they have all the symptoms of being poisoned. They acquire the habit of using the poison by taking small doses at first, the constitution braces up against its effects until it can endure larger quantities. A gradual withdrawal will enable the system to re-adjust itself, and the patient is not only saved from the poison, but cured of the habit."

I hope our friend "Toper" will give the above a fair trial, and let us hear from him again, through the ADVOCATE, as to its results.

Yours truly, GEORGE SHÆFFER.

TO THE FLOWERS.

BY HENRY DOWNTON.

O flowers, but ye are wonderful!
I speak not of your dyes:
Not for your beauty now I cull
Your bright varities;
'Tis at your scents I marvel more,
So manifold and true;
More separate their fragrant store
Than hue distinct from hue.

Though in each kind the color change,
One odor still is there;
Through all the scale may range,
Each tint than each more fair;
But violet blue and violet white,
And lilac dark or pale,
The same sweet breath for our delight
With constant truth exhale.

The stock and wallflower, side by side
On garden-bed shall grow;
From the same soil their sap supplied,
In the same air they blow;
But whence that perfume all its own
Does each loved flower obtain?
Scents, to my earliest childhood known,
Ye bring those hours again!

Sweet-pea, sweet-briar and mignonette,
Words cannot tell your power
My thoughts in some dim scene to set,
In some far distant hour,
Beyond the baffled memory's reach,
In life's just dawning day,
When not as yet I lisped in speech,
And heaven about me lay!*

Yet not your hue nor form, methinks,
Thus in my heart remain;
Your matchless odors are the links
Which weave the pleasing chain:
These take me back I know not where,
Revive the infant dream,
And wake the thought of climes more fair,
And light of purer beam.

And then I marvel not that He
Who made us, flowers and men,
Proclaimed that who His heaven would see
Must be as babes again;
Must from the heights of pride return,
From self's and passions sway,
And at His feet in meekness learn
To love Him and obey!

Awake, O North Wind! come, thou South!
And on my garden blow;
Come, rain and dew! and break the drouth
And bid the spices flow;
And bring, O Sharon's Rose Divine!
Thy peerless fragrance pure;
Though sweets of all the earth were mine,
Thy royal right is sure!

"Relics of Eden!" types ye are
Of better things to come,
Pledges of joys His hands prepare
For our eternal home;
Alas! the reek of flame and death
Our earthly breezes fills;
O for the air the blessed breathe
On yon celestial hills!

But we shall breathe it soon; and while
We wait that crowning day,
Your fragrance shall our toil beguile,
Your beauty cheer our way:
'Twas sweetly sung†—"We might have had
For every want' of ours
Enough, enough,"—to make us glad
Our Father gave us flowers!

MERCY BEFORE SACRIFICE.

BY A. L. WARING.

"Come unto me * * * and I will give you rest."—ST. MATT. xi. 28.

Come to the clear, deep river,
Come where the pastures call;
Give to the great good Giver
The trust that is thy all
From want eternal dwelling,
Come to an endless store;
Bring thy whole famished being
For He wants nothing more.

If thoughts of thine appall thee,
Oh lean on His and live;
To sacrifice they call thee,
While He is here to give.
Accept thy Father's measure
Of need that He can see.
The heart to do His pleasure
Is in His love for thee.

He will not now refuse thee,
Weak hand and vision dim.
For something He will use thee,
But first thou wantest Him.
The spirit worn with straying,
Will find His judgment best:
Oh hear what He is saying,
And yield thyself to rest.

For one transporting minute
The beckoning word obey:
There is a power within it
To bear thee on thy way.
That voice of mercy speaking
Is God the Saviour's might.
And all thy heart is seeking
Lies safely in its light.

OLD CATHOLIC CONGRESS.

We take from the Independent the following personal sketches of the chief actors in the Congress at Munich:

Prof. Schulte, who teaches canon law at Prague, and who was the president of the congress, exhibited more of the spirit of a leader than Dollinger, who appears to be burdened with the proverbial timidity of scholarship. As a jurist, Schulte has naturally dealt more with the political than with the strictly religions character of the new reform; and that fact gave his voice prominence in the council—for it cannot be denied that the sinews of this war are drawn from the courts, rather than from the churches. The great reformer is Bismarck; and the professors have not shown themselves willing to go much further than he has cleared the way. Of Von Schulte the correspondent of the London Standard says:

"I was astonished to see the famous professor. A more unprofessional looking man have I never seen. Notwithstanding all his minute criticism on the Vatican Council, drawn from ancient writers in the canon law, his appearance is much more military than ecclesiastical. Half politician, half soldier in aspect, his great forehead and strongly marked, resolute brows give him a certain resemblance to Bismarck."

Michelis was another of the notabilities. The same correspondent thus sketches him:

"He is probably, next to Dollinger, the most marked figure in the movement; and he has this advantage, that he is younger in years, and better able to bear all the fatigue which the struggle imposes on the leaders. He is now just fifty-six, and has a magnificent presence for an orator; but thoroughly ecclesiastical, in the noblest sense, in his demeanor and appearance. I met him first at dinner some time ago, without being aware of his name; but it was enough to see those quiet, thoughtful eyes and massive features, a countenance so full at once of thought and capacity for action—to know that I was in the presence of a leader of men."

Michelis was professor of philosophy at Braunsberg when the reform movement arose; and, on his refusal to accept the Vatican decrees, he was immediately suspended. Since that time he has thrown himself with great energy into the movement. His principal speech before the congress was against the Jesuits. He contended that it was the duty of citizens at this juncture "to use the power of the State to break up the Jesuits and expel them from the country. It was a very bold line to take, and maintained with the closest reasoning and in eloquent but measured language. The Jesuits must go out of Germany. There was no commotion necessary for this—no violence. The laws already existing were amply sufficient, if they were rightly understood and applied, and to this all Germans must apply themselves. During an hour and a half he held the vast multitude in rapt attention. His magnificent voice filled every corner of the vast building. There was no ornament in the language; simple clearness and close reasoning." The Breslau professor, Reinckens, was also one of the prominent figures in the assembly. He, too, attacked the Jesuits, asserting that "the object of the party had been to reduce the church to a mere mechanism and destroy it as an organization. They had succeeded in destroying the life of the Episcopacy; but the spirit of the church, the inner life of the church, still lived among the German people and a portion of the priesthood, and would assert itself." When Dollinger first rose to speak, few appeared to recognize him. No person is better known in Munich; but the great body of these six hundred delegates were from all parts of Germany and other countries, and most of them had never seen the learned professor. "The labors of the last few weeks have told upon him, and he hardly looks as fresh as when he returned from his retreat at Starenberger See. His speech was a short and pithy explanation of the reason why a special paragraph had been alloted to the Church of Utrecht, and had direct bearing on the dealing of the Papacy with the Catholic congregations in England. This small Catholic congregation in Holland claimed the rights of a church to have bishops of its own, etc.; but the Roman power maintained that it was only a mission church—that is, a church to be ruled by agents sent from Rome, not by a hierarchy clothed with episcopal rights. The Dutch congregations would not yield, and the Curia charged them with Jansenism. This church in Utrecht, continued Dr. Dollinger, was a small one, consisting only of about five thousand; but it consisted of devoted adherents to Catholic doctrine, who had maintained episcopal rights more than a century against the aggressions of Rome. The reproach of Jansenism was a mere fabrication, in order to discredit a congregation who had proved such sturdy opponents of Roman usurpation. They had now expressed a wish to co-operate with the Old Catholics. The assembly, which had risen to its feet on the appearance of the renowned theologian, now rose again as he sat down, and greeted him in German fashion, with a loud hoch, waving hats in the air. Dr. Dollinger rose again and bowed his acknowledgments, and the discussion proceeded." Von Schulte advocated and the congress indorsed the employment of the excommunicated priests in the spiritual care of those families, which had also been excommunicated, gathering the latter so far as possible into communities. For these new communities and their pastors the protection of the State is demanded. To this step in the direction of organization Dr. Dollinger objected; but his protest was not allowed to restrain the congress from this important action. As there is yet no bishop among the Reformers, the question rose as to what should be done if the present clergy died out, or if the number of the Old Catholic congregation increased. To this Von Schulte replied that he did not yet despair of the Episcopacy; but, if they could not secure a bishop, there was the Church of Utrecht, from which they could obtain episcopal orders. With this Dollinger agreed. He said "that the delegation of episcopal authority must be undertaken, rather than accept the untruth of infallibility; but the time had not arrived for this undertaking. He fully admitted the right, nay the duty, to constitute a new church, or a new sect, rather than yield; but at present he clung to the principle that they were the church, and he awaited events. When the necessity arose, then must they meet that necessity; but that necessity he did not yet see." Our correspondent has given the main results of the congress. A much more radical programme, including the abolition of celibacy, auricular confession, and worship of images and relics, as well as the complete disestablishment of the church, civil marriage, and public schools without religion was proposed by the Stuttgart Committee; but this was overruled. However, the revolution is begun; and, although it is a false saying that revolutions never go backward, we may trust that this one will gather strength and breath as is proceeds. Since the close of the congress some important events have transpired. The Liberals of Munich have interpellated the government on the church question, and the telegraph brings in the reply of Minister Von Lutz. He said "that the State had at all times the right to make changes in the laws relating to the Roman Church. The Catholic Church having declared a change of principles, and infallibility being a doctrine dangerous to the State, the government had resolved to protect any and all of its citizens who could not accept the infallibility of the Pope as an article of faith. The government would still consider such persons as Roman Catholics, and it would oppose any encroachment by the Roman Catholic Church upon the principles of the civil constitution. Moreover, the minister declared that the sentiment of the king and council of State favored a separation of the religions and political branches of the government, and the complete independence of each."

A young priest from Breslau has been suspended by the archbishop for taking part in the congress. Herr Bluntschli will, at a meeting of Protestants at Darmstadt, propose the formation of a general association throughout Germany for the expulsion of the Jesuits. The Ultramontanes have also been doing something in the way of public agitation. The annual meeting of the Catholic societies has been held at Mayence. The five or six hundred gentlemen composing this meeting were evidently greatly excited. The recent overturnings in Italy and Germany had aroused all the indignation of their souls, and their utterances breathed defiance. They saw very clearly who the party of the other part was, and leveled all their big guns straight at Bismarck. It is not reported that this assault has damaged the appetite of the Chancellor.

DEATH OF WESLEYAN MINISTERS.

The London Methodist Recorder announces the death of two well-known Wesleyan Methodist ministers—Rev. Thomas Vasey and Rev. Richard Felvus. In the notice of the death of the first named, the Recorder says:

"The death of the Rev. Thomas Vasey is an event which will be felt by thousands of our readers as a personal sorrow. A more pure-hearted, noble-minded man than Thomas Vasey never existed, and if in any instance his judgment might be thought to be at fault, it was impossible to withhold admiration from that outspoken candor, that unfailing courage, that transparent honesty, and that irresistible good humor which endeared him to all, and especially to his brethren in the ministry. As a preacher he was singularly gifted; and although, as is necessarily the case with a purely extempore speaker, he occasionally failed; yet these instances, especially in his latter years, were exceedingly rare, while very frequently his sermons were masterpieces of vivid eloquence, and were attended with extraordinary power. Only three days before his departure, referring to the sudden death of the Rev. Richard Felvus, he remarked in his own cheery way, that 'Bro. Felvus had given him the slip, and got into heaven before him.' His triumph over the last enemy was complete. 'If this be dying,' he said to Mr. Pearson, 'our friends need not fear it; it is glorious.'"

In speaking of the death of Mr. Felvus, the same paper says:

"We announce with regret the death of this estimable minister. On Monday, September 25, he attended the quarterly meeting at Harrogate, apparently in his usual health, and toward the close of the proceedings he was seized with a fit. Medical aid was at once sent for, and he was removed home. Early on the following morning apoplexy again seized him, which speedily resulted in his death. During a brief interval of consciousness he assured his friends of the presence of Christ with him. To him sudden death was sudden glory. Mr. Felvus was born in 1799, and entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1823. In the earlier years of his ministry he was extremely popular, and so long as he continued to preach, his ministry was highly prized. His style of composition was peculiarly his own; his sermons being a succession of short sentences and aphorisms, which often told upon his congregation with great effect."

PROVERBS.

Mrs. A. E. Barr, in the Christian Union, giving the cognate proverbs of different nations, has the following on "Know thyself:"

"Know thyself" was the Delphic proverb which faced every devotee as he entered that famous shrine. And the original majestic simplicity of this sum of earthly wisdom is discernable in all its wanderings—even in the homely dialect and sly obliquity of

"Oh, wad some power the giftie gie us
To see ourse'l's as ithers see us!"

Taking the mote out of another's eye, while the beam is in our own, receives in the following proverbs a wide and significant reproof. "Satan corrects sin" is the English version. In Italy the pan says to the pot: "Keep off or you'll smudge me." In Spain the raven cries to the crow: "Avaunt, Blackamoor." In Germany one ass calls another "Long Ears," while the peculiar state of morals in Catalonia gives a great significance to their version of the same proverb: "Death said to the man with his throat cut, how ugly you look!"

Of the Italian proverb she says: The majority of Italian proverbs are cynical and selfish, and have an ecclesiastical and revengeful flavor. "Big churches, little saints." "Touch a friar and the cowls flutter as far as Rome." "With the gospel one becomes a heretic." So much for the orthodoxy they represent. Many of them relate to intrigue, to the danger of which they are quite sensible, as such proverbs as this evidence: "For an honest man half his wits is sufficient, the whole is too little for a knave." Those relating to revenge show a depth of sly vindictiveness painful to contemplate. "Revenge waits time and place, it is never well done in a hurry;" and revenge, when one hundred years old, has still its sucking teeth."

SOMETHING ABOUT READING.

The following is what Frederick W. Robertson said once in a letter, with regard to reading: "I never knew but one or two fast readers of many books, whose knowledge was worth anything. Mrs. Martineau says of herself that she is the slowest of readers—sometimes a page in an hour. But, then, what she reads she makes her own. Do impress this on E——. Girls read too much and think too little. I will answer for it that there are few girls of eighteen who have not read more books than I have; and as to religious books, I can count upon my fingers in two minutes all I ever read; but then they are mine. Sir Erskine Perry said the other day, that a fortnight ago, in a conversation with Comte, he told him he had read an incredibly small number of books these last twenty years. I forgot how many; scarcely ever a review.

"Multifarious reading weakens the mind more than doing nothing. For it becomes a necessity, at last, like smoking, and is an excuse for the mind to lie dormant, while thought is poured in, and runs through a clear stream of unproductive gravel, on which not even mosses grow. It is the idlest of all idleness, and leaves more of impotency than any other. I do not give myself as a specimen, for my nervous energies are shattered by stump oratory, its excitement and reactions; but I know what reading is, for I could read once, and did. I read hard, or not at all—never skimming, never turning aside to merely inviting books; and Plato, Aristotle, Butler, Thucydides, Sterne, Jonathan Edwards, have passed like the iron atoms of the blood into my mental constitution."

HOW MINISTERS MUST BE RAISED.

Bishop Janos, at the late General Conference in Buffalo, made some timely remarks to the new candidates for the ministry received into the conference. He said there were two classes of ministers. The first have a love for, and manifested a delight in their work, and the second are those who feel, "Woo is me if I preach not the gospel." The church used to take more interest in bringing young men into this work. It used to be that when a young man was converted, and gave evidence in the social meeting of the church that he had gifts from on high, his class-leader would talk with him, the pastor would talk with him, and devoted women of the church would say to him that God had a work for him. Too much stress is put upon the educated ministry, instead of an educated church. Colleges and theological seminaries cannot supply the want—whole generations would be doomed, if the church depended on them for its supply of ministers. There is a growing apathy in the church, on the subject of looking after suitable candidates for the ministry. More public and private preaching on this subject is demanded. Fathers and mothers should devote their children from early childhood to this work. The bishop then spoke of the importance of the pastoral work.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Presbyterian Church, of the Northern Assembly, proposes to raise for its various church charities, $1,550,000, which is an average of $3 40 per member.

THE Emperor of Brazil recently inquired for an old Jewish Bible, at the library of Oxford, and was told that there is none older than six hundred years. The Emperor reads Hebrew manuscript.

SEVEN churches, six convents, eight schools, two asylums and two hospitals, belonging to the Roman Catholics, were destroyed by the Chicago fire. The Rev. Father Gavin, of Chicago, mentioned that there were probably thirty thousand of the people of that faith among the sufferers of the fire in that city.

THE Bombay Guardian publishes details of the remarkable progress of missions in the Telugu country, one hundred and fifty miles from Madras, during the last two years. This region is occupied by two of our American societies. About two thousand five hundred persons, mostly of the Chuckla caste (below even the Pariahs), have in that time renounced heathenism and been gathered into the visible church, and more are coming over.

THE American Board proposes to push its China missions beyond the frontiers northwestward into Mongolia. Rev. John T. Gulick and his brother, now in Japan, will be the pioneers. The London Missionary Society (also Congregational) is about reopening its former mission in the same region, and takes Pekin for its base of operations there. The Rev. James Gilmour, its pioneer, has already met several persons intimately associated with the former mission, and obtained from them much valuable information.

THE Rev. J. F. Thomson (Methodist Episcopal Church missionary), writing from Montevideo, says that more men than women attend our services, and more than (of men) attend the services of the Roman Catholic churches in that city of one hundred thousand inhabitants.—Among these are some of the finest men and minds in the city. A public discussion of ten hours' duration had been held; and, as he thinks, with great advantage to the cause of evangelical truth. He adds: "We have preaching every Sunday, in English, Spanish and Italian."

A MEETING of Protestants, representing various portions of the German Empire, was held at Darmstadt, for the purpose of discussing the condition of the Protestant religion in Germany. A declaration was adopted setting forth: 1. That it is the interest of Germany to oppose the doctrine of papal infallibility. 2. That the dogma is inimical to the sovereignty of the State and 'liberties' of the people, and destructive of that freedom of conscience, which is the basis of our pure religion. 3. That the establishment of the "Order of Jesus" must be prohibited.

The Italian government remains firm in its determination to seize and hold the convent grounds of the city when they are required for the use or convenience of the crown; and, in accordance with this determination, the officers of King Victor Emmanuel have given notice that they require the building and premises of the Convent St. Andre, near the Quirinal, for the purpose of enlarging his majesty's stables. The Jesuit fathers protest, the government hesitates, and the Pope orders the authorities of the convent to yield only to force. The imperium in imperio does not work smoothly.

THE Chicago Theological Seminary has resumed its work. Its buildings are safe; its students are together, except so far as they are temporarily serving as special police; and its funds are nominally unimpaired by the fire. But its immediate income, both for students and faculty, cannot be depended upon. The institution cannot be spared nor suspended, and its friends at the East, as well as the West, must be instant and liberal with their aid. Donations for the aid of the students may be sent to Rev. Moses Smith, 48 Hamilton avenue, Chicago, and for the seminary itself to the treasurers, Rev. H. L. Hammond, 19 North Sangammon street, or Prof. S. C. Bartlett.

THE revolt against Rome has reached South America. The city of Lima and its seaport, Callao, contain about fourteen thousand Italians, who proposed to celebrate the anniversary of the occupation of Rome by the national troops. The new President of Peru was induced by the clergy to forbid the celebration. The students in the colleges determined to disregard the prohibition, and they and their friends assembled in the public square; but while the editor of the National newspaper was delivering an oration, troops charged from the four sides of the square, scattering the assembly and taking five hundred prisoners. The next day the clerical party got up a counter demonstration. A procession marched through the streets, carrying a life-sized portrait of the Pope. When the procession halted, to go through with the ceremony of blessing the feet, it was discovered that the picture had been smeared with turpentine. At this the ire of the Catholics was greatly aroused, and there were threats of violence. A revolution is possible, and the government is taking precaution against it.

EXTRAORDINARY statements of a stir in the East have been current lately. "In Damascus," it is said, "not less than three thousand Mohammedans have avowed a desire to become Christians. They have regular prayer-meetings, and pray to the Lord Jesus Christ that He will reveal himself as their Saviour and lead them into truth and light." The British consul, to whom the matter has been brought, is represented as "taking the greatest interest in this wonderful appearance;" and the missionaries are reported as saying that "it increases rapidly every day." "There is also a movement among the Jews. Many, like Nicodemus, faithful inquirers, are coming to Mr. Frankel, asking him to guide them to the Saviour. The Druses are now looking for their Saviour's coming from China. In Persia also a great spiritual movement, in looking forward to the coming Saviour, is evident. All these wonderful things, compared with the Holy Bible, mark the day-break of a better time for the East. These are golden days in which we are privileged to be employed in the Lord's work." We quote these statements from a letter appearing in the London Record, and addressed to the secretary of the Ladies' Society for the Religions Improvement of Syrian Women. It is considered trustworthy. We wait its confirmation with interest.

THE Protestant missionaries in Japan think that the time has come for the Christian governments of the earth with which Japan is in treaty relations to remonstrate vigorously and earnestly against the persecutions of Christians in that country. One of their number, Rev. David Thompson, has been commissioned to visit Europe and America, to confer with leading men and officers of the various governments, and secure their united action on the subject. What the missionaries unitedly and earnestly ask is that the Christian governments shall instruct their respective ministers and representatives in Japan to protest against such persecutions as inhuman and unworthy of a nation that is trying to take on the arts and comforts of modern civilization. The missionaries think that the united and earnest remonstrance of the foreign embassadors would be heeded, and would ere long secure complete religious freedom. To make such remonstrance effectual, they need to be properly instructed and sustained by their respective governments. The Japanese authorities—or, in other words, the Mikado—needs to understand, when the ministers speak, that they are not merely uttering their personal sentiments, but that they represent the great governments of the earth; that they speak the sentiment and the wishes of the civilized world. Mr. Thompson is indorsed in his mission and commended to the confidence and co-operation of Christians everywhere by eight American missionaries, and by two from England, among whom are S. R. Brown, D.D., J. C. Hepburn, M.D., James H. Ballagh, D. C. Greene and Oramel H. Gulick.—Independent.

THE annual report of the Committee of Foreign Missions of the Free Church of Scotland, presented to the General Assembly in May last, has just come to hand, and makes a good exhibit for the missionary work of that body. Their principal missions are in India and Africa, with 77 central and branch stations, 25 ordained European missionaries, 9 ordained native missionaries, and about 150 other laborers as catechists, teachers, Bible-readers and the like. The number of their churches is not given, but they report about 2000 communicants. They occupy some of the principal cities of India, Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Puna, Nagpore, and Nellore, and central portions of Kaffraria, in South Africa. The income of the society the past year was £18,000, an advance of about £4000 over the receipts of the previous year; and it was nearly all expended in the year's work. The celebrated Dr. Duff is the convener or chairman of the committee. The committee are doing much in the way of education. Their "institution" at Calcutta has 1000 scholars; 100 in the college, and 900 in the lower departments. They have, in all, 143 schools and about 10,000 children and youth under instruction. The General Assembly of the Free Church, at its recent sittings, resolved also to commence a mission in the northern part of Syria, in connection with the Saleeby schools, which have been in operation in that region. This, they claim, will not interfere with any existing missions in Syria. Besides the above, the Free Church has given about £3000 in aid of mission work on the Continent of Europe, and has altogether made for itself a good record in respect to the world's evangelization.—Independent.

THE WIND AND CLOUDS.

In spiritual as in natural husbandry it is true that, "He that observeth the wind shall not sow; and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap." There is a timid hesitancy, and an undue considerateness which cripples all effort. In general it is our business to go forward in our proper work, do our part and leave the wind and clouds to Him who reigns over all. There should be wisdom in the inception and conduct of our undertakings, there should be an alert and wakeful discernment of the "signs of the times," and a prompt improvement of the open doors of providence; but, in general, there is more loss and failure from overcaution than from recklessness. Sowing and reaping are in the order of the seasons, the life-work and employment of men, while the elements are in God's hands to dispose and modify. Our discretion has a limited margin in some things, and in others none at all. Under the most forbidding conditions the seed must often be sown, and the reaper, if he would save anything, cannot always wait for a clear sky.

In the matter of our personal salvation there is surely no warrant for delay. It is madness to look for "a more convenient season." It may not come, and by postponement the last opportunity is lost. There are those who are periling their souls in this way, observing the wind, regarding the clouds, and waiting for better weather. They are not ready, although the gospel feast is spread, and the invitation is urgent. The state of their own hearts, the engrossments of business, social entanglements, are all unfavorable. To venture just as they are, and, against all appearances, to start now, is too much for such faith as they have. They do not see their way at present, and must needs halt until the difficulties shall be removed. The intention of repentance some day is a sincere one, but it is cherished under a delusion which is likely to be fatal in the end. This boasting of to-morrow is a sin which grieves the Spirit, and tramples upon the divine authority; and it is a snare, woven and spread by the devil, to entangle the sinner and bind him to everlasting death. That some occasions are more favorable than others cannot be disputed. There are times when the Spirit operates more powerfully, and when the church is more helpful—times when occupation and worldly associations are less in the path of reformation. Another day may bring to the husbandman more favorable atmospheric conditions; but there is uncertainty, and he cannot take the risk. Delay may increase the embarrassment, and the barren field and the empty crib are the price of his timidity. Salvation is possible to-day, there is grace to save even now, and no immortal soul can afford to incur the guilt and danger which hesitation involves.

It is also in the practical duties and enterprises of Christians that this disposition to watch the wind and the clouds is exhibited. Instead of going steadily forward, there are vacillation and doubts about the results. Another day may be better than this, and the time will come when the elements will be more propitious. But if we wait till every cloud is gone, and until every fleck has disappeared, we shall never stir. While "the wind bloweth where it listeth," we must not be idle. Better lost labor than no labor. Far better to try and fail than to do nothing. We cannot tell what shall prosper, nor how much shall come back in the good accomplished. So it is in temporal pursuits. There is always abundant room for faith. But, one year with another, calculations are rightly based upon laws of nature, upon the record of the past, and upon the well-ascertained results of industry and energy. The mechanic, the merchant and the farmer cannot stop, whatever the promise may be. On they must go in their appointed toil, do the best they can, and let the portents of evil take care of themselves.

Nothing is more common in the surprises of life than for things to turn out far better than could have been expected. It is this boldness of faith that we must have in the service of God. This service calls for performance in its season, and should be rendered patiently and trustfully. Whether we are in the routine of church duties, building colleges, establishing and extending our foreign and domestic missions, or attending to the stated collections of the year, waiting for better times is a doubtful expedient in most cases. If circumstances improve in one direction, they are likely to grow worse in another. Let the duties of the time be done as they come, and there will be an average success which far outstrips a hesitating, irregular and overcautious method. Those who have had much to do in the plans and enterprises of the church will be at little loss to recall instances in which this timorous spirit has been the bane of progress, nor will they fail to see how it acts as a hinderance in many ways upon the present prosperity. But for it, what churches might not have been built, what extension might not have been given to our fields of labor, and what mighty expansion might not have been realized in our missions in heathen lands? This weatherwise folly is a clog to advancement and an element of feebleness. A few men of this spirit, men of fearful mind in a church, may depress and weigh down the whole, and invest the plans and policy of an entire connection with utter inertness and imbecility. No matter what liberal things some may devise, what broad and beneficent ideas some may advocate, what aggressive movements some may attempt, these watchers of the wind and clouds are at hand with their discouraging prognostics.

This tendency is often in the ascendant in the spiritual experience of the believer. With the most there are clouds enough—times of heaviness and darkness. Rude winds and adverse gales oppose and dishearten. Temptations assail, the enemy comes in like a flood, and the buffetings of Satan are sharp and unremitting. With many the spiritual horoscope is always ominous of evil. Misgivings about the present and the future rise with the day, and pursue them far into the night. The lessons of Providence are misread, the phenomena of the emotional nature are misunderstood, and a gloomy and false interpretation is put upon the dealings of God. Always fearing, always dismayed, their hands hang down; all elasticity, all hopefulness are lost. Instead of moving right on in the path of duty, regardless of threatening skies, they spend their days in dark forebodings and gloomy apprehensions. The husbandry of the soul is in a desperate case when we yield to this morbid habit. There is neither healthful sowing nor profitable reaping. Absorbed in the doubts and disquietudes of their own hearts, they lose all that is bright and cheerful in Christian experience. What matter if there be blossoms at their feet, the music of song-birds vibrating around them, or even a golden rift in the overhanging cloud? Their senses are closed to all. Instead of watching the wind and clouds, it is better to live by faith, and to trust where we cannot trace or explain the ways of God. It is not only better, but it is possible. It is not only possible, but it is our duty. What has the child of God to do with wind or clouds so long as they are in his Father's hand, and so long as he has the unfailing promises? "If God be for us, who can be against us?" God himself is better than our fears; "as a hiding place from the wind and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land."

REGENERATE.

At the recent triennial convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, held in Baltimore, the House of Bishops sent in a message, signed by all the bishops individually, and entered on the minutes, but not adopted officially by the house, declaring that regenerate in the baptismal service is not used in the sense of a moral change. What it does mean they do not say. This action may quiet "the consciences of sundry members of the same church," but, if it does, they are very easily quieted. Will the Low Church rectors cease to cough over this hard place now, and will they cease to trouble Israel by their contumacious omission of just four syllables in the offices for infant baptism. Regenerate does not mean regenerate. That is the way to cut the knot and have peace. The following is the text of the bishops' declaration:

We, the subscribers, bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, being asked, in order to the quieting of the consciences of sundry members of the same church, to declare our conviction as to the meaning of the word "regenerate" in the offices for the ministration of baptism of infants, do declare that, in our opinion, the word "regenerate" is not there so used as to determine that a moral change in the subject of baptism is wrought in the sacrament.

Losses of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the Chicago Fire.

Dr. Reid, writing to the New York Christian Advocate, thus speaks of the losses of the Methodist Episcopal Church by the late disastrous conflagration:

Our Book Room is gone; we only saved our principal account books and, perhaps, the mail list of the Northwestern Advocate. Our Clark Street Church, where the last General Conference met, is gone. Our beautiful Grace church, on the north side, is gone. Our Scandinavian and German churches on the north side are gone; and a large body of our most wealthy and enterprising Methodists are not only houseless, but their warehouses are also in ruins, and they without a dollar of income. Some of our people had become wealthy by real estate, in some instances descended from their parents, who were among the first settlers of the place. These, in some cases, have only a few vacant lots left and no income at all, whereas last week they might have rejoiced in an annual income of $20,000 or $50,000. The bank vaults are mostly safe, but they contain the papers of our penniless merchants, and, for the present at least, cannot respond to the calls of their depositors. Few are bold enough to count their insurance otherwise than valueless. Yesterday we heard from Judge Goodrich that, in his opinion, the policies on the Methodist Church Block, Clark Street Church, would, for the most part, be paid, as the offices that hold them are not those in which most of our city property is insured. If this should be the case, and another Eastern loan can be obtained at a low rate, such as the one just paid off, the edifice will soon be under way again. The trustees had just this summer paid off the entire debt, and their income of more than $30,000 annually was for the most part now being devoted to city church extension. Let some one who wants to do good, and have a safe investment, at once tender the trustees what they may need, be it $20,000 or $50,000. Such an offer would reinspire Chicago Methodism. Of our brethren in the ministry, who are homeless, may be named E. M. Boring, J. H. Leonard, William H. Daniels, M. M. Parkhurst and one or two of our German brethren. The editors and Dr. Walden are still in their homes.

Never make a remark at the expense of another; it is a meanness.

THE PAPAL FERMENT.

We are not yet prepared to say how the movement in Europe against the infallibility dogma will turn out. The excitement is evidently increasing, and the papacy is in a bad way. The Old Catholic revolt against the Pope and the Jesuits seems to have reached a point where compromise and reconciliation are impossible. If their action at Munich has been correctly represented, the Old Catholics, as they choose to call themselves, are very far on their way to Protestant ground. The following statement of affairs will give our readers an idea of the present aspect of the most significant religious agitation which has occurred since the times of Luther:

The Congress of the "Old Catholics" of Switzerland at Soloure, held on the eighteenth of September, was attended by more than four hundred delegates, representing every canton. It was asserted in the Congress that it represented two-thirds of the Catholics of Switzerland. The resolutions adopted by the Congress declare that the Old Catholics of Switzerland renounce connection with the Holy See, and that they have formed a separate organization to maintain the ancient faith free from the modern innovations, which have been chiefly devised by the Jesuits. Above all things, they reject the dogma of papal infallibility as contrary to the true faith of the church, to common sense, and to the enlightened spirit of the age.

The new organization will have priests chosen by the congregations, and receiving fixed salaries. Clerical celibacy is abolished, the number of holidays restricted, and a simpler mode of worship, divested of empty ceremonials, is proposed. A paper in favor of legislation by the State to prevent the church interfering with civil affairs was received with enthusiasm.

The "New Catholic" Congress at Mayence was attended by about eight hundred delegates. It was noted that most of the prelates who had first opposed the infallibility dogma, but afterward submitted to it, were absent. Bishop Ketteler, of Mayence, and Horr Majunke, of Berlin, editor of the Germania, were the leaders of the Congress. Indignation was freely expressed at the policy of the German government, and the presence of the King of Italy in Rome was pronounced intolerable.

The Congress adjourned with the pledge to resist, to the best of their power, the further spreading of the "anti-infallibility heresy" and the interference of the governments of Prussia and other German States with ecclesiastical affairs, and to work unceasingly for the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope.

The "Old Catholic" Congress at Munich was attended at one time by six thousand persons, representing every country in Europe. The King of Spain had a special agent there as a reporter of the proceedings. A letter was read from Bishop Strossmayer to Dr. Dollinger, expressing his approval of the movement. A declaration, said to have been drawn up by Dr. Dollinger, declares that "articles of belief can only be defined in consonance with Holy Scripture and the old tradition of the church, as it is laid down in the recognized fathers and councils."

With reference to these facts the Methodist remarks:

We think there can now be no sober doubt of the colossal importance of this Catholic disaffection. It threatens to strike away the chief foundations of popery among the Teutonic peoples. Meanwhile they are sliding away from beneath the system among the Latin nations. In Italy hierarchical popery seems to be fairly played out. The Pope is powerless and self-imprisoned in the Eternal City, and the people there have just celebrated their recovered possession of the city with an enthusiasm which leaves no doubt that the change is thoroughly a popular one. In Spain the son of Victor Emanuel sits upon the throne. The church party are with his Carlist opponents, and his policy must necessarily be like his father's—anti-papal. In France the church party has received a significant defeat, in the liberal results of the late elections.

The Episcopal Methodist brings tidings of the death of Rev. Stephen Smith, of the Baltimore Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South. He died at his post, October 8, in great peace.

From the Western Methodist we learn that Rev. L. M. Chandler, of the Little Rock Conference, died on the eleventh of October.

President Grant has designated the thirtieth of November as a day of national thanksgiving and prayer.

THE REDUCTION.

In order that the Advocate may be placed within the reach of a larger number of persons, we have reduced the rates of subscription to $2.50 per annum, $1.50 for six months, and $1 for three months.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate is published as a medium for the defense of the doctrines and usages of evangelical Christianity, and to assist in "spreading scriptural holiness over these lands."

It gives weekly the news from the churches, and advises its readers of all the most important current events in the Christian world.

It gives a thorough digest of the general news, so that its readers may be well supplied with information in reference to passing events. Its columns contain something useful and entertaining to every reader.

It always has something attractive and profitable in the children's department, and thousands of little hearts leap with joy at its coming.

The departments for information relating to agriculture, mechanics and domestic economy have been uniformly filled with articles selected in view of their practical utility to the subscribers in our locality, and there are not a few who think that in this respect it excels.

Those who have carefully observed the contents of the Advocate have noticed the fullness and completeness of the prices current in the New Orleans markets. These are carefully revised up to the very hour of going to press, and our readers are furnished with such observations on the state of the markets as are necessary to keep them advised on matters of interest.

If you want a paper pure in language, elevated in style, the aim of whose editor and publisher is to enlighten and benefit, $2.50 per annum is cheap enough. The Methodist papers published at the two other great commercial cities of the South are held at $3, and give a large equivalent for the price paid; and our own circulation, at that price, has increased about forty per cent. in ten months, amid all the embarrassments under which we have labored; and we only change hoping to extend it the more rapidly, and thereby increase our capacity for usefulness.

We hope to be able, at no distant day, to enlarge the size of the paper. This would be done immediately but for the fact that our press will not print a larger sheet. The proceeds from two thousand new subscribers will enable us to get the press; and if our brethren will, they can easily send them in the next two months, and enable us to open the next volume in a new dress and enlarged size. Will they do it? R. J. Harp, Publisher.

CHURCH FINANCES.

- BY BISHOP M'TYEIRE.

To this point the district conferences have largely directed their attention. Never before were church finances so thoroughly ventilated as in these bodies. The men are there who can do it. All the elements of information and of a just judgment are present. All the lights are thrown upon the question. The plans in vogue may be thus classed and characterized:

1. No plan at all.

2. Just before quarterly meeting the steward seizes upon a few liberal persons and squeezes out what he can. Not unfrequently he puts his own hand into his pocket and pays freely for the privilege.

3. In the beginning of the year a subscription paper is carried round, and promises to pay certain amounts are obtained.

4. A committee appointed by the church conference take the roll and assess each member what, in their godly judgment, they think to be his proportion of the society's liabilities for the year. In this assessment the member is allowed to concur, or, if he objects, to raise or lower the amount.

The first plan needs no comment. Under the second some are eased and others burdened. The preachers suffer in their pockets, and the members in their souls. While comparing views and plans, the question was frequently propounded to stewards of circuits and stations where this method prevails: How many of your members contribute anything for the support of the gospel? The answer has been: "Not more than a third," or "Not one-half." The next plan is better, but tedious and overlooks many. The fourth, by large testimony, is the best. It is according to the analogy of our financial system. It has advantages over the envelope method, which cannot be worked outside of cities. It secures regularity and equality. None are overlooked. The poorest are honored with paying something, if but a dime a quarter. It prevents the necessity of pew-renting and thus secures free seats. Wherever fairly tried, it has brought up the finances. Many have declared that in their churches it has brought order out of chaos and resolved the hitherto difficult problem of ministerial support. In one city they were on the third year of it, and so smoothly did it work that, at the church conference in the beginning of this year, when the assessment of a long list of members was read out, only one person objected, and that a woman who had been assessed $1. She said she felt that she could and ought to pay $5, and the figure was changed accordingly.

Objections: "This is taxation." Indeed! Is your tax-collector so accommodating as to show you the figures, and ask you to concur, or to reduce or raise them at pleasure? "I don't want anybody to dictate to me what I shall give." Let that brother alone. If he is really doing his duty he will soon approve a plan that comes to his relief. If he is not—then he will find it out, and so will others. There are people who don't pay anything, and they never find it out. Somebody pays—the hat goes round—the church expenses are met—the preacher lives—and these dear souls get mixed up in the crowd and indulge the pleasing illusion that they have helped to do it.

I have hope. The Methodists are numerous enough, and they have substance enough, to make the raising of all church expenses an easy and sure thing, if the burden be so distributed as to rest upon the broad base of the entire membership. And herein the district conferences have done a service. They have no legislative powers, but they form public opinion, and they have worked out and recommended the assessment plan to the societies.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Death of the Rev. W. R. J. Husbands.

We are profoundly grieved to hear of the death of this good and true minister of Christ, and many brethren, not only of the Little Rock Conference, but of the Tennessee and North Alabama Conferences, in which he labored long and successfully, will receive the sad news with the deepest regret. We sympathize with his dear family, as well as with the church, in the death of Bro. Husbands. May divine grace abound unto the bereaved household! The Rev. John F. Carr, writing from Arkadelphia, Arkansas, October 13, says:

"I have just returned from the burial of our mutual friend and brother, Rev. W. R. J. Husbands. He died yesterday, October 12, of swamp fever. I see from a journal, kept by him, that he professed religion and joined the church thirty-one years ago, and was admitted into the Tennessee Conference twenty-nine years ago. His life was a useful one; the last year, just now closing, was a successful one—over two hundred and fifty conversions and as many accessions to the church in his charge. Some days before his death I asked him of his future. He answered: 'All bright.' When he was entering the cold Jordan I asked again if the future was still bright. He answered: 'Yes, certainly bright.' For several months past he seemed to think his end was drawing near. He preached, talked and lived like he believed it. Some three weeks ago he talked to me in that way, and spoke tenderly of his brethren of the Tennessee Conference and of this, and how happy would be the reunion with them on high. Obituary hereafter." Western Methodist.

Price, Hine & Tupper.—The gentlemen of the above firm have been known to us for many years, and we are glad to have an appropriate opportunity, in connection with the appearance of their card in this issue, to express our high regard for them as gentlemen of firm integrity, fine business capacity, liberal views, and most agreeable in intercourse with their customers. They have been long identified with the State of Louisiana, and we feel sure that our friends who intrust their business to them will not regret it. See card on fifth page.

Health of Vicksburg.—We heard, says the Vicksburg Weekly Herald of October 28, of some new cases of yellow fever yesterday, and among those attacked, we learn with regret that the Rev. Mr. Heard, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was quite ill. We earnestly hope to be able to chronicle his recovery in a few days.

Persons of intemperate habits have less than one-half the chance of life of temperate people.

CONFERENCE ITEMS.

Proceedings of the St. Louis Annual Conference.

The twenty-fourth session (being the first since the division of the former St. Louis Conference) of the St. Louis Annual Conference was held in the city of St. Louis, at the Centenary church, October 11–17, A. D. 1871, Bishop D. S. Doggott presiding, L. M. Lewis secretary, R. A. Hatcher assistant secretary, M. G. McAllister recording secretary, and J. E. Godbey statistical secretary.

The Conference was opened by religious services conducted by the Bishop and an address to the Conference.

The attendance of clerical members was large, and all the districts except Rolla district were represented by lay delegates.

Admitted on trial—J. W. Boggs, Alexander M. Robinson.

Readmitted—John L. McFarland.

Remaining on trial—Thomas J. Stringfield, M. G. McAllister, C. E. Divinney, Joseph A. Russell.

Received by transfer—J. C. Duncan and W. F. Mister, from West St. Louis Conference.

Superunumerary—Joseph Boyle, T. G. Atchison.

Superannuated—J. N. W. Springer, Christian Eaker, W. R. Babcock.

Located—S. A. Ritchie.

Discontinued—Sidney Richmond.

Admitted into full connection—John H. St. Clair, William M. Shelton, John R. Eddleman, Wesley E. Woodward, George W. Hull.

Elected and ordained deacons—Traveling preachers: William M. Shelton, John R. Eddleman, Wesley E. Woodward. Local preacher: Benjamin L. Brown.

Elected and ordained elders—Traveling preachers: George W. Hull, John H. St. Clair, William M. Dewley.

Died—George H. Clinton.

The report of the secretary of the Board of Missions shows that there have been in the bounds of the Conference during the past year two missions, the statistics of which are as follows: 11 preaching places, 127 white members, 5 adult baptisms, 2 infant baptisms, 5 Sabbath schools, 120 scholars, 3 local preachers.

The treasurer's report exhibits collections for missions during the past year as follows, to wit: Balance paid over by the former treasurer, T. M. Finney, $143.44; for "old debt" of the Parent Board, $750; collections, including $122 contributed by Centenary church Sabbath school, and $2.50 by Valley Mines Sabbath school, De Soto circuit, taken in circuits and stations, $1,172.02; anniversary collection at the Centenary church, $936.40; collection in First church Sabbath school for China mission, $103.75; making a grand total of $3,105.61. After paying 40 per cent. ($884.86) due the Parent Board, and incidental expenses ($2.50,) the assets of the board were equal to 70 per cent. of the liabilities, which was ordered to be paid on the various classes of claims pro rata.

Statistical Secretary's Report.—J. E. Godbey, statistical secretary, made his report, which was adopted. It shows: White members, 10,001; colored members, 6; local preachers, 92; churches, 71; parsonages, 6; adult baptisms, 687; infant baptisms, 538; Sunday schools, 109; officers, 332; teachers, 725; scholars, 6,084. The net increase of members is estimated at 1,834.

The chairman of the Board of Finance, W. C. Godbey, made the usual report in detail of financial statistics. The following is an exhibit of totals: Receipts for support of the ministry, $25,706.11, deficiency, $9,168.89; Conference 5 per cent. fund, $1,123.95; Bishops' fund, $650; moneys for Sunday schools, $2,789.65; church building, $22,910; value of churches, $429,809; value of parsonages, $41,300.

Louisville Conference.

The Louisville Conference held a delightful session at Bowling Green, October 11–16. Bishop Wightman presided to the great satisfaction of the Conference. His charge to those admitted into full connection made a powerful impression, and we know not when we have heard such a sermon as he preached before the ordination of deacons. It was full of pentecostal power.

There were admitted on trial, W. C. Hayes, James W. Hendricks, Joseph C. Norman, Elijah Thurman, Melton A. Nantz, Thomas J. Richardson, D. L. Collie, James C. Brandon, Hiram G. Holcomb, B. F. Biggs, A. H. Mitchell and Joshua G. Freeman. Discontinued, J. T. Waters. Admitted into full connection, J. W. Mitchell, R. W. Stone, W. T. Moore, John W. Lewis, Robert E. Bennott, Lewis E. Campbell, George B. Overton. Readmitted, John R. Strango, James W. Taylor, William W. Lambuth. Received by transfer, W. H. Anderson, Z. M. Taylor. Traveling preachers elected and ordained deacons, R. W. Stone, W. T. Moore, John W. Lewis, Robert D. Bennett and Lewis E. Campbell. Local preachers elected deacons, James W. McCown, William Woodson, Granberry B. Jones, James A. Gragg. Local preachers ordained deacons, J. W. McCown, W. Woodson. Traveling preachers elected and ordained elders, S. L. Lee, R. C. Love. Local preachers elected elders, John Hargan, Joseph C. Norman, Giles R. Randolph, William E. Eads, A. G. S. Hughes, J. W. Lockey, Joseph S. Yates. Local preachers ordained elders, A. G. S. Hughes, J. Hargan, A. Mitchell, J. C. Horman, G. J. Bean. Superannuated, A. L. Alderson, John B. Perry, Allison Akin, Alexander McCown, William F. Harwell, W. H. Morrison, Joel Peak. Died, W. E. Evans. White members, 26,971; increase, 1,573. Colored members, 142; decrease, 120. Local preachers, 194; increase, 6. Infants baptized, 926; adults, 1,973. Sunday schools, 185; teachers, 1,385; scholars, 10,546. For missions, $1,324.10. Next session is to be held at Lebanon, Kentucky.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

AFFECTING INCIDENT.

Bishop McTyeire, writing to the Western Methodist, relates the following in connection with his visit to the Indian Mission Conference:

The missionary secretary gave me the pleasure and benefit of his company on this tour. He was never, I may say, better employed than in looking after this great interest of the board. It will feel the effect of his visit for good, and the church will hear no uncertain sound. He enjoys it much, and so do the Indians, the missionaries, and all concerned. I don't think he will miss another Indian Mission Conference. I hope he will not.

We came by St. Louis, taking the Atlantic and Pacific railroad to its junction with the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad, to Vineta; and thence sixty miles on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad, to Gibson This road is rapidly penetrating the Indian Territory, but halts for the present at the Arkansas river. We were twenty-six hours from St. Louis to Gibson. At the latter point the stage-coach met us, and by nine o'clock P. M., after riding nine miles, we were in the old town of Fort Gibson, to stay till next morning, and then to take the four-horse line to our destination, one hundred and forty miles. A lady of St. Louis, who was of our company, Mrs. Dr. M——, had a letter of introduction to Mr. L——, a merchant of the place. Knowing ones advised us that Mr. L—— sometimes entertained travelers, and that it would be to our interest to stop there, if possible, for it was the best place in Fort Gibson. Halting at the door, where everything was shut up and still, we were met by a lady, who, with polite reluctance, admitted us. The hotel was small and full, and we were not easily put off. Dr. McFerrin and myself, and two ladies, were soon inside. The light of the room showed the lady of the house to be a half-breed Indian. Mrs. Dameron, at St. Louis, had supplied us with abundant lunch, and we agreed to do without supper, in view of bed and breakfast. A scene awaited us, not down in the bill, and all the better for its surprise to all parties. Our missionary secretary was once, in his boyhood ministry, a missionary to the Cherokees in north Alabama and Georgia. That was a good while ago—away back in 1829 and 1830. He carelessly remarked, in an interrogative tone: "We are in the Creek Nation, I reckon."

"No, sir, you are in the Cherokee Nation," the lady replied. Dr. McFerrin thought he discovered in the reply something of the Cherokee pride of nationality, for the Cherokees hold themselves to be the nobility of the Indian race. He continued:

"Where did you come from, madam? You were not raised in this country?"

"I came from Alabama."

"From what part of Alabama did you come, madam?"

"From Gunter's Landing. My name was Gunter."

"Were you a sister of Ned Gunter?"

"Yes, and my name was Catherine Gunter."

The reader may imagine these questions and answers as increasing in interest; and with what emotion the next inquiry was made:

"Katie Gunter, do you know me?"

"No, sir, I don't know you."

"Don't you remember John B. McFerrin?"

For a moment she sat as one that had been stunned; another moment she put her hand on his knee, and looked intently into his face; then, in an abandon of joy, she threw her arms round his neck and wept.

The doctor's eyes were not dry, and he was a most unresisting victim of this delightful recognition. For forty-one years they had not met. He had preached, and taught a missionary school in her home; knew her parents, brothers, sisters, all.

It has been ascertained by Mr. B. F. Calvert that infusorial vegetable life of some kinds will survive a heat of three hundred degrees Fahrenheit, but not four hundred degrees.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

We have received from R. J. Harp his classified price list of school books. All the standard text books for schools and colleges are in this list, and for sale at the Depository, 112 Camp street. All who require a supply of school books will do well to send for the price list, which will be forwarded by mail to any who may wish to examine it.

We have received a pamphlet entitled Lecture on the Formation of Language, read before the New Orleans Academy of Sciences, by V. O. King, M. D. We have not had time to read the lecture, but have no doubt it is able and instructive. Dr. King is a well-known physician of New Orleans, and a close and laborious investigator in the domains of science and literature.

The question "how he was to live" was a Knotty Question to the poor street sweeper, and the Illustrated Christian Weekly of October 21 has ably illustrated his perplexities. The Grain Fleet in New York, Bethany Sunday School at Philadelphia, the Sacred Bambino at Rome, and a story showing the power of kindness over animals are the other subjects of illustrations.

Lippincott's Magazine for November, among other good things, has Scrambles Among the Alps, The International, Corn, Cotton and Carreney, European Vivaria, A California Seaside. Our Monthly Gossip, and literature of the day are prepared with the usual care and ability.

Littell's Living Age, October 14, has Darwin's Descent of Man, The National History of Hatred Ireland, Affairs in Turkey, and other articles in prose and verse. The Living Age is published weekly by Littell & Gay, Boston, Massachusetts, at eight dollars per annum.

INDIAN MISSION CONFERENCE.

The Nashville Advocate gives the following letter and statistics:

Mr. Editor: You will receive, herewith, a copy of the appointments of the Indian Mission Conference, and the minutes.

We adjourned last night. The meeting of the Creek, Choctaw and Chickasaw Councils, simultaneously with us, interfered with the attendance of some members. Saturday the Choctaws and Chickasaws came in, in force—encamping round the church. The congregations yesterday were very large and serious. Five services were held, crowded, during the day. For Shem, Ham and Japheth we ordained preachers, in their order—two full-blood Choctaws, two full-blood negroes and one white man. There has been an increase in membership, and we hope the signs of spiritual prosperity in these nations are brightening. Dr. McFerrin's visit has been of great benefit. His labors have been abundant. He has done much of my work and his own besides. I hope my health is now on "the rise." My lip is so sore and cracked with fever that I have not been able to shave for over a week. So I must join those of you, per force, who wear beard over your mouths.

To-day, in company with Bros. Harrell and Hicks, I leave for Van Buren, taking in my way New Hope Academy. The missionary secretary goes back to St. Louis—stopping over a day and night at Asbury Manual Labor School.

I have much enjoyed (sickness aside) this visitation to the Indians. Yesterday I made my first sermon through an interpreter. It was like the effort last June at Knoxville, Tennessee, when I preached through an interpreter to the deaf and dumb of the asylum. With Dr. McFerrin, it is going back to an old practice. It had a touch of the romantic, to see the Indian camp fires in the evening air, and scores of horses and ponies hitched or staked out. I like their singing. Your finer taste might call it doggerel, but to me it sounds well to hear Chootaws and Chickasaws singing—"Uba pin Chatokaka yut"—which is our "Come, thou Fount of blessing." A greater favorite with them seems to be, "Hatak hush puta ma!" which is our "What wondrous love is this!" Sometimes the natives sing their language, and the white people sing theirs, at the same time and in the same hymn. This is carrying two parts after a way I had not thought of. More anon. O that the salvation of this people were come out of Zion!

H. N. McTyeire.

October 7, 1871.

We have received also a copy of the minutes, from which we learn that G. Battiest was admitted on trial. D. T. Holmes was received by transfer from Little Rock Conference, and T. W. Mitchell from Trinity Conference. T. Colbert and G. Battiest (local) were elected and ordained deacons. White members 127, decrease 12, Indians 4330, increase 447, colored 431, decrease 3, local preachers 61, increase 5, baptized infants 303, adults 433, Sunday schools 8, teachers 22, scholars 230, contributed for missions $378 33. Next session to be held at North Fork, Creek Nation.

Obituaries.

Mrs. C. Fannie Allen, daughter of Jonathan and Mary P. Taylor, was born in Troup county, Georgia, July 9, 1834. In September, 1848, she professed religion, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. She was married to Robert A. Allen, October 23, 1855, and died August 11, 1871, aged thirty-eight years, one month and two days.

Sister Allen was a consistent Christian, an obedient and affectionate daughter, and a devoted wife. The loss is felt deeply, not only by her heart-stricken husband and family, but by the church and community. God bless the bereaved. May we all meet in heaven. John A. Miller.

Died, near Lower Peach Tree, Wilcox county, Alabama, September 3, 1871, David H., only son of B. D. and Lucy M. Portis, aged two years, four months and twenty-six days.

Destined to be not long with us, the pure spirit of noble little David, wearied with earthly association, and pining for the congeniality of kindred spirits, has taken its early and upward flight. Yes, he is gone. The beam of his bright eye, and the sound of his happy voice, the center around which fond hearts were gathered, will be never be known on earth again. To that fair land where angels dwell, far, far beyond the stars, has he departed, to await, with eager eye, the loved ones left behind. With the bright angels, throughout the never-ending ages of eternity, shall he rejoice; and when we shall miss his lovely face and voice, to which on earth we fondly clung, we will think of him not as a child of clay here, but as an angel of light there. G. E. C.

Died, on the second of September, 1871, Matilda Jane Sistrunk, aged sixteen years eleven months and twenty-two days, daughter of Jefferson H. and Malinda Sistrunk, of Macon county, Alabama.

At an early age she connected herself with the Methodist Church, at Darlington, Leeschopoka circuit. After a few years, she removed to Montgomery, Alabama, to attend the school taught by Dr. Samuel Coxe. When Dr. Coxe took charge of the college in Christiansburg, Virginia, she accompanied him, and it was here she was stricken down with typhoid fever. When quite a child, little Jennie was accustomed to say her prayers night and morning, and would often correct and admonish her brothers when they said or did anything wrong—indicating a decidedly pious turn of mind even in childhood. She took, moreover, much interest in the public services at church, being always as punctual to see that the church was — with lights, etc., as any old member — attended to all matters of the household, having lost her mother when but a child, and made herself agreeable to all visitors; making welcome also all preachers who were accustomed to visit her father's house. Her praises were in the mouth of all the community. Well do we remember the night when she first found peace in believing; when, with her arms around her father's neck, she shouted aloud the praise of God. Dr. Coxe reports her passing away calmly in the triumphs of faith. After becoming speechless, on going into her room one morning, she pointed to the Bible, and indicated a desire for him to read to her.

Our young sister had a sprightly mind and was a good student, and bade fair to fill an important position in society; but the hopes of a doting father and two fond brothers have been blasted. May they emulate her example, and be prepared to join her in the ellnes of rest. L. F. D.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT.

The King of Mineral Springs is the German Seltzer; and

Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient is its duplicate. Letters attesting its wonderful Tonic Aperient and anti-Bilious qualities swarm in from every source. The question has been settled whether artificially medicated waters may not be equal to those which burst sparkling from the earth itself. They can; and the Seltzer Aperient, when undoubtedly pure and genuine, proves the fact. Be cautious. Accept none other.

The Celebrated Argyle Bitters—Truths for the People.—These Bitters, which are now a household word in every family, are deservedly ranked among the most successful and efficacious remedies now used.

Gently stimulant, delightfully refreshing and invigorating, they promote the digestive functions, regulate the liver and spleen, prevent hypophy or inaction; they increase the vital functions and maintain the chylopoietic viscera in their normal condition of health, when once established.

No fabulous properties or magical effects are claimed for them; they are simply a pure unadulterated Tonic, Alterative and Stimulant.

One essential element of their success is the effect they possess of lessening the inordinate thirst for strong drinks, so often engendered by the use of vile nostrums and vicious compounds, arrogantly and ignorantly called "Bitters" to cover their deadly effects.

Ask your neighbor about the Argyle Bitters, and in nine cases out of ten, he will tell you "to do as he has done for years, viz: to keep them on hand for family use, for they are good to take."

These Bitters can bear the addition of one-third water, and then be stronger in all their essential properties than any other Bitter in the market; and to ladies and children, we recommend their dilution with water, when taken. oct2 1m

The Child's Corner.

CHILD-WISDOM.

BY MARY HOWITT.

"Now what would you ask of the Saviour,
If you were with Him up in heaven?"
Thus questioned the kind Sunday teacher
From a ragged-boys' class of seven.

The eldest, of most glorious apparel;
Thought the next, of a white horse with wings;
And the third, of a sword and a scepter,
With a crown for his head like a king's.

The fourth thought of bags full of money;
The fifth of some wonderful bird;
The sixth was too stupid for thinking;
But one of them answered a word.

"And what would you ask, little Tommy,
If you were with Christ up in heaven?"
Thus questioned the kind Sunday teacher
From the youngest boy of the seven.

He was but a small orphaned cripple,
A nine-years-old poor little elf;
And, smiling, he answered: "Oh, teacher,
I'd ask him to give me Himself.

THE LILIES OF THE FIELD.

[FROM THE GERMAN.]

See the lilies of the field
How they bloom in glory;
Say, who bade them fragrance yield,
Telling their sweet story?
Who is it that made them fair,
And sustains them by his care,
Trustfully upgazing?

God the Lord hath bid them shine,
Decking earth with beauty,
Witnessing of love divine,
Teaching man his duty—
Bidding tried hearts suffer long,
Doubting hearts in faith be strong,
Like heaven's flowers upgazing.

Rise, my soul, o'er coward fear,
Cast on Him thy sorrow,
Who from winter's slumber drear
Wakes the bright spring morrow;
He who doth the lilies tend
Is thy Father too, and Friend;
Praise Him, upward gazing!

TO A CHILD.

BY F. T. PALGRAVE.

If by any device or knowledge
The rosebud its beauty could know,
It would stay a rosebud for ever,
Nor into its fullness grow.

And if thou couldst know thy own sweetness,
O little one, perfect and sweet!
Thou would'st be child for ever:
Completer whilst incomplete.

The Vampire-Bat.

BY UNCLE WILLIE.

Men are very superstitious creatures, as I fear some of our little readers know by experience. And it is surprising how many strange and fearful stories have come to be believed, simply because they have been so often repeated without contradiction.

Now one of these superstitions is that concerning the vampire-bat, which is by many thought to be a terribly blood-thirsty creature of the bat species, which flies about in some countries at night, sucking the blood of sleeping men and animals, and fanning them with its wings to keep them calm and quiet while it is taking away their life.

Thus the name vampire has become one that we sometimes apply to persons who are very depraved, and are ready to deprive any one else of their dearest treasures to enrich themselves.

One reason of these alarming stories about the vampire-bats is the fact that they are very seldom seen in civilized countries, as they are mainly found in Africa and Southern Asia, the islands of the Eastern Ocean, and South America, and by the time the accounts of them reach us they are likely to become very large, as stories never grow smaller on their journey.

Some of these creatures have recently been brought to Europe, and, of late years, a few naturalists have been studying their habits more closely in their native countries, so that we are now able to have more accurate knowledge regarding their character, and as we know them better our bitter prejudices concerning them disappear.

They are really fruit-eating animals, and collect in large numbers in certain islands on account of finding there their favorite fruits. This is especially the case in the Island of Ceylon, where the naturalist Tennent has made them a special study, and thus been enabled to give us much curious information regarding them. They lived on some of the trees before his own door, where he could have an opportunity of watching them night and day.

They are very fond of the figs of this island, and they wander about in swarms after them when they have eaten up all in their neighborhood. They like to gather on trees whose bark will permit them to cling to it, for, instead of sitting on the branches like birds, they hang to them by their sharp curved claws with their heads downward. And they at times gather in such numbers on their favorite trees that the branches break off with their weight, when they come tumbling down in a mass to the ground.

Their heads are very similar to that of a dog or a fox, so much so that the Germans call them "flying dogs," as they call the ordinary bats "flying mice." They are about the size of the little animal known among us as the martin, but when flying they look very large, as they have the power of extending the skin that runs from their bodies to the tip of their legs, so that it sometimes covers a space of from three to four feet. When the legs are thus expanded, and the skin between them is flapping like great wings, they look very formidable, and especially at night, when they go out in search of food, and thus they have become frightful to the ignorant inhabitants of those countries.

Every morning about nine o'clock they leave their branches and fly about a little, seemingly to get exercise, and dry their wings from the dew of the night. This is the best time to see them and calculate their numbers, for they at times fly in clouds like swarms of bees. On returning to their branches they have a great struggle for the shadiest places for the day, where they can best find protection against the fierce glare of the sun, which they do not like.

At sunset they start out for food, and frequently range a long distance to obtain all they want. They eat very nearly all the fruits and grains cultivated by man, and thus become at times quite destructive to the crops and plantations. During the season when the natives are collecting the sap of the cocoa tree the bats lick it very greedily, and seem at times to become intoxicated with it. At other times they drink the water of the streams, hanging over them from the branches of trees and lapping the water. They eat beetles of all kinds, bugs, and even young birds, and will sometimes suck the blood of chickens by wounding them in the veins of the neck. From this habit, doubtless risen the notion that they suck the blood of sleeping persons.

Some inhabitants of India eat their flesh, which tastes like that of the hare; but the Hindoos consider them sacred, and fear to do them any harm.

It is a difficult task to bring them away from their native retreats and keep them alive in imprisonment. A few have been brought to Europe, and among the first were those of the London Zoological Gardens. But they are generally bought up at a high price by the keepers of menageries or of the booths that mostly follow these with wonderful snakes and other monstrosities. The booth-keeper who can assure the crowds that he has a genuine living vampire soon has many of them inside to see the wonder, for which he is thus able to pay a high price. They sometimes cost a hundred dollars a piece, or one hundred and fifty for a pair. But while the booth-keepers are telling their audience about the blood-thirsty characters of these little creatures, the latter are perhaps quietly eating boiled rice or bread and milk.

It is not easy to keep these vampire-bats in confinement in such a manner as to observe all their qualities. No cage could be made large enough to give them room to fly without hitting themselves against its walls, and thus do themselves injury. For this reason in the few collections where they are found they are kept in large bird cages, where they have room enough to play without any thoughts of flying. But in these there is a capital opportunity to observe their strange manner of sleeping.

To prepare for this they cling with both hind feet to the branch, and hang with the head down, though bent up on their breast; then they first fold one wing around them and then the other, enveloping themselves as well as we would with a large India rubber mantle, being careful to leave their ears uncovered, so that they can hear the approach of danger. In this way they sleep in their cage, clinging to wire or branch, and in the open air are well protected against cold dews or rain.

When they awake they go through a long course of washing by licking themselves carefully all over, leaving no part untouched. They are extremely clean and neat in their ways in all respects.

In their captivity they eat dates, plums, cherries, pears and figs, and are fond of boiled rice and bread and milk, with an occasional meal of hashed meat, ants or beetles. They are extremely fond of milk, and will drink a saucerful in a day. If these vampire-bats are fond of such harmless food, it is not very probable that they are as blood-thirsty by nature as the stories about them would make us believe.—New York Christian Advocate.

Feed the People.

From the deck of an Austrian gunboat we threw into the Lago Gardu a succession of little pieces of bread, and presently small fishes came in shoals, till they seemed to be, as the old proverb puts it, more fish than water. They came to feed and needed no music. Let the preacher give his people food, and they will flock around him even if the sounding brass of rhetoric and the tinkling cymbals of oratory are silent.

Best Safeguard.

A little boy was on a ship with a company of wicked men. He was a pious, praying boy. The sailors wanted to teach him to drink rum, and chew tobacco, and to swear, but he would not. They tried and tried, but in vain. At last one of the sailors said to the rest: "We might as well give up. We cannot spoil the boy, for he is chock-full of Bible." Yes, the way to be safe is to be chock-full of Bible.

Golden Words for the Young.

It is safer for me to abstain than to drink. If I should indulge in drink, I am afraid I should not stop at the line which many call temperance, but should become a slave to the habit, and with others, of stronger nerve and firmer purposes, go down to a drunkard's grave. If I indulge, I am not safe. If I abstain, my child will not be cursed with a drunken father. We talk of the purity and dignity of human nature, and of relying upon our self-respect for security; but there is no degradation so low that a man will not sink into, and no crime so hellish that he will not commit, when he is drunk. There is nothing so base, so impure, so mean, so dishonest, so corrupt, that a man will not do when under the law of sin—of appetite. Safety is to be found in not yielding ourselves to that law. But if it could be proved conclusively to my own mind that I could drink and never be injured, yet, with my views on the subject, it would be my duty to abstain. I could not be certain but others, seeing me drink, might be influenced to drink also, and, being unable to stop, pass on in the path of the drunkard.—Governor Buckingham.

The Flies and the Spiders.

[FROM THE GERMAN.]

"Why has God created the flies and the spiders?" a young prince often said to himself; "such insects are of no use to man, and had I the power, I would cause them to disappear from the earth."

One day, during the war, this prince was obliged to flee before the enemy. At night, being very much fatigued, he laid down under a tree in the middle of a forest, and soon fell fast asleep. He was discovered by one of the enemy's soldiers, who glided softly up to him, sword in hand, intending to kill him. At this moment a fly suddenly alighted on the cheek of the prince, and stung him so sharply that he awoke. He started up, drew his sword, and fought with the soldier, and at last escaped. Then the prince went and hid himself in a cavern of the same forest. During the night a spider spun her thread across the entrance. Two soldiers, who were in search of the fugitive prince, came so near the cave that he could hear their conversation.

"Look," said one, "no doubt he is hidden here."

"No," replied the other; "he could not have entered without tearing down that spider's web."

As soon as they had gone, the prince cried out with emotion, raising his hands to heaven: "Oh, my God! what gratitude do I not owe Thee! Thou didst save my life yesterday by means of a fly, and to-day Thou hast preserved me by means of a spider. Truly, there are use and purpose in all the works of Thy creation!—Oliver Optic's Magazine.

I Cannot, Sir.

A young man—we will call him honest Frank—who loved truth, was a clerk in the office of a rich merchant. One day a letter came recalling an order for goods, which had been received the day before. The merchant handed it to honest Frank, and, with a persuasive smile, said:

"Frank, reply to this note. Say that the goods were shipped before the receipt of the letter countermanding the order."

Frank looked into his employer's face with a sad but firm glance, and replied:

"I cannot, sir."

"Why not, sir?" asked the merchant angrily.

"Because the goods are now in the yard, and it would be a lie, sir."

"I hope you will always be so particular," replied the merchant, turning upon his heel, and going away.

Honest Frank did a bold as well as a right thing. What do you suppose happened to him? Did he lose his place? No; quite different. The merchant was too shrewd to turn away one who would not write a lying letter. He knew the untold value of such a youth, and at once made him his confidential clerk.

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

ASHES AND THEIR APPLICATION.—Plants derive their substance from two sources—the earth and the air. When they are burned their inorganic elements that were derived from the air are returned to it again; while those that were drawn from the soil are left as ashes. But a small portion of the bulk of the plant is derived from the soil, as is shown by the amount of ashes left after burning; yet the presence of each element, however small the amount required, is essential to the complete development of the crop. These mineral substances vary, both in quantity and quality, in different plants, and even in different parts of the same plant and at different seasons of the year. Thus, wheat, when burned, gives 1.18 per cent of ash constituents; oats 2.58, potatoes 2.65, turnips 7.05, wheat straw 3.51, oat straw 5.74, red clover 7.48. These mineral constituents are essential to the nourishment of plants, and they are retarded in their growth when they do not obtain a sufficient supply from the soil.

Some of these substances exist abundantly in the composition of most soils, and do not have to be renewed, while others, such as potash, phosphoric acid, lime, magnesia, etc., are found only in small quantities and are soon exhausted by continued cropping. Hence, it follows that any material which contains these elements would be valuable as a fertilizer. Wood ashes contain these largely, especially potash, the most of which is in a soluble condition. According the statements of Prof. Watson, ashes usually yield about one-fifteenth of their weight in potash, but different plants and different parts of the same plants vary greatly in the yield of potash. Stockhardt, in his "Field Lectures," states that one thousand pounds of dried mass or crops contain: Wheat, ripe grain and straw, 5½ pounds potash, barley 7, oats 7, peas 11, potatoes (tubers and haulm) 22, clover, in flower, 20.

It will be easy to calculate from the above figures the amount of potash taken from the land by the crop from one acre. It is also easy to see the great value of potash in agriculture, and what crops will be most benefited by its application. Indeed, some plants, such as potatoes, Indian corn, the grape vine, flourish only where potash is abundant, and are consequently called "potash plants."

The analysis of the ash of hard wood shows that all the mineral substances necessary for the growth of plants can be easily and cheaply furnished, if we can buy unleached, hard wood ashes at twenty-five cents per bushel. The great advantage that wood ashes have over other mineral manure is that they contain, not one or two, but all the mineral constituents of plants. There is no danger of using too much ashes, and the farmer that sells them is selling his corn and wheat for less than one-quarter of their value.

Leached ashes are nearly as valuable for agricultural purposes as the unleached, as by leaching they part with only about four-fifths of their potash, while all other elements remain, and are condensed twenty per cent. They should be used, however, as soon after leaching as convenient, as the longer they stand the less valuable they become. A cord of leached ashes is said to contain about 147 pounds of phosphoric acid, 41 pounds oxide magnesia, 1557 of carbonic acid, 184 of silex, 21 of oxide of iron, 50 of potash, 2227 of lime.

Ashes are most valuable for grass lands, the cereal grains and potatoes. When applied to grain they give stiffness to the straw and prevent it from lodging, one hundred pounds of ashes being sufficient for the production of one thousand pounds of good straw. The best way to apply leached ashes is to spread them evenly from the cart after the ground has been levelled, and harrow in. The unleached can be sown broadcast or applied in the hill, but care must be taken not to allow them to fall directly upon the plants. It is an excellent practice to mix them with about an equal quantity of plaster; and if a few bushels of salt are added to the heap, it soon draws moisture and prevents the ashes from blowing.

Ashes should never be applied to the manure heap except just before using, as they liberate valuable elements and allow them to escape. One of the best uses they can put to, is to mix with swamp muck, as they neutralize the acid contained in muck, and make a most excellent compost.—Maine Farmer.

CARBOLIC ACID AND POULTRY.—All amateur and poultry breeders are but too well aware that parasites are the pest of poultry houses, more especially in towns and cities, where poultry are kept within confined limits. Without, as the owner thinks, any real cause, the fowls begin to droop and look sickly, and, after a while, one by one die off. He then becomes alarmed, examines them, and finds them covered with parasites; he look into his fowl house and examines the cracks and chinks in the boards, and finds them filled with insects—living insects. He is astonished; he cannot account for it; and then the question arises in his mind: "How can I get rid of them?" Scores of times within the last few months has this question been asked of us, and our answer invariably has been use carbolic acid.

But how to use it is a matter of importance. There can be no doubt about its efficacy, but it becomes every one to exercise care in handling it. The acid is sold by all druggists in its crystaline and liquid form. In crystal, it dissolves in twenty times its weight of water—that is, one ounce of the crystals requires twenty ounces of water to dissolve them. Thus dissolved, it is entirely too strong for any ordinary use. Dr. Emerson gives recipes for preparing this powder for disinfecting and other purposes. As a whitewash for walls, for protection against insects, bugs, etc., he says: "Put three ounces of carbolic acid into twelve quarts of lime water or whitewash. Whitewash the walls of the poultry house well with this wash, and no living parasites will be seen—their death is inevitable. A weak solution may be made to wash fowls in; one part of the acid to sixty parts of warm water; let it cool, then dip the fowls in until the feathers become thoroughly wet and the solution reaches all parts of the body. Afterward place the fowls on clean, dry straw, where the sun will reach them until they are dry.

Another form in which it is recommended to use it, is a soap. These soaps are for sale by various manufacturers, and have a high reputation for cleansing animals and the cure of skin diseases. A mode of making this soap is as follows: Dissolve three pounds of common bar soap in hot water, and two to four ounces of carbolic acid, according to the desired strength. Allow to cool as usual in making hard soap. As these preparations may be bought ready prepared, and as carbolic is by no means a safe article to keep about the house, we would advise persons to buy rather than attempt to make them, except in the case of whitewash, when they must get the pure article and dilute it.—Canadian Poultry Chronicle.

DEEP PLOWING.—Alfred Hadley sums up the advantage of deep plowing as follows:

1. It often prevents growing crops receiving material injury, by inducing a more speedy and general diffusion of a superabundance of rain or water.

2. It receives and holds in store a much larger amount of plant food, carbonic acid, ammonia and water, and at the same time admits of a proportionally wider range for the roots of plants to travel in pursuit of that food, so that when dry weather comes, plants growing in a deeply pulverized soil will be supplied with food, and sustained in the vigor of growth, much longer than plants in a shallow plowed soil.

3. It admits of a much more free and extensive circulation of air, and as the subsoil is much cooler than the air, it acts as a condenser; and as the air comes in contact with it, it is decomposed and water is left in the soil, richly laden with carbonic acid and ammonia. There is a bountiful supply of water held in solution by the air in the driest weather, and, consequently, if the soil could be kept completely pulverized to a sufficient depth, a crop of corn could be produced without rain.

TRANSPLANTING.—Cabbages transplanted this month will still do well, as also cauliflowers, broccoli, etc. The soil, though, should be very rich and deeply worked. Turnips should be worked and thinned. The white Flat Dutch variety may still be sown in the Gulf States. In thinning out Ruta Bugas, the supernumeraries may be readily transplanted.

Spinach may still be sown, in drills ten inches apart, and afterward thin out to six inches in the row.

Lettuce may be transplanted, and radishes may be sown. Onion sets may be put out, and asparagus beds should be well dressed. Clear up the garden, if it has not been done already, and place all the refuse and scrapings in the compost heap. By no means neglect the latter.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

WASHING FLUID.—One pound of lime, two of sal soda, dissolve in twelve quarts of boiling water; bottle. One-half pint to two dozen articles; soak over night.

APPLE FLOAT.—Stew apples, run through a sieve, sweeten and season to taste, with lemon or cinnamon; add the whites of two eggs well beaten, and pour it all into a bowl of fresh rich milk.

BRANDY PEACHES WITHOUT BRANDY.—Peal nice ripe cling-stone peaches, and pack them in a jar, layer of sugar and a layer of peaches until full; tie up closely, and set away. In a few months the fruit will be brandied.

TO SWEETEN RANCID BUTTER.—A Mississippi lady during the war, in hiding her butter from the bummers, found that burying it in the ground a few weeks, rendered it perfectly sweet, some that was quite old and rancid.

LIQUID YEAST.—Take a handful of hops, boil in a quart of water for ten or fifteen minutes, then strain the water into a quart of flour, let it stand till cool, then add the yeast, also a tablespoon of sugar, one of salt, and a little ginger; set it to rise and when light, bottle up closely, and set in a cool place. It will keep three or four weeks.

FLOUR PUDDING.—Wet a teacup full of flour with cold milk, and stir it slowly, and by degrees into a quart that is boiling; let it boil up until the flour and milk swells. Stir in six well beaten eggs, (leaving out the whites) and sugar according to taste while it is hot, and bake it half an hour. When it is cold, beat up the whites of the eggs with three tablespoonfuls of white sugar, spread over the top of the pudding and replace it in the oven for a few minutes.

LIGHT BREAD.—Three good-sized Irish potatoes, pare and slice them, and boil in one quart of pure water; when thoroughly done pour them into a colander with the water in which they were boiled; mash the potatoes through, when cool put in the flour and yeast, beat it all together until free from lumps, set it to rise; when light, add a little warm water with a bit of butter, or lard; work it well, and set to rise; when light, knead it down the second time, let it rise and then bake.

SUPERIOR BATTER CAKES.—Take one pint of flour; one teaspoonful of lard or butter, rubbed into the flour; two tablespoonful of hominy, or well boiled mush; one egg, well beaten; milk enough to make a tolerable thick batter, and yeast sufficient to make it rise. Make batter pretty stiff—prepare at bed-time and bake for breakfast—being governed by the weather as to the heat to be applied to batter when rising. The cakes should be half an inch thick, and baked quickly.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

HOMER COLLEGE.

THE EXERCISES OF THE TWELFTH scholastic year of Homer College, begin on the first Tuesday in September, 1871. The term is divided into a short Fall Session and a long Spring Session, with a Christmas Vacation of two weeks.

FACULTY:

Rev. J. E. COBB, President and Professor of Mental, Moral and Commercial Science.
J. W. NICHOLSON, A. M., Professor of Pure and Mixed Mathematics.
A. C. CALHOUN, A. B., Professor of Languages.
E. M. CORRY, A. B., Tutor in Physical Science.

TERMS—IN ADVANCE:

Tuition for Full Session.....$16 and $20 00
Tuition for Spring Session ... 24 and $30 00
Incidental fee (per session)..... 1 50
Board (per month)..... 15 00

Students admitted at any time in classes already formed, and charged until the end of the session.

A course of study as full and thorough as that of any college in the land, an ample corps of instructors, a complete library and apparatus, recently purchased and adapted to the present demands of science and learning, the sure prospect of a permanent endowment, now in progress, an eminently healthful location, a surrounding community intelligent and refined, invite the patronage of the Southwest to Homer College.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE,
Brookhaven, Mississippi,

ON THE New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad, one hundred and twenty-eight miles from New Orleans, and fifty-seven miles south of Jackson, Mississippi.

The location is healthy. The instruction in all the branches, including French and Music, is thorough. During the past term there were one hundred and eighty-two pupils. The Faculty consists of four gentlemen and six ladies. The total expenses for board, tuition in English, Latin and Greek, English text-books, school-room stationery, medicines and medical attention, for the term of forty weeks, amount to $263. The next session will open on the twentieth of September, 1871.

Catalogues can be obtained from R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans, Louisiana, or from the president.

Optical Instruments.—According to Van Nostrand's Magazine, American optical instruments are superior to any made in Europe. No better objectives for the microscope have been produced than those of Tolles and Wales, while the telescopes of the Clarks at Cambridge stand at the head of all instruments of the class. They have more orders from parties at home and abroad than they can promptly meet. They have now two orders for teleseopes of twenty-five inch apertures, which will be the largest instruments in the world when completed.

Mental Aberration.—The death of Prof. Mahan, of West Point, illustrates the effeets of mental trouble in disorderiug the brain. Though very well advaneed in life he muintained, up to this summer, a clear and aetive mind, priding himself in keeping up with the latest udvauees of thought aud experieuce in his profession. In spite of his zeal, however, the visiting eommittee at the last examination of the Military Academy saw fit to recommend his retirement. This was a fatal wound. He felt it keenly as an aet of injustice, for so it seemed to him, and his mind beeame so unsettled that his physician forbade his being left alone. That he should have thrown himself from the steamboat into the river was not strange, aud clearly an act without moral responsibility. His labors have been intense through life, his responsibilities great aud his mastery of the most profound mathematieal subjeets such as to give him a world-wide reputation. He might have contiuued to use his miud in the same directious of study without the slightest danger of aberration. But a breath of trouble, in disappointmeut and the sense of injury, shook reason from her seat till he knew not what he was doiug. So often are we reminded that while work is natural and consistent with health, even though it be arduous, anxiety and trouble are deadlier often than malarial poisons.

Meteoric Life.—The Galaxy makes some wise comments on the address of Sir William Thompson as President of the British Association, particularly with reference to the great question regarding the origin of life. He attempts to resolve the mystery by an extraordinary suggestion, which is characterized as "funny," and that is probably the best that can be said of it. He thinks that the first germ of life may have been brought in ou a meteoric stone from outside our planet! Thus he avoids the low theory against which he is strongly pronouuced, that existing agencies of nature produced the germs of life by spontaneous generation, but he tumbles himself from the high-life theory iuto the bosom of Darwinism and evolution. "The advoeates of spontaneous generation see that it is but a shallow evasion of the real issue, and will naturally consider their own position strengthened when this is offered as the only alternative. On the other hand, the evolutionists throw up their hats in eestasy." If it comes to this, there is no telliug to what glorious aneestry iu far off stars we may not be presently tracing our ancestry. The theory, if it may be considered as brilliant as a meteor, will certainly be as short-lived, and, yet, it is not one whit more arbitrary than many of the points assumed by the evolutionists maintaining their doctrines.

Toads.—The toad is highly recommended as an entomologist by Mr. A. S. Ritchie; only its eontributions have to be made at the expense of its life, and it does not appear as a willing martyr to the cause. The new opportunity for usefulness is certainly an improvement on the more ancient uses to which toads have been put; as, for example, holding a dried toad in the hand to stop bleeding, by virtue of the natural horror which under the circumstances might freeze a man's blood and thus arrest the flow. The toad is to many an object of loathing, but as the schoolboy's composition avers of the horse, it is a "useful animal." Nor is it uninteresting as it squats, with head erect, sweeping the horizon with two eyes as sharp as an eagle's, and then discoveriug a beetle, snaps it so quickly that the insect ean hardly know what has happened. Some insects are cute enough to feign death, and the instinct has this value that, no matter how hungry a toad may be, he will uot touch the prey till there is some hiut of life. Then comes a trial of putieuce between the two, which will be instantly ended if the beetle so much as quivers in a limb. As the toad forages to a large extent by night, Mr. Ritchie recommends the plan of looking for him very early in the morning when his collectiou may be appropriated before it has been much injured by digestion. In this way night-flying insects may be secured, which would otherwise elude the pursuit of the naturalist. Nevertheless, let it be understood that the toad is too valuable an animal to be ruthlessly slaughtered.

A Marine Dietary.—Prof. Verrill reports in the Naturalist some observations which he made last summer on the food of fishes. Crustacea of various kinds seem to occupy a very important plaee in the bill of fare of many finny tribes. Shrimps, crabs and prawn are staple artieles of diet. Striped bass, perch, weakfish, shad, flounders, and a number of others hunt this sort of prey along the shallows of the coast, where it abounds. The menhaden is a toothless creature and satisfies itself by swallowing soft, oozy mud in large quantities, and has a eomplex digestive apparatus adapted to sifting out the organie, matter with which it is rich. We happen to know, however, by experience that the menhaden is suffieiently appreeiative of better fare than mud to take bait off of a hook. Prof. Verrill notes in passing the habits of a crustaeea remotely resembling the lobster, the gebia. It is from two to three iuches long, and exeavates long and tortuous burrows from half an inch to an inch in diameter. Nevertheless it often finds itself suddenly transferred from this long home to its last home in the stomach of some prowling flounder. The wolf fish is said not be partieular regarding its food, which we may readily believe, as the professor tells us that his disseetions brought to light from within one large speeimen, four quarts of sea-urchins, most of them with the spines on and many of them entire. A chesnut-burr gives only a distant idea of the spine-clad sea-urchin, aud the very thought of a digestive apparatus that could master such a diet and be happy, is euough to kill or cure a dyspeptic.

It is not irreverent to pray to God about eommon things; there is not au act of our lives He does not see, and He would have us, like children, speak of everything which interests us.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. Schele DeVere, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. Gildersleeve, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. Carter, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LeConte, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. Johnston, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his confrères in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION and Elegance of Design.

All material used in the construction of our Instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

[From the New Orleans Price Current.]

We have no change to notice in the general market since our last issue. Some branches of trade have done a fair business, but from others we hear complaints of unusual dullness for this time of the year. A decided improvement, however, is anticipated from the reported rise in the tributaries. Flour has been dull at previous rates, with occasional sales at easier prices. The supply of corn has continued light, but the demand has been limited and the sales have been at irregular prices, according to quality and condition. Pork has been firm at the previous advance, and retailed at still higher figures. Bacon has shown no material variation.

The weather was clear and pleasant on Saturday, cloudy and threatening on Sunday, and showery on Monday, with an unusually heavy rain in the evening. On Tuesday it was unsettled and cloudy. The change has checked the tendency to raise cotton estimates which we noticed in our last report. Some parties, who were inclined to gamble on future deliveries and had prepared to sell at certain rates, made haste to withdraw their offers. But such changes in the weather are no more than might be reasonably expected at this time of the year. In the meantime, as we remarked last week, the accounts from the country press and private correspondence do not appear to afford any cause for an increase in estimates. The amount of the receipts is not regarded as a fair indication of the extent of the crop. On the contrary, it has been generally assumed that though the latter was short and backward, picking would be completed at an earlier period than usual, and the bulk of the receipts be much in advance of last year's.

The river is 14 feet below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-seventh ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi	13,215
Lake	56
Mobile	2,631
Texas	191
Total	16,093

On Saturday prices were steady at the opening, but soon gave way under the decline reported at Liverpool. The demand, however, was active at the reduction and the sales summed up 4,350 bales. During the morning, bend and other good staple cottons were exceptionally firm, and occasionally commanded ¼c. more than Friday's rates, but toward the close all qualities participated in the depression, the quotations showing a decline of @¼c. in strict middling, and ¼c. in middling and low middling. On Monday the movement commenced at about previous rates, but on the receipt of telegrams reporting an advance of ¼c. at New York and 1-16d at Liverpool, factors raised their pretensions. The demand, nevertheless, continued active and the business comprised 4,900 bales, the closing quotations indicating an advance of nearly or quite ¼c. on Saturday's figures. On Tuesday the market opened with a good inquiry, and although factors raised their pretensions @¼c., yet, as the accounts from Liverpool and New York were favorable, the demand continued active throughout the day, and fully 6,300 bales changed hands at higher prices, the closing rates showing an advance of ¼c. In exceptional cases the figures paid showed an improvement of ¼c., but the above accords with the general view. This is much the largest business reported in the current year, the next largest being on Monday.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 87,118 bales, against 132,126 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 89,145 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 8,397 to France, and a decrease of 6,860 to Great Britain, and 3,790 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Good ordinary	17¼ to 17¾
Low middling	17¾ to 18
Middling	18¼ to 18¾
Strict middling	18½ to

SUGAR.—The demand is good, especially for the better descriptions, and the supplies on Saturday and Monday, embracing 200 hhds. were all sold at 7¾c. for inferior, 9¼c. for good common to fair, 9¾c. for fair, 10@10¼c. for good fair, 11¼c. for prime, 12c. for choice, 9@10c. for low seconds, and 12@12½c. for yellow clarified. The receipts of the new crop thus far are mostly poor in quality, and we are told by the trade that planters would promote their own interests much more by looking more to quality in manufacture. In cultivation, of course, quantity and quality should be combined. Planters send their product too soon to market. The sugar comes here green and soft, without having had sufficient time to drain, making it unmarketable and, in fact, unmerchantable. These remarks apply equally to molasses. On Tuesday the demand was good, and the receipts were sold, as landed, at 6¾@7¾c. for inferior, 11@c. for good fair, 11¼c. for fully fair, and 12 @12¼c. for yellow clarified.

MOLASSES.—The new crop is coming in more freely, and meets with pretty ready sale. The receipts on Saturday and Monday, comprising 600 bbls., were sold at 45c. for thin and centrifugal, 52½@56c. for fair, 57@58c. for fair to prime, 59@60c. for prime, 62@63c. for strictly prime to choice, and 63@64c. for choice.

FLOUR.—The market has again continued extremely dull; in fact it is at a stand-still, and only a job business was done on Saturday and Monday at $6 for superfine, $6.75 for double extra, $7@$7.12½ for treble extra, $7.25@$7.50 for good treble extra, and $7.75 @8.50 for choice. On Tuesday the market was dull and unchanged, and the sales were confined to 1,000 barrels, in lots, at $6.75 for double extra, $7.37½@$7.50 for good treble extra, $7.62½ for choice treble extra, and $9 for family extra. Some treble extra sold on private terms.

HAMS.—There is no market for hams, and in the absence of any demand and sales we cannot give prices. On Tuesday a lot of 25 tcs. sugar-cured hams sold on private terms.

DRY SALT MEAT.—The market is bare or nearly so. Shoulders command 8c. from first hands, and are retailing at 8½c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—The market is dull, with a fair stock on hand. On Saturday 50 tcs. sold at 10½c., and 100 kegs 60. on private terms. On Tuesday 50 and 60 tcs. refined sold at 10½c. Tcs. are quoted at 10¼c., and kegs at 12c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

MISCELLANEOUS.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF
RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above meationed painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

THESE are not the best the world ever saw nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Nov. 1.—Details of the Brazilian emancipatiou law have been received. The law provides that all children born after its promulgation shall be free. The slaves owned hy the government are free, and various provisions are made for those still held in slavery.

Religious corporations were emancipating their slaves, and many private slave-ownors are moving in the same direction, converting their slaves into free tenants or freeing them upon condition of a few years' service.

Louisville, Nov. 2.—A project for another new bridge over the Ohio river here is mooted.

New York, Nov. 2.—A special cable from London yesterday says: It is now certain that Prince Metternich and Chevalier Nigra, the Austrian and Italian embassadors, will both leave Paris, and perhaps come to London. The influence of their wives is the alleged cause.

Paris is said to be dull jnst now for the ladies.

Salt Lake City, Nov. 2.—The city is qniet, with no apparent prospects of an ontbreak. The United States marshal is preparing an expedition to follow and arrest Brigham Young. It is reliably reported that Yonng is still moving south with eleven wagons and one hnndred armed men, all monnted.

Baltimore, Nov. 2.—A mass meeting of the Democratic Conservative party of this city was held to-night in Monument Square, to protest against the proceedings in South Carolina, under the saspension of the writ of habeas corpus, or, as the call for the meeting states: "A grand uprising to protest against the war now being waged against liberty and law." The clubs of the different wards, twenty in nnmber, paraded the streets with torchlights, banners, transparencies, devices, bands of mnsic, etc.

Hon. Reverdy Johnson presided at the meeting. Resolutions were passed, and addresses delivered by the Hon. Reverdy Johnsoa, Hon. William Pinckney Whyte, Hon. Joshua Vanzandt, mayor elect, and others.

The nnmber present was ostimated at from eight to ten thousand.

Jackson, Nov. 4.—The Mississippi State Fair has been again postponed from November 13 to December 4.

Philadelphia, Nov. 4.—The Board of Health reports an average of fourteen deaths a day from smallpox during the week ending to-day.

This is a slight increase over the previous week.

Topeka, Kansas, Nov. 4.—The chief engineer of the Atchison and Santa Fe railroad completed a survey of the line to Port Union, New Mexico, and roports the route practicable. He commeaces to-morrow a survey of the line from Fort Dodge up the Kansas river, and hopes to reach Puebla before snow stops work. Another party will leave Fort Dodge for Monterey, to run a line south to Rock Salt, in the southwestern part of the Territory.

Salt Lake City, Nov. 5.—Brigham Young arrived at Seaver on the thirty-first ultimo, on his way to St. George, on the extreme southern boundary of the Territory. It is said he has bid a final adieu to Salt Lake.

Washington, Nov. 5.—The President's instructions to the Federal officers was that there should be a firm but judicious enforcement of the laws in Utah, and no compromise with criminals. The latest official reports represent all danger of a collision over.

The President has no present intention to further suspend the habeas corpus in the South, unless a similar condition of affairs to that in certain South Carolina counties occurs elsewhere.

San Francisco, Nov. 5.—The ship Moses Taylor, from Honolulu, was boarded, water-logged, by the brig Sheltop. All were dead, except the captain, who was barely breathing. The Taylor reports thirty-three whalers caught in the ice, and either crushed or abandoned.

No loss of life is reported in the great loss of whaling ships. But seven of the fleet escaped.

The captains of abandoned whalers are at Honolula. They give the following details: The vessels commenced arriving, says Capt. Thadeus, on the first of May. The first of June the ice opened and let the fleet up in sight of Cape Navarino. The fleet working northward found some whales crossing the Sea of Anadyr, and in Behring sea more and plenty, but experienced much trouble from the ice, and when the fleet arrived at Cape Behring and Flower Bay the whales had passed through into the Arctic ocean, whither the fleet followed, meeting fair success nntil about the first of September, when ice floes and bergs to a great extent commenced drifting down, and by the tenth a nnmber of vessels had been snnk and the bulk of the remainder hemmed in by the drifting ice or driven ashore.

On September 2 the brig Comet sunk. On the seventh the Roman was drifted bodily out to sea hy two floes and crnshed like an egg-shell; the crew narrowly escaped. The Florida and Victoria, of San Francisco, were also crushed.

September 15 the captains of the fleet hemmed in between Point Belcher and Wainwright inlet, held a meeting and resolved to abandon the vessels in order to save the lives of the crews, which was done, and twelve hundred sailors took refuge on board the romainder of the fleet which had been fortunate enough to escape outside before the ice closed in.

Washinoton, Nov. 6.—The Supreme Court will hear the arguments, on the seventeenth, on the mandamus to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the Kentacky war claim.

The Tribune annonnces the resignation of Hon. Hamilton Fish as Secretary of State.

Philadelphia, Nov. 7.—There were five hundred and sixty-seven cases of smallpox last week and ninety-five deaths. No ward is entirely free from the disease.

Memphis, Nov. 7.—A mass meeting was held at Greenlow's Opera Honse last night in reference to the Memphis, Shreveport and Jefferson railroad. Nnmerous speeches were made by prominent citizens, and resolutions adopted pledging Memphis to furnish its full quota of means to carry out the enterprise.

FOREIGN.

Matamoras, Oct. 27.—A courier brings news from the capital to the twenty-third. All was qaiet there up to that time.

General Diaz is not in the field, as heretofore reported.

The governors of all the States had offered Juarez congratulations upon his re-election, and have offered support to suppress the Monterey pronunciamento.

Juarists deny the capitulation of Saltillo, hat the revolutionists hold the lines of communication between Monterey and the border.

London, Nov. 2.—Discussion of the international copyright law continues.

A serious railroad accident is reported near Perth, Scotland.

Hague, Nov. 3.—A convention for the sale of the Dutch settlements of Samatra and the coast of Guiana has been signed by the Dutch and English governments.

Turin, Nov. 3.—The Italian government contemplates spending seven million francs upon the Alpine fortifications.

Constantinople, Nov. 4.—Monsignore Franchi, papal envoy, has taken his departare from the capital, having failed in his efforts to obtain guarantees from the Sultan in regard to the status of Catholic subjects in Turkey. The Porte persistently refused to enter into a discussion of the condition of its Christian subjects.

London, Nov. 4.—The Telegraph this morning prints a special dispatch from Paris, containing the statement that a plot against the present government of Spain, of a dangerous character, had been discovered in that city.

The Times this morning expresses an intention to close its columns to any discussion of the international copyright, which has become quite heated already. One libel suit has grown out of the controversy, in which Hon. Mrs. Norton is plaintiff.

Madrid, Nov. 7.—The anticipated reconciliation of the partisans of Sagosta and Zorilla have failed.

Paris, Nov. 7.—The restoration of tranquillity in Algeria is nearly complete.

The strike is increasing at Rouen.

Dublin, Nov. 7.—A mob assaulted the military escort conducting Kelly to trial with stones.

A soldier was mortally hurt.

Vienna, Nov. 7.—Count von Buest's resignation has been accepted. Count Androssy succeeds him.

The statue of Maximilian was unveiled to-day. The ceremonies were solemn and imposing.

Athens, Nov. 7.—The ministry have resigned.

The nearer we live to Jesus, and the closer our walk is with him, the less inclination we have for pursuits and pleasures in which he is not the object.

STEAMER WADE HAMPTON SUNK.

NO LIVES LOST.

The steamer Big Horn arrived at half-past four o'clock last evening with the passengers and a portion of the officers and crew of the steamer Wade Hampton.

From Mr. Florence Findren, clerk of the Hampton, wo obtain the following particulars:

During the night of the fifth instant, when jnst below Plaquemine, the boat struck some nnseen obstruction in the channel, and shortly afterward commenced to make a little water, which, however, was kept under control. While near Donaldsonville the water began to gain on the pnmps, and the boat was landed opposite that place, at four A. M. on the sixth, in order to put off a portion of her freight; while there she snnk, and now lies with water nearly up to her boiler deck.

As she lies straight, hopes are entertained of saving both the boat and her entire cargo.

The passengers, together with the haggage, were safely landed, and reached the city on the Big Horn. Picayune, November 7.

The Use of a Long Nose.—The following good story is told of Mozart at the time when he was a pupil of Haydn. Haydn had challenged Mozart to compose a piece of music which he could not play at sight. Mozart accepted the banter, and a champagne supper was to be the forfeit. Everything being arranged between the two composers, Mozart took his pen and a sheet of paper, and in five miaates dashed off a piece of mnsic, and, much to the surprise of Haydn, handed it to him, saying: "There is a pioce of music which you cannot play, and I can; you are to give the first trial." Haydn smiled contemptaously at the visionary presamption of his pupil, and, placing the notes before him, strack the keys of the instrument. Surprised at its simplicity, he dashed away till he reached the middle of the piece, when, stopping all at once, he exclaimed: "How's this, Mozart? How's this? Here my hands are stretched ont to both ends of the piano, yet there is a middle key to be touched. Nobody can play such music—not even the composer himself." Mozart smiled at the half-excited indignation and perplexity of the great master; and, taking the seat he had quitted, strack the instrament with such an air of self-assnrance that Haydn began to think himself duped. Running along the simple passages, he came to that part which his teacher had pronoanced impossible to be played. Mozart, it must be remarked, was favored, or at least endowed, with an extremely long nose. Reaching the difficult passage, he stretched both hands to the extreme long ends of the piano, and, leaning forward, bobbed his noso against the middle key, which nobody could play. Haydn burst into an immoderate fit of laughter; and, after acknowledging he was beaten, he declared that Nature had endowed Mozart with a capacity for music which he had never discovered.

Yellow Fever Notes.—Vidalia.—The Herald of the second reports five or six new cases of yellow fever as having occurred within the current week, but expresses the opinion that the disease had nearly run its course.

Natchez.—The Courier of the third regrets to announce that there did not appear to be any abatement of yellow fever. The number of cases nnder treatment, at that date, the Courier computes at one hundred and forty or one hundred and fifty. Since the first instant the mortality had decreased from three or four to one death per day. From October 28 to November 2, inclasive, the sexton's report records eight deaths from yellow fever.

The Democrat of the fourth cannot report any marked change in the yellow fever situation for the better. The physicians continued to note new cases daily.

A drawing-master, worrying his pnpil with contemptuous remarks upon his lack of ability, ended by asking: "Now, sir, if you were going to draw me, what part of me would you commence first?" The boy, with a meaning look into his master's face, answered very quietly: "Your neck, sir."

A Boston paper propounds the following conundrum for Darwin: Upon what principle of selection is it that of all the darker colored horses which have white feet, twice as many of them have their white feet behind as before?

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Auburn, Alabama.

Mr. Editor: The revival meeting here, conducted by Bro. McCarty, resnlted in about sixty conversions. One of the professors in the college, also one tutor and many of our students, were among the converts. The work was deep and thorough, and promises permanency. In my own pastoral charge, viz: Loachapoka and Mount Meigs, at the first-named church we have received forty-two members; in the other, one member. There have been thirty-five conversions.

Yours, B. B. Ross.

November 4, 1871.

Choctawhatchee Circuit, Alabama Conference.

Mr. Editor: I am happy to say to you that the Lord has done great things for us on this circuit this year, whereof we are glad. I commenced my first protracted meeting for the present year in the latter part of July, which resulted in great good. A spirit of revival has continued with us ever since, insomuch that this circnit has been in a flame—every church revived. There has been a large number added to the church, vast numbers converted and the church powerfully revived. The work still goes on.

I commenced a meeting at Union Hill—one of my churches—on the twenty-third of September, which lasted six days. The like has never been witnessed before in our country. The meeting was largely attended night and day; so much so that there was not room in the house. The interest being so great, the brethren soon arranged a large arbor, which gave room for the meeting. I was favored with the aid of four ministers, who preached and labored very effectually. I never witnessed a greater effort made by the church and ministry in all my life before. God's power was wonderfully manifested in the conversion of many souls. There were thirty-two accessions to the church. Some old gray-headed men—the hardest cases—became weeping penitents and joined the church. Union Hill has now a membership of one hundred and forty. J. M. Brown, P. C.

Newbern Station, Alabama Conference.

Mr. Editor: The Lord is reviving his work graciously and even wonderfully in this place. We have had a meeting in progress for two weeks, which has resulted in thirty-three or more conversions up to this time. Of this number, eighteen have joined our church; a few more intend doing so; the rest will join the Baptist and Presbyterian churches. Nearly half the converts are children from ten to fifteen years old. A few are heads of families. All of those who have joined our church, except six, had been baptized in infancy. I expect to baptize several children next Sunday.

During the first week of the meeting the preaching was done mainly by Dr. B. F. Hendon, of the Baptist Church, and Bro. John Peterson, a young minister of our church, who expects to enter the itinerancy at the next Conference. During the second week it was done by Bro. Peterson and Bro. T. F. Mangum. Bro. J. W. McCann, who lives here, has been with us, performing faithful service. There is still considerable interest, and the meeting may possibly continue another week. This revival is considered by those living here as the most powerful and remarkable one that has taken place here for many years. I have heard persons—some members of the church and some not—say during the meeting that they never expected to see such a revival in Newbern. The accessions during the meeting have nearly doubled our membership here. It is God's work, and to his name alone be all the glory.

W. A. Montgomery, P. C.

October 29, 1871.

Brandywine Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

Mr. Editor: The Lord has been with us on Brandywine circuit to revive his people again, and to convict and convert souls. We commenced our protracted meetings for this circuit at Providence school house, embracing the first Sabbath in September. We had two accessions and several conversions—the church revived. This meeting lasted four days.

We began our meeting at Nebo on Saturday before the third Sabbath in September. This meeting continued nine days, resulting in seventeen accessions and about fifteen conversions. Here the church was greatly revived. We had at this meeting the labors of Dr. Bertea and Bro. E. A. Flowers, who did good service.

At Brandywine we began on Saturday before the fourth Sabbath in September. Here we were alone until Wednesday morning, when Bro. E. A. Flowers came to our assistance. This meeting lasted seven days. We had seven accessions; some conversions—how many we know not.

On Saturday before the first Sabbath in October our meeting at Coal Spring commenced, and lasted six days, with a result of five accessions and several conversions—how many we could not ascertain. Church somewhat revived.

Our protracted meeting at Sumpter commenced on Saturday before the fourth Sabbath in October, and lasted four and a half days. Here we had one of the most pleasant and happy meetings we ever witnessed. There were five accessions, with conversions; the church greatly revived. Here we commemorated the sufferings and death of our dear Redeemer with Sister Delila P. Pool, who had been bed-ridden for more than twelve months. All who were present enjoyed the presence of God to bless. We also visited a poor man dying of dropsy of the heart, who in other days had enjoyed the religion of our blessed Savior, but who had backslidden and had become very wicked. While exhorting him and pointing him to Jesus, he laid hold by faith upon the merits of Christ, and was enabled to shout: "Victory." Himself and wife joined the church. Glory be to God for his goodness and mercy to us.

R. A. Sibley, P. C.

Union Church, Jefferson Co., Miss., October 30, 1871.

Holmesville Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

Mr. Editor: If there is any rule to be observed in giving names to circuits, I have not learned what it is. It is reasonable to suppose that in naming a circnit something more than a legal designation is to be considered, as geographical center, numerical strength, spiritual power or pecuniary preponderance. I know not the leading idea in the name of the circuit which I represent when it is considered as a circnit. But as it is honored with the name of Holmesville, it may not be amiss, in referring to this part of the Lord's vineyard, to give some pre-eminence to this place. Holmesville is an old town, and has long been the county site of Pike county. The courts still convene there, and the court house and jail and clerks' offices are there. Holmesville is therefore the legal, civil and political center of the county. There are three or four houses in the mercantile business, and I believe two dealing in spirituous liqaors. There is a Masonic lodge, and its hall is sometimes used for schools, and the colored people ase it as a place of worship. There is no permanent school in Holmesville. There was once a tolerably flourishing Baptist church in this place, but it is scattered and passed away, and the building is converted into a country residence. The Methodist Episcopal Church South still survives, but it is not as strong as it ought to be. There is much work for the church here. About sixty names are enrolled on the church list at Holmesville, and I suppose there are about one hundred persons who attend the meetings occasionally, not regularly. We have just closed a meeting of five days' continuance with that church. Bros. Henry Lewis and J. H. Winborn assisted in preaching, and William Conerly in exhortation. We labored zealously for the salvation of souls and for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom, and felt the presence of the Lord with us, and saw manifestations of his presence among the brethren in the church. We could but feel that it was good to be there, and that our labor was not in vain. The entire membership appeared serious and thoughtful, and the young and gay were sober and attentive, while the hard-hearted probably resisted whatever good impressions might have been made upon them. One may sow and another reap. So it may be in this case. "My heart's desire and prayer to God for these people is that they might be saved." There is much for the church to contend against at Holmesville—there are many demoralizing influences to bear. The conflicts of litigants, the clash of partisans, the uncertainty of business, the attempt to remove the courts to the railroad, the political excitement, the god of this world in varied forms—all have a pernicious influence upon the spirituality of the church. Therefore it is not strange that no greater manifestation of God's power was seen in our meeting.

In view of the tendency of trade to points on the railroad, and the clamor for the removal of the court house to Magnolia or Summit, the people of Holmesville seem to be depressed in their feelings in regard to enterprises looking to the improvement of the place, and they are afraid to invest their means either in private or public improvements, lest the county seat should be removed and their property become worthless. Holmesville ought to be the county seat as long as the county retains its present boundary; but I do not think the courts are indispensable to the existence and prosperity of the place. It seems to me that the people of Holmesville would serve their own interests much better by giving more attention to the intellectual and moral training of the community. Let a school be established there on a solid foundation, and let the church be alive to the spiritual interests of the community, and these institutions will attract good people.

I intended to speak of meetings at other points on my circuit, which includes seven churches, but I have given too much space to this point. It was our fifth protracted meeting, and where we labored most and accomplished least; and this is the cause of these thoughts and my apology for their expression.

J. W. Sandell.

CONFERENCE ITEMS.

Holston Conference.

This Conference was held at Morristown, Tennessee, October 18–23. Bishop Pierce presided.

The missionary collection on Saturday night amounted to $507.21, making the aggregate missionary collections for the year $1,800.27. We believe this does not include the amount paid on the old debt. About seventy per cent. of the preachers' claims were met during the year. More than was sufficient to meet the Bishops' claim had been raised. White members, 30,920; increase, 1,447; colored members, 162; decrease, 32; Indians, 102; increase, 20; local preachers, 264; increase, 43. Baptized: infants, 1,109; adults, 1,624. Sunday schools, 352; teachers, 2,440; scholars, 15,419. Necessary for claimants, $1,650; collected, $868.90. For missions, $1,800.27. The next session is to be held at Chattanooga.

Arkansas Conference.

The Arkansas Conference was held at Van Buren, October 18–23. Bishop McTyeire presided, and C. H. Gregory was secretary. We are greatly obliged to both for the minutes and other "copy." J. L. Hays, J. C. Daily, E. M. Collum, were admitted on trial. J. M. King discontinued. F. A. Taff, W. E. Whittenberg, J. A. Wulden, G. R. Bryce, admitted into full connection. B. Williams, R. N. Francis, S. D. Gaines, J. Griffin, H. Puckett, received by transfer. G. R. Bryce, J. A. Walden, J. Haralson, W. E. Whittenberg, elected and ordained deacons. J. M. Shinn, J. Crews, T. Satton, W. R. McVoy, W. F. Baxter, W. H. H. Oyler, G. O'Daniel, N. W. Vance, J. J. Henson, local, elected, and W. F. Baxter, J. J. Henson, ordained deacons—also R. Carter, colored. S. H. Babcock elected and ordained elder. H. M. Redus, J. C. Hawkins, local, elected elders. J. M. Eeds, H. G. Rind, local, ordained elders. J. C. Daily, J. McCardy, recognized as elders from the Northern Methodist Episcopal Church. W. M. Mathis, A. Mathis, H. A. Barnett, located. S. P. Farish, superannuated. As we count, white members, 9,531; increase, 1,678; colored, 44; increase, 9; local preachers, 116; increase, 30. Baptized: infants, 407; adults, 896. Sunday schools, 71; teachers, 406; scholars, 2,743—a slight decrease. Necessary for claimants, $500; collected, $298.90. For missions, $627, besides $72.50 for old debt. Next session is to be held at Bentonville. Nashville Christian Advocate.

HEAVIER THE CROSS.

Heavier the cross, the nearer heaven;
No cross without, no God within—
Death, judgment from the heart are driven,
Amid the world's false glare and din.
Oh! happy he, with all his loss,
Whom God hath set beneath the cross.

Heavier the cross, the better Christian;
This is the touchstone God applies.
How many a garden would be wasting
Unwet by showers from weeping eyes!
The gold by fire is purified;
The Christian is by trouble tried.

Heavier the cross, the stronger faith;
The loaded palm strikes deeper root;
The vine-juice sweetly issueth
When men have pressed the clustered fruit;
And courage grows where dangers come,
Like pearls beneath the salt sea-foam.

Heavier the cross, the heartier prayer;
The bruised herbs most fragrant are.
If sky and wind were always fair
The sailor would not watch the star;
And David's Psalms had ne'er been sung
If grief his heart had never wrung.

Heavier the cross, the more aspiring;
From vales we climb to mountain-crest;
The pilgrim, of the desert tiring,
Longs for the Canaan of his rest.
The dove has here no rest in sight,
And to the ark she wings her flight.

Heavier the cross, the easier dying;
Death is a friendlier face to see;
To life's decay one bids defying,
From life's distress one then is free.
The cross sublimely lifts our faith
To Him who triumphed over death.

Thou Crucified! the cross I carry,
The longer, may it dearer be;
And lest I faint while here I tarry,
Implant thou such a heart in me
That faith, hope, love may flourish there,
Till for the cross my crown I wear.

Did Jephthah Offer His Daughter as a Burnt Offering?

Mr. Editor: The thoughts that follow have been suggested by an article in the Advocate upon the subject of Jephthah's daughter being offered as a burnt offering; the article is over the signature of O. A. W.

I did not know that any writer of any note in modern times took the position that Jephthah, in point of fact, slew his daughter and offered her up as a burnt offering, until I saw an article in a work by J. T. Headly—lately issued from the press—setting forth substantially the same views advanced by Bro. O. A. W. Now, I take the position that Jephthah never was guilty of the horrid crime here ascribed to him. To slay his innocent daughter, and burn upon a sacrificial altar, would have been a crime of the highest grade—a crime committed only under the influence of the worst forms of heathen idolatry—a crime of which no servant of God could possibly be guilty. If it be said that Abraham, in intention, offered Isaac as a burnt offering, without incurring guilt, I answer, this was in obedience to a direct commandment of God, and not under the influence of a rash vow.

I propose to show that the opinion that Jephthah really sacrificed his daughter cannot be sustained, either by rational argument or a proper interpretation of the word of God. 1. We have reason to believe that Jephthah had proper views of the Mosaic law, both the moral and ceremonial. 2. That he was a pious man.

If he understood the moral law, he knew that it was wrong to commit murder; and he knew that to slay his daughter, pure and innocent, without a direct and unmistakable commandment issued by God himself, would be murder. If he entertained proper views of the laws that governed sacrificial offerings, he knew that to offer unclean beasts was abomination in the sight of God. How much more the sacrifice of a human being! Had he slain and offered as a burnt offering his innocent and confiding daughter, such an act would scarcely have been recorded without a record of the divine disapprobation expressed in unmistakable language; yet we have no such record. If he was a pious man, he had no disposition to violate either the moral or the ceremonial law.

I present the foregoing as so many rational arguments against the opinion that Jephthah slew and sacrificed his daughter.

Mr. Headly and O. A. W. suppose that because Jephthah died six years after the fulfillment of his vow, that, therefore, he died of grief.

It is very unreasonable to suppose that because a man dies six years after some great calamity or some severe bereavement, that, therefore, he dies of grief. I suppose that then, as now, men died at different ages, and from the effects of a variety of diseases.

I now propose to show that the scriptural history of Jephthah's vow, and of its fulfillment, does not justify the opinion that he sacrificed his daughter.

The history runs thus: "And Jephthah vowed a vow unto the Lord, and said, if thou shalt, without fail, deliver the children of Ammon into mine hands, then it shall be that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering." The margin, "Or I will offer it up," instead of "and," etc.

His vow consecrated to the Lord whatsoever should come forth of the doors of his house to meet him; and, if suitable for a burnt offering, to be offered as such.

If a house cat or a pet dog had met him, could he have offered such as a burnt offering? Surely not. Much less could he have slain and burned upon the sacrificial altar his innocent and affectionate daughter. But he consecrated her to the Lord in a state of perpetual virginity.

This is made plain by her own request. She requested the space of two months, that she might go up and down upon the mountains and bewail her virginity. Had she expected to be slain and burned upon the altar, surely this, and not her virginity, would have been the cause of her grief.

In the sequel of the history of the daughter it is said: "And it came to pass at the end of two months that she returned unto her father, who did with her according to his vow which he had vowed; and she knew no man"—that is, he consecrated her to the Lord in a state of virginity, and she remained unmarried.

The Education of Young Men with a View to the Ministry, at Centenary Male Institute, Since the War.

Mr. Editor: Permit me, as the treasurer of the Educational Aid Society of the Mobile Conference, to state a few facts to the ministers and members of the church in the Alabama Conference. That society was not reorganized at the last session of the Alabama Conference. There was a small amount in the hands of the treasurer, which has been paid, as ordered, on the board of one of the young preachers. Prof. Massey has been in charge of this institution since the war; has run the institution at his own risk, employed his own assistants; has never asked the trustees for any insurance; has educated many of the preachers' sons free of charge. He has done this when it cost him additional assistance. He has had from two to six young men every year since the war, whom he has been educating with a view to the ministry; and, besides all this, he has boarded some of them. It has cost him not less than $1,500, and only a very small amount on that has been paid. Prof. Massey has not complained; but borne all the church has put upon him. He has had fine offers at several other places, but has stood by the church in the darkest days, when her institutions were ready to be closed up for want of means. The church knows where to find Prof. Massey—always at his post; and those who have known him longest and tried him most know best his great talents as an educator. If the church and people of Alabama knew him as some of us know his worth, he would have two hundred boys in his institution.

Now, brethren, is it right, is it religious for the church in Alabama to have the labor of such a man for nothing? The young men whom he has educated are now, many of them, doing a good work for the Methodist Church. I am sure that I know a thousand Methodists in Alabama who have too much religion and self-respect to allow any one of their brethren to bear such burdens. I am to blame for not letting the church know the facts long ago, but I depended on others to look after this interest.

If the brethren would pay only $500 it would relieve the matter very much. Are there not fifty who could spare $10 each? There are some who might spare $100. Please send the amount to me or to Dr. Mitchell, at this place, and we will acknowledge the receipt at once.

We are glad to be able to report the schools at this place in a healthy and prosperous condition. The prospects were never better since the war; in fact, we rejoice to hear that all the schools and colleges under the patronage and control of the Alabama Conference are doing so well. The church now has nothing to do but to endow her male colleges, and be sure to send her own children to her own schools; and if they are not as elevated as some think they ought to be, please, as Methodists, don't humiliate yourselves by sending your boys and girls to institutions less efficient, and pay more for it.

If the Methodists in Alabama would act together, in less than five years they would have the most popular and efficient colleges in the whole South. Brethren, let us have denominational self-respect, at least in our educational enterprises.

"A DRUNKARD'S CONFESSION."

Mr. Editor: I have just read the article in the Advocate of October 5, under the above caption. It has sent a thrill through my "sympathetic nerve," and thence to my heart, and has thus induced me to address "Toper" through the same medium, viz: the Advocate. I remember the article of Bro. Nicholson, referred to by "Toper." It called down (so I have been told; I have not seen them) several articles in the secular papers upon the devoted head of Bro. Joe; but, very properly, he heeds them not. I wish to say to "Toper" that I was once in his condition—a poor, besotted drunkard, a loathsome drunkard; had as fine a prospect before me for distinction and usefulness as any young man in the community; married, before I became sottish, a beautiful and amiable young lady; promised in my marriage vow to do everything that I did not do, save one, and that was to love her. I did love her; but, alas! I loved whisky more.

"Toper" says he has tried everything—has tried the "strength of his own will;" that failed. He tried "praying;" that failed! Oh, my dear friend "Toper," try again. Will you make God a liar? Hear him: "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will with the temptation make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."—First Cor. x, 13. Now, friend "Topor," try again. But remember another thing as you go: "That he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Heb. xi, 6. You must go to God not only sincerely, but believingly. If you go without any desire or expectation of being benefited you had better stay away, as an approach to God without faith is only an insult. Therefore try again and again, and with every trial you will find your strength so increased that you will eventually be able to lay aside "the sin that doth so easily beset you, and run the race set before you with alacrity and delight." What! did Jesus cast a legion of devils out of one man, and not be able to cast Bacchus out of you? Think again, sir—try again. Jesus told his disciples that some evil spirits could not be cast out save by fasting and prayer; add the former to your petitions, if necessary. I know by happy experience that you can overcome—entirely conquer—this thirst for the damning alcohol. Use every means of grace, join the church, come out from among the wicked, and you will thereby enlist not only the sympathies, but the prayers of the church. Go to work for your salvation. Taste not, touch not, smell not and see not the accursed stuff in any form, if possible. O that I could have a talk with you face to face!

Opelousas District Conference.

Mr. Editor: This conference held a three-days' session, October 19–21, at Abbeville, Vermilion parish, and, we believe, accomplished much for the glory of God.

The proceedings were opened with a most excellent sermon by Rev. Baxter Clegg, and presided over by Rev. J. D. Adams, presiding elder.

The several pastoral charges were nearly all represented, and important reports submitted to the conference, among which was one by Rev. Thomas Mullet, from Lake Charles, covering his whole missionary field of labor.

The usual committees were appointed, and the reports made by them are of vital interest to the church. Among the more important are the following:

The Finance Committee, through Dr. W. S. Leake, chairman, offered the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That it be recommended to the churches that at the first church meeting of the year a committee of three shall be selected by the membership to assess said membership, and that each one shall be free to concur in or dissent from said assessment.

Resolved, That said assessment shall be sufficient to cover all the expenses of the church, as set forth in the report of the board of stewards.

Resolved, That we believe that it is the duty of the board of stewards, as the agents of the church, to guarantee for the church that the assessed salary shall be paid, and that the church is morally bound to sustain the stewards in said guarantee.

Resolved, That it is the firm conviction of this conference that the churches should pay the assessment made in monthly installments.

The Committee on Missions offered the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this District Conference that the pastors of the charges within its bounds take up the annual missionary collection hereafter in the months of April and May of each year.

Whereas, There is in the parishes of Vernon, Calcasieu and Cameron a population of ten thousand whites, almost entirely destitute of the gospel, who earnestly desire to hear the word; therefore,

Resolved, That this District Conference memorialize the Annual Conference to organize the said parishes into a missionary district.

Resolved, That we recommend that a presiding elder be appointed to this missionary field; and that in order to place him in a position to labor effectually for the glory of God and the extension of his kingdom on earth, the Missionary Board place in the hands of said elder four warrants, each for $250, to be paid quarterly out of the missionary fund.

The Committee on Education introduced resolutions relative to establishing two schools of high grade—a male and female—each within the limits and under the patronage of the conference, said schools to be located respectively at Vermilionville and New Iberia. Unanimously adopted.

Rev. W. C. Haislip was selected by the conference as financial agent to collect funds for said schools.

Religious services were held twice daily during the conference, and were owned and blessed of God. On Sunday, the twenty-second instant, a most impressive sermon was preached by Rev. W. C. Haislip, of New Iberia, and, as was manifested, found its way to the hearts of the congregation.

At night our beloved elder, Rev. J. D. Adams, preached an effective sermon.

Seventeen united with the church, and during the week following, under the ministry of Rev. Thomas Mullet, five more, making a total of twenty-two.

In every aspect it was one of the most interesting conference sessions held in this section for many years.

The following laymen were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference: Dr. W. S. Leake, Dr. J. D. Saint, R. S. Isbell, and Rev. Thomas Mullet, local preacher. Alternates: Dr. W. D. White and G. G. Zenor.

Next District Conference meets at Vermilionville.

STONEWALL INSTITUTE.

Mr. Editor: Allow me to say to those concerned that rare opportunities are offered in this school for a thorough education. The principal, Rev. D. C. B. Connerly, is specially gifted in the art of communicating light to his pupils.

It does appear to one who sits for a day, and hears the recitations of classes and the instructions given, that the young men must be thoroughly taught. About fifty now—others expected soon. All appear satisfied and happy.

The table is well supplied with well-cooked and wholesome food. The moral training in the Sabbath school and elsewhere is good, while the manners and courteous demeanor of the young men are carefully looked after.

The assistants are well qualified, under the supervision of the principal, to fill their departments.

The location on the Selma and Tennessee railroad, twenty miles from Selma, is very healthy. I do heartily recommend the Stonewall school to all for securing a good education.

Christian Temperance.—A few years ago two men were caught in the rapids above Niagara Falls. They were being irresistibly hurried on to destruction. The end of a rope was thrown out. One of them seized upon it, but the other caught hold of a floating log. The first was drawn to the shore; the other, in a few moments, passed with the log over the falls.

So we look at two men endeavoring to save themselves from the rapids of a terrible appetite. One of them seizes upon the rope of a Christian faith, that is fastened in heaven, and is saved. The other depends merely upon the uncertain purposes and resolutions that he has made, and appetite sweeps him on to his ruin.

He who would successfully struggle with temptation and appetite, and he who would work successfully as the Savior of the degraded, must not only add patience to his temperance, but also godliness to his patience.

The madness of appetite is like the demoniac of the Gadarenes. You may bind it with the fetters of laws, and pledges, and resolutions, and they may all be broken. You cannot bind intemperance, "no, not with chains." You cannot tame it with constant watching. Christ must come near, and bid the fiend "Come out of him;" changing his heart, with divine love, ere he can be seen "clothed, and in his right mind."—Calleue Fisk.

A matron on cross-examination as a witness, turned up her nose at the insinuation that her daughter was inclined to wed a widower. "Very likely, indeed," said she, with a toss of her head, "that my daughter should marry a second-hand man!"

We talk about great moral attainments. One of the greatest moral attainments that one could make would be to become uniform in transparent truthfulness and real guilelessness of soul.

SHE WAS A STRANGER.

A missionary was requested to go out to a new settlement to address a Sabbath school. He had preached in the morning, and was wearied and felt quite unfitted for the task, but reluctantly consented to go.

When he found himself at the spot, he looked round the assembly with great misgivings, not knowing what to say to them. He noticed a little girl shabbily dressed and barefooted, shrinking in a corner, her little sunburnt face buried in her hands, the tears trickling between her small brown fingers, and sobbing as if her heart would break. Soon, however, another little girl, about eleven years old, got up and went to her, whispered kindly to her, and, taking her by the hand, led her toward a brook, then seated her on a log, and kneeling beside her, she took off her ragged sunbonnet, and dipping her hand in the water, bathed her hot eyes and tear-stained face, and smoothed the tangled hair, talking in a cheery manner all the while.

The little one brightened up, the tears all went, and smiles came creeping around the rosy mouth.

The missionary stepped forward and said:

"Is that your little sister, my dear?"

"No, sir," answered the noble child, with tender, earnest eyes, "I have no sister, sir."

"Oh, one of the neighbor's children," replied the missionary; "a little schoolmate, perhaps?"

"No, sir, she is a stranger. I do not know where she came from; I never saw her before."

"Then how came you to take her out and have such a care for her, if you do not know her?"

"Because she was a stranger, sir, and seemed all alone, and needed somebody to be kind to her."

"Ah," said the missionary to himself, "here is a text for me to preach from, 'because she was a stranger and seemed all alone, and needed somebody to be kind to her.'" The words came to him, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, My brethren, ye have done it unto Me." So, taking the little girls by the hand, he went back to the school-room and told the people the simple story; then spoke of the great love that all should bear to one another, even as the dear Saviour sought out those who were humble and of low estate, making them His peculiar care. The missionary forgot his weariness, and felt that God had put a good word in his mouth.

Charge to the Pastor.—Make up your mind you must work, but if you consider yourself a fellow-member with the rest, don't work alone. Help your church, but don't carry it. If you find meddlesome busybodies, give them a plenty to do. They hate real work as a musquito does smoke.

Be neither a baby nor a king.

Your main business is to preach; but to do this you must know your people and ascertain their wants. Don't visit just to please, but to help on your work. Some families will need six visits to another's one; go where you can hurt the devil most. Be governed by men's wants, not their complaints.

Preach not as others do, but as you and God can best arrange it. Fill your hearer with sound reason, then cork him tight with a strong application, binding it with a "Thus saith the Lord." Be sparing, if not a little stingy, in using old sermons. Remember, when the stream of study stops flowing, the pulpit pond lowers. Give no censures unless there is love enough to prevent their drowning in hatred. It requires much love to praise, more to improve. Attack measures, and "hit" people only when they stand between you and the evil.

You must begin on time, and not be long in uttering what you have to say, if you would have this busy age stop to listen. If you would preach your best sermons, practice them faithfully beforehand. Be bold, but remain a Christian gentleman. When you hit the heart, don't forget the head, and vice versa.

Endeavor to be the greatest man in the parish, and that by being the servant of all. Be childish enough to think you never can be left away from Christ. Run to show him all you have and ask him for all you want. Work when you can, retire when you must, and you shall have favor with God when you will.—Congregationalist.

A miller had his neighbor arrested under the charge of stealing wheat from his mill, but being unable to substantiate the charge by proof, the court adjudged that the miller should make acknowledgment to the accused. "Well," said he, "I have had you arrested for stealing my wheat. I can't prove it, and I am sorry for it."

Mr. Adolph Kohn, of Munich, has bequeathed ten thousand guilders to the Jewish congregation, and twenty thousand guilders to the university, for the support of Jewish students.

Two Sabbaths.—"I am wholly discouraged. I cannot keep my class another Sabbath," exclaimed my friend, and the tears came to her eyes.

"They that sow in tears shall reap in joy," said I.

"Ah, I'm afraid the reaping time will never come in this class."

"What is the matter now?"

"Matter enough. They are twice as bad as ever before. To-day they were neither attentive nor interested. Some of them laughed, some of them seemed to be making fun for the rest. At prayer meeting to-night I was grieved and ashamed for them. They appeared to be trying which could act the worst. I shall not keep the class."

"Try a little longer, Lizzie. The reaping may be nearer than you think." * * *

One week from that Sabbath Lizzie came in tears again, but the smile shone through the tears as she said, joyfully:

"O, two of those boys in my class asked Christians to pray for them. Several agreed to speak in prayer meeting just for fun, and one did so. Then it came over the others what a wicked thing they were about to do. The Spirit of God showed them something of their sinfulness; and when the second one rose to speak, he could only say, in broken accents, 'I am a wicked boy—pray for me.'"

"How about giving up the class now?" I asked.

"O, my faith was weak last Sabbath, but the Lord has strengthened it. I feel to-night that I may yet see all the class rejoicing in Jesus' love."

We little know, oftentimes, how near the blessing is.

O that we could always believe that in due season we shall reap, if we faint not!—Sunday School Times.

Family Religion.—Dr. Van Doren, in the Christian Intelligencer, has a good article on the importance of family religion and worship. Speaking of some of the excuses for a neglect of this duty, such as want of time, etc., he says:

"How comes it to pass that the prayerless heads of families find time to trade, to farm, to gossip, to visit friends, to attend elections, to frequent the theater, the dance, and a thousand other scenes, but no time to pray with their families? We once saw a young merchant urging with energy arising to vehemence a successful business. We accosted him as to his neglect of this and other duties.

"'No time, sir; no time, sir,' replied he, in urgent haste.

"'Well, my dear friend, God will give you time by and by.'

"Only one week after he was driving with Jehu speed along the avenue, and one of the tires of his wheel broke. His splendid team being frightened, became unmanageable, ran away, and flung him against an iron lamp-post, and broke both his legs. His very first thought, he afterward confessed, was his reply to the above question: 'Will you have time enough now to pray, Alfred?'

"For three long months, like a chained eagle, that fiery-hearted merchant was confined to his couch at home. It was a harvest time for eternity, as it regarded the interests of his soul.

"The strongest argument in favor of neglecting family worship is seldom fairly stated; it is a want of heart for the duty. Men that have not been renewed find it a hard task to play the hypocrite alone. But to subject themselves to the scorching glance of children and servants—this is too much."

A Little Girl's Vow.—A gentleman relates that many years ago he was on a visit to the Isle of Man, and during his walks he strolled into the quiet churchyard, where repose the bodies of many a faithful and humble Christian. Near a grave in a corner of the churchyard he noticed a lady with a little girl—the latter about twelve years of age—to whom she was relating the story of the Dairyman's Daughter, whose remains lay beneath their feet. As the lady proceeded with the narrative he observed the little girl lift up her eyes, filled with tears, and heard her say that she would try and be as good as the Dairyman's Daughter had been. After planting a beautiful lily on the grave, they walked slowly away. The gentleman, upon making inquiry, found that the lady was the Duchess of Kent, and the little girl her daughter. The latter is now the Queen of England.—English Paper.

Lieutenant Musters, R. N., in a paper on the Patagonians, distributes them into three tribes, numbering not more than three thousand in all. The average stature is set down at about five feet ten inches.

A Scotch clergyman, not long since, had a D. D. conferred upon him by an American college. "My William!" said his old father when the son told of the honor, "it was of grace and not by works."

DAWN.

'Tis scarcely four by the village clock,
The dew is heavy—the air is cool—
A mist goes up from the glassy pool—
Through the dim field ranges a phantom flock.
No sound is heard but the magpie's mock.

Very low is the sun in the sky;
It needeth no eagle now to regard him.
Is there not one lark left to reward him
With the shivering joy of his long, sweet cry?
For his face shines sadly, I know not why.

Through the lvied ruins of yonder elm
There glides and gazes a sadder face—
Specter queen of a vanished race;
'Tis the full moon shrunk to a fleeting film,
And she lingers for love of her ancient realm.

These are but idle fancies, I know,
Framed to solace a secret grief.
Look again—scorning such false relief—
Dwarf not nature to match thy woe.
Look again—whence do these fancies flow?

What is the moon but a lamp of fire
That God shall relume in his season. The sun
Like a giant rejoices his race to run
With flaming feet that never tire,
On the azure path of the starry choir.

The lark has sunk ere I left my bed;
And hark! far aloft from these ladders of light
Many songs, not one only, the morn delight;
Then, sad heart, dream not that Nature is dead,
But seek from her strength and comfort instead. Dark Blue.

LESSONS OF THE ECLIPSE.

* * In total eclipses the sun is seen to be surrounded first by the "chromosphere," a bright rim of reddish light, with an outline moderately well-defined, presenting generally the same phenomena, though sometimes hidden when the moon happens to be particularly near the earth; and there is no reason to doubt that this consists of a layer or layers of incandescent gas, chiefly hydrogen, arranged in order of density. Secondly, the colored prominences, projecting here and there from the edge of the chromosphere. These now present no difficulty whatever. They are discernable at all times by the Janssen-Lockyer method, and are known to be outbursts of heated hydrogen, many of them thousands of miles high, and constantly varying in position and magnitude. Thirdly, the corona. Of this sphynx of a phenomenon it is not only hard to say what it is, but even to say what it looks like; for while some observers on previous occasions have noticed only a finer halo surrounding the chromosphere, others have extended this into well-defined and gorgeous shapes, have given it brilliant streamers extending heaven knows how many diameters of the sun in length, and even an elaborate organism with bundles of parabolic rays. The American astronomers at the last eclipse declared that they found iron in its composition, even in that of those mysterious rays or streamers. What, then, does this eclipse reveal, as far as the accounts have come to hand? In the first place, there is a corona—which it is some relief to hear—and this corona is solar. The halo of which we spoke as surrounding the atmosphere is in fact an apparently achromic continuation of it; and it was observed by Prof. Watson, well known in the United States as a patient and successful observer, to extend to about five minutes in height beyond the solar disc. He describes it as having the appearance of a shell, that well-known phenomenon of concentric layers which is presented by the nuclei of most comets which are near enough to be examined. Prof. Watson also saw one of the "streamers" so often spoken of—and saw it disappear! It seemed to float away, he says, "like a vail." If, then, this observer is to be trusted—and there is no observer living who is more worthy of trust as regards a thing actually seen—the streamers are an atmospheric effect, and the corona, if we may continue to use the name, appears to be a solar envelope of gas surrounding the colored gas of the chromosphere. Next come the observations of the polariscope, some of which have not yet reached us, but those which have at present come to hand are distinct enough. Briefly stated, they are these: The corona (or outer chromosphere) is strongly polarized; therefore it shines with reflected light. It is polarized in a plane different from that reflected from the moon's surface at the moment of totality; therefore it is not atmospheric. It may hence be fairly considered to be a solar appendage, reflecting in an eclipse the light of the obscured sun.

Leaving further details, we turn lastly to the spectroscope; for, as no photographs have as yet reached England, it is too soon to pronounce on the value of those which have been made. The most important spectroscopic observation was made by Mr. Burton, an observer fully to be trusted, at Agosta. He saw in the first place the ordinary spectrum of the chromosphere, including a certain line in the yellow part never before noticed; then the hydrogen lines, which were to be expected especially at the edge of these, and which simply show the comparative lightness of the substance which produces them; and lastly—a most important discovery—a clear green line by itself outside the part of the spectrum due to the chromosphere, and at about the same position as that noticed by the American astronomers last year. What is this green line? It cannot well be a hydrogen line, for, if it were, why were not the other well-known lines of hydrogen present? It cannot be iron, for the same reason. It is like no substance in heaven or earth which is dreamt of in our philosophy. It is a gas—or shall we call it a metal?—which is so extremely light that it floats above the hydrogen, which is in a region of so low a temperature that it alone of the materials in its neighborhood can yield any spectroscopic results, and which is green in color. But for the fact that, as the polariscope shows, it shines chiefly by reflected light, this corona would, at all events as far as this particular gas is concerned, be green; and as this is the very outside shell of all the shells of the sun hitherto discovered, we may even lay it down as an interesting fact in natural science that, as far as we know it, the sun is green on the outside. The only thing now left is that our chemists should produce this hitherto unknown substance in their laboratories as they have already produced the similar thallium; or even perhaps the Janssen process may be repeated over again, and the workers with the spectroscope may not rest satisfied till they have traced this mysterious line in open day, and without the aid of an eclipse. Nay, what if it has been traced already? If this remote green line is the same which has been found in the aurora, and which is believed to have been found in the zodiacal light, what are we to say of the ranges of such a discovery? Have we in any sense, with any limitations, touched the edge of that cosmical ether, that unknown substance, which everything points to and nothing shows; which is yet perhaps revealed under certain magnetic conditions in the higher regions of our atmosphere; and can this mysterious gas be nothing but a zone of the pervading ether itself rendered luminous by the intense heat of the sun? Perhaps this may be a conjecture to which sober science has no right as yet to proceed; but, whatever the case may be, this green line in the spectrum of the outer chromosphere of the sun is the door by which those will for a long time enter in who wish to search with success the regions of cosmical science as yet unexplored.—Saturday Review.

CAN'T GET RID OF THE SCARS.—If you want to make the ruin of a child sure, give him liberty after dark. You cannot do anything nearer to insure his damnation than to let him have the liberty to go where he will without restraint. After dark he will be sure to get into communication with people that will undermine all his good qualities. I do not like to speak to parents about their children. Their child cannot or will not lie, when his tongue is bended like a bow; he will not drink, when there is not a saloon within a mile of his father's house where he is not so well known as one of its own decanters; he never does iniquitous things, when he is reeking in filth. Nineteen out of twenty allowed perfect freedom at night will be wounded by it. There is nothing more important than for a child to be home at night, or, if he is abroad, you should be with him. If he is to see any sights, or take pleasure, there is nothing that you should not see with him. It is not merely that the child should be broken down, but there are thoughts that never ought to find passage into a man's brain. As an eel, if he wriggle across your carpet, will leave his slime which no brushing can ever efface, so there are thoughts that you never get rid of, once permitted to enter, and there are individuals going round with obscene books and pictures, under the lappels of their coats, that will leave ideas in the mind of your child that can never be effaced.

There are men here who have heard a salacious song, and they will never forget it to the ends of their lives. I do not believe in a child's seeing life, as it is called, with its damnable lust and wickedness, to have all his imagination set on fire with flames of hell.

Nobody goes through this fire but he is burned, and he can't get rid of the scars.—H. W. Beecher.

CUNNING SAYINGS.—Our little four-year old remarked to her mamma on going to bed: "I am not afraid of the dark."

"No, of course you are not," replied her mamma, "for it can't hurt you."

"But, mamma, I was a little afraid one time, when I went into the pantry to get a cookie."

"What were you afraid of?" asked her mamma.

"I was afraid that I couldn't find the cookies."

EDUCATION is a better safeguard of liberty than a standing army. If we retrench the wages of the schoolmaster, we must raise those of the recruiting sergeant.—Everett.

WOMEN AND POLITICS.

The advocates of what are called woman's rights demand that women shall be admitted to all the political or other functions at present discharged solely by men. It is objected that various grave inconveniences, arising out of the more fact of sexual difference, would follow such a change; that women themselves would be losers by it in many respects, and that the best of them would suffer in their purity and refinement by being mixed up in some of man's ruder avocations. To this the answer is, that the introduction of woman as an active participant will purify politics, transform trade, and reform society generally. Woman, being the better element, will put down the worse element as soon as she gets fair play.

Allowing that the mass of female morality in this or any other country is far beyond the mass of male morality, (a proposition which is by no means an axiom, and might be made the theme of much discussion,) it does not at all follow that the universal combination of the two forces will produce an improvement. When we pour a certain quantity of cognac into a certain quantity of water, we can tell exactly what percentage of alcohol our grog will contain. When we take a definite proportion of cobalt and a definite proportion of gamboge, we can tell precisely what shade of green will be produced by the mixture. But we cannot settle moral combinations beforehand on this tangible and mechanical basis. An innocent young man who consorts with vicious associates is in danger of being corrupted by them. Few parents would like to run the chance of his converting the others; the experiment would be too risky. On the other hand, let a vicious boy enter a select school; he may reform there, or he may damage the whole establishment. Any of us who have had experience in these matters know how careful teachers of first-class schools are to weed out their black sheep for fear of the harm they may do. It is not an absolute question of number. Suppose there is a small percentage of women in excess of men throughout the country, and that the women are (by our first assumption) more moral than the men, it does not follow that their infusion into politics or trade will render politics or trade less corrupt. For, in the first place, women are more aristocratic and exclusive than men; and even if we assume that this difference is not natural, but a result of custom and legislation, it is a result now so fixed that much time will be necessary to reverse it. More women than men will shrink from the dirty work of politics and the routine of business, and the delinquents will be women of the better class; so that the female sex will have, on the whole, worse representatives in active life than the male sex. Secondly, it may well be asked whether a portion at least of those virtues in which women are supposed peculiarly to excel may not be due to their freedom from certain temptations to which men are exposed. A monk or a prisoner is incapacitated for committing many sins, because he cannot obtain the material and opportunity for them in his convent or prison. A gentleman living on his means, be they large or small, has not the same temptation to falsehood and dishonesty as a lawyer, (according to the present standard of lawyers,) a shopkeeper, a stock broker, an editor, a member of Congress, or a professional politician of any kind. Throw women into the political arena, and some of the fairest features of their moral superiority will be exposed to a rude and perilous test.—Carl Benson, in Galaxy.

WORK DURING SLEEP.

Those cases in which the brain is hard at work during sleep, instead of being totally oblivious of everything, may be called dreaming or somnambulism, according to the mode in which the activity displays itself. Many of them are full of interest. Some men have done really hard mental work while at sleep. Condorcet finished a train of calculations in his sleep which had much puzzled him during the day. In 1866 a collegian noticed the peculiarities of a fellow-student, who was rather stupid than otherwise during his waking hours, but who got through some excellent work in geometry and algebra during sleep. Coudillac and Franklin both worked correctly during some of their sleeping hours.

The work done partakes, in many cases, more of the nature of imaginative composition than of scientific calculations. Thus a stanza of excellent verse is in print, which Sir John Herschel is said to have composed while asleep, and to have recollected when he awoke. Goethe often set down on paper, during the day, thoughts and ideas which had presented themselves to him during sleep on the preceding night. Coleridge is said to have composed his fragment of "Kubla Khan" during sleep. He had one evening been reading Purchas' "Pilgrim;" some of the romantic incidents struck his fancy; he went to sleep; and his busy brain composed "Kubla Khan." When he awoke in the morning he wrote out what his mind had invented in sleep, until interrupted by a visitor, with whom he conversed for an hour on business matters; but, alas! he could never again recall the thread of the story, and thus "Kubla Khan" remains a fragment. Dr. Good mentions the case of a gentleman who in his sleep composed an ode in six stanzas, and set it to music. Tartini, the celebrated Italian violinist, one night dreamed that the devil appeared to him, challenged him to a trial of skill on the fiddle, and played a piece wonderful for its beauty and difficulty; when Tartini awoke he could not remember the exact notes, but he could reproduce the general character of the music, which he did in a composition over since known as the "Devil's Sonata." Lord Thurlow, when a youth at college, found himself one evening unable to finish a piece of Latin composition which he had undertaken; he went to bed full of the subject, fell asleep, finished his Latin in his sleep, remembered it next morning, and was complimented on the felicitous form which it presented.—All the Year Round.

THE Christian Guardian has a letter from Dr. Anson Green, of the Canadian Wesleyan Conference, concerning a late visit he made to Prescott, Canada, in which there are the following interesting historical references: "We could not leave the place without visiting the graveyard, at the old Blue church, where lie several of the first Methodists on this continent. Four of the six persons who, in 1776, heard Philip Embury's first sermon preached in New York, and who belonged to the first class formed in the new world, are buried here. Margaret Embury (Philip's widow, who afterward married John Lawrence), Paul and Barbara Heck, and John Lawrence, have all found a resting place in this Canadian cemetery. The other two who belonged to this noble band were Embury himself and the colored servant. A beautiful marble slab is erected at the graves of Mr. and Mrs. Heck; but I am ashamed to say that no stone marks the spot where sleep the other two, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence. Why, in the name of propriety and of Methodism, do not their descendants and friends hasten to perpetuate the memory of a spot, honored with such a deposit, before the spot containing such memorable dust is entirely lost to the living, and no longer recognized by mortals?

THE Ordnance Select Committee of England recently made an experiment in firing a mountain howitzer strapped on the back of a mule. The mule, the loaded gun, the committee and several "big wigs" attracted by the novelty of the experiment, went to the trial ground at Woolwich to witness the firing. The mule was backed up into position, so that the muzzle of the gun, pointing over his tail, was aimed at an earthen mound. The committee decided to fire it by means of a slow match, and it was prepared and lighted. Hitherto the mule had taken rather a sleepy interest in the proceedings; but somehow the fizzing on his back caused him to prick up his ears, then to lay them back, and finally to begin to turn round. The committee were thunderstruck, and skedaddled in all directions; the secretary threw himself flat on his face; there was a moment of agonizing suspense—then bang; the shot ricocheting away in one direction, while the wretched mule turned a complete summersault in the other.

CONSTANTINOPLE dispatches announce the death of Ali Pacha, the well-known Turkish statesman and Grand Vizier, after a long public career. He was regarded in Europe as a progressive minister, an earnest friend of reform in Turkey, and a skillful, pains-taking diplomatist. His last illness was regarded with deep concern by the Sultan and people of Constantinople. The Sultan signified his appreciation of the care which the physicians bestowed by giving one a present of $5000, and another a snuff-box of the same value. The Grand Vizier in Turkey is the head of the temporal government, and is appointed by the Sultan. He receives the solemn visits of all the high functionaries, commands the center of the army in battle, and, except the Sultan, is the only person saluted with the "salkish," a kind of benediction pronounced by those who appear in his presence.

THE Protestant churches of the United States reported last year five million four hundred thousand communicants. According to the National Census the whole population of the country, was thirty-eight million five hundred and thirty-five thousand and one hundred and fifty-three. Very nearly one-seventh of the inhabitants of the land, therefore, are members of these churches.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE largest building for religious purposes in the east of London was recently opened for the use of the Baptist congregation under the pastorate of the Rev. A. G. Brown, formerly a student in Mr. Spurgeon's college, whose popularity has rendered the chapel at Stepneygreen, seating about nine hundred, too small for the purpose of divine service. The new East London Tabernacle, which will provide sitting accommodation for about three thousand persons, has been erected in Burdett-road Row, at a cost of about £12,000.

THE BIBLE IN ST. PETER'S, ROME. The Christian World contains the following information: "A son of Dr. Cote, the well-known missionary in Canada, has written to his sister in this city that he lately read and distributed copies of the New Testament beneath the dome of St. Peter's, at Rome, and that the people eagerly took them. The prelates of the church came forth, and unsuccessfully attempted to prevent the distribution. The police were called upon to drive the heretics from the 'sacred' place, but when they found that Mr. Cote and friends were doing nothing more than scattering the word of God, they not only refused to arrest them, but asked for copies themselves, saying: 'This is what we have long wanted.' Truly a wide and effectual door is now opened in Italy for the triumphal entrance of the truth."

CUTTING THE KNOT.—Our Episcopal brethren, now in session, at their Triennial Convention in Baltimore, have proposed the following solution of one of the chief difficulties growing out of the letter of the Prayer Book, embarrassing tender consciences—they have passed a declarative resolution that the word which Rev. Mr. Choney omitted, and for which he was disciplined by his Bishop, does not mean what it says, but something else, not defined.

On Thursday a message was received from the House of Bishops, with the following resolution:

Resolved, That the declaration of the Bishops of this church, this day signed in the council, be entered upon the minutes of this house and communicated to the House of Clerical and Lay Deputies, for the information of that body concerning the action of their Bishops in a matter deemed to be of much gravity and of great interest to both houses of the General Convention.

Declaration of the Bishops' Council, October 11, 1871.—We, the subscribers, Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, being asked, in order to the quieting of the consciences of sundry members of the same church, to declare our conviction as to the meaning of the word "regenerate" in the offices for the ministration of baptism of infants, do declare that, in our opinion, the word "regenerate" is not there so used as to determine that a moral change in the subject of baptism is wrought in the sacrament.

This declaration is signed by all the Bishops. The convention then adjourned.

CHINA.—Recent intelligence from China informs us that the difficulties to Christian missions there, arising from certain action of the Chinese government, is far from what they were represented to be. The North China Herald evidently understands the subject, and says: "A missionary dispatch has issued from the Chinese government, but that, instead of containing any categorical demands, it is simply a calm and reasonable argument regarding certain difficulties caused by the present position of missionaries in China. It states that there exists among the people of China a good deal of suspicion and dislike toward Roman Catholic priests, and the necessity is urged for some arrangement which shall obviate the danger of collision which now exists. The principal change which it advocates is only that missionaries should not establish themselves anywhere in opposition to the wish of the people. This is a very different sort of thing from the Courier's version of the dispatch, and we have no doubt it is the correct one, judging from the way in which the first version was put out, and from the innumerable inventions which have emanated from China during the last few years, which have turned out to be false, and which have all had one object: that of embroiling the Chinese government with foreign powers. In order to understand how it is that these inventions are so persistently put forth, it should be borne in mind that there is a large class of foreign rowdies in China—Americans, Englishmen and others—and of petty, unscrupulous traders, all of whom look upon a state of war in China, and on anything which promotes the disintegration of the empire, as likely to serve their own interests."

THE English Baptist Missionary Society from the first has had a great share in educating the blacks of Jamaica. Preaching the gospel as its chief work, it has been compelled to plant schools side by side with the sanctuaries of worship. And that society has been nobly aided in this work by the Society of Friends. The first regular day-school was opened in 1814. The planters were instinctively hostile; but before slavery was abolished not less than forty-five schools were in active operation, with Sunday and night schools in proportion. In the period from 1834 to 1848 this work was vigorously pushed. A good number of trained European teachers went out; some of the finest school buildings in the West Indies were erected; the missionaries were aided by government grants; and every year more than $30,000 were raised and spent for schools. Dating from 1814, eighty-two European missionaries, with their wives and families, including thirty-six male and twenty-one female teachers, have been engaged in them; while several hundred natives, with over one hundred trained ministerial managers and teachers, have been furnished by the island. Of all these, thirty-seven "ministerial managers" and forty teachers are now in active service. Over one hundred and forty school houses have been built, and more than sixty thousand pupils have passed through the schools. $500,000 in that time have been expended by this one society in these educational labors; and at this moment over a quarter of the entire school work on the island is controlled or managed by these Baptist missionaries. The past five years have been marked by advance on all that went before. Since 1867 more than $5,000 worth of suitable and helpful books have been placed in the hands of teachers for their study. Meantime, more than eleven thousand scholars are enrolled in the Sunday schools, and brought under the direct influences of the preached word. The local committee closes last year's report with these encouraging words: "During these five years the society has doubled the number of schools, of teachers and of scholars, and of payments for schooling and books, and also influenced the government grants to be four times the former amounts. May the blessing of God attend this branch of the true emancipation of the people of Jamaica, and may his glory still be our highest desire."

HILDEBRAND, Abbot of Schaba, in Bessarabia, has lately appeared in Munich in order that he may learn from Herr Von Dollinger the extent and meaning of the Alt Catholic revolt. The abbot is described as a man of great intelligence, and of rare spiritual integrity, and the Munich reformers regard his visit as foreshadowing joint action on the part of the East with the West. Regarding the important question of successio episcopalis, the opponents of "papalism" have also found mutual relief in the fact that the Dutch Jansenites have proffered their help. They have still the Archbishop of Utrecht, and the Bishops of Harlem and Deventer, all of whom are represented as ready to co-operate with the Alt Catholics. It is further intimated that the High Church party of England is not disinclined to aid the movement when the proper hour arrives. The Munich meeting was fixed for the twenty-fourth and twenty-sixth ultimo. It is generally believed that the projects of reform originally drafted by Father Alois Anton, and accepted first at Linz and next at Hoidelberg, will constitute the platform of the forthcoming representative assemblage. The points of the Anton programme have already been reported partially by telegraph. We now subjoin them in their original form:

1. Each community shall have the right to choose its own priest; and priests are no longer to be named by the bishops.

2. Priests must be sufficiently paid by the community to enable them to live respectably.

3. Compulsory celibacy must cease. Priests shall be allowed to marry, as in the early times of Christianity.

4. The chapters shall be dissolved.

5. Masses and the service of the church must be spoken and read in German, or in the common language of the province.

6. There shall be no separate payments for masses at burials, baptisms, etc. The priest's salary shall be sufficient to enable him to live without charging additional fees.

7. Inequalities between the burials of rich and of poor must cease. There shall be no pomp or extra ceremony. One priest only shall officiate on such occasions.

8. Auricular confession must cease.

9. Pilgrimages, processions and begging missions must cease.

10. The worship of pictures, statues and images must cease.

11. The traffic in relics must be discontinued, and be proceeded against by the State.

The actual German form of the eleventh article is couched in much stronger terms, the expression used being not the "traffic in relics," but "the relic swindle" (reliquien schwindle.)

A COMMON MISTAKE.

The regular collections are frequently postponed or but feebly urged by the preachers, on the gronnd that they interfere with their salaries and the current expenses. If it were so, the obligation to make these collections is not the less imperative. These shonld be jndiciously distributed throngh the year, and their objects presonted without regard to other financial embarrassments. We believe that this course will help rather than embarrass the preacher's support. It will afford him opportunities of enlarging upon the duty of giving in general, and of instructing the people in the principles of liberality as laid down in the Scriptnres. Every congregation will be the better for at least three or four talks a year upon this subject. While the pastor is pleading for missions, or for the worn-out preachers and widows and orphans, the people will be apt to think about what they are doing for him. The dnty of giving to other objects is closely related to the obligation of supporting those who are ministering to them, and the mind readily passes from one to the other. The indirect effect is favorable, not only because it snggests the inquiry about affairs at home, but because the habit and grace of giving, when once formed and developed, will lead to a more careful and generous response to the ordinary and current demands.

No pressnre of chnrch debts, no clamor abont hard times, no deficiency in the pastor's support, no plea of poverty among the people, should be allowed to postpone the regular collections, or to abate the effort to raise as much as possible. The preachers who attend to their collections faithfully will, as a rnle, be better supported on that accouut; and their congregations will be more prosperous, temporally and spiritually, where they are taught to "honor the Lord with their snbstance, and with the first fruits of their increase." A common mistake is to put off the collections until near the close of the Conference year. It is better, if there are four collections, to take one every qnarter; and if there are six, to take one every two months. More, on the whole, will be realized in this way, and when the end of the year comes there will be no flurry and no absolute failure. A collection is a capital introdnction for the new preacher on his first round, and is a good beginning for the pastor's work. Preachers and people must get rid of the idea that public collections are an evil. They are among our best things, and, as a means of grace and instruction, to be desired rather than deprecated. If the money could be raised otherwise—quietly, secretly and from a few, by private solicitation—it wonld not be best.

The public collection is a need which no congregation can dispense with, without serions loss and damage in many ways. It is good for the outside world to have this aspect of religion set before them, and for serious inquirers and neophytes to be instrncted in this phase of the kingdom of heaven. The fact that worldly people somotimes object, and even take serious offense, is an argument for the custom. It shows how great is their ignorance of Christianity, and how much they require light upon a most vital element of true religion. Such offense is as really the offense of the cross as is the doctrine of justification by faith, or the imperative demand of the crncifixion of the affections and lnsts. Converted people must have collections as occasions of instruction, as exhibiting the intimate connection of giving with vital godliness and spiritual worship. For these ends the praying, singing, preaching and giving should be mixed together and united in ono occasion. Paul intended it should be so when he directed that the laying hy should be "upon the first day of the week." It is in perfect accord with the Sabbath and the hour of public worship, and neither have been properly observed where no offering has been made to the Lord. The effect of a good sermon is not spoiled by a collection following. If our tears and emotions cannot abide the appeal for money they are of little value; and if the effects of the sermon cannot survive snch an appeal, any permanent good from them is exceedingly doubtfnl.

If people are driven away from the church by the collections, let them go. They must come to the point where they will like them, and be glad to have them, before their religion will be of much account to themselves or to anybody else. Mnch of this affected sensibility has its root in covetousness, and in that exposnre of it which a public collection is apt to make. Bnt it often arises from false views of the natnre and obligations of religious giving. From whatever sonrce the objection comes, it is to be treated, like all objections to gospel methods, by patient instruction, and by a resolute and persistent continnance in doing right. The way to break down this nnreasonable opposition, and to silence the gainsayers, is to make the collections statedly, and to press them earnestly. Public opinion and the convictions of the church will yield at length, and all will come round to the scriptnral practice. Public collections are not a necessary evil, nor an evil of any kind. They are not to be avoided if we could avoid them. We want them, want them all, as a means of instruction and grace, and as among the very best appliances for the promotion of piety.

It is beyond measnre healthful to the Christian to give for objects not immediately at his own door. It vitalizes his connection with the affairs of the entire chnrch, and with the evangelization of the world. It is essential to his well-being that he should break out from the shell of local interests, and give breadth and generous expansion to his thoughts and sympathies. If missions and other enterprises, lying beyond the threshhold of his own sanctnary, can do without his aid, he cannot do without the spiritual blessings which his contributions bring back to his own soul. It is a means of spirituality to every congregation to be told at least once a year of their chief pastors and of their labors, to be informed of the worn-out preachers and of the widows and orphans, whom it is their duty to support, and to have the mission field mapped out and nnrolled before them. The preacher who withholds these helps to piety from his hearers does them a grievous wrong; and the people are to he pitied who are restive or offended under the appeals which should inspire their gratitude, and raise them to a higher pitch of sympathy and love.

OUR VIEWS.

A correspondent and snbscriber asks for the expression of onr views on the subject of infant baptism. Some time ago we published an excellent article from Dr. McFerrin on the subject, which wo thought to be about right. Last week one of onr most thoughtful and welcome contributors furnished an article. From time to time we have inserted selections bearing upon the question, as the article of Bishop Marvin, two weeks ago, on the moral condition of children.

We see no reason to except to our doctrinal standards in reference to the baptism of children. Watson is a safe guide, and Dr. Summers' work on baptisms embraces the whole matter in small compass. We would recommend the latter to all who are studying the subject. The volnme is small, cheap, and can be obtained at onr Depository, and will be more satisfactory than a brief article from the editor of the Advocate. Wall on Baptism is a good work for those who wish for an exhaustive and ponderons treatment. This work is also for sale at the Depository. Our views are stated in a condonsed form in the seventeenth article of religion as found in the Discipline. We think that "the baptism of yonng children is to be retained in the church." Its eqnivalent was in the church before Christ, has been in it literally ever since, and "is to be retained." We do not believe, as the Episcopal Prayer Book teaches, that it regenerates anything or anybody, but that it recognizes children as members of Christ's church, and as subjects of gracious and spiritnal influences and privileges.

We have had our own children baptized in infancy, and are trying to instrnct and bring them up as members of the chnrch. We aim always to impress upon parents the solemn dnty and responsibility of presenting their children for baptism. It is a dnty and privilege so clearly scriptnral and right, to onr own mind, that we have never felt any doubt or perplexity abont it. Onr only trouble has been concerning those who neglect the ordinance or pervert it, and those who deny the obligation altogether. How they are to stand at last we do not know, and we are glad that it is not onr business to dispose of them. Without bigotry, and we trust also without uncharitableness, we hold to the doctrine firmly, earnestly urge parents to obey it, and believe that its prayerfnl and conscientious observance would result in inestimable good to the church and to the rising generation.

CALIFORNIA.

Chinamen. — Sea-Lions. — Kelp. — San Diego.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

Los Angeles, Oct. 20, 1871.

I begin where I left off rather than where I am. A missionary who is laboring in San Francisco among the Chinese, the Rev. Mr. Graves, of the Southern Baptist Church, and who has spent years at Canton, was kind enough to introduce me to the Chinese qnarter. This occupies several entire squares quite in the bnsiness part of the city. It is not merely rented, but largely owned by wealthy Chinamen, and is sub-leased to suffocatiou. I have observed different races of men require different measnres of oxygen; the English more than the French, and negroes and Chinamen least of all. The latter can fostoon themselves after a style that would seem to place one to every sqnare yard of habitable sheltor. In every room or shop, whether large or small, into which we looked, there were from four to ten men. Those at work were very busy, but a good many were lonnging or sauntering as if waiting for something to tnrn np. This composes a largo class. There are among them seventy gambling houses, daly advertised as such—to be known by their white signs. Fifty thonsand or more of these wide-awako Orientals will make an impression upon San Francisco and all this coast that can be felt; and many more are on the way. Two-thirds of the gold mines of Oregon and California are owned by them. Whenever a miue pays less than $5 a day to the hand, it is abandoned or sold by Americans, and falls into the hands of Chinamen. There is no comparison between this race and the negro. Every one of these people of the "myriad land" cau read and write; they can work as long, as hard and as swift as a Connecticut farmer. As factory hands they can surpass any race in endurance and long-continued activity. Their presence in this country will give rise to a contest as fierce as any that has ever been waged on account of the African. The laboring man of white blood cannot compete with these meu of the East, because he is not contont to breathe as little air, to live on as plain fare, or to dress as roughly as they do. But the capitalist seeks cheap labor, and shuts his eyes to everything else; and the politician prefers a constituency that can be bonght to one that can only be convinced. It may be set down as one of the uses of Mexico, that she has demonstrated the impossibility of a repnblic in a population of different colored races. There are three missions, the Baptist, Presbyterian and Northern Methodist, doing good work here among these civilized heathens from China.

In steaming out of the Golden Gate, just as it is passed, going down the coast, one sees several large rocks, a quarter of a mile or less from the shore, which are covered with sea-birds, seals and sea-lions. They are protected by law, and constitute one of the curiosities of San Francisco. The seal looks not unlike a Chinese baby abont the head and eyes, as it lifts itself straight up ont of the water and looks at yon qnite intelligently, with only the long neck and rouud head visible. These creatures manage with their flippers to climb up to the top of these rocks, and there they lay in the snn, with an occasional sea-lion among them, that would weigh several thousand pounds. Iu the water they swim in droves, aud are active enongh to chase down the shoals of fish.

The sea was as smooth as an inland lake all the way from San Francisco to San Diego—save only the long swell that seems to be a constant featnre of the Pacific. At San Pedro, the port of San Angoles, I for the first time saw kelp, the sea-plant, from which soda, bromine and iodine are made. It spreads its long, leafy vine for twenty or thirty feet npon the top of the wave, growing in from teu to thirty-fathom water. This stem, sometimes ouo hundred and eighty feet in length, is secnrely fasteued by a bulbous-shaped root to the bottom. Its leaves are a foot long, some five inches wide, of a rich autumu brown in the water, and yellow out of it, tough, translucent, and are covered with a mncilage that becomes thick when exposed to the air, but dissolves readily in fresh water. The vine is very round, as large as a pipe-stem, very strong, and looks like amber. It is a wonderful and beautiful creation that, by its mysterious laboratory, changes sea-water and sunshine alternately into substances so precious for medicine and the arts. I had ofteu heard of kelp, bnt had supposed it like any other marshy growth; but here I saw that it was one of the many forms of vegetable life which delight in the deep sea, making but little acconnt of the land. For miles its foliage covers the top of the water and calms the heads of the waves. The whale is often found rising ou the outer edge of a kelp field, and whaling boats lying just inside from that point make their attack upon him.

San Diego is a most admirably located city. It stands ou an amphitheator, whose sides gradually rise from one of the fiuest harbors in the world. I question whether Constantinople has a better site. The American town, called "the New Town," has grown up in three years. It was larger than I expected to see—has a hotel in it worthy of New Orleans, and several churches. The largest vessels ever built can ride at its wharves, and are perfectly protected. I stirred round during the six honrs we were there, aud secured the best lot in town for a Southern Methodist church. In two or three years the locomotive will start in Julia street, New Orleans, and stop in San Diego.

SPIRITUAL BIRTH AND GROWTH.

As these terms are employed by the "Spirit of Truth," who "guides into all truth," it is a fair presumption that these figurative expressions are analogous to and descriptive of the spiritual conditions which they are used to describe.

Birth, as the beginning of visible, conscious life, is a distinct and well-dofined fact, and there is a certain time in which it is completed and becomes an accomplished fact. So the spiritual birth is a well-defined fact, having a definite moment when it is accomplished. There is a moment in the spiritual history of the penitent believer when God says, "Thy sins be forgiven thee," and a moment when the Holy Spirit makes us "new creatures in Christ Jesus." We do not say that the full evidence of the fact is always coincident with the work, or that the evidence is always the same in degree; but we mean to say that spiritual birth, like natural birth, is, as a rnle, a well-defined fact as to time; there is a distinct moment when it becomes an accomplished fact.

Growth, in its application to vegetable or animal progress, is always a continuous and gradnal process. It is chronologically sharply defiued as to its beginning, for it begins with the inception of life itself; bnt its terminus or cessation is not so well marked. There are forms of life that terminato in a single day, hut the grand old cedars, or redwoods of California, have been growing from two to three thousand years. We are authorized to conclude, from the use that inspiration makes of natural objects to explain or describe spiritnal phenomena, that all nature is in some sort a prophecy, an adumbration of things spiritual. While healthy life continues growth continues; so we conclude of the soul and its spiritual progress. Wo know when St. Paul was an old Christian, only two or three years before his martyrdom, he was "following after, reaching forth unto those things which are before." He says: "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." We can say of an animal, or a soul: it is born, "born again." We know it is an accomplished fact; hut we can never say of healthy vegetable life, nor of healthy spiritnal life, that its growth is a completed fact. Its growth is a continnons, a gradnal process. It is gradnal. It is true, under certain stimulating and favoring conditions, growth, natural and spiritual, may be more rapid at one period than another, bnt it is always gradual; it is never a sudden, per saltum (by a leap) process. We fear Christians sometimes look forward to and pray for a certain spiritual process, somewhat analogous in its character, and in their anticipated experience of it, to the well-marked and well-defined work of spiritual regeneration wrought in us hy the Holy Ghost. Some think they have such an experience. We have no doubt that many souls, in answer to the prayer of faith, have been greatly blessed, and this great blessing has been taken for that distinct work to which they looked forward as introdncing them into a new spiritual state. If the figure employed so often by the Holy Ghost to describe the progress of spiritual life does justly describe it, then we should not look for a sudden transition or development from one state of spiritual life to another, but rather we should look for the "daily bread," on which the children of God feed, to make us daily "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Grace is favor; to grow in grace (spiritnally) is to grow in the favor of God. As we by growth more and more expand the graces of our spiritual nature, we more and more approximate God, and become more and more morally lovely in his sight. We "grow in grace." To grow in grace, in God's favor, is the Christian's glorious prerogative. To this great end let us "give all diligence," cheered with the blessed thought that, as the bright immortal ages roll away, we shall be more like our blessed God.

OUR LOVE-FEASTS.

BY BISHOP M'TYEIRE.

The love-feasts, held ou Snnday mornings, have been rofreshiug. Our people have yet an experience, and they can tell it. If anywhere this ancient means of grace has lost its savor, (as in some cases is ascertained to be the case,) we have insisted on a return, as the remedy, to the law of its observance and institution. The agape are primitive, if uot apostolic, and continued to be used in the church until the fourth century, when their abuses by gluttony and riot caused them to be abolished. A commentator of authority with the evangelicals of the Church of England and a clergyman of that church, said in the end of the last centnry: "It was this which brought the love-feasts into disrepute in the church, and was the means of their being at last laid aside, (by the council of Laodicea.) * * * In latter days they have been revived in all the purity and simplicity of the primitive institution among the Moravians and the people called Methodists. * * * This abuse is never likely to take place among the Methodists, as they use only bread and water."—(Scott on Jude, 12.)

But an unprecedented and unexpected abuse has crept in in "latter days." The worldly-minded, the unawakened, and even scoffers, under relaxed administrations, are admitted. These are, indeed, "spots in your feasts of charity." A love-feast with open doors, to which anybody and everybody may come who pleases, is a travesty, for which Methodism is not responsible. The attention of brethren nnder whom this loose practice has obtained has been emphatically called to the plain words of the Discipline. Bold men and practiced talkers may give their experience and open their hearts and tell the secret of the Lord that is with them, before a curious, critical, unsympathetic crowd; but the tender and touching testimonies of godly women, the trembling utterances of the young convert, the confessions of the penitent, are not for exhibition in such places.

Let us get back to the primitive and better practice. The testimony is that everywhere, under it, love-feasts are still a power and a delight. The fact is, our people have suffered themselves to be browbeat in this matter. The world and some of other communions have tannted them above doing things open and above board, and free meetings and liberality and such like stuff, until some of them hardly dare to enter into their closet and shut the door to pray in secret. The church is a family, and has a right, at proper seasons, to be alone. It is there, separated from the world, that it is energized to overcome the world. The voice of the Master is still heard speaking to his weary and troubled disciples, while the crowd is surging around: "Come, ye yourselves, apart into a desert (or retired) place and rest awhile." Let Methodists remember that they have nothing to hope or to fear from the world. It is by being crucified to it, and having it crucified to them, that they have had any success or retain any power. Whatever respect or praise the world to-day awards us has been compelled. We owe it nothing—bnt to operate uncompromisingly against it, with all the power of the purest form of Christianity. Whenever outsiders—friendly outsiders—are allowed to shape our course and to dictate our policy, the glory will have departed.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

The Resurrection of the Redeemed; and Hades. By James Boggs. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1871.

Besides the subjects indicated in the title, the author discusses: Difficulties and Practical Duties of Life; A Just God, and Christ's Agony in the Garden. The subjects all seem to be treated in a devout spirit, and with a view to pious edification. Mr. Boggs uses the word resurrected frequently, and adopts the well-known germ theory of the resurrection. He thinks the damonia with which men were possessed in the days of the Savior were undoubtedly Adamic spirits. We find in the book many good things, suggestive, comforting and instructive, but cannot altogether commend it as safe and sound in a doctrinal point of view. For sale by Eyrich, New Orleans.

Seed Truths, or Bible Views of Mind, Morals and Religion. By Pharcellus Church, D. D. New York: Sheldon & Co., publishers, 1871.

We have given this work but a hasty examination, and cannot pronounce altogether upon its merits. The author is loyal to the authority of Scripture as he understands it, and has brought out things new and old in his expositions. He seems to be a trichotomist, and his central idea is the spiritual nature in its relations to and domination over the natural and fleshly. He labors, especially in the exhibition of scriptural teachings and revelations, to bring out the interior, as distinguished from the exterior view of their meaniug. We find in every chapter much that is highly entertaining and instructive. His views of sin, law, atonement, retribution and justificatiou are, we judge, partial and defective. The spirit in which he writes is good, and the work embodies the earnest study and prayerful investigation of a mind devoutly intent upon the attainment of the truth. Dr. Church has a fresh and original style and method, and invests his topics with something of the charms of novelty, even when dealing with the most abstruse and metaphysical subjects. For sale by Eyrich, New Orleans.

The Rise and Fall of the Paris Commune in 1871 is a volume of over five hundred pages, recently issued from the press of Harper & Bros., New York. The author, W. Pembroke Fetridge, was in Paris during the bombardment, capture and burning of the city, and has evidently been at great pains to secure accuracy in his history and descriptions of the eventful occurrences. The work contains miniature engravings of the most notable actors in French affairs of the past year, and also an excellent map of Paris.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES is a new school history recently issued by A. S. Barnes & Co., New York. The volume is a good specimen of binding and typography, and contains maps and illustrations. The account of the late civil war is at least respectful to the Confederate side, and very fair for a Northern view; but there are in it many erroneous statements. Most of the statements in the entire work, bearing upon the political differences of the North and South, exhibit the traces of sectional prejudice. We much prefer the school history of Dr. Holmes, published by the University Publishing Company.

HYMNS OF PRAYER AND PRAISE is a beautiful duodecimo of 188 pages, containing a choice selection of our most popular hymns, with the music printed on the same page with the hymns to which it is adapted. We are indebted to the publishers, A. S. Barnes & Co., New York, for a copy. Price, seventy-five cents, sent by mail.

THE SOUTHERN REVIEW is brought out in excellent style by the Southwestern Book and Publishing Company, St. Louis. The July number was but just reached us, and the articles are not read. Their titles are: I. The Responsibility of Men for their Belief; II. Americanism: A Study of Words and Manners; III. Views of the Cosmos; IV. Roman Law and Modern Ideas; V. The Father of General Robert E. Lee; VI. A Plea for Genius; VII. The Mission of Great Men; VIII. Plato and Aristotle; IX. The Great Virginian; X. The Origin of Species; XI. The Funeral of Lee; XII. Notices of Books.

The October number of the Review has been received in due time. Contents: I. The Problem of Evil; II. Political Parties in the United States; III. The Art of Conversation; IV. The Nature of Holiness and Sin; V. Popular Objections to Revealed Religion; VI. Civil Record of General Hancock; VII. The Mission of Woman; VIII. Alas—A Satire on the Times; IX. Notices of Books. The Problem of Evil discusses the work of Naville, recently published in this country by Carlton & Lanahan. Solidarity gets some hard blows, if it is not utterly demolished. The Nature of Holiness and Sin exposes the weakness and errors of Wayland and of Dr. Joseph Haven, and is a concise statement and vindication of the Arminian theodicy. Popular Objections to Revealed Religion answers the objections of rationalism and other forms of infidelity to the conditions of salvation. The other articles are of general interest, and the subjects are treated with much sprightliness and vigor. The editor has shown himself to be a marvel of industry, endurance and versatility, as every article of the October number, except one, was written by himself in little more than a month's time. For the future Dr. Bledsoe will have the assistance of an able corps of contributors, and the Review will appear promptly at the time it is due.

GOOD HEALTH for November has: Asiatic Cholera; Long-sightedness; Home Treatment of Insanity; Prehistoric Man; Dinner Time; About Wigs; Consumption, and other articles. A valuable periodical. Published by Alexander Moore, Boston, at $2 per annum.

GOOD HEALTH AND MENTAL BLISS is a monthly, edited and published in New Orleans by Dr. Thomas Nicholson. It is devoted to popular medical advice and instruction in the art of right living. We have received the November number.

APPLETONS' JOURNAL of November 11 has a likeness of Robert Browning, and a number of exquisite engravings illustrating the scenery on Canandaigua lake. The contents of this valuable publication are always of the highest merit.

THE SOUTHERN MAGAZINE for November contains: Spider Web Papers; On the Abuse of Books; An Incident at Castle Thunder; Thought in Music; Ghosts; Dialect and Slang, and other articles.

ELLIS & BROTHER have sent us Nast's Illustrated Almanac for 1872, published by the Harpers. It is full of funny and sentimental pictures. The children have nearly worn our copy out already.

OLD AND NEW for November is able as usual. Contents are varied and tempting. We note: The Modern English Novel, The Language of Brutes, The Dangers of Discovery, Forgiveness of Sins.

THE HOUSEHOLD for October is filled with the very best things for housekeepers, and everybody else. No household should be without it. Published at Brattleboro, Vermont, at one dollar per year.

WE ARE INDEBTED to the publisher, J. L. Petere, for an early copy of Peters' Musical Monthly for November. It contains a large amount of music and a number of popular songs.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for October has the Vicar's Daughter, Charity in London, The Sealed Book, A Day With Christ, John Keble and his Hymns, and other valuable articles.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY for November contains: Tennyson and Theocritus, The Bedlams of Stamboul, The Sphinx, the New Light, and other articles of ability and finish.

THE NEW YORK TEACHER AND AMERICAN EDUCATIONAL MONTHLY for November has a good table of contents. An excellent periodical for teachers and educators.

EVERY SATURDAY of the twenty-eighth of October contains engravings of many of the most noted buildings of the burnt city, besides other fine illustrations.

THE UNIVERSITY MONTHLY for October is an unusually interesting number. We note: Gymnastic and Technical Education; Storm Signals; The Dominie's Talke.

THE SOUTHERN FARMER, published at Memphis, Tennessee, is one of our most valued exchanges. The November number has reached us.

APPLETON'S JOURNAL of October 28 has a picture of Bryant, an engraving of the ruins of Pompeii, and other illustrations.

THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America will meet, by special arrangement, in Hazlehurst, Mississippi, November 22, 1871.

Jackson, Mississippi, was the place selected by the Conference at its last session, but owing to some peculiar circumstances, not necessary to mention here, I was applied to, in behalf of three of the presiding elders of said Conference, to see if some other place would not take it. Hazlehurst has consented to; and the white preachers who may see this will confer a favor by informing the colored preachers of the change of place.

H. H. MONTGOMERY.

THE following item from the Vicksburg Daily Herald brings us the tidings that Rev. J. T. Heard is out of danger. Last week we noticed the fact that he was seriously ill.

The Rev. Mr. Heard.—The many friends of the Rev. J. T. Heard, the beloved pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church in this city, will be rejoiced to learn that that gentleman, who has been grievously ill with yellow fever, is out of danger. Mr. Heard has made a gallant fight with the dread destroyer, and this whole community rejoices in the victory he has won. Mr. Heard enjoyed excellent medical attention, and the most assidnous care of good nurses, which latter is more than half the battle.

THE OHICAGO FIRE.

The New York Observer gathers the following statistics and facts in reference to the lossee occasioned by the fire:

The Chicago Tribune, after a careful survey of the ruins, makes tho following statement as to what remains: "It appears that out of the sixty thousand buildings in Chicago, only about thirteen thoueand five hundred have been destroyed; and that while ninety-two thousand persons have been driven from their homes, over two hundred and forty-five thousand have not been affected in that way. The whole immense area of the west divieion, with its miles of dwelling houses, its stores and its hneiness blocks, is almost intact; while the eouth side retains the great mass of ite dwelling houees of the latter class, many manufactories, and the tine business blocke which have been erecting on Twenty-second street and Archer nvenne, and at other points, many of its finest churches, and the innumerable manufactories which abound in the sixth ward."

THE CHURCHES BURNED.

The Advance, which has just come to hand, and which we are happy to welcomo on its reappearance, has the following:

"Of the losses hy the great fire few will he more deeply felt than the destruction of so many churches. Nearly seventy-five churehes, miesion schools, etc., were destroyed. The New England church, one of the moet elaborate structures in the city, wae laid in ruine, as was the home of every member of the ehnrch. The Firet and Second Presbyterian churchee, the Firet Universaliet, Trinity (Episcopal) and the New Jerusalem churchee are among the ruins. The Roman Catholics euffered greatly, loeing as many as seven churches, six convents, eight schools and two hospitals—worth in all somo $5,000,000. The First Presbyterian church have sent their pastor, Rev. Arthnr Mitchell, East, to solicit aid for the church and for tho institution at Lake Forest. The theological seminaries—Congregational, Baptist and Presbyterian—were spared, yet truly 'so as by fire,' since their most liberal benefactors have lost so heavily."

The following is a list of the principal churches in Chicago destroyed in the great fire, with their estimated value:

SOUTH SIDE.

First Presbyterian	$200,000
Universalist	100,000
Trinity (Episcopal)	150,000
Swedenborgian	75,000
St. Mary's church and mission (Cath)	250,000
Second Presbyterian	80,000
First Methodist Episcopal	400,000
Wabash avenue Methodist Episcopal	125,000
Other smaller churches	250,000
Farwell hall	400,000

NORTH SIDE.

North church (Presbyterian)	75,000
Westminster (Presbyterian)	75,000
Methodist Episcopal Grace Church	150,000
Moody's mission	125,000
St. James (Episcopal)	150,000
Two Cath. churches, with nunneries	300,000
New England church	150,000
Robert Collyer's Unitarian church	100,000

This list is exclusive of the Fullerton Avenue Presbyterian and other small churches, the value of which is unknown.

The aggregate value of the churches destroyed is estimated at a little over $8,000,000.

The people of Chicago are devoting themselves with their well-known energy to rebuilding and repairing the desolation produced by the fire. A dispatch of the twentieth saye:

"Building prospecte look more encouraging every day, and each hour the aspect of the ruined districts eeems to undergo a change, and a large portion of the burned districts begin to look less like the ruins of a city, and more like the foundations of a new one. On Saturday night there will be more than three hundred hnildings completed and ready for receiving goods, on the site of the fire in the south district. Many single ones cover a frontage of fifty, seventy-five and even one hundred feet, with a depth of one hnndred and fifty to one hnndred and seventy-five feet. These large edifices are mostly on Michigan avenue, close to the lake shore. I am informed that more than half the real estate in the south division, which was burned over, is owned by less than forty persons, and that all of them have large ready means, which they will, without doubt, at once apply toward rebuilding their edifices. No class of citizens have snffered more by the recent fire than the lawyers, as abont every office in the city was in the burned district. Many of them had large and valuable libraries, which were consumed, and with the courthonee was consumed the library of the Law Institute, one of the largest and most valuable libraries in the country. There is probably not a single collection of law books left in the city which has any pretensions to be called a library, nor even a complete set of Illinois reports."

Married.

October 30, 1871, at the Methodist Episcopal church, Baton Rouge, by Rev. R. S. Trippett, Mr. WILLIAM P. COX to Miss L. E. TERRILL, both of East Baton Rouge.

By Rev. John A. B. Jones, October 25, 1871, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. George Darden, Mr. EVAN S. DEVENPORT and Miss DARCELLA C. DARDEN, all of Claiborne county, Mississippi.

On the evening of October 1, at the residence of Rev. Charles W. McAllister, by Rev. S. H. Cooper, J. M. CARMICHAEL, Esq., to Miss MARY SMITH, all of Dale county, Alabama.

Obituaries.

SISTER M. J. P. CONSTANTINE died September 13, 1871, aged fifty-nine years. She was a native of Dublin, Ireland, but had been in this country for many years. In 1829 she joined the Methodist Society in Dublin, and became a professor of religion, and ever after was allied to the Methodist people, wherever she lived. Sister Constantine had adopted a system of holy living peculiar to those Christians of Wesleyan type, who take their start in the old country. She had attained unto that rare degree of Christian piety which made God her chief joy. She was "diligent in business," laborious in her domestic life, rendering her home comfortable and happy, in which she took pleasure; but her chief joy was in God. We looked upon her as one of the purest-minded Christians which it has been our fortune to know. We saw her the day before she died. She talked of Jesus and of His presence. We have recorded the death of many a saint, but none upon whom we looked as a purer spirit. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." May her bereaved husband and daughter follow her as she followed Christ. J. P.

DIED, at her late residence near Floyd, Louisiana, on Monday, October 9, 1871, after a long illness, Mrs. MARY A. E. LOTT, consort of Hon. Hiram R. Lott, aged forty-two years and two months.

Mrs. Lott was a native of Hinds county, Mississippi, but moved to Carroll parish in 1853. To a large number of fond relatives and friends in both States the intelligence of her death comes with a bereaving sadness which language can but poorly express. The unassuming beauty of her life is known only to those who knew her best. A heart warm with all generous and kindly impulses, a hand ever open to charity, many a weary day will come and go ere the void she has left can be filled, or the lovely beauty of her life, in the tender relations of wife, mother, daughter, sister and friend, shall cease to waken in saddened hearts the deepest emotions of sorrow. Her last moments were soothed by the unfaltering trust of a Christian's hope, and the severing of earth's dearest ties by the assurance of a blessed Saviour's love. The mortal has put on immortality. The gain is hers; the loss, that of the loving husband, the aged mother and the tender children. Her warm heart is stilled in death; her loving smile and gentle voice are hushed forever; but we have her bright example to cheer us through this vale of tears to a great hereafter, for we know the mild rays of paradise beamed on her waking, and the sound she hears is the seraphim's song.

"Our faith beholds the dying here
Translated to that glorious sphere."

REV. JARED W. CUENY was born in Sumner county, Tennessee, on the twenty-sixth day of May, 1796. He removed to Marengo county, Alabama, in 1819, and from thence to Sumter county, Alabama, in 1840, where he died July 23, 1871.

He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1828, and was licensed to preach in 1830. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Waugh in 1841, and was ordained elder by Bishop Capers, at Marion, Alabama, in 1852.

He was married three times, and reared eleven children, five of whom preceded him to the spirit world.

The Dayton circuit was my first appointment in the Alabama Conference, and there I found Bro. Cheny a very popular and useful local preacher. He was a pioneer in the canebrake of south Alabama, and performed a conspicuous part in planting Methodism in that section. He was a man of marked character, of strong natural ability, a sincere Christian, and a preacher of considerable ability. He was a good citizen, and was highly esteemed for his moral worth and sterling integrity. He was a devoted husband and a fond father.

His remains were committed to the earth by the Masonic fraternity, and the religious rites of the church were performed by the writer.

Thus has passed away our venerable brother, who was of a generation of Methodists in Alabama but few of whom survive him. He has gone to meet those who labored and suffered with him here. Of the members of the circuit referred to above, scarcely one of his generation remains. They have nearly all gone to swell the ranks of the redeemed in glory.

May the Holy Comforter be with the widow and surviving children, and guide them into all truth, that they may once more become a united family in the glorious home of the blessed. THOS. Y. RAMSEY.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

WM. N. THOMPSON.

At a meeting of the Antangaville, Alabama, Methodist Episcopal Sunday school, held on Sunday, October 15, 1871, Bro. Jos. B. Wilkinson was called to the chair and A. W. McNeel requested to act as secretary. Bro. Wilkinson, in some feeling and appropriate remarks, stated that the school was called together for the purpose of making suitable expression in regard to the death of our assistant superintendent, WILLIAM N. THOMPSON, who departed this life since our last meeting. Bro. T. J. Motley moved that the chairman appoint a committee to draft suitable resolutions in regard to this sad dispensation; whereupon he appointed Bros. Thomas J. Motley, T. W. Hall, and our pastor, William A. Edwards, as said committee, who retired for a short time and reported as follows, which was adopted by a rising vote, viz:

WHEREAS, The Ruler of the Universe has seen fit, in his providence, to call our brother and beloved assistant superintendent from our midst to his reward on high; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we meekly bow to this sad dispensation of an all-wise Providence, we lament his demise, not only on account of his bereaved family, but also because of his efficiency as an officer of the church and Sabbath school, and a citizen possessing such virtues as made him preeminently useful to society.

Resolved, That while the shadows of sorrow are gathering over us, we feel assured that our brother has exchanged a land of sorrow and affliction for one of perpetual bliss.

Resolved, That we sincerely sympathize with his disconsolate wife and children in passing through the deep sorrow occasioned by the death of a kind husband and an affectionate father.

Resolved, That this preamble and resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the records of the Sabbath school, and a copy be furnished by the secretary to the bereaved family.

Resolved, That the secretary furnish the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE with a copy of the action of this meeting, and request that the same be published in said paper.

JOS. B. WILKINSON, Chairman.
A. W. MCNEEL, Secretary.

SISTER ROSA MILLS MILLER, wife of Rev. John A. Miller, of the Louisiana Conference, and daughter of Dr. William G. and Mary A. Mills, was born in south Louisiana, May 29, 1838; was married to Rev. J. A. Miller, at Chapel Hill, Texas, in 1859, and departed this life September 23, 1871.

She professed religion and joined the church during the administration of Brother Waters on the Vermilion circuit, I think, in 1856, at Perry's Bridge. She realized God's converting grace in all its fullness. Indeed, her conversion was one of very extraordinary power and clearness. She was deeply prejudiced against a shouting religion; owing to which fact, though deeply penitent, she failed for days and nights to experience the desired change, until some one of the ministers remarked to her: "Sister Rosa, you must not dictate to the good Lord as to how he shall bless you." Just at this point she exclaimed: "Any way, Lord." In a moment light and love burst in upon her soul with such power that she arose from the altar, shouting the praises of God, and exhorting others to approach the mercy seat, and seek and find, as she had done, "the pearl of great price." So overwhelming was the evidence of her acceptance that she could never afterward doubt it in the least.

We formed her acquaintance in the year 1858, having been appointed to the Vermilion circuit that year being our first in this Conference where, in that land of strangers, we found our home in her pleasant family. We boarded with her grandmother, who indeed was the "salt of the earth." Sister Rosa spent much of her time with this venerable mother in Israel, which gave us ample opportunity to discover the genuineness of her Christian faith, which developed itself in her daily conduct and conversation. Since that time she has been greatly devoted to the interests of the church. We have known much of her life for the last few years. She was raised to have her every wish gratified, yet as the wife of an itinerant Methodist preacher she would not allow her kind husband to incur any expense possibly to be avoided, even in the way of help to lessen her toils in household duties. This year she was a member of our charge. We have often visited her little rural home. The abundance of the heart was, on every visit, shown in the train of her conversation. Her great desire and struggle was to keep her dear husband untrammeled, that, with "a glad heart and free," he might fill his mission with acceptability to God and with profit to the church. Nearest her heart seemed to lie her own responsibility as a Christian mother. We rarely met Sister Miller at her own or our humble home that her heart seemed not to dwell on the training of her children for God and heaven. Often during this year has she uttered, with that concern only felt by the pious mother, alive to her responsibility: "Oh, Bro. Kimball, if I can just raise my children for heaven! Oh, that others felt as I do!"

She was a mother in Israel. She was a lady of rare excellence, whether viewed from the standpoint of intelligence or Christianity. Intellectually and socially she was of superior excellence.

Her death occurred under circumstances the most peculiar and affecting. She and her little family had gone with Bro. Miller as as a tenter on a camp ground at a point on Bro. Miller's work. The services had opened on Thursday night, went on through Friday, and up to Saturday at the eleven o'clock service. She attended almost every service—was in the congregation to hear the eleven o'clock sermon on Saturday, at which time the preacher presented to the audience the solemn subject of death. Services over, she left the arbor and returned to the church, which was occupied by Bro. Miller as his tent. Dinner was served. Sister Miller ate as heartily, perhaps, as usual. The table being cleared, several friends gathered in to enjoy a social conversation with Sister Miller. We stepped into the church to see Bro. Miller, and she looked around, saw it was I, and said: "Bro. Kimball, come take a seat and rest yourself." To which I replied: "I thank you; where is Bro. Miller?" She said he had stepped down to Bro. Moreland's tent. She was in the rocking-chair, with her sweet little babe in her arms. I turned and went down to the tent, about fifty yards distant; and failing to find Bro. Miller, returned by way of the church, and just opposite the door a lady, pale and frightened, exclaimed to me: "Call the doctor; Sister Miller is dying." In less than ten minutes from the time I had inquired of her for Bro. Miller, her spirit had taken its everlasting flight. It seems that just as I left the house she arose from her chair to accommodate some friend, after which she took a seat on the bed, lifted her little babe to her bosom, and just at this instant sank back into death, without a sigh, struggle or groan. No sign of pain—not a distorted feature—simply two slight efforts to breathe, and all was over. Thus passed away this noble specimen of a Christian woman. I have often seen loved ones die, but never saw such consternation as overwhelmed that congregation on this occasion. Sister Miller was an ornament to every circle in which she moved. Few enjoyed a larger circle of friendship and friends than did she. She was a devoted wife, a true friend, a faithful Christian mother, a devoted child of God, and all that could win for herself the love and sympathy of the pious and good. We weep not for her, but for the bereaved husband and motherless children, whose loss can be made up only by the God of all grace and consolation, which, in the name of Christ, may he do. In this mysterious visitation of Divine Providence we suffer a vacuum which nothing but an all glorious resurrection can fill up. We sorrow not as those who have no hope. She is not lost to us, only for a few days. She has gone a little ahead of us to urge us with greater alacrity and delight on our Christian journey. May this event be sanctified to the good of her large circle of friends, left below to weep her exit from our vision; and especially may God largely administer grace and comfort to the bereaved family. She has gone from us just when, for years, she predicted she would at the age of thirty-three years—and suddenly, as she was long since impressed. We commend our beloved Bro. Miller, and little boys and little infant girl, to the prayers and sympathies of the people of God. Let us strive, one and all, to meet her in glory. Amen. W. P. KIMBALL.

The Celebrated Argyle Bitters—TRUTHS FOR THE PEOPLE.—These Bitters, which are now a household word in every family, are deservedly ranked among the most successful and efficacious remedies now used.

Gently stimulant, delightfully refreshing and invigorating, they promote the digestive functions, regulate the liver and spleen, prevents hytrophy or inaction; they increase the vital functions and maintain the chylopoietic viscera in their normal condition of health, when once established.

No fabulous properties or magical effects are claimed for them; they are simply a pure unadulterated Tonic, Alterative and Stimulant.

One essential element of their success is the effect they possess of lessening the inordinate thirst for strong drinks, so often engendered by the use of vile nostrums and vicious compounds, arrogantly and ignorantly called "Bitters" to cover their deadly effects.

Ask your neighbor about the Argyle Bitters, and in nine cases out of ten, he will tell you "to do as he has done for years, always to keep them on hand for family use, for they are good to take."

These Bitters can bear the addition of one-third water, and then be stronger in all their essential properties than any other Bitter in the market; and to ladies and children, we recommend their dilution with water, when taken.

FLOWERS IN THE GRASS.

BY MARY GARDINER.

After dandelions, buttercups;
After buttercups, clover;
One blossom follows another one,
Over, and over, and over.

And the sweet, satisfying green
Is round about them all;
First to be here in spring-time,
Staying last in the fall.

Just as God's love is first and last,
With human loves between—
Successive blossoms, which he sends
Through his all-present green.

Only when cometh the clover,
Lifting her honeyed crest,
'Tis then that in our heart's choice,
We like dandelions the best;

As here and there in autumn-time
Their lonely faces smile,
Like likenesses of vanished things
Which we had lost awhile.

After dandelions, buttercups;
Then daisies and clover;
One blessing touches another one,
Over, and over, and over.

But O, behind, beyond, around,
Between them, and above,
Rises the satisfying green,
The Everlasting Love.

British Messenger.

BOBOLINK.

Throat brimful of music—
Cannot keep it in;
Bless me! Wouldn't have you try;
'Twould almost be a sin.
Should think 'twould choke you though, sometimes;
The aperture's so small
That all this noise must struggle through,
Or not get out at all.

Swinging on the lily-cups,
Hiding in the clover,
Prince of comic vocalists,
Saucy little rover—
Give us a gem from Mozart,
A taste of Meyerbeer,
Or a morceau from Rossini,
Fit for cultivated ear.

Cannot? Well, stop trying;
Your own wild notes are best.
Stick to the tune you've practiced,
Never mind the rest;
Stretch your mouth to the utmost;
Pour forth your pearly song,
Marred by no taint of by-gone grief,
Or shade of future wrong.

DOWN IN A DIVING-BELL.

When I was a boy a new pier was needed for our old town; and divers were employed to remove the foundation of the old pier, and to lay the foundation of the new. You may be sure that these divers were objects of great curiosity to the boy population of the place. We used to assemble to watch them into the rough wooden shed in which they began to dress, peeping in when we got a chance, and to follow them out of it along the scaffolding from which they went down into the water, in order to see their mates put on their helmets and their back-weights and breast-weights and great boots, with nearly twenty pounds of lead in each sole, fasten on their life lines and belts, like Robinson Crusoe's, and then fix fast the divers' mouth-pieces. We used to hold our breath as they went heavily down and down their long ladders, at last altogether disappearing from view. At least, that used to be our feeling at first. We got more accustomed to the divers in time. At last some of us would go into their hut, and chat with them as they dressed and undressed. This was how they dressed: they first put on flannels something like a cricketer's, and then an India-rubber jacket and pair of trousers made out of one piece, like those queer machines which disgusted little boys were at one time compelled to assume as an intermediate costume between petticoats and regular breeches. Then the breastplate was fastened on, and then the man who dressed the divers put on their India-rubber wristbands and woolen night-caps for them, and they went out to finish their toilet as already described. The helmets were round, pot-like, metal things, with plate-glass eyes, and two pipes—one to let the pumped air in, and the other to let the waste air out. To save the divers' shoulders, pads were put under the helmets. The weights I spoke of—besides the forty pounds of lead which each man carried in his boot soles—were half a hundred weight in front of, and the same, behind, him. The "life" line is a cord with which the diver communicates with the upper air.

My chief friend among the divers was an old man who had been almost all over the world, either as a diver or as a sailor. The others called him "Ghost." Why, I could not make out, for he was a stout, hearty, good-looking old fellow.

One day, when I went into the shed, Ghost, with some of his diving things still on, was sitting smoking by the fire. He held up his hands to explain the state of his toilet.

"I've been a-havin' the pins and needles, so that I didn't know whether my hands belonged to me, or was two pincushions. Leastways, they let me know pretty sharp as they did belong to me by the pain they give me."

I asked him what he meant.

"Why, you see, them tight things we wears round our wrists won't let the blood flow as it did ought to, and this cold weather one's hands gets like two blocks o' ice under water. I've give my knuckles pretty nigh a smasher with my hammer, and never knowed it till I come up again. So, you see, when the things is took off, and your blood begins to sarkilate, it's a caution the pain it give ye sometimes."

I asked why they did not go down in a diving-bell instead of by ladders.

"Why, you see, ladders is more convenient for the kind of work we're about just now; and for any kind o' work that ladders could be made to do for, the masters," he added with a grin, "would rather use the ladder than the bell."

"Why?"

"Well, you see, the masters has got it into their heads that men as goes down in the bell, instead o' mindin' their work, sits smokin' and yarnin' inside."

"But you have been down in a diving-bell, haven't you?"

"Me, sir! I only wished I'd got as many pounds now as times."

"And how do you feel?"

"Feel! I don't know as you feels anyways partic'lar—it's pretty much as if you was sittin' in a room with the blinds down or the shutters shut."

"But don't you feel anything at all strange?"

"Well, some says that the fust time you goes down in the bell the blood rushes a bit to your head, and your ears ring, and you feel half deaf and choky like. But, law, that's soon got over. I suppose I must ha' felt so fust time, as they says everybody does, but I don't remember nought about it."

"And how dark is it?"

"Why, of course, that's all accordin' to the time o' day and kind o' day—there's bull's eyes atop of the bell, you know—and to the sort o' water. There's some mucky water I've been down in where 'twas just as easy to work by night as by day—you couldn't see your hand afore your face—you couldn't see nought, but had to grope about as if you was locked up in a coal-cellar with the flap down over the gratin'. But then agin, in foreign parts, I've been where 'twas almost as light, half a dozen fathom down, as 'twas atop, and many's the bottom I've been at that was a deal lighter than one o' them London offices on a foggy day when the gas is alight."

"But isn't there anything curious in going down in a diving-bell?"

"Not that I knows on; it might seem curious to you, perhaps; but then, you see, I'm used to it. It don't seem curious to you to go to school, you see, but it 'ud seem uncommon queer to me, I guess. Well, perhaps, the curiousest thing is to hear the waste air gugglin' out at bottom, and to see it through the bull's-eyes goin' up in big bubbles one atop of another, as you've seed a fish a-bubblin' in a pond."

"But didn't you ever meet with any adventures?"

"Well, no doubt, I've seed some queer sights now and agin; but I can't tell 'em to ye now. I've had a long spell o' work, and it's gettin' time for me to be a-turnin' in."

But on another occasion, when Ghost had more leisure, I got him to tell me some of his adventures.

"Well, p'r'aps the curiousest thing that ever I see was a critter that got rid of its own insides. I trod on one o' them sea-cowcumbers, and blest if it didn't spit its own belly out. I was aboard of a Yankee ship once that went trading to the Fijis for 'em—trepangs they called 'em there. The darkies had to ketch 'em for their chief, and then he sold 'em to our skipper for powder and shot and calico, and such as that; and when they was dried, a nice penny he made in China for 'em; it's the Chineses as eats 'em. The darkies dive for 'em, and precious brisk they are about it—out of the water and into it agin as if they was fish themselves. No, I never see any pearl fishing; but if anybody's told you that the pearl divers can stay under water a quarter of an hour or so, you may tell 'em for me it's a lie. I didn't use to be a bad hand at their sort o' diving; but between three and four minutes was the most I could ever manage."

I asked Ghost whether he had ever been attacked by a shark, or anything of that kind, when groping about at the bottom.

"Well, not by a shark exackly," he answered; "but one of them sea-wolves once set on me, and I don't know but what they're wuss than sharks, because they've got a dozen sets o' teeth. I hit out at the beggar with my pick, and he bit the end off like a bit o' sugar-stick. It was lucky for me I druv my pick into his ugly head next try. And I tell ye what, sir, me and two mates was again down once, and one of them big cuttles put one of his long arms into the bell, and laid hold o' the man that was sittin' opposite to me, and if I hadn't hit out pretty well with my ax, and my tother mate hadn't rattled away pretty brisk on the side o' the bell, that old cuttle would ha' had one on us, if he hadn't had all on us. Yes, that's how we let them above know what we want—knockin' on the side o' the bell. One knock means this, and two means that, and so on, as you've agreed; but, of course, when they hears a never-endin' clatter, they knows, of course, that there is somethin' out o' common wrong, and brings us up as fast as ever they can make the winch go round."—Good Words for the Young.

STORIES ABOUT LIONS.

The lion is strong and cruel, yet he will become attached to those who treat him kindly. A story is told of one who was brought from India, and who on the passage grew very fond of a sailor who had charge of him. His name was "Nero." On being shut up in a cage in London he grew sulky, and was very fierce when any one came near him, so that it was dangerous even for his keeper to approach him.

One day, a few weeks after Nero had been shut up in his new prison, a party of sailors visited the menagerie, and were warned by the keeper not to go near the lion, who every now and then growled savagely at those who were looking at him. All at once one of these sailors run up to the cage, and thrusting in his hand, cried out:

"What! old shipmate! don't you know me? What cheer, old Nero, my lad?"

The lion instantly left off feeding and growling, sprang up on the bars of the cage, and put out his nose between them. Jack patted him on the head, and the lion rubbed his hand with his whiskers like a cat, shewing evident signs of pleasure.

"Ah!" said Jack, turning to the keeper and spectators, who stood frightened and in astonishment, "Nero and I were once shipmates, and you see he isn't like some folks; he don't forget an old friend."

The following anecdote is told of a lion who was kept in a menagerie at Brussels. The den of this lion, who was named Danco, needed some repairs. The carpenter who had to make them, on seeing the lion in the same cage as that in which he was to work, started back in terror.

"I can't go in beside that beast," he said.

"But," replied the keeper, "I will take him to the lower end of the cage while you are at work."

Upon this they entered the cage, and the carpenter fell to work. For a while the keeper amused himself with Danco, but growing tired, dropped into a sound sleep. The carpenter worked on without fear, trusting to the keeper for protection from the beast he so much dreaded. Having repaired the lower part of the cage, he turned to ask the keeper's opinion of his work. To his horror, he saw the lion and his keeper sleeping side by side. The lion awoke at the sound of the carpenter's voice, and glared at him fiercely; after a warning growl, which seemed to say, "Don't come too near my master," it placed its paw on the keeper's breast, and composed itself once more to slumber. To the carpenter's great joy, some of the attendants came up and awoke the keeper, who did not appear the least alarmed at his position, but shaking the lion's paw, led it off to another cage, and left the carpenter to finish his work without further alarm.—The Children's Hour.

The Farm and Garden.

FARM WORK FOR THE MONTH.

CORN, PEAS, ETC.

If the gathering and housing of the corn, peas, etc., have not been already attended to, let them be done at once. Delays are proverbially "dangerous." Days will occur when the cotton is too wet to pick, which ought to be employed in this important work.

SMALL GRAIN.

It is not too late to sow rye, barley or wheat for green feed in the early spring. The crop will not be as early or as luxuriant as if it were sown in September or October, but it is far better late than not at all.

We can employ no language strong enough to advise our friends to devote a good portion of their available arable land to wheat, oats and barley, and to provide for a plenty of clover when the grain has been harvested. We believe that clover is not only one of the most profitable crops that we can raise, but that it is the most efficient and cheapest restorative of our exhausted lands. On well-manured, well-prepared stiff lands, clover sown with small grain in the fall, (always provided that the seed be genuine and fresh, and a sufficient quantity sown,) is a sure crop. Those who tried it this year are satisfied that it will "succeed at the South," and are making arrangements to go into it on a large scale now. But there are very many yet who are afraid that clover and the grasses will not "stand our hot, dry summers."

SWEET POTATOES.

Where they have not been dug and put away, should receive immediate attention.

MANURE.

On off-days, when the hands and teams cannot be otherwise employed, they may be profitably engaged in cleaning up the stables, stock lots, hog pens, fence corners, ash-hoppers, etc., gathering the proceeds in a well-sheltered manure pit, and hauling, to mix with them, all the leaves and other "trash" which can be converted into manure. Where this work is regularly done "guano drafts" are never excessively onerous.

FALL PLOWING.

To those who have fields "white with cotton" we know that it is almost useless to expatiate upon the advantages of deep, close plowing at this time of the land to be planted in the spring, and leave it to the fertilizing influences of the frosts of winter. It is not one of the least of the land-exhausting influences of cotton planting that it almost totally excludes the possibility of fall plowing.

FENCES.

From this time until the new year opportunity should be taken to build fences where they are needed, and repair them where they are defective. Patching here and there is not what we mean. While the law requires us to build miles of fencing to prevent the stock of other people from trespassing on our property—while we must have fences at all—let us have good fences, which will answer the purpose. We hope to see the day when the present unjust and cruel law relative to fences will be repealed, and every man will be compelled to prevent his stock from depredating on his neighbor.—Southern Farm and Home.

QUALITY OF PORK.

An exchange advances the following ideas in reference to the influence which different kinds of feed has upon the quality of pork produced:

We all know what a difference there is in pork. Breed has something to do in this matter, but not so much as many suppose. It is the kind of feed that makes kind in pork. Use milk or whey largely, and your pork is sure to be soft, flabby, and will fry away one-half. What is left is not relishable. Hence our dairy pork is our poorest pork, varying according to the amount of grain that is fed. So still-fed pork is in bad repute. Miscellaneous feed makes ordinary pork, often quite ordinary. Slop will not do, there seems to be too much water.

The grains are what is wanted to make good, sweet pork—pork that is solid and will fry well. Rank pork is unendurable, and yet there is much of it, and some people prefer it, like the pork from large, strong hogs.

A dirty, offensive sty is an element, no doubt, in producing strong or even fetid pork.

Have clean quarters, a clean animal, good ventilation and feed grain. For drink give cold, not in any way foul, water. Corn for feed is best, and old corn at that. Do not house too close, nor feed too sharp; look to the convenience of the hog, and fat him so that he is in good condition, not over-fat, with possibly diseased parts about him in consequence, the pork affected by it.

Old corn submitted to heat will yield most pork, but it is doubtful whether the quality is as good as when fed raw. So, probably, with all the grains.

We have had a chance to note clear distinctions in the quality of pork. Where the dairy is excluded and the grains are fed there is good, solid pork, and, unless the hog is old and large, we find it to be sweet. We find it difficult to get good pork among the dairymen—that is, pork that will not fry away too much, and is of No. 1 keeping quality. This among all breeds, for all are kept here. We are fatting a pig for our own use, of mixed breed of Chester White and Berkshire, and we feed him old corn, ground, and give him water to drink. We expect the first quality of pork, and we shall not be disappointed. We have practiced this for years, and seen it practiced, and with unvarying success. The pork is always solid; cooks well in all forms; is sweet and toothsome, and more wholesome than the rank bacon. We have no difficulty in keeping our pork.

SUCKERS ABOUT FRUIT TREES.—Every orchard not carefully watched is liable to become infested with suckers growing about the feet of the trees, and nothing gives a more untidy appearance. Young orchards must be examined at least once a year, and have all the suckers carefully removed. For quite young trees this work should be done early in spring, as cutting away any considerable portion of growing wood and leaves has a tendency to retard growth; but unless the mass of suckers is very large it should be done now, if omitted before. From large trees it is always better to take off the suckers at the present time, or while the trees are growing freely, as the work may be more effectually performed, and they will be less liable to start again. The worst thing that can be done is cutting the suckers off with a knife in such a way that short stubs are left to sprout a second time. If the sprouts are small, or only one season's growth, they may be easily and well removed by grasping them one at a time with both hands, and then, with a stiff cowhide boot, place the foot next the tree and on the sucker, and one or two quick jerks will separate it to the base. If this is impracticable take a small gouge and mallet and cut them off closely. When it is thoroughly done they will not be liable to reappear, and the few that appear subsequently are easily got rid of. A neatly kept, clean orchard is better and more profitable, in every way, than one infested with suckers, weeds, grass and bushes.—Country Gentleman.

VEGETABLE GARDEN.—There is not much to be done this month in the way of seed-sowing, but a great deal may be done in preparing for seed-time and in improving the prospect of an abundant harvest. Now is the time to pile on the manure in the vegetable garden, and, when spread evenly, to turn it under.

Let it be always remembered that a garden cannot be too rich. Some of the most successful market gardeners in Pennsylvania and New Jersey apply as much as five hundred loads of manure to the acre in one year, and they find that it pays. Let no one be afraid, therefore, to make the garden too rich. The vegetables will stand it and be glad of the chance. They are heavy feeders, and, being young and of rapid growth, need a great deal of nourishment. Do not delay this work until the spring. Do it now and do it liberally, so that the manure may be assimilated with the soil, and make it porous and friable for working in the spring. If your garden soil be too sandy mix some clay with it, and if, on the contrary, the clay is in excess some sand applied to it will be of benefit. Now is the time to prepare the garden. Do not postpone or neglect this important part of your duty.

THE ORCHARD.—We believe that this month and the early part of December are the best time for transplanting fruit trees. Trees are asleep then, or nearly so, and, if ordinary care be taken, are scarcely affected by the change. Pruning may be advantageously done now before the hard frosts set in. If your fruit trees have not been already thoroughly searched for borers and worms, attend to them without delay, before they get established for the winter, when it will be hard to find them. Destroy all webs and cocoons hanging to the branches or bark. Manure your orchard by spreading for a circle of ten feet all round the trees a compost of rotted yard manure, muck and ashes. Sow all seeds of fruit trees.—Southern Farm and Home.

THE FLOWER GARDEN.—Because winter is coming let not the flower garden be neglected. Plant out your bulbs if you have not done so in October, but do so without loss of time. Plant azalias, deutzias, pyrus, japonica, Scotch broom, honeysuckles, altheas, jasmin, privet, spiræas, lilacs, viburnums, roses, syringas and sweet-scented shrubs. All the above are hardy, and if planted now will bloom early in the spring. Take up all bedded plants and put away in pots for the winter.

Prepare at once the frames and pits for the reception of tender plants which need protection in winter. It is still time to sow seeds of hardy perennials and annuals.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

SODA CAKE.—One coffee cup of white sugar, half tea cup of butter, beat together till like cream, then add two well-beaten eggs, one teaspoon of cream tartar, half teaspoon of soda dissolved in half tea cup of milk, and one coffee cup and a half of flour; spice to the taste.

STEAMED BROWN BREAD.—One cup of Indian meal, two cups of rye, one cup of molasses, two cups of milk, half teaspoonful of soda, the same of salt. Stir well together and steam three hours, taking care that the water does not stop boiling. Add boiling water as the water boils away. If you wish it hot for breakfast, steam the day before, and in the morning set it in the oven for half an hour to form a good crust.

SALT-RISING BREAD.—Early in the morning boil one pint of new milk; set it off, and when milk-warm add one teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of corn-meal and enough flour to make a moderately thin batter. Set it in a pot of warm water, and keep at regular heat until it rises; then make it up with flour, to which must be added a tablespoonful of butter or lard. Put into oven to rise again, then bake.

BREAD PUDDING.—Take a coffee cup of light bread crumbs, soak in a pint of new milk; when soft, stir in two well-beaten eggs and a tea cup of sugar, add a half teaspoon of salt, and spice to the taste; just before going into the oven drop in a cup of stoned raisins; beat up the whites of two eggs, add two tablespoons of white sugar; when the pudding is done, place the frosting smoothly over the top, and return it to the oven for five minutes.

PRICKLY HEAT is easily cured in one day by using the warm bath for ten minutes, then rubbing the affected part with lemon juice. The warm water dissolves the salts that are lodged under the skin; so does the lemon juice. When the eruption stings and burns, lemon juice rubbed on the part affected will give relief in a few moments. Possibly strong apple vinegar might act in the same way. Persons who cannot get lemon juice might use nitric acid dissolved, twenty grains to an ounce of water.

MISCELLANEOUS.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR,

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana; and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

He referrefirst to the bundant evidence of ld-surfaces n Quaternary and Tetary times. Truly marine deposits uch as the chalk) testify to the prence of land by the fossil remains Pterodac-tyles, turtles, and otherhoro-dwell-ng reptiles, while the Valden beds, the Purbeck limestonand Oolitic plant-shales afford abudant proofs of land existing at thatime. Even the marine Solenhofn limestone yields swarms of iects, flying lizards, and a true ird, besides plant remains. In the Triassic period (the age of outown Connecticut valley beds) the arliest traces of mammals appear, while ripple-marked slabs of sandstone show bird-like tracks and Labyrinthodont footmarks, telling of te denizens of the old sea-shores and lakes.

VACCINATION AND DISEASE.—The most experienced vaccinators, on the one hand, and those who have had most to do with the treatment of infantile ailments, on the other, agree in the belief that disease is not communicable by vaccination. Mr. Marsom, an English physician, in the performance of more than fifty thousand vaccinations, "has never seen other diseases communicated with the vaccine disease, nor does he believe in the popular reports that they are so communicated." Mr. Lees, whose observations were equally extensive, has borne similar testimony. Dr. W. Jenner, who in six years had some thirteen thousand sick adults and children under observation, states "that in no case had he reason to believe, or even to suspect, that any constitutional taint had been conveyed from one person to another by vaccination." During a period of seventeen years Dr. West treated twenty-six thousand infants and children, with a like experience; and Prof. Paget, after an extensive familiarity with the diseases of children, expresses the opinion that the worst which can be charged upon vaccination is that, by disturbing for a time the general health, it may rarely give opportunity for the external manifestation and complete evolution of some constitutional affection which but for it might have remained rather longer latent.

Where every person in a community has been properly vaccinated, there is little chance for smallpox to obtain a foothold; and it is also very certain that the presence of the unvaccinated is a standing invitation to the development and spread of epidemics. The opponents of vaccination, and a far larger number who from ignorance or carelessness neglect the precaution, thus become, so far as the public health is concerned, a "dangerous class," which, like other dangerous classes, it is for the interest of the community at large to remove.—Galaxy.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching, thought and feeling of the Southern Should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS, smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

[From the New Orleans Price Current.]

The general market has continued to exhibit a fair degree of animation, with a prospect of further improvement from the rise in the tributaries. Sugar has been in good request, but ruled at irregular prices, with the advantage on the side of the buyers. Molasses also has gone off freely, most of the receipts meeting a ready sale from the landing, but prices have further declined, the closing rates showing a reduction of 3@4c. per gallon. Flour has been in light supply, and ruled at about previous rates until Tuesday, when it commanded rather higher figures. Corn has been in moderate request, at prices showing no material variation. Pork and bacon have sold to a moderate extent, at about Friday's quotations.

The crop accounts from the country are no more encouraging. There appears to be little hope of any increase in sugar over last year, and the correspondence of factors agrees with the tenor of the monthly crop report of the Cotton Exchange, which was issued on Saturday. A close scrutiny of this important document will show that, if it be taken as an indication of the entire crop, it does not warrant even the popular estimate of 3,000,000 bales. For the information of distant readers it is proper to say, in connection with this publication, that there can be no question whatever of either the judgment or the impartiality of the committee. If there be any doubt at all it must rest upon the fidelity of the correspondents in the interior, who have, nevertheless, been specially selected by the committee or nominated by members of the Exchange, in consideration of their intelligence and reliability.

The river is 14 feet 2 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the third instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales..	13,040
Lake		30
Mobile		3,191
Florida		11
Texas		156
Total		16,418

On Saturday the movement was checked by light supplies and the sales did not exceed 2,550 bales, while under the decline of ¼d reported at Liverpool, factors were compelled to make concessions of ⅛c., in some cases giving way ¼c. Good ordinary closed at 17⅜@17½c., low middling at 17¼@17⅜c., middling at 18, strict middling at 18¼ and good middling at 18½c. On Monday, with more ample offerings, the demand improved and the competition among buyers enabled factors to realize steadier prices. In some instances, although there was no quotable advance, figures were realized ⅛c. higher than could have been obtained on Saturday in fact, the general tendency was in favor of sellers, and the market closed strong at previous rates. The sales summed up 5,000 bales. On Tuesday buyers again came forward with a fair degree of spirit, and although the movement was checked by light supplies, and there being no regular telegrams from New York, yet the business embraced 4,150 bales, at a slight improvement in strict middling, which was in special request, and firm prices for all other grades.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 113,032 bales, against 102,680 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 99,097 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 10,801 to France, and a decrease of 30,727 to Great Britain, and 9,787 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Good ordinary	17¾ @ 17¾
Low middling	17¾ @ 17¾
Middling	18 @ —

SUGAR.—The demand continues good, especially for the better descriptions, and the sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 450 hhds., nearly all the supplies, at 8¾@8¾c. for common, 9¾@10¼c. for fair, 10¾@10¾c. for good fair, 11@11¼c. for fully fair, 11¾@11¾c. for prime, 11@12c. for seconds, 12¼c. for centrifugal, 12c. for gray clarified, 12¼c. for yellow clarified, and 12¾@13c. for white. On Tuesday 175 hhds. were received. The demand was good, and the supplies were sold at 7¾@8c. for common, 10¼c. for fair, 11¼@11¼c. for fully fair, 11¾c. for prime, 11¾c. for seconds, and 12¼c. for yellow centrifugal.

MOLASSES.—The supplies were disposed of from day to day as received, but at declining prices. On Saturday 400 bbls. sold at 40@45c. for common, 46c. for centrifugal, 48@50c. for fair, 52@53c. for prime, 55@56 for strictly prime, and 58c. for choice. On Monday nearly 1,000 bbls. sold at 30@40c. for inferior and fermenting, 44c. for centrifugal, 45@48c. for fair, 50@51c. for prime, 52@53c. for strictly prime, and 53@55c. for strictly prime to choice. On Tuesday the demand was good for the better qualities, and the supplies were sold, embracing 600 bbls., at 37½c. for common, 44c. for prime centrifugal, 48c. for fair to prime, 49@50c. for prime, and 51c. for strictly prime.

FLOUR.—The market is bare, or nearly so, of superfine and double extra; and low treble extra is in light supply. The stock consists mostly of choice extra. The demand, however, is only local, and the sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 2,000 bbls. at $5.50 for some on its merits, $6.25 for superfine, $6.40@$6.50 for single extra, $6.75@$7 for double extra, $7.12½@$7.25 for treble extra, $7.50@$7.60 for good treble extra, and $7.75@$9.50 for choice and family extra.

PORK.—The stock on hand is small, but there is not much demand. There were sales on Saturday and Monday, however, of 700 bbls. mess, in several lots, on the spot and to arrive, at $15.50 ₱ bbl. On Tuesday 50 bbls. mess sold at $15 62½ ₱ bbl. It is recalling at $15.75@$16 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—The market is dull, but clear rib sides are scarce and shoulders are in light supply, while clear sides are plentiful and dull. There were sales on Saturday and Monday, however, of 100 casks, in lots, at 8¼@8¾c. for clear sides and 8¼c. for shoulders. On Tuesday 25 casks clear sides sold at 8¼c. ₱ lb. Shoulders are quoted at 8¼c.; clear rib sides 8¾c.; clear sides 8¼c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request and varying with the New York market, closing at a net advance of ⅛c., opening on Saturday at 111¼@112¼, (against 111¾ at New York,) and closing at 112@112¼, (against 112 at New York;) opening on Monday at 112@112¾, (against 112¼ at New York,) and closing at the opening rates in both markets; and opening on Tuesday at 112@112¼c., (with no telegrams from New York, business there being interrupted by the election,) and closing at the opening rates.

The sales of silver have been confined to $500 in American half-dollars on Saturday at 110; $1,000 on Monday and $600 on Tuesday at the same. American half-dollars are still quoted at 109@110, and Mexican dollars nominal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

AGENTS WANTED
To sell the only Complete Unabridged People's Edition of
DR. WILLIAM SMITH'S
Bible Dictionary.

It contains over 1,000 closely printed, double-column octavo pages, and is illustrated with over 200 engravings, and a series of fine, authentic maps.

This DICTIONARY embodies the results of the most recent study and research of over sixty of the most eminent Biblical scholars in the world. Clergymen of all denominations regard it as the best work of the kind ever published, and one which ought to be in the hands of every Bible reader.

It is a great library in itself. The labor and learning of centuries are gathered in this one volume, to throw a clear, strong light upon every page of the inspired word. Agents are meeting with unprecedented success. One reports 55 orders taken the first three days of his canvass; another 76 in two days; another 212 in ten days; another 29 Dictionaries and 28 of our large Family Bibles in two half days; another sold 27 Dictionaries and 24 Bibles in one day.

Send for circulars with terms, testimonials and a full description of the work. Address

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT.
The King of Mineral Springs is the German Seltzer; and
Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient
Is its duplicate. Letters attesting its wonderful Tonic Aperient and anti-Bilious qualities swarm in from every source. The question has been settled whether artificially medicated waters may not be equal to those which burst sparkling from the earth itself. They can; and the Seltzer Aperient, when undoubtedly pure and genuine, proves the fact. Be cautious. Accept none other.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Chicago, Nov. 8.—The executive committee of the Relief and Aid Society publish an official statement of the amount actually received up to November 7. The actual subscription is $2,050,000, out of about $3,500,000 subscribed. This includes $600,000 in the hands of the New York Chamber of Commerce, and $200,000 in Boston not yet placed to the credit of the fund. The society is aiding sixty thousand persons, some of whom the committee has to provide shelter for.

The committee is aiding those burnt out to erect small but comfortable houses on the sites of their former dwellings or leased grounds, which they may live in not only during the winter, but also next summer, so as to be able to go to work on rebuilding the city. Four thousand of these houses have already been built, and it is estimated will shelter about twenty thousand people. These, with the number expected to be built, will shelter altogether thirty-five thousand people.

The cost of these temporary buildings will be about $1,200,000, leaving $2,200,000 to meet the demands for food, clothing, fuel and other general expenses from the thirteenth of October until the completion of the work, which cannot possibly end with the present winter.

New York, Nov. 9.—The World estimates the Republican majority in the State at from twelve thousand to seventeen thousand. The Republicans have a two-thirds majority in either house of the Legislature.

The reported resignation of Tweed is unconfirmed.

Ingersoll has returned.

Richmond, Nov. 9.—The political cast of the Virginia Legislature stands about the same as last year.

Denver, Col., Nov. 9.—There was a slight earthquake of ten or fifteen seconds this morning. No damage.

Harrisburg, Nov. 9.—A. Dewelf Howe was elected Bishop of the Episcopal diocese of Pennsylvania to-day, by a vote of thirty-nine to thirty-two.

Washington, Nov. 10.—There is no present intention of declaring martial law in Georgia or elsewhere, there being nothing in the present condition of affairs to warrant such a course.

There was a prolonged cabinet meeting to-day, to consider civil service matters.

The Southern Claims Commission close its sessions temporarily, on the fifteenth, to prepare a report for Congress. It is expected the committee will resume its sessions in December.

It is believed by prominent gentlemen that the spread of smallpox in Eastern cities is attributable to the sale of buffalo robes taken from the camps of the Hilgan and Blackfeet Indians, who were so severely stricken with that disease two years since.

Several of the robes which were prohibited from being offered in the markets have disappeared, and it is believed that they have been brought East.

Atlanta, Nov. 10.—The House to-day passed a bill providing for holding a special election for Governor on the second Tuesday in December. A section providing for special returns of said election, other than according to the present law, was stricken out. The Democrats contended that the integrity of the present Republican acting executive should be trusted.

Charleston, Nov. 10.—The Howard Association, at its meeting to-day, passed a resolution giving notice that as the yellow fever has nearly ceased, the active operations of the association will terminate on the fifteenth instant.

San Francisco, Nov. 10.—The United States grand jury of Tucson, Arizona, make formal charges against the managers of the Indian reservations in the Territory, showing that the Apaches were allowed to leave and go on the war path at will, and specifying numerous murders committed by the Indians. The report says they are supplied with ammunition and arms, and their women protected by the officers in charge of the agency.

Natchez, Nov. 11.—The yellow fever is abating rapidly. There are now only seventy-five cases under treatment, against one hundred and eight at the same time last week. There are but few new cases occurring.

Charleston, Nov. 12.—There were no fever deaths during the past two days. The leading physicians advise absentees that they may come back, and large numbers have already returned. The City Council have ordered a day of prayer and thanksgiving on account of the abatement of fever. There was a heavy white frost in Charleston this morning.

Washington, Nov. 13.—According to the Russian official programme, the first visit of the Grand Duke Alexis to Washington will not extend over twenty-four hours. It will be merely for the purpose of paying his respects to President Grant and the members of the cabinet, who will in a body welcome him at the executive mansion. He will receive no visitors during this brief sojourn, nor receive cards. He will then return to New York to accept the honors prepared for him, remaining there several days. He will thence proceed west to the Pacific. The programme of this journey was furnished several weeks ago by a distinguished gentleman to Minister Catacazy, at the latter's request. The grand duke will return to Washington during the ensuing session of Congress, to spend about twelve days, when a series of entertainments will be tendered him.

New York, Nov. 13.—Some thirty cases of cholera on the steamer Franklin, at the quarantine to-day, were transferred to the hospital ship.

Later.—It is officially stated the Franklin had forty cases and twenty-eight deaths during the passage. Nearly every one aboard was more or less affected. Further deaths are probable.

A special dispatch to the World, dated London, November 13, says a formidable plot of Bonapartist generals, headed by Fleury, to arrest Thiers and proclaim the empire, has been discovered, with the papers of the conspiracy, which are now in the possession of Thiers, who is confident of the failure of the conspiracy.

Philadelphia, Nov. 14.—There were four hundred and ninety-one cases of smallpox last week, a decrease of eighty-five cases as compared with the previous week.

The Rev. Alfred Cookman, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is dead.

St. Louis, Nov. 14.—A party of practical bridge builders, now here, have made a proposition to construct a span bridge across the Mississippi at Carondelet or South St. Louis, agreeing to complete it in two years. Three railroads have already expressed a willingness to enter into the arrangement.

Portland, Nov. 14.—A dispatch from Captain George Pendleton states that his vessel, the brig E. C. Sewell, of Bath, from Philadelphia to Portland, was lost about seven miles off Sandy Hook on Friday night, and three of the crew drowned.

FOREIGN.

City of Mexico, Oct. 30, via Havana.—Anarchy prevails in many of the States of Mexico. The revolution in Nuevo Leon still continues. The revolutionists of Zacatecas have invaded the State of San Luis Potosi. Numerous bands of men are sacking the villages and haciendas in the States of Hidalgo and Mexico, and in the Federal district robberies are committed in sight of the gates of the city.

Gomez Portales is in the field operating against the State government of Aguas Calientes.

Jiminez is again at the head of a force operating alternately in Guerrero and Puebla.

The authorities of the State of Oaxaca neglected to promulgate notice of the re-election of Juarez.

Vienna, Nov. 8.—The Bohemian Diet voted unanimously against electing delegates to the Reichsrath, whereupon the government ordered the close of its deliberations.

Amsterdam, Nov. 8.—The Netherlands Trading Company held a meeting to consider the proposed transfer of Dutch possessions in Asia and Africa to England. They resolved to continue their organization for twenty-five years.

Paris, Nov. 9.—A coal mine exploded to-day from fire damp, near St. Etienne. There were fifty-two men in the mine at the time of the explosion. Large gangs of men are at work endeavoring to rescue those in the pit, but have not succeeded in recovering any one alive, though twenty-two dead bodies have been brought up. There are still thirty in the pit, all supposed to be dead.

Zurich, Nov. 9.—The degree of doctor of medicine has been conferred upon Miss Dimmock, an American lady, by the university.

Rome, Nov. 10.—Apartments for the permanent residence of the King are being prepared in the Quirinal palace.

London, Nov. 11.—The Queen's condition has wonderfully improved, and all prospects for a partial regency have been abandoned.

Brussels, Nov. 11.—The Bank of Belgium has reduced the rate of interest to four per cent.

Prince Pierre Bonaparte, who was made notorious for his participation in the killing of Victor Noir, was married to-day, at the French legation in this city, to Mlle. Rifflin.

London, Nov. 14.—A letter from Constantinople represents the cholera as spreading.

The British government has granted a pension of £300 to the children of Dr. Livingstone.

Scott Russell writes to the papers of to-day, giving a history of the social movement. He says if Prince Albert had been alive he would have been its leader.

The movement originated in proposals for a union between the Peers and the workingmen. He denies most positively that its objects or methods are political or revolutionary. He strongly advocates perseverance in the effort in the interest of social progress and reform.

Brandy and Water as Fuel.—The Chicago Journal says: "The very general belief that the Congressman of to-day is a much worse sort of person than the Congressman of long ago is not entirely correct. It appears from an incident related in a recently published volume entitled 'The Domestic Life of Thomas Jefferson,' that our revolutionary forefathers in 'Congress assembled' had their little items of 'incidental' expenses, many of them quite as queer as those which astonish the constituents of to-day. The following story is related by Mr. Jefferson concerning the first Continental Congress: 'Delegate Harrison, of Virginia, desiring to 'stimulate,' presented himself and a friend at a certain place where supplies were furnished Congress, and ordered two glasses of brandy and water. The man in charge replied that liquors were not included in the supplies furnished Congressmen. 'Why,' said Harrison, 'what is it, then, that I see the New England members come here and drink?' 'Molasses and water, which they have charged as stationery,' was the reply. 'Then give me the brandy and water,' quoth Harrison, 'and charge it as fuel.'"

One of the daily papers states that a Prof. Faber, of Vienna, had on exhibition in New York, last week, a talking machine, constructed of wire rods, India rubber tubes, wooden uprights and steel springs. The apparatus is based upon anatomical laws, a pair of bellows supplementing the human lungs, an elastic tube the larynx, a series of springs the vocal chords, and an India rubber clapper the tongue. Articulate sounds are produced by a series of levers, and operated by a key-board. The machine repeated phrases with remarkable facility, in a husky tone, which suggested the possibility of a cold in its head, and closed its soliloquy with a burst of laughter peculiarly human.

Of all occupations none can be more blessed, so transforming, so strengthening, so enrapturing, as that of beholding Jesus.

Grow not weary of this act; look to-day, and be found looking to-morrow.

Behold him when you are in trouble; so shall ye be delivered. Behold him when you are beset with fear: "They looked unto him and were lightened."

An "advanced thinker" is described as a creature with long hair, cadaverous face, peaked features, short pants, badly bagged at the knee, liberal supply of dandruff and loose hair on his coat-collar, nasal voice, his liver and digestive organs out of order, wears spectacles, is heavy on progress, sound on the goose, and generally delivers fall and winter lectures. He is, of course, very radical.

This of a fifteenth-amendment friend: A gentleman traveling homeward from Atlanta met an old negro on whose hat was encircled the crape of grief. The gentleman said: "You have lost some friend, I see?"

"Yes, massa."

"Was it a near or distant relative?"

"Well, pretty distant, massa—'bout twenty-four mile!"

Live as in God's sight, mindful of thy position as a child of God, and as a servant of Jesus. Meditate on his word; pray always. Then you will know when to close and when to open the lips; when to listen; and how to behave if wrongfully accused.

EUROPEAN ARMIES.

A series of tables, showing the strength, cost, etc., of the various armies of Europe, has just been published at Vienna. The following particulars show the actual force that each country has at its disposal in time of war:

Russia.—47 divisions of infantry and 10 of cavalry, 8 brigades of rifles and reserve, 149 regiments of Cossacks, 219 batteries of artillery and 50 of mitrailleuses, making altogether 862,000 men, 181,000 horses and 2,084 guns. (This includes the troops in the Caucasus, Siberia and Turkestan.)

Germany.—18 corps, including 37 divisions of infantry and 10 of cavalry, and 337 batteries of artillery. This force numbers 824,990 men, 95,724 horses and 2,022 guns.

Austria.—13 corps, including 40 divisions of infantry and 5 of cavalry, and 205 batteries of artillery and mitrailleuses. The total force is 733,926 men and 58,125 horses, with 1,600 guns and 90 mitrailleuses.

England.—Army in process of reorganization.

Turkey.—6 corps of Nizam, (regulars,) 12 corps of redifs (reserves) and 132 batteries, making 253,289 men, 34,833 horses and 732 guns.

Italy.—4 corps, with 40 infantry and 6 cavalry brigades, and 90 batteries; total force, 415,200 men, 12,868 horses and 720 guns.

France.—140 batteries; total force, 456,740 men, 46,665 horses and 984 guns (including mitrailleuses.)

Belgium.—145,000 men, 7,000 horses and 152 guns.

Holland.—35,383 regulars, 85,000 militia, 5,200 horses and 108 guns.

Switzerland.—160,000 men, 2,700 horses and 278 guns.

Roumania.—106,000 men, 15,675 horses and 96 guns.

Servia.—107,000 men, 4,000 horses and 194 guns.

Greece.—125,000 men, 1,000 horses and 48 guns.

Sweden (including Norway.)—61,604 men, 8,500 horses and 222 guns.

Denmark.—31,916 men, 2,120 horses and 96 guns.

Spain.—144,938 men, 30,252 horses and 456 guns.

Portugal.—64,930 men, 6,320 horses and 96 guns.

From the above data it appears that the total of the forces available for war purposes in Europe (taking the English disposable force at 470,779 men and 336 guns) is 5,164,300 men, 512,394 horses, 10,224 guns, and about 800 mitrailleuses.

A friend who married a widow explains as follows how he got mixed up in his relationship: "I married a widow who had a grown-up daughter. My father visited our house often, fell in love with my step-daughter, and married her. So my father became my son-in-law, and my step-daughter my mother, because she was my father's wife. Some time afterward my wife had a son—he was my father's brother-in-law, and my uncle, for he was the brother of my step-mother. My father's wife—that is, my step-daughter—had also a son; he was, of course, my brother; and in the meantime my wife became my grandmother, because she was my mother's mother; I was my wife's husband and grandchild at the same time. And as the husband of a person's grandmother is his grandfather, I am my own grandfather.

Nepenthe.—This word, which is so often used by poets, is the name of a plant, which in torrid regions supplies the traveler with a refreshing beverage. It has an urn or pitcher at the extremity of its leaves, generally filled with pure and limpid water. This is covered with a lid when full; but the water diminishes during the day, and increases in quantity during the night. 'Nepenthe' is also the name of a plant which the ancients put into wine, to drive dull care away, when the wine itself could not. Some suppose it to be the helenium.

Flowers.—What more fitting than flowers as nature's consolers at the funeral? Not merely would we form them in set wreaths and crosses upon the casket, but, literally, would we "scatter" them about the dear, inanimate form of the loved one. Lying thus, most aptly do they portray how "man cometh forth as a flower, and is cut down."

Reading.—Every book which ministers to the prevalent love of fields and gardens, every essay that brings men nearer to the understanding of the mysteries which every tree whispers, every brook murmurs, every weed even hints, is a contribution to the wealth and the happiness of our kind.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Newbern, Alabama Conference.

Mr. Editor: In my communication, a few days ago, I informed you that we had had a meeting in progress here for two weeks, which had resulted in thirty-three professions and eighteen accessions to our church. The meeting closed on the night of the sixteenth day, partly for the want of help and partly on account of unfavorable weather. The people were anxious for it to continue. The entire result is as follows: Thirty-five professions, twenty-four accessions to our church—one of these by letter; baptized, seven adults and four children. As some who have joined have not made a profession of conversion, but are seekers, we may safely count that forty or more have made a start for heaven during this gracious revival season. Among the accessions to our church are four men who are heads of families, and there are two others that will join some other church. So, you see, our work has not been confined to the young. I could relate some beautiful and touching incidents in the case of the children, in connection with the revival; but I will not occupy your space. W. A. Montgomery.

November 5, 1871.

✓ Woodville District.

Mr. Editor: I wish to say, for the edification of your readers and to the praise of God's grace, that, since about the first of August last, over six hundred have been received into the church within the district. In devotion to God, and in zeal for his cause, there is manifest improvement in almost every part of our work. The preachers are a noble band of brothers. All of them, with one exception, have devoted themselves faithfully to their appropriate work. Although tried and tempted sorely, they have pressed forward to the victory which God has graciously given them. Our financial prospects are improving, so that I think most of the preachers will be paid by Conference. If they are not, it will be a shame to somebody, for "the laborer is worthy of his hire." When he does not get it God is robbed worse than the preacher. Don't you think so?

I am sorry you have not received a report from the secretary of our District Meeting. It was exceedingly interesting. There the revival on our district began.

J. L. Forsyth.

Jackson, La., Oct. 31, 1871.

Lake Providence District, Louisiana Conference.

Mr. Editor: I send you a supplement to my report of revival intelligence from this work, which you published a short time ago. I held a three-days' meeting at Midway, which included the fifth Sabbath of last month. The result, so far as known, was fourteen additions and about fifteen happy conversions, and the church most graciously revived. Bro. Kellar, a local elder, aided us in a faithful manner.

On Thursday, November 2, we commenced a meeting at this point (Floyd.) On the ensuing Saturday our excellent presiding elder, Bro. B. F. Alexander, was promptly at his post, not only to hold the fourth Quarterly Conference, but to preach. The meeting waxed in interest all the time, and up to last night we had seventeen additions to the church. Bro. Alexander left us this morning for Providence, through the rain, which commenced to fall last night. He has won the love and admiration of my people by his zeal for Jesus Christ and his church. I fear the heavy falling rain will prevent us from bringing our meeting to a proper close. My whole work is under a most gracious religious influence. May our heavenly Father continue to bless these dear people.

Our Advocate would be generally taken all over my work, but we cannot get the paper half the time. Some of the brethren do not see it more than once a month. Last Monday the mail came with letters from New Orleans, but no papers. O that we had mail facilities.

Very truly, yours in Christ,

James E. Bradley.

✓Floyd, La., Nov. 8, 1871.

Lake Circuit, Brandon District, Mississippi Conference.

Mr. Editor: Bro. J. A. Vance, our pastor, has been untiring in the discharge of his official duties. His first protracted meeting was held at Lake station, embracing the fourth Sunday in July. Bro. J. D. Hays was on hand and preached with great power. The church was much revived. Seven of the most prominent citizens of Lake and vicinity were added to the church, and many mourners at the altar desiring an interest in the prayers of God's people. Bros. Irwin Miller and W. A. Ray, of Scotland Chapel circuit, commenced a two-days' meeting at our church, (Centerville, Newton county,) on Saturday before the fifth Sunday in July. Bro. Vance joined them and protracted the services, and was untiring in laboring for the church. The District Conference commenced at Forest on Thursday. We had to close on Wednesday night, with an accession of seventeen, and nearly every unconverted person in the house a mourner. The congregations were large and attentive. At Salem church the results were about the same—ten accessions and many at the anxious seat. At Union Ridge Bro. Vance was assisted by Bro. John Henry. The meeting continued about twelve days; seventeen additions to the church. The next meeting was held at White Plains church, and the result was a glorious revival; fourteen accessions to the church. About eighty have been added to the church on this circuit to date.

Our fourth Quarterly Conference was held at this place (Centerville) on October 28 and 29. The financial condition of our church is not very flattering. Bro. F. M. Williams, P. E., was present and occupied the chair. He has done the work both of an elder and missionary in some portions of his work, and has given entire satisfaction to this circuit. The congregation on Saturday was the largest I ever saw in the country. The love-feast was well attended. At the close of eleven o'clock services five joined the church. A crowded house at night; two joined the church, and nearly all the sinners in the house were mourners. We organized in April, 1870, with eighteen members; we now number sixty.

L. M. Horton.

November 1, 1871.

Rev. Robert Hall, the great Baptist minister of England, when asked how many sermons a preacher could conveniently prepare in a week, replied: "If he is a man of pre-eminent ability, one; if he is a man of ordinary ability, two; if he is an ass, six."

This was fair. "Would you believe it," said Rev. Mr. Glibtongue, to one of his elders, "I never thought of that subject till I got into the pulpit." To which his elder replied: "That's just what wife and I were saying on our way home from church."

A pastor was leaving us at ten o'clock on Saturday night, remarking: "I've half of my sermon to write yet; don't you pity me?" To which we responded: "O, no! Not you, but the people."

A selfish person can have no joys greater than his own interests are valuable. A patriot may have joys as great as the welfare of his country is important. A philanthropist's joys may rise as high as the well-spring of the joys is precious. A benevolent person (and every true Christian is one) may have joys infinitely great; for he can rejoice in the happiness of God, the infinite, and of all the inhabitants of earth and heaven. Every one's joys will actually be greater in proportion as he gets away from selfishness, and becomes like God in his benevolence—that is, in his "love."

Important Inquiries.—Are you a Christian? If not, do you ever expect to be? If so, when? If God should call you to your final account, what reason could you give for impenitence? Might you not be a Christian now? Delay not, then, to seek salvation now, lest you should put it off too late. Receive these questions kindly from one who may never meet you till the day of judgment. Think of them seriously, think prayerfully, think now, act now.

"Buy without money." Say it over again: "Without money." What! is this the voice of your Beloved? Without price? Is it indeed without? How hard is this one lesson: "Without price!" My guilt can press me down; but can it press him down who bears up heaven and earth? Can my weakness hinder me from lying down? There is nothing more acceptable to him than for me to lie down upon him. You can never lean too hard upon the Well Beloved.—Henry Dorney.

Good manners is the art of making those people easy with whom we converse; whoever makes the fewest persons uneasy is the best bred man in company.—Swift.

"AS A LEAF."

BY FRANCES EASTWOOD.

Let me not fall, O Father! as a leaf
Cankered in spring-time, gnawed by hideous worms,
Dropping unwelcomed on the springing flowers,
And swept dishonored to a useless grave;
But rather let me, clinging to my place,
Through shower and sunshine, balmy wind and storm,
Wait till the fruit—thy fruit, thou gav'st it me,
And I have watched its ripening beauties long—
Be garnered safe. Then, when the little birds—
Those pleasant thoughts of God—have sung their sweet
Farewell to all their happy summer bowers,
And the low sun, still following to the South,
Casts his slant beams on rival harvest gold,
Let me burst forth in color; tint on tint
Rivaling rainbows; colors each with each
Forming a chord of harmony to the eye—
Creation's glorious hymn made visible!
Such grand old age crowning a happy life
As makes men pause and wonder why they thought
Spring-time so beautiful. This give me, Lord,
To go unto my grave as autumn leaves
Sink radiant to the earth, their work fulfilled,
And warm the roots of future glorious flowers!

RAIN-DROPS.

When thunder-clouds hang black in May,
Cool drops refresh the weary day
To man; in childhood's short-lived grief,
Fast-flowing tears bring sweet relief.

The clouds that come in winter's train
Drop snow instead of tender rain.
And duller grief can find no tears
To melt the ice of older years.

Dark Blue.

OLD LETTERS.

MR. EDITOR: You will, I trust, excuse me if I revert to the matter of old letters again. More thought upon the subject has given birth to more matter. The practical bearing of these fruits of reflection may be made of use to others; and if so, the end of the matter will have been accomplished.

Reader, did you ever think that the letters of those you cherish were to be made common, and the deep unvailings of the soul thoy expose to your eye were to be exposed to the gaze of all the world? Not a bit of it. It was this inner view of the heart of the writer that intensified their value and sacredness to you. Go one step farther, and behold in this a spirit of selfishness, growing out of the imperfection of this human nature which now clothes us, and which leads us to hoard up in our own heart the secrets penned in the honesty of the writer's heart. And what does this matter? say you; or what bearing has it upon the subject of old letters? Just this: that in the best of old letters, from the purest of our earthly friends, is there perfect guilelessness? Approximation to it there may be; but an unvailing of the entire being is wanting. But not so with those good old letters of which mention was made before; and herein lies their preciousness to the heart that opens wide to receive their fragrant sentiments. The author has kept nothing back. The more they are read the deeper do we penetrate into the character, the feelings, the loving affection of the author; and as we peruse and dig into the very being of the writer there flashes up in our own consciousness an affirmative response to each utterance. Let us go another step. To those treasured earthly old letters there is a limit of interest. The thoughts and ideas they bring before us are narrow—their horizon merges into a circle whose center and circumference is one and the same point, and soon we lay them aside as common-place. The first blush of interest and charm vanishes, and, like old clothes, they are thrust into the garret, where forgetfulness dwells.

But those other old letters, so sadly neglected, are indeed like unto a well of "living water." The sentiments they breathe are as vast and enduring as the eternity from whence they came; and they are clothed with freshness, for they are eternal life. They know no limitation, for God is their author. They seek not to hide—are not restrained by conscious imperfection from a clear unfolding of all the truth, for truth dwells in their inmost parts. Age lays no wrinkle upon their beauty, but adds thereto, and gives point and force to the ideas and thoughts they contain. The hope they give birth to is sure and steadfast, the consolation they afford is full, and the joy they pour into the weary soul lifts the load therefrom, and spans the horizon with the rainbow of a promise of "better things."

Dust-covered, neglected letters! thy words are sweeter than honey, and thy promises better than "fine gold."

Reader, have you eagerly run after the "trash" of the day, and filled yourself full of the world's wisdom, and drank in with greediness the frothy nothings which are scattered over the land, and suffered the spider to spin her silken threads, or the mud-wasp to display his skill in masonry, upon the rich old letters disposed in some dark nook of your dwelling? Or have you idly, and with rueful feelings now and then, consulted these charts of your eternal destiny? If so, your indifference and laziness will surely cast you up the coast of destruction. What think you, disciple of Christ, of the navigator who looks not at his chart and who takes no observation of the sun? Would you trust him your ship? How, then, if you would not, can you expect to reach the blessed port of eternal rest, and never look at your chart nor observe your sun, even the Sun of righteousness? Your chart, contained in these old letters, has safely carried a "host" to the final port; but it was because they heeded its directions. But let me tell you that eternity's beach is strewn with the wrecks of multitudes of other voyagers, who neglected its teachings.

Stand by your old letters in these times of sad falling away. They are sound in all their teachings. The angry storms of human passion have essayed to bury them in darkness; but ye are "children of the light"—"let not your hearts be troubled." May God's precious word be more studiously pondered by his children! Then will his kingdom come. INDAMORA.

MINISTERIAL SUPPORT.

MR. EDITOR: Your correspondent "Itinerant," with over twelve years' experience in the ministry, and three children, begins to feel uneasy, in the meridian of life, about the education of his children, etc., and evidently contemplates getting a home for his family. "Itinerant, Senior" gives him little comfort. He has had more than twice twelve years' experience, and God has given him more than three times three children. Yet, disappointed of the expectations of his early life, he asks, with more feeling than he dare express: "Is there no remedy?" Yes, there is a remedy. But that remedy is not in the abolition of the itinerant system, for the ministry of congregational churches is supported no better than that of our own church. Neither is it in the secularizing of the clergy, except in cases like that of our unknown brother, to whom God has given over three times three children. I think if he were to give me that many I should take it as an indication that he did not wish me to itinerate my family; and I should get them a home and try to feel: "Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord. Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them," etc. But as a general rule, "It is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables;" but rather that we should "give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word." Where, then, is the remedy? Let us begin at Jerusalem. 1. Our young preachers should not be in haste to marry. Wait a few years. There are charges unable to support married men. The demand for unmarried men is great, at least in the Conference to which I belong. Besides, a few years in the ministry without a wife will be greatly to their advantage in many ways, especially in their studies. 2. Let our preachers, all of them, old and young, "study to show themselves approved unto God—workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." And let them tarry at a throne of grace "until they be endued with power from on high." Then, with wisdom and in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, let them "bring forth out of their treasure things new and old." 3. Let them "visit from house to house," "diligently instructing the children in every place," and praying with the families. Brethren, you do not know how glad the people will be to see you, nor how happy it will make you feel, nor what a means of spiritual improvement it will be both to you and them, unless you have tried it in the true spirit of your Master.

By these means the spiritual condition of the church will be so improved that finances will become easy. A spiritual church is always a liberal church.

Now, let us look a little at stewards. Methodist people are the most liberal people in the world. A good system and a board of good stewards will insure a good pastor a good support in almost any charge in our connection. Our Discipline says: "Let the stewards be men of solid piety, who both know and love the Methodist doctrine and discipline, and of good natural and acquired abilities to transact the temporal business of the church." Bishop McTyeire, in the "Manual of the Discipline," (which every steward of our church ought to have,) says: "A careless or insufficient steward may, without positive opposition, starve out the ministry in the midst of plenty and a willing people; for no other member feels at liberty to act in his place, without appointment. He stands between the pastor and his support. He is the commissary of the church militant, and by his non-action can contribute more to defeat than all the strategy of the enemy. On the contrary, where energetic and liberal stewards are employed, the church partakes of their spirit, the congregation devises liberal things, poverty vies with wealth, and comparatively small and feeble societies amply sustain the institutions of the church." "A Steward," in the Nashville Christian Advocate of the seventh instant, after "fifteen years' experience as a steward," is of the opinion that "nearly every circuit and station in the connection can support a minister, adapted to its peculiarity, under a faithful board of stewards." He thinks, if the stewards will "study the Discipline as to their individual duties, they will find that their duties are a little more than spasmodic efforts, just before the Quarterly Meeting or close of the Conference year, to make up the deficiencies." He thinks they ought to "receive the minister after Conference with open hands and hearts, assuring him they will do all they can to support him, so as to place him above the painful necessity of saying 'money' to any of his congregations where his support is concerned." He is "sanguine, if our stewards are faithful working men in the church, our ministers can be well supported." And he concludes: "Brother stewards, it will not do to think only of your minister's support when pinching want drives him to you for help. Take all his cares of support off his hands, and leave him free to study, preach and visit his charge."

Now, Mr. Editor, give us faithful pastors and faithful stewards, and we will forever hush the complaints about ministerial support. "Oh! what a happy day" that will be! L.

SPIRIT OF FELLOWSHIP.

MR. EDITOR: Will you allow me space in your paper to call the attention of members of our church to a matter that is, so far as my observation goes, too little appreciated among us.

I allude to the exhibition and active expression of that spirit of fellowship and fraternity that should exist among all Christians, but more especially between members of the same organizations. In the various semi-religious orders, such as Odd Fellowship and Masonry, we see an example which it would be well to imitate, and even, if possible, to improve upon. There the accession of a new member is made a subject of cordial congratulation to the new-comer, and an expression of good feeling and fraternity is at once called forth that is alike a source of true pleasure to the givers and the recipient. The brethren seek out the neophyte, and by their action show that the tie which binds them in one common brotherhood is not of mere words or conventionality, but has its origin in the heart. The new-comer finds at once that he has fallen among brethren whose interests and sympathies are aroused in his behalf, and the restraints which coldness and indifference throw around the stranger lose their congealing influence beneath the friendly glow of brotherly love.

It is certainly different in the church, among those children of a common Father, who ought to be closer drawn to each other than members of any other organization. Yet if we except the pastor, and perhaps the class-leader, few of our members ever become in any way interested, or in any manner evince any sympathy either in the spiritual or temporal welfare of new members.

Only the great day will reveal how many a trembling footstep might have been stayed in the path of Christian duty, if only the hand of fellowship had been extended to, or a word of Christian sympathy had fallen upon the ear of a younger brother in the hour of temptation or despair. Only he whose lot has been cast in a strange land can appreciate the cheering force of sympathy from his brethren, or how the soul of such a one longs for its expression, "as the hart panteth after the water-brook."

How much, then, does it behoove us to be mindful of this thing, and give to our younger brethren, or the stranger in our midst, that which impoverishes us not, but makes him rich indeed.

Yours fraternally, EMERALD.

OUR PAPERS.

Their Utility to the Church, Limited Circulation, Etc.

MR. EDITOR: Whether it be a fault or not, I am fond of newspapers. A habit, formed necessarily when I was a boy, has cleaved to me ever since—reading newspapers. I was reared partly in a printing office. Of course, now I prefer to read our church papers before all others. I am interested with and for them more than all others. No traveling Methodist preacher can fail to realize and appreciate the valuable service rendered him in his work by the weekly visits of the ADVOCATE. He is posted himself in the affairs of the church by this means, and the people of his charge are also informed, with regard to all his grand and glorious movements, as they could not be otherwise. My observation is that the church member who takes the ADVOCATE is always the most liberal man in support of the minister, the missionary cause, Bible society, Sunday schools and all the enterprises of the church, and is generally the most spiritual, earnest Christian. These facts, you would say, should make every preacher an active agent for the ADVOCATE. Agreed. But, my dear brother, much depends upon the field a man has to operate in. Have you ever traveled a circuit out in the interior? In the "pine woods" there are just as good people as you will find anywhere, but the masses are not accustomed to reading. They have excused themselves for "want of time." They "have to work." But people work in towns and cities. Do they not? Really, these excuses are not valid. The people have time enough to read. But you cannot convince them readily on this point. Then, again, they imagine they are too "poor to take the ADVOCATE." But many who say this take one or more secular papers. I know of some families who take the Ledger and the New York Weekly; and the ladies dip snuff and read the miserable trash published in these papers, yet cannot take the ADVOCATE. Shame! shame! shame!

How shall we remedy this evil? Bishop McTyeire, writing in the Nashville Advocate, says that the ratio of the circulation of our church papers is about "one to every fifteen members."

Now every family connected with our church ought certainly to take some one of the Advocates. Our Advocate family is so domiciled that they can report from all parts of the great field occupied by the Methodist Episcopal Church South, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Ohio river to the Gulf of Mexico. How grateful to the household would be the weekly visit of some one of our papers hailing from one's native State, bringing tidings of the glorious work of God, and accounts of the triumphant exit of former friends from this vale of tears to a home in the skies. Oh! that we could stimulate our people to subscribe for the church papers, to read our books; then their Christianity would be more intelligent, their zeal more active, and God would bless us more abundantly. Yours, H. J. H.

AN ETERNAL LIE!

Coming from market, the other morning, I heard one boy say to another, (I was just overtaking and passing them:) "Then he told me an eternal lie!" I pondered on it a moment. Yes, thought I, if it was a lie, it was "an eternal lie!"—it will be a lie to all eternity. What dread significance it imparts to an act, that its moral character is immutable and everlasting. We may repent, and God, for Christ's sake, may forgive, and we may escape the punishment due the sin; but all this will never change the nature of the act. All varying time may wear down mountains to the level of the plain, may crumble empires to ruin, but it can never change the moral character of a human act. Nay, more: as it will involve a contradiction to make the wrong right, or the false true, Omnipotence cannot change the nature of the act, for contradictions are not objects of power; if wrong, then the immutable law is always wrong. Think, then, when tempted to sin, that your soul is tempted to give birth to an evil that can never change nor never die. Let the thought startle you, and strengthen you to repel the tempter.—W., in Galveston Christian Advocate.

CHARLOTTE ELLIOTT.

Few of the tens of thousands, says the New York Observer, who have received spiritual light and comfort from reading and singing the hymn,

Just as I am, without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that thou bid'st me come to thee,
O Lamb of God! I come, I come,

have had any knowledge of the author, or when or where she lived. But there is not one whose heart will not be touched by learning that the author, Charlotte Elliott, has just passed into the presence of God and the Lamb. She died at her residence in Torquay, England, on the twenty-second ultimo, after a long and painful illness.

She was related on her mother's side to the Venn family, one of whom, the author of the "Complete Duty of Man," was intimately associated with John Newton and Thomas Scott and Charles Simeon. She was also a sister of the Rev. Henry Elliott, a distingnished scholar and preacher, and author of "Horæ Apocalypticæ."

She was the author of many other hymns, which have been read and sung the world over with feelings akin to those awakened by the one already mentioned; among them the sweet hymn:

My God and Father, while I stray
Far from my home on life's rough way,
O help me from my heart to say,
Thy will be done!

And the following, not so familiar on this side of the sea:

My God! is any hour so sweet—
From blush of morn to evening star—
As that which calls me to thy feet?
The hour of prayer.

The London Record, in announcing her death, adds the following tribute to the influence of her writings:

"It is not too much to say that no Christian poet ever did more to awaken the souls of sinners and to point them to Christ. Thousands in all parts of the world have received through the words of the hymn—"Just as I am"—into their hearts the saving truths of the gospel, and have found there the peace and comfort which can only flow from the truth as it is in Jesus. To have written that one hymn is a far higher honor than to have worn a crown, and many will call her blessed for the sweet and comforting assurance which it conveys.

"To all who have derived comfort and encouragement from her writings, it will be a source of thankfulness to know that she passed through deep waters and the valley of the shadow of death, leaning on the arm of that Savior and friend of whose all-sufficiency and preciousness she has so wonderfully and beautifully written. Being dead, she yet speaks, and will continue whilst our language lasts to speak of the power of Christ's blood to cleanse and his grace to sustain. To all she has written on this subject there is now the added testimony of her own experience in the time of sickness and in the hour of death."

GOD'S SPECIAL PROVIDENCE.

It is said that Fletcher, when a young man, was very anxious to join the army to go to South America. The vessel was ready to start, friends secured him an appointment, but the morning he was to have sailed, the servant, in coming into his room at breakfast, stumbled and spilled over him the boiling coffee, and so scalded him that he was unable to go on his journey. He lamented the accident—was disappointed in all his plans; but the vessel was never heard from. Fletcher was spared to become a preacher of the gospel, a man who wielded by his pen, as well as by his voice, an overwhelming influence upon the minds of men, and being dead, yet speaketh. No miracle was wrought. Wesley, the little boy, is sleeping in the upper story of Epworth Rectory. It is on fire; he is forgotten; but suddenly a woman remembers there is a child asleep, and she calls, and the child shows his head at the window; and a brave man, at the risk of himself being burned, mounts a ladder, and the little fellow throws himself into his arms and is saved, and Wesley is spared to enlighten the world. No law of nature is violated; but oh! these suggestions, these thoughts that drop from heaven, that change and mold the whole sphere of our lives! This breathing! God breathed into man, and he became a living soul. Jesus, when he arose from the dead, breathed and said: "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." That spirit of breathing, that spiritual influence, it comes down on the hearts of men, and may change and fashion and mold and save, and yet all these laws of nature remain uniform and immutable. God is all around us. God's laws stand all the time. We lean on them like pillars of the universe. We place our feet on them like the rock of ages. We hold fast to them, knowing the foundations shall give way sooner than they. And yet, in the midst of all these, there is a sphere under which we can work in harmony with those laws and have their protecting power, and still God can care for the men who care for him. Here is the whole realm in which we may find safety. I will not say positively that God never interfered with nature's laws—that there is never any response in this direction in answer to prayer. I will not make the affirmation that God never suspends a natural law; but I will say, I see no necessity for it. Christ never showed any example of it in his own life; and save when there was a necessity for declaring God was there, that he might give a revelation, and men might know it was from God, we find no such case of miraculous intervention. And now, then, if God can so work, what is to prevent us feeling we are encircled within his arms and his power attends us?—Bishop Simpson, in the Methodist.

THE END OF THE PILGRIMAGE.—Fear not, thou that longest to be at home. A few steps more and thou art there. Death to God's people is but a ferryboat. Every day and every hour the boat pushes off with some of the saints, and returns for more. Soon, O believer, it will be said to thee, as it was to her in the gospel: "The Master is come, and calleth for thee." When you are got to the boundary of your race below, and stand on the verge of heaven and the confines of immortality, then there will be nothing but the short valley of death between you and the promised land; the labors of your pilgrimage will then be on the point of conclusion, and you will have nothing to do but to entreat God as Moses did: "I pray thee, let me go over, and see the good land that is beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain, and Lebanon."—Toplady.

MINISTERIAL POVERTY.

It is thought by many very good people that it is a beneficial thing to keep preachers quite poor. They say it makes them humble, and all that. But it isn't often that such advisers are willing to take their own prescriptions. While it may be a means of grace for preachers to be poor, they are far from thinking poverty would advance themselves on the road to heaven. A good deacon once said to the wife of a clergyman, whose salary was small, that it was a good thing for ministers to have limited means. It tended to increase their faith and to make them more spiritual. To which it was replied that if it were a good thing for ministers, why not for the deacons, and for the other members of the church?

It reminds us of an actual case which occurred over in Kentucky. A church, which "enjoyed" once-a-month preaching at about $100 a year, got considerably behind in paying the preacher. He, growing restive by the pinchings of poverty, concluded to give them a sermon on the text: "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel." He enforced the duty of ministerial support so cogently that a penurious deacon cried out: "Bro. Dobbs, you are not preaching the ra' truth. The 'postle is talking about spiritual food, and not about money. The preachers ought to be fed on spiritual food; that's what he means." "Well, brethren," said the preacher, "I don't know but what I might get along on that. But—pointing through the window to his old gray mare tied to the fence—what's to become of Old Dobbin there!"

THE RELIGIOUS SCOFFER.—The following is related of the celebrated Dr. Belknap:

Upon a certain occasion, in the presence of a vast and brilliant assemblage, a person more noted for his self-esteem than for his learning was speaking against the Christian religion in terms of the severest scorn and derision.

Unfortunately for the orator, his remarks were overheard by the doctor, who, stepping up to him, asked: "Well, sir, have you found a religion that is better?" The scoffer, considerably abashed by this unlooked-for question, was forced to acknowledge that thus far he had not. "Well," responded the doctor, "when you have, let me know, and I will join you in adopting it."

The rebuke was as wise as it was just.

Of all classes of sinners, certainly the religious scoffer is the least to be envied. No followers of Satan receive poorer wages, no transgressor against God shall be more severely punished. "Whoso despiseth the word shall be destroyed."

THE "SILVER RULE."—Paste it Up.—You all know the golden rule: "Do unto others as you would wish them to do unto you." Here is a rule which is almost a part of the golden rule, but which we will put by itself, and, because of its value, call it the "silver rule:" "Think and say all you can of the good qualities of others; forget and keep silent concerning their bad qualities." You cannot conceive how much such a course will lighten your own happiness, and raise you in the esteem of your mates. Did you ever think any more of a boy or girl because he or she found faults with others? Never call your schoolmates or playmates ugly or cross to their faces, nor behind their backs. If they are ugly, or stingy or cross, it does not make them better to talk or think about it, while it makes you love to dwell upon the faults of others, and causes your own soul to grow smaller and you become like the foul bird that prefers carrion for food. Rather tell all the good you can, and try to think of some good quality.

THE PRAYER OF HOPE.—O, eternal Light! without which we cannot live, abide with us in this sad world of night and sin. O, Sun of life and grace, show thyself to us specially, when we are about to quit this vale of tears! O, Prince of life! when our eyes are closing on the light of day, take us by the hand, and lift us up to the palace of thy glory, when we shall behold thee with open face, on the day of the resurrection of the just. With the warmth of thy divine love revive the ashes in our tombs on the great day of the restitution of all things; and from these ashes raise those plants which shall bloom forever, and adorn the paradise of God!—Drelincourt.

A LITTLE bit of a thing, who had just got back from a party, was asked by her mamma how she had enjoyed herself. "O mamma!" she said, "I'm so full of happiness; I couldn't be no happier, without I was bigger."

A NEW TREATISE on precious stones declares that after all mankind, if wise, will say of precious stones, the most valuable as well as the most useful stone in the world is the grindstone.

THE DESERT ROCK.

BY HORATIUS BONAR.

"They drank of that spiritual rock that followed them; and that rock was Christ."—First Cor. x, 4.

Rock of the desert, pouring still
Thy stream the thirsty soul to fill;
Rock of the desert, now as full
Of living water, pure and cool,
We stand beside thy stream.

Rock of eternity, to thee
In thirst and weariness we flee;
Thy waters cannot cease to pour;
Their fullness is for evermore.
Let him that thirsteth come.

Bright water of eternity,
We come, we come, to drink of thee.
The voice of welcome that we hear,
The voice dispelling every fear,
Is, "Whosoever will."

River of life, upon thy brink
We sit and of thy waters drink;
The murmur of thy sparkling wave
Speaks still of Him who came to save,
Who bids us drink and live.

River of peace, so full and bright,
Each drop clear-shining with the light;
And still the voice that comes from thee,
The voice that telleth all is free,
Is, "Whosoever will."

River of love, so deep and wide,
All heaven is in thy flowing tide;
For all the love of God is here,
The love that casteth out all fear,
The "whosoever will."

River of God, still flowing on,
Thy source the everlasting throne.
River of Heaven, translucent stream,
Thy fullness ever at the brim
For "whosoever will."

River of health, thy current pours
Its freshness on these leprous shores!
Pure Jordan, bidding all draw nigh,
For health and immortality,
With "whosoever will."

Dear river, what a sun is thine!
What glories on thy waters shine,
What freshness in each sparkling drop;
And still the voice that cometh up
Is, "Whosoever will."

THE "OLD CATHOLIC" CHURCH.

If any enthusiastic persons have been expecting a thing so unprecedented in history as the sudden, complete crystallization of a sound, orthodox, evangelical church from within the Church of Rome, the news from the Liberal Catholic Conference at Munich has served to disappoint and disabuse them, and they are probably ready to denounce the whole of the marvelous movement of opinion which was there manifested as a bad business—not much better, in fact, than flat popery. On the other hand, some sanguine and sentimental people will be quite ready to declare (as they seem to have done the other day in the Episcopal Convention in Baltimore) that the programme laid down by the Munich Liberals is quite satisfactory; that henceforth there is no dogmatic bar between them and Protestants, and that we give them the right hand of fellowship. We are disposed to think that sensible folks generally would choose to take a second look at the "programme" before committing themselves so far.

The articles of it are, for substance, these:

I. Rejection of the dogmas proclaimed by Pius the Ninth, and especially that of infallibility.

II. Adhesion to the Tridentine constitution of the church, declaring especially

(a) That an Ecumenical Council is necessary to make authoritative decrees of dogma; and even this cannot make such decrees in opposition to fundamental truth and past history.

(b) That the decrees of a council must conform to Catholic belief and tradition, and may be judged by this test, by Catholic clergy and laity, as well as by theologians.

III. Reform of the church by abatement of abuses, and admission of the Catholic peoples to a share in the direction of ecclesiastical affairs. Under this head it is declared:

1. That the Church of Utrecht is unjustly excommunicated for Jansenism, being in fact orthodox.

2. That there is no dogmatic hinderance to a hoped-for reunion with the Greek and Oriental churches.

3. That in the progress of science and Christian culture it is to be hoped that an understanding may be reached with the various Protestant churches, especially with the Episcopal churches of England and America.

4. Liberal education of the clergy, and protection of the lower clergy from episcopal tyranny.

5. Loyalty to civil government, and therefore repudiation of the Syllabus.

6. Condemnation of the Jesuits as a mischief-making and demoralizing institution.

7. A claim to the church property for themselves, as the true representatives of the Old Church as it was before the Vatican Council.

8. Assertion of the right of the censured priests in circumstances of necessity to perform ecclesiastical functions, and provision by which such services can be furnished where they are needed. Further, an assertion of the right in the circumstances of inviting foreign bishops to perform episcopal functions.

This eighth article, which will be recognized as the practically important one of the whole paper, inasmuch as it looks to organization and action, was brought in as an amendment to the original draft by Dr. Dollinger, and carried through against his strenuous opposition. His abhorrence of the idea of schism, the growth of fourscore years, forbade him to tolerate what can hardly bear any other name than the organization of a sect—or, at best, a national church in protest against the holy see. Happily for the vitality of the movement, his counsels were overruled; and the Old Catholic Church of Germany—perhaps we may also say, with Father Hyacinthe, not of Germany, but of Europe and the world—is henceforth a new factor in ecclesiastical history.—Independent.

THE NOVEL-READING DISEASE.

Physicians are familiar with a complaint which, although sufficiently specific, has yet no name of its own. The patient suffers from an alarming and morbid thirst, and consumes a perfectly fabulous amount of fluid, almost always of an unwholesome nature. Tea in a highly dilute shape, eau sucre, raspberry vinegar and water, soda water or some other such abominable mess, is taken by the gallon, and the unnatural craving is stimulated by indulgence.

"Crescit indulgens sibi dirus hydrops
Nec sitim pellit."

Wholesome food is refused; no exercise is taken; and the patient finally sinks into a flabby and sickly condition, which nothing but severe and determined treatment will shake off. This dropsical habit of body finds its exact analogue in the species of mental dropsy which is produced by over-indulgence in three-volumed novels. This terrible complaint is one of the worst evils which modern civilization has brought with it. Its progress is gradual, very insidious, and often almost imperceptible. At first all that is noticed is that the sufferer is apt to be found bent over a novel at unnatural hours—as, say, in the early morning or in the middle of a beautiful summer's afternoon. Soon, however, the disease becomes more pronounced, and in its worst stages novels are got through at the rate of three or four, or even five a week, or at an average, in a severe and chronic case, of some two hundred and fifty or three hundred a year. At first some discrimination is exercised, and one writer is, perhaps, preferred to another—Mr. Trollope, say, to Mrs. Ross Church, or "Ouida" to the author of "Guy Livingstone." Very soon, however, the taste becomes deadened and blunted, and all power of distinction and appreciation is lost. In this stage the unhappy patient can no more go without her novel than can a confirmed dipsomaniac without his dram. The smaller circulating libraries, which lend out very second-hand novels indeed at a penny a volume, are put under contribution, and any amount of garbage is swallowed wholesale. Quality is held absolutely of no importance, and quantity is everything. The very process of reading becomes more or less mechanical, and seems to afford a species of mechanical pleasure or satisfaction, a novel of the feeblest possible type being read as religiously from cover, and yielding apparently as much enjoyment as if it were a second "Romola." It is no uncommon thing for a young lady, in whom the complaint has assumed a chronic form, to have read the whole of Scott, the whole of Thackeray, the whole of Dickens, the whole of Trollope, the whole of Annie Thomas, the whole of Mrs. Ross Church, the whole of Miss Braddon, the whole of Lawrence, and, into the bargain, some four or five hundred other novels by less famous hands. When the disease is thus confirmed, the dropsical habit of mind becomes apparent. The conversation of the patient becomes flabby and limp. Her interest in all ordinary subjects—except, perhaps, the latest fashions, or the more scandalous portions of evidence in the Tichbourne case, or the marriage of the Princess Beatrice—flickers feebly in the socket, and finally dies out. The last stage—that of absolute imbecility—is now, unless very powerful remedies are exhibited, a mere matter of time.

It is too clear, unfortunately, why it is that so many women thus waste their time and rot their minds. They read novels, exactly as some young men smoke, and drink bitter beer, for sheer want of something to do. What a woman needs is an education which shall enable her to read and follow the Parliamentary debates instead of the police and divorce reports; and, when women are thus educated, then feeble novels and feeble novelists will vex our souls no longer to the horrible extent to which they irritate us at present. Of such an education we may say that it is not to be got in books, unless, indeed, books can give sound, healthy common sense, and wholesome interest in common subjects. But men can give it by making the women of their family their companions; and that they should neglect to give it, shows, after all, how inveterately deep-seated is the extraordinary notion that the intellectual difference between men and women is one of kind and not of degree.—London Examiner.

FORGOT HIS TEXT.

The Second Presbyterian church of Danville, Kentucky, being without a pastor for the present, the different ministers of the town, especially those connected with the theological seminary, preach alternately to the orphan congregation, and lately it was Dr. Yerkes' turn to deliver a sermon to a large assembly. In an eloquent oration he uttered the words of divine truth, when suddenly—horrible dictu!—a member affected with a bad cold commenced blowing his nose most violently. A terrible blowing it was, such as you never heard before in all your life, and such as the poor doctor never hopes to hear again. It evidently had swept the whole of the beautiful sermon out of his memory, and having no notes about him he tried in vain to restore the broken connection. But, alas! he could discover neither end, and the frightened doctor exclaimed:

"Bro. McMullen, will you oblige me by repeating the text?"

The reverend brother arose from his seat, thought awhile, stammered, hesitated, and sat down again; he gave it up.

After a long pause, a student said: "First Corinthians, x, 16."

Relieved from a great burden, the happy doctor opened the Bible, but only to find that it was a sad mistake.

"This is not the right one. Please can any one recollect the text?"

A dead silence followed. Prof. Beatty, of Center College, rubbed his head in despair, but he neither rubbed the text out of nor into it. Rev. Mr. Johnson and many of his brethren, together with the whole congregation, all were unable to find the lost darling.

The laughter which followed now was indescribable, and quite a time passed before the house could be called to order. It being finally restored, the doctor called on Mr. McMullen to close the meeting with prayer, and all adjourned, perfectly convinced that they had listened to one of the most remarkable sermons ever preached.—Correspondent Louisville Commercial.

TO SAVE SOULS.

Matthew Henry was accustomed to say: "To win a single soul from Satan to Christ would afford me greater joy than to possess a mountain of silver and gold." Of the godly Alleine it was said: "He was infinitely, insatiably greedy of the conversion of souls."

When Christians all have this mind to work for their Lord, how will the sheaves be multiplied. A great many things we take pleasure in now we shall find no joy in when the last hour comes. But if we can remember even one poor child God permitted us to lead into his kingdom, it will afford us more comfort than coffers of gold.

When Dr. Lyman Beecher lay on his dying bed, a brother minister said to him: "Dr. Beecher, you know a great deal; tell us what is the greatest of all things?" Let all embassadors of Christ mark his answer:

"It is not theology; it is not controversy; it is to save souls."

We must labor and pray for souls as those who must give account to God for every one we might influence, if we would be successful. We need the spirit of John Welsh, who, on the coldest winter nights, would rise to pray and wrestle with God for a blessing on his flock. In reply to his wife's remonstrance, he answered:

"Oh, woman! I have three thousand souls to give account to God for, and I know not how it is with many of them."

Like the blessed Brainard, he needs to be willing to deny himself, if by it he can better win souls.

"I cared not how or where I lived," he said, "or what hardships I went through, so that I could but gain souls to Christ. While I was asleep I dreamed of these things, and when I awaked the first thing I thought of was this great work. All my desire was for the conversion of the heathen, and all my hope was in God."—Sunday School Times.

INSTRUCTION AND EDUCATION.—We see plainly that a greater proportion of mankind are, so far as their reason and intelligence are concerned, in the condition of children: governed by instinct, appetite and passion; uncontrolled by conscience and judgment; ready for any impression; prepared to tread any path marked out that leads to any indulgence, bodily or mental. The remedy for this is plain, palpable, and on the surface; difficult in detail, but ultimately practicable—a sound form of education, secular and religious. Education, we say, not instruction; nothing is more dangerous than knowledge to the mind without the capacity to make a proper use of it; then, indeed, it does but afford an additional facility for the commission of crime.—A Physician's Problems.

HOW TO BE HANDSOME.

Most people like to be handsome. Nobody denies the greater power which any person may have who has a good face, and who attracts you by good looks, even before a word has been spoken. And we see all sorts of devices in men and women to improve their good looks—paints and washes, and all kinds of cosmetics, including a plentiful anointing with dirty hair oil.

Now, not every one can have good features. They are as God made them; but almost any one can look well, especially with good health. It is hard to give rules in a very short space, but in brief these will do:

Keep clean—wash freely and universally with cool water. All the skin wants is leave to act freely, and it will take care of itself. Its thousands of air-holes must not be plugged up.

Eat regularly and simply. The stomach can no more work all the time, night and day, than a horse; it must have regular work and regular rest.

Good teeth are a help to good looks. Brush them with a soft brush, especially at night. Go to bed with the teeth clean. Of course, to have white teeth it is needful to let tobacco alone. Every woman knows that. And any powder or wash for the teeth should be very simple. Acids may whiten the teeth, but they take off the enamel or injure it.

Sleep in a cool room, in pure air. No one can have a clear skin who breathes bad air. But, more than all, in order to look well, wake up the mind and soul. When the mind is awake the dull, sleepy look passes away from the eyes. I do not know that the brain expands, but it seems to. Think, read—not trashy novels, but books that have something in them; talk with people who know something; hear lectures and learn by them.

This is one good of preaching. A man thinks and works and tells us the result. And if we listen, and hear and understand, the mind and soul are waked up.

If the spiritual nature is aroused, so much the better.

We have seen a plain face really glorified by the love of God and man which shone through it.

Let us grow handsome.

EYEBROWS AND EYELASHES.

The long, arched, narrow eyebrow is the prettiest, as we all know, but it is rare. It would not be so rare, however, if a little more care were taken in its cultivation during early youth. For instance, if a child's eyebrows should threaten to be thin, brush them softly every night with a little cocoanut oil, and they will gradually become strong and full; and, in order to give them a curve, press them gently between the thumb and forefinger after every ablution of the face or hands. Simple as this may seem, I have known the most wonderful effects result from it. I have seen girls with wide, straggling eyebrows reduce them into an arch-like shape within a year, solely by these means, and surely all will allow that they are permissible.

Then, again, as regards eyelashes, every mother knows that she has only to clip her baby's eyelashes while it sleeps, and continue the process during its childhood, to render them as long and as luxuriant as a Circassian's. Yet how few think of taking this precaution, which, indeed, is as necessary as cutting the hair, for those who study their daughter's future beauty. Let ladies, however, beware how they try the experiment on their own eyelashes, for they do not grow after a certain age. I remember a young friend of mine who had received from nature as rich an eyelid fringe as woman could have, and who, in her young wisdom, thought to make it richer still by clipping it. She did clip it, and quite short. When next I saw her there was only a thick, dark stump round her eyes, which stump has remained ever since, for the fringe never grew again. Childhood is the time for cropping, not womanhood.

HOW DOES SHE DO IT?—Mrs. Russell always has time to do a kindness, yet she is a hard-working woman. Her husband is poor. His wages are not enough to supply the family needs; so, in addition to her home cares, which are not light—for she has six children, one a young baby—she goes out to wash several days in the week. How can she keep her house looking so neat and her children so well dressed?

How does she do it?

In answer to the question, she replied:

"I never lose sight of the odd minutes. I have so much to do that there is always something I can turn to if I have a minute to spare."

Here is a lesson for us all to learn—to improve the odd minutes.—Child's Paper.

AN EXTREME rigor is sure to arm everything against it, and at length to relax into a supine neglect.—Burke.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

REV. HARMON LOOMIS, D. D., for twenty-five years a corresponding secretary of the American Seamen's Friend Society in New York, has retired from that office.

THE New Union Biblical Seminary of the United Brethren in Christ was formally opened in Dayton, Ohio, on the eleventh ultimo. It is the first theological school of the denomination.

BIBLE SCHOOL was the name Dr. Chalmers preferred for the Sabbath school. The difficulty with introducing that name generally would be that it is not every Sunday school which is a Bible school.

THE Baptists have twenty-four organized churches and the same number of native ordained preachers in the Creek nation proper. Four of the ministers are employed by the Domestic and Indian Mission Board. The rest name no help.

THE BIBLE IN SCHOOLS.—The Board of Education of Long Island City has ordered a suspension of the reading of the Scriptures in the Union School of Hunter's Point until their next meeting, when arguments will be heard by Roman Catholics and Protestants.

A MORAVIAN DEDICATION.—A new Moravian church, costing about $24,000, was dedicated on the tenth ultimo, in Jay street, Brooklyn. Bishop Reineke conducted services. The new edifice is a neat one, and is built on the site occupied by the one burned two or three years ago.

DURING SEPTEMBER, forty-eight libraries, having on an average forty-five volumes, most carefully selected and very attractive in their character, were placed on sea-going ships, from the rooms of the American Seamen's Friend Society, 80 Wall street, for the use of officers and crews.

MISSION IN KANSAS.—The Congregationalists, the present year, divide $21,000 missionary money among their fifty ministers in Kansas; the Presbyterians $17,000 among their seventy; the Episcopalians $5,000 among their twelve missionaries; and the Methodists $6,000 among their one hundred and fifty ministers. So says an exchange.

THE BIBLE IN CHINA.—From the Chinese Recorder we learn that the committee of Protestant missionaries at Pekin, who have for some time been engaged in preparing a revised edition of the Bible in Chinese, have now nearly completed their labors, and that the revised text will shortly be published by the American Mission Press within the walls of the capital.

THE one hundred and third anniversary of John Street church, New York city, was held on Sunday, October 29. In the morning a love-feast was held, under direction of Presiding Elder Merwin. Dr. Peck preached the morning sermon. The Rev. E. L. James presided at the reunion in the afternoon. The Rev. Thomas Guard preached in the evening. Philip Phillips had charge of the singing.

THE Unitarians are going to drop their project of a new church in Washington, and threw themselves with all their might into the work of rebuilding Robert Collyer's church at Chicago. The executive committee of the Unitarian Association voted, at a recent meeting, to appropriate $3,000 toward the payment of Mr. Collyer's salary for the coming year, and to raise $100,000 for the new Unity church.

WHEN the native preacher in India is laid aside by sickness, or temporarily called from his post, his wife takes his place. She conducts the service and preaches the sermon. A great change this since the missionary work begun there. When Mr. Noyes went out, twenty-three years ago, there was but one woman in all his wide district who could read. Now there are many.—Congregationalist.

A CATHOLIC UNION has been organized in New York city, under the auspices of Archbishop McCloskey. Its object is stated to be, "first, to invite the co-operation of the whole Catholic world to unite in the effort to reinstate the holy father, then to devise every available method of controverting the tendency of the age to materialism, and to neutralize the effect of the daily press upon the minds of the people." Money is promised in abundance to aid its work.

THE Freewill Baptists lately in session at Hillsdale, Ohio, discussed the project of modifying the name of the denomination, and of making overtures to the various bodies of liberal Baptists—those calling themselves Free Baptists, General Baptists, United Baptists, Separate Baptists, Church of God, and the rest—to co-operate with them, and to be represented in the General Conference, without surrendering their specific name or changing their peculiar methods of managing their local affairs.

THE cardinals have been discussing in solemn conclave the claim of the King of Italy to a supremacy of rule in the city and domain of the holy see. They have finally advised his holiness to quit Rome, in order to preserve his spiritual independence. The Pope received the decision of the cardinals with a very considerable degree of favor, after some hesitation; and he has partially determined to take his departure from Rome at the moment of the convocation of the Italian Parliament within the bounds of the municipality.

THE King of Burmah has informed Prof. Max Muller, through his prime minister, the Pakhan Mangyee, that he is printing a complete edition of the Three Beedaghats, (the Tripitaka—that is, the Holy Scriptures of the Buddhists,) in Pali, the sacred language of Buddhism, with a view to having it afterward translated into Burmese and English, "so as to spread the knowledge of the Buddhist religion both in Europe and America, and that the English people may become acquainted with the principles of the Buddhist faith, and thus cause this kingdom to become famous in the world's history."

AN ENCOURAGING view comes from facts like the following, showing the self-spreading tendency and necessity inherent in Christianity wherever a true seed of it takes good ground. A native brother, Subha Chund, of Rona, near Allahabad, India, urged by the love of Christ, having made over his farm to his son, and bought a camel for the purpose, has loaded it with Christian books, and gone forth at his own cost on a long journey to spread the gospel. He has been absent for months, and no word has yet come from him. It was his purpose to carry the name of Christ and the glad tidings of salvation into the wild desert of Rajpootana, among a people who have never seen the face of a Christian.

THE Church Weekly, in a spirit of wrath, inquires: "Now, suppose the bishop decides that candidates for the priesthood should be habited in cassock and girded alb, and that, on their being admitted to the priesthood, they should then be habited in stole and chasuble of the color of the season, how can a canon invade the liberty which the Rubric gives? And, if this is put upon him as the vestment of his priestly ministration, we should like to know by what authority a canon is to divest him." That is precisely what we all want to know. And that is not all. Suppose the bishop should require that deacons should wear bibs at their meals, and that priests should cross their legs whenever they sit down in company, would not that be a highly important and holy command? and where is the convention, let us ask, that would dare to make a breach in it by means of a canon?—Independent.

THE Rev. S. W. Marston gives in the Central Baptist an account of the Baptist Association and Sunday School Convention in the Cherokee nation. The association is composed of ten churches, with a total membership of about nine hundred. The Cherokee Baptists, however, now have only six Sunday schools in all their territory; but if the measures set on foot at this convention meeting are carried into effect, they may be able to report by another year ten times this number. Each church has quite a number of preaching stations where schools will be organized. Besides, the superintendent of public instruction, Mr. Stephens, who is now the secretary of the Sunday School Convention, signifies his intention to have a Sunday school organized in connection with each one of the sixty-six public schools in the nation. It is added that of the sixteen thousand persons composing the Cherokee nation, it is estimated that not less than one-tenth are the faithful disciples of the Lord Jesus. All the children are learning to read English, and the Baptist Bible and Publication Society are asked to furnish thirteen hundred English Testaments for the Sunday schools.

CALAMITY TO THE CHURCH IN MICHIGAN.—Among the towns which the devastating Michigan fires destroyed was Holland City, a stronghold of the Dutch Reformed faith. Two beautiful churches were swept away. Rev. Dr. Phelps, chairman of the Relief Committee, writes: "Upward of three hundred families are homeless—most of them penniless. Among them is that of Prof. Scott, of the Reformed College, who, after the most laborious exertions in behalf of others, found his own dwelling suddenly overtaken, and lost his house with all its furniture, books and clothing. So also Dominie Van Der Veen returned from labors elsewhere just in time to save his family, with his books and sermons alone. The parsonage of Hope church was preserved chiefly through extraordinary exertions on the part of Dominie Stewart. The students and others labored day and night, in pain and exhaustion, for the safety of the college buildings, and although the danger was imminent, a merciful Providence gave success to their efforts." The Reformed churches in the land are urgently asked for relief for the poor people of Holland.

ROMAN CATHOLICS AND THE BIBLE.

A correspondent wishes to know if the Bible and Protestant preaching were prohibited at Rome and in Spain before the recent political changes. We doubt whether any respectable Roman Catholic authority will claim that it was otherwise. Wherever the Catholic Church has been able to control the matter, it has carefully excluded all Protestant religious organizations. Until the downfall of Isabella, Spain was closed to evangelical agencies, and religious liberty was one of the new and most important principles involved in the revolution, and secured by the present government. The Bible was almost an unknown book in Rome until Victor Emanuel made it his capital, and opened its gates to missionaries and Bible societies. The opposition of Romanism to the general circulation of the Scriptures has been uniform and consistent for centuries.

It was in reference to their own authorized version that the Council of Trent enacted as follows: "Inasmuch as it is manifest, from experience, that if the holy Bible, translated into the vulgar tongue, be indiscriminately allowed to every one, the temerity of men will cause more evil than good to arise from it, it is, on this point, referred to the judgment of the bishops or inquisitors, who may, by the advice of the priest or confessor, permit the reading of the Bible, translated into the vulgar tongue by Catholic authors, to those persons whose faith and piety they apprehend will be augmented and not injured by it; and this permission they must have in writing. But if any shall have the presumption to read or possess it without any such written permission, he shall not receive absolution until he have first delivered up such Bible to the ordinary. Booksellers, however, who shall sell or otherwise dispose of Bibles in the vulgar tongue to any person not having such permission, shall forfeit the value of the books, to be applied by the bishop to some pious use; and be subjected by the bishop to such other penalties as the bishop shall judge proper, according to the quality of the offense. But regulars shall neither read nor purchase such Bibles without a special license from their superiors." We suppose that all Catholics still hold to the decrees of the Council of Trent, and that what we have quoted governs the opinions and practice of the Catholic Church at the present day. The above prohibitions and regulations apply to their own faulty translations as found in the Rhemish Testament and the Douay Bible, while the authorized Protestant version is altogether excluded. No Catholic can possess or read the Bible, as translated by Catholic authors, without a written permission. To do it is a grave offense, and for such a sinner there is no absolution until he surrenders the inspired volume.

Pius the Seventh in 1816 published a bull against Bible societies, addressed to the primate of Poland. He pleads the authority of the Council of Trent, and represents the circulation of the Scriptures by Bible societies "as a crafty device by which the very foundations of religion are undermined, a pestilence which must be remedied and abolished—a defilement of the faith, eminently dangerous to souls—impious machinations of innovators, wickedness of a nefarious scheme—snares prepared for men's everlasting ruin—a new species of tares which an adversary has abundantly sown." Leo the Twelfth issued a similar bull in 1819 on the subject of the circulation of the Bible in the Irish schools. It is well known that the Bible Society offered to print the Douay translation for the use of the Irish and English Catholics, and that the offer was rejected. The opposition made by Catholics to the Bible in the public schools is well known everywhere. They are opposed to its general circulation and to its being read by the people indiscriminately. Their own translation is carefully kept from general use. It is not used in their schools, nor often found in their families.

We are aware of the objections which they urge against the promiscuous use and reading of the Scriptures—that it does more harm than good, and that it leads to perversion, heresy and all manner of evils. These views may be honestly entertained by the majority of intelligent Catholics for aught we know. The fact will hardly be denied that the Romish Church prohibits the free and universal reading of the word of God. This is the explicit avowal of their councils, and accords with their practice. If it were in their power they would shut the Bible out from every country in the world, as they did but recently from Rome and Spain. Herein popery differs from Protestantism. The former hedges the Bible about, and keeps it under lock and key as something more dangerous than gunpowder or arsenic. The latter publishes it in every tongue, and sends it forth freely to the ends of the earth. Popery prohibits, Protestantism enjoins, its careful and universal study. Catholics dare not entrust their children nor the common people with the printed gospel. Protestants take the utmost pains to place it in the hands of all, both old and young, the ignorant and the learned. The reasons of the difference are obvious. Papal errors cannot stand where the Bible is read and understood. Virtual prohibition is essential to the existence of Roman Catholicism. It cannot live and maintain its dominion of superstition and error where the light of revelation shines. On the other hand, the Bible is the religion of Protestants—they bow to its authority alone, and treat it as the gift of God to all mankind. With them it is not a thing of evil, fraught with ruin to mankind, but a fountain of health and life, and a treasury of spiritual riches to all who will search the blessed page. It is not something to be afraid of, but to be spread abroad as the joy and hope of the world.

THE SUPERINTENDENT'S SPEECH.

It was the superintendent of one of our Sunday schools in New Orleans. He said: "There is a picture I have seen that deeply affected me. It is of a rock in the sea, with its head just above the surging waters, and a cross planted on it, and one clinging to the cross. But there is another picture I have seen yet more impressive and touching than that. There is the same scene—the wild waste of waters, the rock, the cross, and one clinging to it—but with this addition, that while one arm of the clinging form is thrown around the cross, the other is stretched out below, and the hand grasps the hand of a fellow-being, to rescue and to save; and this represents the work of the faithful Sunday school teacher."

The sentiment of the church everywhere is, in these times, wonderfully interested in the Sunday school; so much so that the signs almost promise that the next great Pentecostal revival of religion in Christian lands—"the times of refreshing"—will be somehow intimately connected with Sunday school operations. It is certain that in this age of the gospel, which is the dispensation of the Spirit, it is to the sovereign Spirit—"my Spirit," as saith the Lord of hosts—that we are to look for the "might and the power" which shall bless to the conversion of hundreds and thousands, or of a nation in a day, and infinitely beyond the measure of cause and effect, the labors of humble instruments, working at the same time with all their puny and inadequate might. A general "move," a wide awakening, is alone within the province of the Spirit to effect. If preparations preliminary may sometimes suggest correctly to uninformed speculation the character and tactics, in part, at least, of a coming military campaign, it is not perhaps without reason and hope that, from the stir and enthusiasm but recently apparent in that division of Immanuel's militant host, called the Sunday school army, we contemplate as probable a movement upon the powers of darkness, with that division in the van. It may be, therefore, that no earnest worker in the Sunday school fully appreciates his high office and privilege. If the mind of the Spirit could be known certainly to be as above suggested, what a rush, what enlistments and activities in the Sunday school cause would there not improbably be! But these men would also probably begin to help the Spirit with their cumbersome incentives, and so the work would be more hindered than helped, or the Spirit's mind would be revealed. As things are, however, preaching repentance unto salvation is the mission of the Sunday school, and every teacher's business is to rescue and save himself with one hand—all the while clinging to the cross—while with the other he holds on, if no more, to the children of his class. It is here that the answer to discouragement comes in. The faint-hearted teacher is often ready to give up, through despair of ever doing much; and the faithful teacher is often dismayed at the impregnable hardness and indifference of his well-grown scholars, for whose conversion he has so long labored and prayed in vain. What, at least, can both do? They can hold on. Look at the picture. There the hand of the upper form still holds the hand, and holds above the water the head of the lower form, yet half submerged in the seething waves. What though the arm tires; fresh strength ever comes to it from the cross to which the other clings. Then, teacher, you can still hold on. To keep a head out of the water is a great thing. But that you may do even that, be sure that you keep also firm hold of the cross. * * *

HIGHER CHRISTIAN LIFE.

The work of the Holy Spirit, called in the Scriptures sanctification, holiness of heart, perfection, is invested with the greatest interest. If it be a blessing attainable under the reign of gospel grace, then every sincere Christian heart pants to be "washed and made every whit whole." His earnest prayer is: "Create in me a clean heart, O God!"

The various Christian denominations understand it with considerable latitude of meaning—as regeneration, full assurance, perfection. The divine oracles are certainly sufficiently explicit on a question so highly important and desirable as the means by which the Christian is to be "thoroughly furnished unto every good word and work." That the theory of this doctrine is clearly taught is evident. Now if the practice and experience of Christians can be made to conform to this theory, then it is made more palpable. That holiness of heart has been exemplified in the life and character of a goodly number of ancient and modern Christians is patent to every mind. The spurious is but a proof of the genuine.

Holiness is a scriptural term meaning purity, whole in a spiritual sense, godly, like God. Whole means entire, without defect. A whole apple is one without blur or defect; not specked with decay, worm-eaten or snarled. A holy spiritual nature implies purity, sinlessness. A whole moral nature implies one that is entire, without defect, "without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing." The command is: "Be ye holy;" "perfecting holiness in the fear of God," "that we might serve him in holiness."

Sanctification is a scriptural term meaning consecration, setting apart from a common to an holy purpose. One-tenth of the substance and one-seventh of the time of the Jews was consecrated, set apart from a common to an holy use. This law was observed with precision. Water, in the ordinance of baptism, is sanctified—set apart and used in the name of the Holy Trinity, by the officiating minister, to sanctify, dedicate or set apart the child from a common to an holy purpose, the application of water symbolizing the Spirit's operations in regeneration. The dedication is thus perfect; the offering is in faith; that child is under a special covenant of grace. The bread and wine in the Lord's Supper is sanctified, set apart—not transubstantiated into the actual body and blood of Christ, for that is a physical impossibility. Thus sanctified, they are the memorials of the broken body and shed blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, and upon which the Christian feeds and is sanctified. Hence the prayer of the holy apostle: "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole soul, body and spirit be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ;" "Ye are sanctified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ;" "Being sanctified by the Spirit." Christ's prayer: "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." Every evil passion is subdued, carnal desires of the flesh are uprooted, every proclivity of the nature is under the control of ruling, reigning grace.

"The passions hold a pleasing reign
When love inspires the breast."

Perfection is a scriptural term—means, complete, mature, ripe. Angels are perfect. They are celestial intelligences, adequate to celestial employment, and "do the will of God in heaven." Their sphere is peculiar. The perfection required, and which it is our duty to aim at, is not angelic. God is perfect—unapproachably, unchangably, immutably, infinitely. The perfection to be aimed at is not divine perfection, but the perfection of human nature under the gospel scheme. It is written: "Be ye also perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." The graces or "fruits of the Spirit are love, joy, peace," etc. These fruits are matured, ripe. These rich clusters are suspended from, and imbibe life and richness from the "Living Vine." The luscious fruit testifies the connection with the vine. "He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit." Says the apostle: "And this we wish, even your perfection." "Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection."

These terms—holiness, sanctification and perfection—are repeatedly used in the Scriptures, and signify a definite work of grace: "Till we all come, in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." T. B. W.

Robert Moffat, the missionary, who has spent more than half a century in South Africa, laboring for the salvation of the natives, was honored lately with a public breakfast in London, in which seven or eight hundred persons participated. Prof. Fisk, writing to the Chicago Advance, tells us that when Mr. Moffat rose to address the meeting, the whole assembly sprang to their feet, waved their handkerchiefs, and cheered with downright English heartiness. Stop cheering they would not, and the grand old missionary, who for fifty-four years had done such noble service in South Africa, now verging on eighty years of age, stood modestly up before them, straight as an arrow, and with moistened eye, to receive their homage.

In the course of his remarks he said that he should expect some sympathy when he told them that he no longer thought in his own language, but in the Bechuana, so that he should have to translate his words as he went on, and he might often come out with awkward words. In giving an account of the difficulties encountered in translating the Bible into Bechuana, Mr. Moffat said:

"The language was to be acquired without an interpreter, dictionary, grammar, or even a written word. There was no interpreter worth the name. 'And oh, what blundering there was—what mistakes, some laughable, and some serious. I got on gradually, little by little, and at last resolved to go and live with the natives, at a distance from wife and family, that I might not hear my own language, and there I lived for months. I learned to manipulate and sew the skins, and to do everything the natives did, but sin; but oh, it was a rough and nasty life! But I had one object in view, and I went on. I wanted to get my tongue loosened. I talked to them, prayed with them, and all the while was teaching myself, and when I returned to the station I could speak to them in their own tongue."

What an amount of endurance was required to spend so many years among the heathen natives of South Africa. A "nasty life," truly, it was; but the love of Christ constrained him; and doubtless the Master will say: "Inasmuch as you did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, thou didst it unto me." After reading of this heroic life of self-denial for Christ's sake, we are prepared for the remark of one who knows him well, that he "could hardly conceive of Robert Moffat being happy in heaven unless he could have some poor heathen to lift up and bless."

"The personal appearance of Mr. Moffat is striking. He is above six feet in height, has a well-proportioned body, high forehead, long white beard, and very expressive and benevolent countenance."—Methodist Protestant.

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

From what we publish below, from the Southern Christian Advocate of the eighth instant, it will be seen that Dr. Myers has resigned his position as editor, and has accepted the presidency of Wesleyan Female College. It is with regret that we part with Dr. Myers as one of our best editors; and he has our heartiest wishes for his happiness and prosperity in the important position which he has assumed.

The Publishing Committee of the Southern Christian Advocate—consisting of one from each of the patronizing Conferences—were called on to meet last week in Macon. All of them happened to be members of the Board of Trustees of Emory College, except Dr. Shipp, of the South Carolina Conference, and it being convenient to hold the meeting of the Publishing Committee when they were necessarily together here in the interests of the college, he was called to meet with them.

This was opportune, for it furnished opportunity for the following action. This letter was laid before the committee:

Macon, Ga., Nov. 2, 1871.

To the Publishing Committee of the Southern Christian Advocate:

Brethren—Very unexpectedly, I have been called to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Dr. O. L. Smith, as president of the Wesleyan Female College. The call comes under such circumstances that I must consider it the voice of the church, whose servant I am. I therefore beg leave respectfully to tender my resignation as editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, to take effect at the close of the present year. Yours very truly, E. H. Myers.

The committee then took action as follows:

Whereas, The Rev. E. H. Myers, D. D., has been elected to the office of president of the Wesleyan Female College, and has tendered his resignation as editor of the Southern Christian Advocate; therefore,

Resolved, That the Publishing Committee of the Southern Christian Advocate accept his resignation, and hereby express their appreciation of the fidelity and ability with which Dr. Myers has discharged the duty of editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, and tender to him their best wishes for his success and usefulness in the new field of labor to which he has been called.

And here is another vacancy. By the contract between the Publishing Company and the Conferences, the former and the committee appointed by the latter have free power to fill a vacancy in the editorial chair. A majority was present and an election was called for.

The Southern Christian Advocate was established thirty-four years ago last June. Seventeen years it was in the hands of two honored leaders in the South Carolina Conference. Then, though published in Charleston, it was offered freely to Georgia to furnish an editor; and the Georgia Conference—through the writer—has occupied the editor's chair something over seventeen years. Courtesy seemed to demand, and did demand, the proffer of the right of nomination for the vacant chair to Dr. Shipp, in behalf of his Conference. He was prepared to name, and did name, the Rev. F. Milton Kennedy, new presiding elder of the Orangeburg district, South Carolina Conference, and he was unanimously elected editor of the Southern Christian Advocate.

We consider the choice a capital one. A son of the Rev. William M. Kennedy, of precious memory—whose praise a half century ago was in all the churches—he has inherited the esteem and love once his father's—the worthy son of a worthy sire. For about seventeen years he has been a traveling preacher, filling important positions. For some years he has been the secretary of his Conference; and last year was honored by his brethren with a seat in the General Conference. He has been a student, though he has not often "rushed into print"—is industrious, prudent, wise, lovable.

It was considered not best to take him from his district and other official duties now so near the close of the year; and consequently the present editor, who still is hard by his old office, will do his work till the year ends.

And this closes a considerable part of the history of two days in a little corner of the world.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

The Southern Methodist Home Altar for November contains a large amount of wholesome and edifying reading matter.

The American Protestant is a weekly published in St. Louis, and succeeds the Home Circle, published monthly in Chicago until burnt out by the great fire. The American Protestant is a handsome eight-page sheet.

The American Agriculturist for November is finely illustrated, and filled with reading matter of the greatest value to farmers and housekeepers. Published by Orange Judd & Co., at $1.50 per annum.

A prudent man is like a pin: his head prevents him from going too far.

Episcopal Triennial Convention.

The Joint Committee on Ritual reported, on October 19, a canon recognizing the Book of Common Prayer as it was in force in the United States in 1789, and the canonical or other legislative action of the church in its general conventions, as the standards of ritual; leaving all questions arising in the future to he settled hy the ordinary, or, in oase of contradiotory determinations, to the Honse of Bishops. This was adopted by the House of Bishops, and sent down to the deputies on October 23. It underwent a vigorous discussion in the deputies, and was rejected by them on October 25, for want of a constitutional majority. The vote stood: Clerical—for, 20; against, 18; divided, 7. Lay—for, 18; against, 14; divided, 2. The following draft of a canon was sent down by the House of Bishops on October 26:

"Tho elevation of the elements in the Holy Communion in snch a mannor as to exposo thom to the view of the people as objects toward which adoration is to be made in or after the prayer of consecration, or in the act of administering them, or in carrying them to or from communicants; and any gesture, posture, or act implying snch adoration; and any ceremony not prescribed as part of tho order of the administration of tho Lord's Supper, or Holy Communion, in the Book of Common Prayer, and the celebration or reception of the Holy Communion by any bishop or priest, when no person receives with him; likewise the use, at any administration of the Holy Communion, of any hymn, prayers, collects, epistles or gospels other than those appointed in the authorized formnlaries of the church, or under section 14 of canon 13, title 1, of tho Digest, are hereby forbidden."

This was also rejected. Clerical vote—yeas, 17; nays, 18; divided, 4. Lay vote—yeas, 18; nays, 12; divided, 3. The deputies then adopted, almost unanimously, the following resolutions:

Resolved, The House of Bishops conourring, that this convention hereby expresses its decided condemnation of all ceremonies, observances and practices which are fitted to express a doctrine foreign to that set forth in the authorized standards of this church.

Resolved, That, in the judgment of this house, the Paternal Council, and the advice of our right reverend fathers, the bishops of the church, is deemed sufficient at this time to secure the suppression of all that is irregular and unseemly, and to promote greater uniformity in conducting the public worship of the church, and in the administration of the Holy Sacrament."

How to Correct Calumny.—"If any one speaks ill of thee," says Epictetus, "consider whether he hath truth on his side, and if so, reform thyself, that his censures may not affect thee." When Anaximander was told that the very boys laughed at his singing, "Ah!" said he, "then I must learn to sing better." Plato, being told that he had many enemies who spoke ill of him, said: "It is no matter; I shall live so that none will believe them." Hearing at another time that an intimate friend of his had spoken detractingly of him, he said: "I am sure he would not do it if he had not some reason for it." This is the surest as well as the noblest way of drawing the sting out of a reproach, and the true method of preparing a man for the great and only relief against the pains of calumny.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Members, on their arrival in Columbus, will report at the Methodist church. Those who come by the Memphis and Charleston railroad will purchase of the agents of the road special return tickets for one fare for the round trip. The officers of the Mobile and Ohio railroad have not yet replied to our inquiries, but it is expected the same arrangement will be made. On the Mississippi Central, the Mississippi and Tennessee, and the Vicksburg and Meridian railroads the certificate of the secretary of the Conference will entitle those who pay full fare coming to return free.

Brethren whose wives expect to attend will please notify me immediately. J. B. Cottrell.

Heath, Lara & Heath.—We have not found in this city any house where upholsterers' materials, frames, moldings, glasses and pictures can be obtained on more reasonable terms, or work done cheaper and with more dispatch and more satisfactorily, than at the firm of Heath, Lara & Heath, 99 Camp street, who have done our work in that line for the past several years. See their card on fifth page.

CORRUPTION OF LANGUAGE.

So many persons without anything deserving the name of education have become writers by profession, that written language may almost be said to he principally wielded by persons ignorant of the proper use of the instrument, and who are spoiling it more and more for those who understand it. Vulgarisms, which creep in nobody knows how, are daily depriving the English language of valuable modes of expressing thought. To take a present instance: The verb transpire formerly conveyed very expressively its correct meaning, viz: to become known through unnoticed channels—to exhale, as it were, into publicity through invisible pores, like a vapor or gas disengaging itself. But of late a practice has commenced of employing this word, for the sake of finery, as a mere synonym to happen; "the events which have transpired in the Crimea," meaning the incidents of the war. This vile specimen of bad English is already seen by the dispatches of noblemen and viceroys; and the time is apparently not far distant when nobody will understand the word if used in its proper sense.

It is a great error to think that these corruptions of language do no harm. Those who are struggling with the difficulty (and who know by experience how great it already is) of expressing one's self clearly with precision, find their resources continually narrowed by illiterate writers, who seize and twist from its purpose some form of speech which once served to convey briefly and compactly an unambiguous meaning. It would hardly be believed how often a writer is compelled to a circumlocution by the single vulgarism, introduced during the last few years, of using the word alone as an adverb, only not being fine enough for the rhetoric of ambitious ignorance. A man will say, "to which I am not alone bound by honor but also by law," unaware that what he has unintentionally said is, that he is not alone bound, some other person being bound with him. Formerly, if any one said, "I am not alone responsible for this," he was understood to mean (what alone his words mean in correct English) that he is not the sole person responsible; but if he now used such an expression the reader would be confused between that and two other meanings—that he is not only responsible, but something more; or that he is responsible not only for this, but for something besides. The time is coming when Tennyson's Œnone could not say, "I will not die alone," lest she should be supposed to mean that she would not only die, but do something else.

The blunder of writing predicate for predict has become so widely diffused that it bids fair to render one of the most useful terms in the scientific vocabulary of logic unintelligible. The mathematical and logical term to eliminate is undergoing a similar destruction. All who are acquainted either with the proper use of the word or with its etymology, know that to eliminate a thing is to thrust it out; but those who know nothing about it, except that it is a fine-looking phrase, use it in a sense precisely the reverse—to denote, not turning anything out, but bringing it in. They talk of eliminating some truth, or other useful result, from a mass of details.—John Stuart Mill.

Since Germany has become the first power in Europe, other nations are making a critical examination of their means of defense and offense. A writer in the Moscow Gazette shows that Russia's weakness lies in her coast defenses and her insufficient naval force. Nearly all her ports, including the capital, could be taken with but little difficulty, while her fleet "would not be able to resist the attack of a first-rate power." The seaports of Germany, on the other hand, are sufficiently protected by their geographical position and coast batteries.

The King of Siam has abolished slavery in the kingdom of Siam from and after January 1, 1872; slaves then in being will be manumitted from the produce of a tax laid upon the slave proprietors from the present time. A good commencement has also been made in the laying out of new roads and the erection or building of new bridges of a substantial nature, whereby the development of the varied resources of the kingdom of Siam will be much furthered.

Victor Emanuel has knighted a tinman. His name is Giacinto Ottino. He is the man who invents the shapes for illuminations—shapes mainly cut out of tin, which support lights, and represent all manner of objects, such as eagles, lions, water-spouts, crowns, and so on.

Wooden pegs, made by the same machines as shoe pegs, are now largely used for fastening boxes, and manufacturers receive large orders from the West for such pegs for this purpose.

Christian Experience.—Shallow waters are easily muddied. After a night of storm the waters of the bay, along the beach, stirred by the winds, are foul and black with the mire and dirt. But look beyond, out into the deep water—how blue and clear it is! The white caps on the surface show the violence of the wind, but the water is too deep for the storms that sweep its surface to stir up the earth at the bottom. So is Christian experience. A shallow experience is easily disturbed; the merest trifles becloud and darken the soul whose piety is superficial; while the most furious storm of life fails to darken or disturb the soul which has attained a deep experience of the things of God. The agitation may produce a sparkle on the surface, but in the calm depths of such a spirit reigns eternal tranquillity—the peace of God that passeth all understanding.

A correspondent of the Boston Traveler records the following: "A bright little boy about four years of age, son of a clergyman, was at your correspondent's house one evening with his parent, and I gave him a couple of five cent pieces. He laid them on the table, and putting his finger on one, said: 'This one I am going to give to the heathen, and the other I am going to keep myself.' He played with them awhile, till one of them finally rolled away and he could not find it. 'Well,' said I, 'my lad, which one have you lost?' 'Oh,' said he, 'I have lost the one I was going to give to the heathen.'"

In England the real estate, including city houses and building lots, is owned by less than 31,000 persons, and one-half the land is owned by 150 persons, averaging over 100,000 acres to each. In Scotland twelve persons own 19,500,000 acres. "This is," says Rev. Mr. Leavitt, of Northampton, who states the facts, "as if all the land in Massachusetts was owned by three persons, each having about 5,000,000 acres."

Very recently Martha Walker, a young English woman, climbed the famous Matterhorn, over fourteen thousand seven hundred feet high, in company with her father, aged sixty-five. The Matterhorn is one of the most difficult of all the Alpine peaks to ascend, and has rarely been attempted by a woman. The lady is well named, having climbed Monts Blanc, Rosa and other peaks with little fatigue.

The reaping machine, according to the English agricultural journals, will operate beneficially in abolishing the system of furnishing supplies of meat and drink when large bodies of laborers had to be employed.

Obituaries.

Died, on Bayou Waxia, St. Landry parish, Louisiana, October 12, 1871, at nine o'clock P. M., Grace Leonard, eldest child of M. Lacy Rogers, deceased, and Courtlandt LeG. Goodrich, aged four years and four months.

"He giveth his beloved sleep."

Died, at Union Church, Jefferson county, Mississippi, August 8, 1871, infant daughter of Rev. J. B. Howon, of the Mississippi Conference, aged eleven months.

This lovely child died of cholera infantum. She was the pride of her parents; but the blessed Savior has takea her to his own bosom. "Blessed are they who have part in the first resurrection." "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me," etc. R. A. SHILEY.

Died, October 20, 1871, Elizabeth, infant daughter of Gibbon S. and Fannie M. Chevis, aged one month and three weeks.

Dear little feet, so early called
From earth's uneven ways;
Sweet baby-lips, whose earliest songs
Shall be angelic lays;

To wiser, kinder care than ours
Thy guardianship is given.
We would not call our darling back,
But follow her to heaven.

Sister P. Martin died at her residence, near the town of Natchitoches, August 29, 1871, aged sixty-four years. She was a native of Burke county, Georgia, and had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for thirty-two years. She was attending a protracted meeting in her own neighborhood, was unusually blessed, went home praising the Lord, was taken sick that night, and died in great peace the next day. It is the good fortune of only the few to have such a triumphant entrance into the harbor of endless life. JOHN PIPES.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Nathaniel Amaker was born December 1, 1813; was married June 15, 1831; and died, at her residence near Tangipahoa, July 25, 1871.

When but a child she professed religion and joined the Methodist Church. After her marriage she united with the Baptist Church, of which her husband was a member. She was earnest, prayerful and faithful, and continued in the conscious enjoyment of religion. She was an affectionate wife, a devoted mother and a kind neighbor. Her goodness of heart and fervid piety were as ointment poured forth. She expressed perfect submission to the will of God, and exhorted her husband and loved ones to meet her in heaven. May God bless her bereaved husband and children, and grant, in his tender mercy, that all of us who loved her on earth may meet her in heaven.

Franklin C. Pinkston was born near Sparta, Georgia, December 13, 1816, and died of apoplexy, at his residence near Mount Meigs, Montgomery, Alabama, on the morning of October 8, 1871.

His father removed from Georgia to Mount Meigs while he was yet a child, and he thus spent his childhood, boyhood and manhood in the same neighborhood. He was thrice married. His first wife was Margaret A. Hopper; his second Martha C. Nelson; his third Aurelia A. Graves, who is the mother of all his children save one.

In 1838, after the death of his first wife, he became concerned on the subject of religion, sought Christ, obtained pardon, and connected himself with the Methodist Church. Thus for thirty-three years Bro. Pinkston was a member of the church, "walking in all the statutes and ordinances of God's house blameless." For twenty years he was a class-leader and official member of the church. His manner was quiet, but his religious character positive, and his life a steady power. His neighbors felt the influence of his pure and consistent life. His laborers respected and revered him. But nowhere was his influence felt as it was at home. Around his own fireside the lamp of religion shone with a constant brightness. Here "the path of the just was as the shining light." The fires on the family altar burned brightly to the last. He ate supper with the family; had prayers at the usual hour, reading from the eighteenth Psalm; retired to bed, in ten minutes was speechless, and at two o'clock in the morning was translated to his reward. How easy the transition from the mercy seat—"the throne of grace"—to the throne of glory! Oh! how we miss him in the house of God and in his own home. But that devoted wife, and those seven sons and that daughter—their loss is irreparable!

The Building Committee of the new church at Mount Meigs consisted of six persons, Bro. D. Browder, J. Judkins and Bro. Pinkston have already crossed over, and "their works do follow them." "Let me die the death of the righteous." H. B. ROSS.

Miss. Sarah H. Dooley, wife of James Dooley, deceased, was born in Tennessee, August 24, 1826, and died at the residence of her brother-in-law, W. K. Simpson, Esq., near Prattville, Alabama, September 21, 1871.

She was the daughter of Matthew and Elizabeth Dixon, with whom she removed to Talladega, Alabama, at the age of nine years. Reared under good mental and moral discipline, possessed of a quick perception, a clear and retentive memory, a fondness for literary study, an eminently social disposition, fine conversational powers, a large, affectionate heart, and all adorned with the light of unaffected piety, she won a large circle of friends wherever her lot was cast. She was not a mere nominal member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. She was a faithful and intelligent Sabbath school teacher, punctual in attending class, prayer and love-feast meetings as well as the public ministry of the word; visited the sick and the poor with a cheerful heart—always ready to sympathize with the suffering. It is, then, a matter of no surprise that in her last illness—though it was painful and protracted—she should be wonderfully sustained by the power of divine grace, and that admiring friends should bestow on her all that affection and Christian sympathy could give.

The writer visited her often, and ever found her cheerful, and ready for religious conversation and prayer. The cross and the crown were her favorite themes. Clinging closely to the one, she constantly lived in fond anticipation of the other. In my last interview with her she became ecstatic, and with a face radiant with the hope of the crown that was soon to wreathe her brow, she exclaimed, "Oh, the cross! the cross! the cross of my blessed Savior!" and continued talking lovingly of the Savior, and the crown of glory that awaited her, until her strength failed. A few moments before her spirit took its flight she requested that the door of her room should be opened. It being a bright, sunny morning, a flood of golden light filled the room. She remarked, "How lovely and beautiful!" and then, in the full consciousness of approaching dissolution, bid an affectionate farewell to relatives and friends, leaving messages of love and gratitude to kind friends in Prattville, and calmly fell asleep in Jesus. She leaves two noble sons and an affectionate daughter to mourn their loss.

Little Lennie, son of W. K. and S. F. Simpson, though only four years old, was deeply impressed by the death of his aunt. He manifested grief such as is natural only in mature minds, and commenced declining the day she died. On the sixteenth of October he passed over to join his aunt in the choral symphonies of the blessed.

R. S. WOODWARD.

Mary M. Lee, wife of John T. Lee, and daughter of Elijah and Rachel Reynolds, was born in Darlington district, South Carolina, January 8, 1827. She was married to Mr. Lee, in Dale county, Alabama, February 14, 1844. During the month of November, 1848, she was soundly converted, under the ministry of Rev. Allen Box, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Mount Zion, in this county. From that time till the day of her death she was a steady, uniform, true Christian. She was particularly noted for her punctuality and fervor in secret prayer. Many are the times her soul has been made unutterably happy while thus engaged, both by day and by night. Such was the power of her daily Christian life that those who labored with Mr. Lee were made true believers, and members of the church, if not already members, by being brought within the reach of her advice, example and prayer. Of course her own dear children are members of the church, and are upright Christians. Yes, all of them who are of sufficient age are members of the church of their mother, and are Christians after the same order and stamp. The grief-stricken husband assures us that much of his happiness in the church has been due to her uniform, cheerful Christian life.

Although so true and pure, she was a great sufferer, for more than ten years, from heart disease. This continued to increase from time to time, till it became too severe for the power of medicine or the skill of the physician. She seemed to be fully aware of her situation, and therefore, two days before her death, she sent for all her family to come into her room, and gave them advice all together; and then one by one she gave her parting charge and affectionate farewell, dwelling with great specialty upon her sweet little Edgar, the babe. She then prayed for the blessing of heaven upon them all. The day before she died she sang, and said "she would soon be with God." Thus her pathway shone brighter and brighter, and the Christian and heavenly assurance grew stronger and stronger, till on Sabbath, August 27, at twelve M., amid noon-day splendor, her soul bid adieu to all below and ascended home to heaven. She found eternal rest on the day of earthly rest. How fitting the scene!

"There's a better day a-coming," etc.,

She leaves her husband, nine children, two sons-in-law, five grandchildren, father and mother, six brothers, five sisters, and many other relatives and numerous friends to mourn her death.

"Life's duty done, as sinks the day,
Light from its load the spirit flies;
While heaven and earth combine to say:
How blest'd the righteous when she dies."

A. DOWLING.

Ozark, Alabama.

Died, at her home in Copiah county, Mississippi, Mrs. Lucretia Matilda Day.

The deceased was born in Putnam county, Georgia, on the twenty-fifth of October, 1825. While yet young, her father, Mr. George N. Langford, moved to Brandon, Mississippi, where, in 1848, she was married to Rev. Andrew Day, of the Mississippi Conference. The year previous she attended a protracted meeting in Jackson, under the pastorate of Rev. J. B. Walker, and by a sermon preached by Dr. C. K. Marshall, she was deeply convinced, and subsequently happily converted. This was a providential preparation for the duties of an itinerant preacher's wife; to which she was called. Those acquainted with domestic life can appreciate the trials and care of a mother, with four children in heaven, and four dependent for their guidance in life upon her. Of the noble band of itinerant women who grace the history of Methodism, and who, in God's hands, have been so largely instrumental in building the great church, there has been no more earnest advocate for an unmodified itinerancy, nor a better example of submission to authority, although the sphere of itinerant labors in which her life was spent was not the most attractive nor the most remunerative of the itinerant field. Only an inmate of a preacher's household can form an adequate idea of the importance of the preacher's wife to the integrity of the itinerant plan by which the ministry of our church is conducted. To her management of household affairs, her devotedness to the family, her efficiency and industry, her self-sacrificing devotion to the church more than to episcopal or conference supervision, is to be attributed the continued success of our ministry.

Sister Day was a shining example in these respects. She never faltered once throughout the years of her itinerant toils. She had her own ideas of prudence and precaution; but they were subordinated to the genius of the conference. There were years that were dark in prospect, times of searching trial, that excited fears and misgivings; but she never yielded to depression, and even the recurring indispositions that claimed the soothing sympathy of her husband were often concealed, lest his solicitude for her should prove stronger than his sense of duty to the church. And during the recent season of disintegration, declension, and other incidental disorders in the church, when its organization could be preserved only at great personal cost and sacrifice to the preachers, who could hope but for little assistance and no real compensation for their labors, this dear woman and faithful servant of the church, by hard manual labor and a wonderful economical management, procured bread for her children and clothing for her household, while her husband carried the bread of life, and broke it for perishing sinners to feed upon; and, although after hard labors, he would return home empty-handed, yet would she continue to encourage him to sow in hope, believing they would reap in due time. She was, notwithstanding the necessity of personal exertion to provide for her household, lacking in none of the sweet graces of womanhood. She testified with grateful confidence to the grace of God, of which she had a large and instructive experience. She was welcomed as a guest and counselor in every Christian household in the field of their labors. She was revered for her piety, loved for her sweet spirit of sympathy, and blessed for her interest in the salvation of her neighbors. Her husband and her children rise up and call her blessed. They dropped upon her bier the bitterest tears of bereavement, in which sad privilege many others joined. We buried her body in the quiet graveyard, in hope of the resurrection, and bade her farewell until we should all meet again in the life-assuring and comforting presence of Christ. May the blessed Lord, who carries His work although His workmen die, remember our afflicted brother, and comfort him and his motherless children in their deep sorrow.

SELF-EVIDENT FACTS.

THE CELEBRATED ARGYLE BITTERS, so long distinguished for their unrivaled efficacy as a Tonic, and for the purity of the articles used in their manufacture, are now offered for sale at reduced prices.

They combine all the elements of a first-rate family medicine—simplicity in manufacture, healthful and tonic ingredients, efficacy in action, and perfect safety in their use, for any age or condition.

Unlike all other bitters, they do not increase the desire for alcoholic stimulants; but, by their peculiar action upon the digestive organs, serve rather to subdue the disposition for strong drinks, as can be testified to by thousands of our most respected professional and business men of every degree and condition.

They are Tonic, Alterative and Invigorating, and are a safe family medicine for either sex or for any age.

The Child's Corner.

TALE OF A KITE.

BY GEORGE COOPER.

Such a wondrous kite to fly!
Tailed pap—six feet high.
Nothi—that I would do for him—
Boy I tell you, boasting Jim.

Biggest kite on all the lot;
Miles of strongest twine he got.
Small ones—mere certain height;
His he'll send clean out of sight.

Down the street, one day in fall,
Went our—the kite, string and all.
Kite!" how characters shout in joy,
"Where are—not going with that boy"

All was ready soon, and—whew!
O'er the trees the giant flew,
Wide-skiing Jimmy from the ground,
Just as if he weighed a pound.

Up they sailed, close to the moon—
Heard the man there sing a tune.
Foreign lands Jim saw and knew—
Tartary and Timbuctoo.

Met a comet in his flight—
Silver tail, just like a kite.
Couldn't starve, you well might say,
Up there in the Milky Way.

Across the sea he flew, and then
Fondly sighed for home again.
"Smaller kites are safe," he said;
Pop! he woke up in his bed!

BE KIND.

Little children, bright and fair,
Blessed with every needful care,
Always bear this thing in mind:
God commands us to be kind—
Kind not only to our friends,
Those on whom our care depends;
Kind not only to the poor,
They who poverty endure;
But, in spite of form or feature,
Kind to every living creature,
Never pain or anguish bring,
Even to the smallest thing;
For, remember that the fly,
Just as much as you or I,
Is the work of that great Hand
That hath made the sea and land;
Therefore, children, bear in mind,
Ever, ever to "be kind."

The Morning Star.

SHRIMP SAUCE.

There was once a poor fisherman who fished, and fished, and fished, and caught nothing but a bunch of sea-weed.

"What will become of me?" he cried; "I have nothing to take to market to-morrow, and there is not a farthing in the house! If I go home with an empty basket my wife will certainly throw the frying-pan at my head, or possibly the tea-kettle!" and he began to sob so loud that the fish heard him far down under the water, and their soft hearts were touched with pity.

"Will no one sacrifice himself?" exclaimed a Salmon enthusiastically; "it is a noble cause!" And he called together a meeting of fishes—one of every kind—to discuss the affair, and see what could be done. They arranged themselves in a ring, and the Salmon, as president, spoke first. He stated the fisherman's case fully, (which, however, they all knew already,) and there was not a fish's heart among them all which did not throb with sympathy.

"Which among us will volunteer?" continued the Salmon. "Gladly would I set the example myself, but I have a wife and upward of fifty thousand children depending on me;" and tears of emotion streamed down his honest cheeks as he repented: "Will no one volunteer?"

There was a long silence; perhaps the fish were all too much overcome to speak. At last a Sole raised his voice. "I would not hesitate a minute," said he, "personally to sacrifice myself, if it would be of any avail, but I fear I should be unsaleable. To make a decent appearance on a dinner table there must be a pair of us; and, however willingly I might give my own life to such a cause, I could not feel justified in drawing into the sacrifice a brother Sole!"

"The Plaice, perhaps?" suggested the president.

Then spoke an orange-spotted Plaice, humbly and tearfully. "Alas!" he cried, "the poor man's sobs go to my heart, but what can I do? There is no generosity in giving what is valueless, and the price I command in market is so very low, it would not pay him or his wife for the trouble of carrying me there. Now a Turbot might make their fortune!"

"True," said the president.

"I believe I am considered valuable," said the Turbot, modestly. "But, 'noblesse oblige;' one has claims; one's life is not exactly one's own to dispose of as one would like."

"Possibly the Eel," put in the president.

"For my part," said the Eel, "nothing would be more satisfactory to my own feelings than to give myself to such a charitable object; but one must not allow one's self to be carried away by enthusiasm and do things rashly. You know our family motto: 'Conger, pouger longer,' (the eels always pronounce it ponger.) As I grow older I find myself longer and longer in coming to conclusions, and I fear by the time I have fairly considered the subject, the poor man will be gone home."

"I shouldn't be long making up my mind," cried a romantic Sprat, "if I were only a little bigger. Dearly as I love the salt, salt waves, and my free, unfettered life, I would joyfully give up all and be fried and laid on a dish to serve a suffering human being. But what would be the use of one poor little sprat? Oh, to be a Codfish!"

On this the Codfish felt moved to speak, which he did in a tone of deep regret.

"Pitying the poor man, as I do, from the bottom of my heart," said he, "I really feel that I could not be justified in rendering him my assistance personally. No; my final dissolution must be devoted to a yet nobler cause. You all know my peculiar gift, and will, I am sure, agree with me that I have no right to throw it away. Why, properly prepared, it is so much human life in a bottle! Were I to obey the impulse of good nature, and give myself into the hands of this rude fisherman, what would be the result? I should be treated just like any other fish, my precious property would be neglected, and, in short, the health of thousands would have been sacrificed for the life of one."

The president began to despair. "Perhaps the Lobster?" he suggested.

"I would offer myself in a moment," said the Lobster, "but it seems to me that in my case it would be no true kindness. Of course, as far as my own feelings are concerned, nothing could be more gratifying; but I doubt if I should ever be taken to market—the poor man and his wife would be unable to resist eating me for supper this very night. To-morrow they would be exceedingly ill in consequence. Then would follow doctors' bills, and they would probably both end their days in the workhouse, if not the gaol. When a question of an act of charity arises, it is right to consider the future, as well as the present emergency. If, by relieving the necessities of that poor family for the moment, I should be the means of bringing them eventually to destruction, I should never forgive myself."

"Exactly my sentiments," said the Crab; "but I could never have expressed them so well."

Then there was a long pause, broken at last by the president.

"It must be conceded," said he, "that the matter we have in hand is of a very perplexing nature. At the same time, it is a painful fact that the position of the poor fisherman is becoming every moment more critical. If no gentleman is able to offer his services, what is to be done? Will any one suggest anything—any medium course?"

But no medium course occurred to any one; they could only sigh and shake their heads.

"Well," said the Eel at last, "as it seems I can be of no further use, I may as well begin to wriggle home. I am sure our best thanks are due to Mr. President Salmon; and I can only say how heartily I wish circumstances had allowed me to come forward in so good a cause. Of one thing I am quite sure: should any gentleman resolve to sacrifice himself, he will never repent so noble an act."

"Hear, hear!" said all the fish, but still no one came forward.

Just as they were about to disperse, and were reiterating their thanks to the president, and saying what an interesting meeting it had been, in the midst of them all, peeping up through the sand, appeared two tiny black eyes with very long lashes. Soon the head and shoulders of a little, little Shrimp were visible, and a small, shrill voice cried something which sounded very like the word "Humbug!" after which the speaker scratched himself down into the sand again very rapidly. Of course no one took any notice of an interruption caused by so insignificant a creature, and the fish wished each other "Good night!" and swam away to their different homes.

The fisherman heard nothing of what was passing under the water. He went sorrowfully home with his empty basket, but in what manner his wife received him, or whether they got any supper that night, I can't say.—Beata Francis, in Good Words for the Young.

GO HOME, BOYS!

Boys, don't hang around the corners of the streets. If you have anything to do, do it promptly, right off, then go home. Home is the place for boys. About the street corners and at the stables they learn to talk slang, and they learn to swear, to smoke tobacco, and to do many other things which they ought not to do.

Do your business and then go home. If your business is play, play, and make a business of it. I like to see boys play good, earnest, healthy games. If I was the town I would give the boys a good, spacious play-ground. It should have plenty of soft, green grass, and trees, and fountains, and broad space to run and jump, and to play suitable plays. I would make it as pleasant and lovely as it could be, and I would give it to the boys to play in, and when the play was ended I would tell them to GO HOME. For when boys hang round street corners and the stables they get slouchy and listless. Of all things I dislike a listless boy or girl. I would have a hundred boys like a hundred yachts, with every spar straight and every rope taut, the decks and sides clean, the rigging all in order, and everything ready to slip the cable, and fly before the wind when the word comes to go.

But this cannot be if you lounge about the streets, and loaf about the corners, and idle away your time at the stables and the saloons.

When you are from home have some business; attend to your business, and then GO HOME.—Sunday School Scholar.

"THE BOYS LAUGH AT ME."

Joseph Garwood is eight years old. He wears shoes; the other boys wear boots. Joseph came in to his mother yesterday in a very bad state of mind. The tears were rolling down his cheeks. His little fists had wiped them away for a while; but for every tear his fist dried, there was left a streak of dirt from his hands.

"What is the matter with my boy?" asked mamma.

"I want a pair of boots!" sobbed Joe.

"A pair of boots! Why, my lad, you have good shoes; and such shoes are better far than boots."

"The boys laugh at me, and call me a baby, 'cause I don't have boots," said Joe.

"Well, I think you are a baby," answered Mrs. Garwood. "A boy that is afraid of being laughed at is something of a baby; and a boy who cries because he is laughed at is a baby, sure enough; and a boy whose little hands are thrust up into his eyes, leaving such black streaks on his face, is a very great and a very dirty baby; and——" But before Mrs. Garwood could say another word, the "baby" had rushed to the basin, and, washing his face and hands, started out of the house, yelling with all his might:

"No, I'm not a baby! I'm a boy! Shoes or no shoes, boots or barefoot, I won't be a baby! I'm a boy!"—Young Pilgrim.

It is a curious fact that though the rain keeps thousands away from church on Sunday, it does not deter a single man from attending to his business on week-days.

The Farm and Garden.

TURKEY-RAISING.

Turkey-raising can be made one of the most profitable employments of the farm. But success is the result of good management and skill. One of the first requisites in turkey-rising is a good hardy breed. Unlike the native white turkey, the white Holland turkey possesses a strong, vigorous constitution. Their young are more easily reared than any of the darker varieties. The feathers of these turkeys are snow-white. Their flesh is tender and juicy, and of an excellent flavor, rendering them a very desirable table fowl. They are great layers of superior eggs—laying in autumn, which is almost unknown to the common turkey—and are very easily kept. They are, withal, an economical, valuable and useful fowl—a very important addition to the already large variety of poultry kept in this country for profit and pleasure. The legs are generally silver-white; some border on a flesh color. The feathers are very valuable, containing, as they do, considerable down. The cocks we breed from weigh thirty-five to forty pounds, hens eighteen to twenty-five pounds, not fat.

Some turkeys always raise their brood, and such ought to be retained as breeders until they are old. The farmer who would raise turkeys by hand ought to observe the habits of these careful birds in the management of their young.

The bronze originated in a cross between the common and wild turkey, and, with its senle-like feathers and coppery lusters, is a very handsome bird. Their color is a bronze brown, of great glossiness, with a metallic coppery luster, glittering beautifully in the sunshine; a plumage of exceeding brilliancy, being compact, glossy, with metallic reflections; feathers double, as in other gallinacious birds, generally oblong or truncated; tips of the feathers almost conceal the bronze color. The plumage of the male is very brilliant; that of the female is not so beautiful.

These turkeys cannot be valued too highly; their want has been long felt by the American people. The flesh is white, tender, juicy and excellent flavor, rendering them the best table fowl of any known variety. They are very hardy, easily raised and good layers. The cocks frequently weigh forty pounds, and there is a specimen of this variety near the residence of the writer that weighs, if I mistake not, forty-two pounds. The Jesuits, who made early settlements in this country, affirm that the turkeys found among the Illinois weighed each from thirty to forty pounds. The heaviest turkey known to have been raised in England, previous to 1853, weighed only thirty-two pounds.—American Stock Journal.

THE BLUE GRASS REGION.

Kentucky blue grass (Poa pratensis) grows with exceptional luxuriance in five counties of the State, of which Bourbon county is the most noteworthy, for there the grass grows in its greatest perfection. There is some confusion among the botanists with regard to the origin and nature of the grass, some believing that it is indigenous, and others that it was imported from Europe. It will grow as far north as New England, but nowhere in such luxuriance as in Bourbon and the adjacent counties. The grass region is, geologically speaking, a limestone formation, the soil being in a great measure formed by the wearing away of rocks. It also contains large quantities of potash, soda and the phosphates. The streams are very impure, holding many constituents of the soil in solution. We may remark, parenthetically, that the peculiar properties of the famous Bourbon whisky are ascribed to the chemical composition of the water. Blue grass grows like that pest of the far South, Bermuda grass, but has not its vitality. The thickest sward dies if turned under, and the grass and roots form a rich mold, suitable for corn. The grass is good only for pasturage, not curing well as hay, and all kinds of animals, especially horses and mules, thrive wonderfully upon its sweet leaves. It is evergreen, not being killed by frost and snow, and in Kentucky animals often graze upon it all winter. Horses raised in the blue grass region have been famous for many years, and command fabulous prices in the Northern and Eastern markets. It is said that in Bourbon county a poor horse is a very rare sight. At the last exhibition of the County Agricultural Society prizes were offered for the best group of a mare with four of her colts, and although only two entries were made under this classification, the exhibition is said to have been most noteworthy. Cows and hogs, too, are raised here in great perfection, and the South is responsible for the statement that the owner of a Durham heifer raised in Bourbon county refused $8,000 for her. The medium price of blue grass lands is $100 per acre, and farms are held at a figure considerably higher.

Musty and Moldy Feed Injurious.

Corn in the musty state is the cause of dry murrain in cattle. It was discovered in Iowa, by turning cattle in the corn fields where the stalks and corn had been spoiled, musted, and become moldy by storms and early frosts, that many deaths occurred, and relief was only found by a change of feed mixed with plenty of salt, copperas and sulphur. Pigs will eat smutty corn; but by eating it their teeth become loose, their bristles drop out, their hind legs become awkward and unmanageable, and they lose flesh. Mules and horses fed on musty corn lose their hair, suffer from engorgement of the limbs; and change of diet, at once, only will save them. Hens fed on musty corn will lay eggs without shell. The smut of corn contains no starch nor nutrition, but poison only. The rule holds good for smutty, moldy stalks.

Dairy products, both butter and cheese, are often very much injured on account of the cows feeding in weedy pastures. The daisy has been known to give a decidedly bitter taste to cheese, and nothing is more essential for the farmer to understand, who desires to put upon the market a fancy, high-priced butter, than the fact that the utmost attention be given to the feed of his cows. We have seen the cheese of a whole factory tainted by leeks, and on account of this taint great losses were sustained. Some pastures, especially those recently reclaimed from the forest, are greatly troubled with this bad weed. The only way of obviating the difficulty is to eradicate the weed, but if any one can discover a remedy or process of taking out the taste of leeks from butter, or of lessening the evil in any way, it would be extremely valuable to a great many persons.—Western Rural.

THE BEST WAY TO KEEP POTATOES.—Potatoes should always be kept in the dark. Intelligent rural housekeepers do not need to be told this; but many others living in towns and cities should know that potatoes exposed to the light for a day only have their flavor injured; and the longer they are exposed the worse they are. Never use a greenish potato, as such tubers are unfit for human food. When Irish potatoes are removed from the cellar they should always be spread out thin on the floor, in a cool building. If the apartment is not dark the potatoes should be covered with boards, to exclude the light. It is a good practice also to cover them with clean straw or sawdust. The injury done to potatoes by the light, after they are carried from a dark cellar, is the chief reason why there is such a universal complaint of poor potatoes in the spring and during the forepart of summer. Every sort of vegetable that grows in the dark—beneath the surface of the ground—should be stored in a dark apartment; while those vegetables and fruit which mature in the light will ripen more satisfactorily, and develop a more luscious flavor, if they are stored in a light room.

SEASON FOR CUTTING TIMBER.—According to Dr. Hartig, March and April are the most favorable months for cutting timber intended to be used by builders and carpenters, the average per cent. of moisture being less than forty-seven, while in the three following months the average is forty-eight, and the three winter months fifty-one. He states that properly seasoned timber contains from twenty to twenty-five per cent. of water, and never less than about ten per cent., and if the moisture is entirely removed by artificial means, the wood loses its elasticity and flexibility, and becomes brittle. An artificial seasoning of wood should be carried on very gradually, the temperature at the beginning being low, and the process not conducted too far.

MR. MEEHAN, of the Gardeners' Monthly, is very positive as to the uselessness of attempting to preserve the tap-root in transplanting. He says: "The shortening of a tap-root is of no more injury to a tree than the shortening of the finger nails to man." This matter was settled by Senebier and others over a hundred years ago. Their experiments we have repeated; and no intelligent man teaches any other doctrine.

IF LAND is weedy we use the fallow, oftentimes, to kill the weeds; or if it is disposed to go to certain sorts of grass, we use it for the purpose of killing the grass; or if land is rather poor, use a fallow, feeling that it eases the land, and gives it the benefit of the action of the elements during the summer. The best farmers farm every acre of their farms each year; no waste of land at all; every acre must produce.

A SOUTHERN FARMER says that the South can never restore her lands unless she takes a lesson from the Kentuckians on this point. Clover will grow on any good lands in the South, though the people do not believe it. Sow clover and orchard grass in the South, and they will withstand the suns.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

FIGS peeled, and served up with sugar and cream, make a nice breakfast dish.

PICKLED CRAB-APPLES.—To one quart of crab-apples put one pint of sugar and vinegar to cover, and a little spice; stir slowly while boiling, until the apples are tender, but not until they break. Then put in jars.

ICE.—An exchange says: "The curative and relieving powers of ice are found more valuable year after year. Small lumps of ice swallowed whole will often check acute stomach inflammations, and will prevent anusea, if heat is applied outside at the same time. Pounded ice applied to the spine is said to cure sea-sickness. A bit of ice will help diptheria and all other throat complaints. To become delightfully cool in summer, apply ice wrapped in paper to the back of the head for one moment."

TO PRESERVE QUINCES.—Select the fairest quinces, pare, cut in half, and remove the core neatly; then weigh, using a quarter of a pound of sugar to one of fruit; boil the quinces until tender in enough water to cover them, and when done take carefully up on a platter. To make your sirup, use half a pint of water in which the fruit was boiled to each pound of sugar. When skimmed clear, boil the quinces in the sirup five minutes; have the cans hot and fill while the fruit and sirup are boiling hot; seal each can or close the covers tightly as fast as filled.

QUINCE JELLY.—Boil the quince peelings and cores and such of the fruit as you do not wish to can till soft, in just enough water to cover; then put into jelly bags wrung out of hot water; hang the bags by strings on a stick laid across two chairs or benches, with a dish underneath, and let it drain without squeezing till the juice has all run out; then to every pint of juice weigh three-quarters of a pound of sugar, put it into a large platter or a deep dish and set in the oven to get hot, but not browned, while the juice in the preserving kettle is brought to a boil; when it begins to boil skim clear, and then pour in the hot sugar, stir all well together, skim clear, boil fifteen minutes, and dip into hot jelly glasses.

NORWEGIAN OATMEAL PORRIDGE.—Take two or three handfuls of meal mixed coarse and fine, in proportion of one-third latter to two of the former. Mix in a basin of cold water, and pour into a pan containing about a quart of boiling water, adding a small portion of salt. Set on the fire, and keep stirring, adding from time to time small doses of meal until it boils and has acquired a proper consistency, which may be made known by its glutinous state as it drops from the spoon. Let it simmer ten minutes, then pour into common dinner plates. Spoon out portions and float in new milk, adding sugar to taste.

TO REMOVE BURNED FRUIT OR OTHER BURNED VICTUALS FROM KETTLE.—Dinah has let the peaches burn, and the fruit is spoiled for the table. She has been told to cook some rice in the same stew-pan. Dinah has scraped and scoured, but the burnt peaches still adhere to the kettle; she knows it will stain the rice, that should look beautifully white and snow-like. Help Dinah out of her trouble by telling her to put a shovel full of ashes, from the stove hearth, into that kettle, a quart of water, and boil. In a few minutes all the burnt crust may be easily washed off of the kettle.—Our Home Journal.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

Scientific.

FISH HAVE great tenacity of life. It is believed that the carp has attained the age of one hundred and fifty, and the pike a still greater age. A pike was caught in a lake in South Germany, in 1497, on which was found a ring bearing this inscription: "I am the fish which was first of all put into this lake, by the hands of the Governor of the Universe, Frederick the Second, fifth of October, 1230." It weighed three hundred and fifty pounds, and was nineteen feet long.

A MAGNET has just been completed for Prof. Henry Morton, of the Stevens Polytechnic Institute at Hoboken, the weight of which is sixteen hundred pounds, about twelve times heavier than the celebrated magnet of Prof. Henry, of the Smithsonian. Its lifting force is estimated at between thirty and fifty tons—nearly five times more powerful than that used by Profs. Faraday and Tyndall in their famous experiments. It is now on exhibition at the Fair of the American Institute.

GREAT geological changes are reported from the districts adjoining the Caspian sea and the river Ural. During the last ten years the surface of the water in the river has sunk more than a foot, and many bogs on the northeastern coast of the Caspian have entirely disappeared. The delta of the Ural has diminished from nineteen to five branches, and whereas it formerly occupied one hundred versts, it now occupies only seven. Many islands have become joined to the mainland, and large sandbanks have been formed at the mouth of the river. The town of Guryer, formerly on the sea coast, is now six versts inland.—Nature.

IN DISCUSSING in Nature the structure and affinities of the Australian reptile-like fish noticed previously by us, Dr. Gunther expresses the opinion that the total number of fishes known at present is nine thousand. "But from the extent of the regions hitherto ichthyologically unexplored, and from the numerous additions annually made to the list of known forms, I do not believe that we are acquainted with much more than one-tenth of the species of fishes actually existing." Of these the larger proportion are true bony fishes—such as the cod, salmon, etc. A little over three per cent. form his sub-class Palæichthyes, which includes the sharks, rays, and the ganoids or gar-pikes, etc. He says that there are one hundred and forty species of sharks now living, one hundred and fifty species of rays, eight gar-pikes, and twenty-five sturgeons, with eight species of Lepidosiren and its allies, of which group the strange Australian fish is a member.

TINTING THE ELECTRIC SPARK.—M. E. Becquerel has shown that the electric spark may be diversely and beautifully colored by being made to pass through saline solutions. If an electrical spark from an inductive apparatus be made to pass into the extremity of a platinum wire suspended over the surface of the solution of a salt, this spark will acquire special coloration according to the chemical composition of the solution traversed. The saline solutions are best concentrated, and the platinum wire positive. The experiment is readily performed in a glass tube. Salts of strontia will color the spark red; chloride of sodium, yellow; chloride of copper, bluish green, etc. The light from these sparks, analyzed by the spectroscope, furnishes a method for the determination of the nature of the salts contained in the solution.

OPEN WINDOWS AT NIGHT.—Very much has been written on this subject, and written unwisely; the facts are that whoever sleeps uncomfortably cool will get sick. To hoist a window sky-high when the mercury is at zero is an absurdity.

The colder a sleeping apartment is, the more unhealthy does it become, because cold condenses the carbonic acids formed by the breathing of the sleeper. It settles near the floor and is rebreathed, and if in a very condensed form, he will die before the morning. Hence we must be governed by circumstances; the first thing is, you must be comfortably warm during sleep, otherwise you are not refreshed, and inflammation of the lungs may be engendered, and life destroyed within a few days.

An open door and an open fireplace are sufficient for ordinary purposes in very cold weather. When outer windows are opened, it is well to have them down at the top two or three inches, and up at the bottom for the same space.

In miasmatic localities—and these are along water-courses, beside millponds, marshes, bayous, river bottoms, flat lands and the like—it is most important, from the first of August until several severe frosts have been noticed, to sleep with all external doors and windows closed, because the cool air of sunset causes the condensation of the poisonous emanations which were caused by the heat of the noonday sun to rise far above the earth; this condensation makes the air "heavy" at sundown, made heavy by the greater solidification of the emanations by cold; and resting on the surface of the earth in their more concentrated and malignant form, they are breathed into the lungs, and swallowed into the stomach, corrupting and poisoning the blood with great rapidity. By daylight these condensations are made compact by the protracted coolness of the night, that they are too near the surface of the earth to be breathed into the system; but as the sun begins to ascend, these heavy condensations, miasms, begin to rise again to the height of several feet above the ground, and are freely taken into the system by every breath and swallow; hence the hours of sunrise and sunset are the most unhealthful of all the hours of the twenty-four in the localities named; and noontide, when the sun is hottest, is the most healthful portion of the day, because the miasma is so much rarified that it ascends rapidly to the upper regions.

The general lessons are; 1. Avoid exposure to the out-door air in miasmatic localities for the hours including sunrise and sunset. 2. Have a blazing fire on the hearth of the family room at those hours, to rarify and send the miasma upward. 3. Take breakfast before going out of doors in the morning, and take tea before sundown; then being out after night is not injurious.—Hall's Journal of Health.

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our Instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our Instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous 30LO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our Instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All Instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The general market has continued to exhibit a fair degree of animation, nearly every branch of the wholesale trade participating in the movement. Sugar was in moderate request at about previous quotations until Tuesday, when prices were softer. Molasses has been in better demand and ruled at higher rates. Flour has commanded full prices for superfine and double extra, which are in limited supply, while the higher grades have been neglected. Corn has ruled more in favor of buyers. Pork has continued firm, but bacon has ruled easier.

The frequent rains of the past few days must seriously interfere with picking, and are otherwise calculated to diminish the yield of cotton. With regard to sugar, the complaints of the poverty of the cane are general, and many now doubt if we shall reach last year's crop.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the tenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.	13,773
Lake		8
Mobile		2,590
Texas		151
Total		16,522

On Saturday the demand was fair, but the general drift of prices was in favor of buyers, without resulting in any marked variation. Including 300 bales on Friday evening, not consummated until Saturday, the sales embraced 4,500 bales. On Monday, notwithstanding the rainy and inclement weather, buyers came forward with still more spirit, and, under the favorable influence of an advance of 1-16d. at Liverpool, prices hardened, a part of the business being decidedly in favor of sellers, in some cases showing an improvement of ⅛c., good ordinary closing at 17⅛@17⅜c., low middling at 17⅛@17⅜c., middling at 18c., strict middling at 18⅛@18¼c., and good middling at 18⅛c. The sales summed up 5,400 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair demand, which subsequently became more active, and although factors raised their pretentions, buyers continued their operations with unabated spirit throughout the day. The supply at the same time was more liberal, and the sales consequently summed up 7,600 bales, which is 1,300 bales in excess of the largest business previously reported this year. Prices hardened as the extent of the movement was developed, and at the close showed a pretty general improvement of ⅛c.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 146,012 bales, against 204,345 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 125,332 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 16,515 to France, and a decrease of 57,851 to Great Britain, and of 8,782 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Good ordinary	17¼ @ 17¾
Low middling	17⅞ @ 17¾
Middling	18 @ 18¼

SUGAR.—The supplies have sold readily, but the market has weakened. On Tuesday the demand was good, especially for the better descriptions, but at easier prices for buyers. The supplies were mostly sold, embracing nearly 500 hhds., at 6½@6⅝c. for inferior, 7⅜@8c. for common, 8¾@8¾c. for fair, 9@9¾c. for good fair, 9⅞@10¼c. for fully fair, 10¾@11c. for primo, 9(@10⅝c. for seconds, 10½c. for yellow centrifugal, 11@12c. for yellow clarified, and 12@12¼c. for white clarified.

MOLASSES.—On Tuesday the demand was good, especially for the better descriptions, and the market was firmer. The supplies were sold, embracing 1,000 bbls., at 30@35c. for inferior and centrifugal, 40@42½c. for common and centrifugal, 43@46c. for fair, 47@50c. for prime, and 51@52c. for strictly prime to choice. A lot of choice brought 53c. ℔ gallon.

PORK.—On Tuesday, with liberal receipts, prices declined, when 187 bbls. mess sold, in two lots on the landing, at $15, and 25 bbls., in store, at $15.25 ℔ bbl. It is retailing at $15.75@$16 ℔ bbl.

BACON.—Clear rib sides are scarce, and are held at 8⅝@8¾c.; shoulders are in light supply, and are held at 8¼@8⅜c.; and clear sides are in good supply at 8½c. ℔ lb. There were sales, however, of 25 and 50 casks clear sides, the latter in two lots, on the spot, at 8½c., and about 100 casks do., to arrive, at 8⅝c. ℔ lb.

DRY SALT MEAT is in light supply. A lot of 10,000 lbs. shoulders, just received, sold to a dealer on Saturday at 7¾c. ℔ lb. On Tuesday 10 and 42 casks shoulders sold, to arrive, at 7¾c. They are retailing at 8¼c.

BREAKFAST BACON continues in good supply and very dull. The old stock in store has been offering at 10(@10½c., and choice new and fresh arrivals at 11@11½c. ℔ lb. Northern is quoted at 12@12½c.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request and varying with the New York market, closed at a net decline of ¼c., opening on Tuesday at 111⅜@111⅝, (against 111⅛ at New York,) and closing at the opening rates, (against 111¼ at New York.)

MISCELLANEOUS.

AGENTS WANTED
To sell the only Complete Unabridged People's Edition of
DR. WILLIAM SMITH'S
Bible Dictionary.

It contains over 1,000 closely printed, double-column octavo pages, and is illustrated with over 200 engravings, and a series of fine, authentic maps.

This DICTIONARY embodies the results of the most recent study and research of over sixty of the most eminent Biblical scholars in the world. Clergymen of all denominations regard it as the best work of the kind ever published, and one which ought to be in the hands of every Bible reader.

It is a great library in itself. The labor and learning of centuries are gathered in this one volume, to throw a clear, strong light upon every page of the inspired word. Agents are meeting with unprecedented success. One reports 55 orders taken the first three days of his canvass; another 78 in two days; another 212 in ten days; another 29 Dictionaries and 28 of our large Family Bibles in two half days; another sold 27 Dictionaries and 24 Bibles in one day.

Send for circulars with terms, testimonials and a full description of the work. Address

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT.

The King of Mineral Springs is the German Seltzer; and

Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient

Is its duplicate. Letters attesting its wonderful Tonic Aperient and anti-Bilious qualities swarm in from every source. The question has been settled whether artificially medicated waters may not be equal to those which burst sparkling from the earth itself. They can; and the Seltzer Aperient, when undoubtedly pure and genuine, proves the fact. Be cautious. Accept none other.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!
THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1871. NO. 45.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15.—The Agricultural Department is preparing seeds seasonable for the South. A snpply may be obtained by npplication to the agent of the department, or throngh members of Congress. The distribution is gratuitons, but the department wants some guarantee that the seed will not be wasted.

VICKSBURG, Nov. 16.—There have been heavy frosts for the past three days. No yellow fever here. Safe for absentees to return.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 16.—The first snow this season fell to-day.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—The annual session of the Methodist Missionary Committee is now being held here. Bishops Janes, Scott, Morris, Simpson and Ames are present. Appropriations were made for missions dnring the next year in Africa, South America, China, Germany, Switzerland, Denmnrk, Sweden, Norway, India, Bulgaria, Italy, Mexico, nnd among the foreign population of the United Stntes, aggregatiug $670,000.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 17.—The funeral services of Rev. Alfred Cookman were held this morning at Union Methodist Episcopal Church. The coffin was plsced on the catafalque used for the remains of Ex-President Lincoln. The remains were interred at Lanrel Hill.

CHARLESTON, Nov. 17.—Accounts from all sections of the interior report the black frost, which occurred here on Thnrsday morning, to have been general throughout this and adjacent States. Ice having been formed here during the last two nights, all dauger from yellow fever hns ceased, and the trains arriving are filled with returning refngees. Thermometer at four o'clock this morning was twenty-nine.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—The November returns of the Department of Agriculture, relative to the condition and yield of the cotton crop, indicate a larger prodnct than was expected in October, and promise fully to make good the moderate expectations of July and Augnst. There had been no killing frosts up to the date of these reports. In the rich and well-cnltivnted soils of the lower tier of States the plant was as green and vigorons as in summer.

In some places the top crop was maturing, though complaints of the immatnrity or loss of the later growth are qnite general. In the latitndo of middle Georgia the sqnares formed between August 25 and September 25, under favorable circnmstances, promise to make good cotton. The principal cause of reduction of yield in Texas is drought; in Lonisiana, drought, insects and black rot; in Mississippi, wet weather in the spring, drought in the snmmer, and in isolated sections the caterpillar or boll worm, and driving winds and floods, which occasioned nearly total destruction of considerable areas. Droughts have wrought more or less injnry in Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina.

The yield per acre, as indicated by county estimate, is the largest in Arkansas, decreasing in the following order: Texas, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, North Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina and Florida. The more northern belt of the cotton States shows the least reduction from their usual average. The tabnlations for November are estimates, for each county, of the total product of the year, expressed as per centages of the actnal crop of last year.

These averages adjnsted, with regard to the relative production of the counties reported, give the following result for each State: North Carolina 68, Georgin 67, Florida 58, Alabama 73, Mississippi 72, Louisiana 65, Texas 68, Arkansas 85, and Tennessee 90. A few counties in Virginia, Kentucky and Missonri make reports of much the same tenor as the returns from North Carolina and Tennessee.

The qnality of the fiber is reported good in all sections up to the present date; a small proportion of discolored or trashy cotton has been gathered. Some attention has been paid to improved quality by the introdnction of improved varieties. Many correspondents note the superiority in yield and the comparative exemption from decrease nnder careful culture and judicious fertilization. The November and December numbers of monthly reports will be issued together, and will contain the substance of all cotton reports to December 1.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—The Rnssian frigate Svetland, with the Grand Duke Alexis on board, has arrived.

OMAHA, Nov. 20.—The sleet and snow storm which commenced here on Snnday morning extended over the whole country, from the Rocky mountains to the Missouri river. Everything is covered with a coating of heavy ice, causing the downfall of telegraph lines and doing other damage. The Union Pacific trains are snow-bound at different points between Cheyenne and Omaha. The storm is reported still more severe on the southern and western Colorado.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—At eleven o'clock this morning the steamer Mary Powell, with the reception committee and abont five hundred persons, including a large nnmber of ladies, proceeded down the bay. Over one thonsand persons assembled at the pier to witness the departure of the steamer, which was gaily decorated with Rnssian and American flags. Nearly all the vessels in the bay were dressed with flags, and many of them display Russian colors. Broadway is thronged with persons awaiting the parade; a great number arrived from the connlry in early trains.

The bnildings on Broadway and other principal streets are decorated with flags. The National Gnards are ont in full force. The weather is fine, and the reception will be brilliant.

The crowd on Broadway is so dense that locomotion is almost impossible. Every window and space from which a view can be obtained is occupied. There are ten thousand troops in line, extending two miles.

The weather to-day has been beautifnl, and the reception of the Grand Dnke Alexis has been of the most generous and enthusiastic natnre. At an early honr Broadway began to wear a holiday appearance. Throngs of persons crowded the sidewalks, producing blockades of several minutes' duration at all the difficult street crossings. Many were evidently strangers to the metropolis; some plainly from the rnral districts, while the appearance of others as clearly indicated that they were visitors from other cities.

Cotton is dull, the intelligence from Liverpool causing disappointment. Novembers 18¼; March 19.

Sterling has declined, because of liberal receipts of Southern bills to-day.

Gold is dull but stendy at yesterday's decline.

There is a tremendons outpouring of people to welcome the Grand Duke Alexis.

FOREIGN.

SHANGHAI, Oct. 12, via San Francisco, Nov. 16.—John Maghann, British consnl, died at Shanghai on the ninth of October.

More than three hundred lives were lost at Mnrso during the typhoon of September 2.

The rains continne in the north; within the last ten days the water has been higher than at any previons date. Twenty thousand square miles of territory have been innndated, and one thonsand people were drowned in New China.

Political difficulties are brewing in the province of Hianan, and a formidable insnrrection is imminent.

The bulk of the tea crop has been bronght to market, and there has been an advance in the prices of all grades.

Silk is also higher and the cotton crop is fair. The market for coals has been active. Freights have been good for vessels to all quarters.

YOKOHAMA, Oct. 23, via San Francisco, Nov. 16.—The Mikado is throwing off his exclusiveness, and is appearing freely in pnblic.

Minister Delony is traveling extensively throngh Japan and is visiting the volcanoes and all points of interest. The new Governor of Yokohama entertained the foreign consnls at dinner, and made radically progressive speeches.

The steamship Alaska will sail from Yokohama nbout the second of November, with a full cargo of teas, already engaged.

CITY OF MEXICO, Nov. 11, via Havana, Nov. 19.—Formidable revolutions are taking place throughout the country, and a chnnge in the existing government is expected before New Year. The country never was in such an unsettled condition.

The State of Oaxaca has pronounced in favor of the revolutionists, and General Porferio Diaz is at the head of a formidable army.

The States of Agnas Calientes, Durango, Zacatecas and Coahnila have also pronounced and are moving in the revolntionary cause. Smaller pronnnciamientos have been issned. In all the States the governors are resigning and general alarm prevails. Everywhere disaffections exist in the army, and generals and colonels, with their commands, nre joining the revolutionists. Other officers are disaffected and the government is paralyzed, the treasury is bankrnpt and the people are going over to the revolutionists.

MADRID, Nov. 15.—In the Cortes to-day Serilla denied that the first Spnnish minister framed, after the revolntion which drove Queen Isabella from the throne, devised or entertained a project for the sale of Cuba to the United States.

Mnch excitement was created in the Cortes by a speech from Firaguedo, adverting to the relinquishment hy Spain of San Domingo, dnring which the session for the day was terminated.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 15.—The Moscow Gazette connsels Rnssia to demand the neutrnlization of Denmark nnd the restoration of Northern Schleswig to Denmark as a means of counteracting Prnssian power on the Baltic.

BERLIN, Nov. 15.—Provincial correspondence, semi-official, says the retirement of Von Buest from the chancellorship of the Austrian empire and minister of foreign affairs has no effect upon the relations between Prussia and Austria, the friendliness of which is unimpaired.

PARIS, Nov. 15.—Hundreds of persons attended the feast of Medeline to-day. The special mass heretofore celebrated for the health of the Empress Engenie was not performed. No reason has been assigned for its omission.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 16.—There were three hundred and eighty deaths from cholera in this city last week.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—An explosion occurred to-day at Wigan colliery; bnildings were rocked and the people rushed panic-stricken to the streets. Fortnnately the explosion ocenrred after the working gangs had left; only six persons were killed. The cause of the explosion is unknown.

Heavy gales prevail on the British coast, and several casnalties are reported. No American vessels are mentioned.

The Legrete, from Cardiff for Havana, was driven ashore in Barnstable bay, and will be a total wreck. The crew were saved.

THE HAGUE, Nov. 17.—The Parliament of the Netherlands have agreed to abolish the Dntch embassy at the papal conrt.

VIENNA, Nov. 17.—Connt Von Bnest has addressed a formal circular to the diplomatic agents of the Austro-Hungarian empire resident abroad, stating that his resignation was not hased npon any political gronnds, bnt upon reasons of a purely personal character.

PARIS, Nov. 17.—A dispatch from Rome states thnt the holy father has consented to the consecration of the Church of St. Snire. He has hitherto refused to permit the ceremony to be performed, because the church was the private property of King Victor Emannel.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—Strikes have commenced among the mechanics and laborers in varions parts of Spain, in obedience, it is reported, to signals from abroad.

MADRID, Nov. 17.—A deputation of the senators and deputies in attendance upon the Cortes, with the minister of the crown, waited npon King Amadens this morning, and presented congratulations upon the anniversary of his accession to the throne of Spain. The King, in response, gave the strongest assurance of his patriotism and devotion to the cause of recovering for Spain her position among the powers of Europe, and restoring national industry and prosperity.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—A collision ocenrred at sea, between two American vessels, the Ella Morton and Agnes Campbell; the Campbell was sunk. No particulars.

Dr. McLeod states officially that he has attended the Queen for over thirteen years, and declares that all reports to the effect that her majesty has shown symptoms of mental weakness are nnfriendly and untrne.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—The first Roman Catholic mission ever dispatched from England to America sailed to-day. The party consists of four priests, whose duty it will be to labor exclusively among the colored people of the United States.

After the celebration of mass previous to their departure, Archbishop Manning addressed the missionaries. He said this mission had been established by the church in England because the country had imposed slavery on America, and it was fitting that Englishmen should be the first to move for an amelioration of the newly emancipated race.

MADRID, Nov. 19.—The movements of the radical members of the Cortes have resulted in the defeat of the minority npon the test qnestion, and a cabinet crisis has occurred.

The debates at Friday's sitting of the Cortes were intensely exciting, and the session did not break np until seven o'clock this morning.

During the discnssion upon the proposition of censnre of the government, bronght forward by the adherents of Zorilla, a connter motion was snbmitted by Ochoa providing for the granting of entire liberty to religious societies throughout Spain, and the snppression of the decrees of the provisional government, of which Senor Zorilla was a member. Relative thereto and pending this, a motion was made to declare the sitting of the Cortes permanent, and a spirited discussion followed.

The government eventnally demanded its rejection as a cabinet qnestion, but their opponents had a majority, for npon a division of the honso the motion was fonnd to be adopted by a vote of one hundred and seventy-three to one hundred and eighteen.

Admiral Malcampo, president of the council of State and head of the ministry, at once mounted the tribune and read the royal decree proroguing the sittings of the Cortes without day.

The King to-day summoned to his presence the presidents of the two houses, for consultation as to the grave aspect of political affairs. It has since become known that the ministry have resigned, bnt the belief is expressed in high qnarters that with some modifications they will continue in office.

PARIS, Nov. 19.—The Constitutionnel says the Duc de Harcourt, French embassador to the papal court, has sent a telegram to Count Dermuset, minister of foreign affairs, stating that the Pope has expressed his intention of leaving Rome when a bill is presented in the Italian Parliament convening that body in session in the Holy City.

Nineteen Communists have been fonnd gnilty of the death of Generals Thomas and Lecompte, seven of whom have been sentenced to death; the others to imprisonment. Verdaquer suffers death.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—M. Lonis Kossuth, the well-known Hnngarian patriot, has been elected a member of the London branch of the International Society.

ROME, Nov. 21.—Victor Emanuel entered Rome to-day.

HALIFAX, Nov. 21.—The cholera has broken ont in the eastern section of Halifax county. A man employed as cook on the steamer Franklin is supposed to have brought the disease into the county. He is recovering, but others who canght the infection from him have died. The local government have adopted the necessary measnres to prevent the spread of the disease. The health officer of Halifax is seriously blamed for neglect.

The Protestant Episcopal Ministry.

But few of the Episcopal clergy are derived from the families of leading lawyers, prominent statesmen and astnte merchants. For some reason or other the clergy are largely recruited from other denominations. The leading men principally are imported—thnt is, the clergy obtained from other denominations is more numerous and more able than the part of them "to the manor born." Now, we know that the class we contribnte—and we contribute by far the most—are not by any means the ablest we have. Undoubtedly we send many good men and sometimes an able one, bnt, as a general thing, the preachers who leave ns are not those for whose loss the church cannot be comforted. The common indncement is, nndonbtedly, the hope of a better salary and a more tolerable life, and the yearnings thus indicated are, for obvions reasons, not so earnest in the class of preachers most highly prized. We are not blaming men for leaving ns. We have no disposition to disparage them. Some of them are right. For some cause, physical, intellectual or domestic, they cannot do the work of a Methodist preacher, while well able to do that of an Episcopal clergyman. So they are right to take a lower place and work in an humbler capacity. "The church" reqnires little but good moral reputation and a fair classical edncation. Of preaching ability it takes no account. To read the service and a short religious essay in fair English is all that the pulpit exacts. To many men snch a refnge from the intellectnal strain of our exacting, not to say exhanstive, preaching is delicions; but to others the very limitations of the Episcopal pulpit would be an intolerable restraint.

It is no wonder, then, that the average clergy of "the church" are falling below the average intelligence of the laity. Of course there are exceptions, bnt this is certainly the rule. It is not pleasant to anticipate the result of this disparity, bnt one natnral terminns is Ritualism, which is the natural device of a feeble clergy to hold the reverence of a more intelligent people. In the Catholic Church we see how the most narrow-minded, imbecile monks can hold down the most intellectnal men of their time. We fear, therefore, thnt the Episcopal Church will share the experience of her elder sister. We fear that sermons will be shortened to protect the people from uninteresting, common-place essays, and the preacher from a dnty to which he is intellectually incompetent. The laity will come to look upon the ministers as mere functionaries of the temple, for whom little brains are required, as there is little in their work for brains to do. To wear a cassock, to read the prayers, to go through the ceremonies of the ritual, to talk to women and children about "the church," to swell with the assurance of apostolical pedigree, and to behave with ceremonial decency at weddings and funerals—all that requires no more use of the intellect than the functions of a Musselman Imaum.

We lament the decadence of the pulpit in the Episcopal Church for many reasons. It will draw into their ministry many men of small capacity who cannot maintain themselves where preaching provides an intellectual test. It will inevitably foster ritualism, as the expedient of clerical mediocrity, to preserve its respectability. Worse than all, it will utterly prevent "the church" from "preaching the gospel to the poor," which is the grand commission of Christianity. In our conversations with Episcopalians, nothing is so striking and so painful as the disregard for the sermon. By many it seems only tolerated. Yet our Lord institnted it as the one human instrument of saving the world; and history gives universal attestation to the wisdom of the provision. We respectfully snggest to the evangelical part of the Episcopal clergy that they shonld turn their attention to strengthening the pnlpit against the encroachments of the desk. Preaching is too strong for ceremonies when it has free course.

There is one other matter of which, in all kindness and good humor, we feel moved to speak. As a general thing, the courtesy and urbanity of the Episcopal clergy are admirable, bnt it really is not polite to compel every Methodist, even immediately upon introduction, to decline an invitation to join "the church," especially when the invitation is based npon the presumed inferiority of his own. Methodist bishops and ministers do not feel it necessary to tell their Episcopalian brethren npon sight all the defects we think we see in their denomination. It would not be courteous, and courtesy is not denominational. Only gudgeons can be caught by this sort of fishing, and perhaps "the church," like other churches, has enough of these already.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

A MUNIFICENT ACT.—Our excellent friend, the Rev. Dr. Savage, the vigilant agent of the American Bible Society in Kentucky, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, informs ns that the Board of Managers of that noble institntion has made a grant of $500 worth of Bibles and Testaments to the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. He says: "They will be forwarded to the address of the Rev. A. H. Redford, D. D., Nnshville, Tennessee, to be judiciously disbursed by you and him." When the books are received due notice will be given. Meanwhile we express our sense of high satisfaction with this liberal act of the board, and our colored friends will be extremely grateful for the kindness. Dr. Redford will take charge of the work of distribution; and the board, with its agent, may rest assured that it will be judiciously attended to. Such an act as this, besides the immediate good resulting in the circulation of God's own blessed book, has a happy tendency to diminish sectional alienation, and to promote good feeling between the two races which dwell in our land.

Remarkable Movements Among the Mohammedans.

The London Times contains some personal details of great interest by n Dr. Chaplin, in regard to "the Babs of Persia," a sect of Mohammedans, who appear to have attained a considerable amonnt of Christian truth through simple Bible reading.

"Of all the followers of Mohammed, the Metawely of Persia are among the most bigoted and fanatical. Not only will they not eat or drink with Christians, bnt they dash to pieces any vessel belonging to them ont of which a Christian has drunk, gather their garments around them as they pass a Christian in the street lest they should be contaminated by contact with him, and should any Christian book be in their way they remove it with tongs rather than defile themselves by touching it. Abont thirty years ago some intelligent and thoughtful members of the sect, of good position and education, were led by this very excess of bigotry to inquire into the reason of it, and, having procured from some Christian copies of the New Testament in the Arabic language, devoted themselves to its careful study. The result of their investigation was that they became convinced of its truth, accepted it as the word of God, and embraced its doctrines. They did not, however, abandon their faith in Mohammed as a prophet of God, and the Koran as a divinely-inspired book, but believed themselves able to reconcile the hitherto antagonistic creeds of Islam and Christianity. Their doctrine, which received the name of Babel Huk, (door of truth,) spread rapidly, and in the course of a few years was professed by two hundred thousand persons. A persecution now arose, during which twenty thousand adherents of the new doctrine, were slain, and its founder, known as Beheyah Allah, took refnge with a small band of friends at Bagdad. Here he continued to hold communication with his followers in Persia, and exercised so much influence that the government of that country requested the Snltan of Turkey to remove him, from such dangerous proximity, to some place where he could less easily be communicated with. He was accordingly sent to Edernay, and subsequently to another fortress, where he now is."

The Tablet also has an account of an alleged remarkable movement in the vicinity of Damascus:

"Certain of a sect of Moslem Mystics had been wont to 'spend days and nights in praying for enlightenment before the throne of grace.' Forty of them are said to have had simultaneous dreams directing them first to Christ and afterward to an old man who proved to be 'Fray Emannel Forner,' a Romish priest. They applied to the priest, by whom they were received into the church, and in a short time after had increased to two hundred and fifty converts, who held regular prayer meetings in each other's houses, which in one time did not fail to attract the attention of their Moslem neighbors. The Ulema of Damascus were thrown into a state of the utmost consternation, and at last a meeting was held in the town house of the Algerine Amir, Abd-el-Kader, at which a resolution was passed pronouncing sentence of death against the converts. Fourteen of them were cast into prison by order of Rashid Pasha, where they remained for three months, when, at the solicitation of the Russian consul, M. Maccnf, they were temporarily released. Twelve of them were subsequently re-arrested and transported to the dungeons of Hanak Kallessi, the Dardanelles fortress, their wives and children being left in a starving condition at Damascus. Finally they were landed on the coast of Barbary, and banished to the distant interior settlement of Murzuk. Bnt these severities have by no means, as it appears from the statements of the Tablet, snppressed the movement they were designed to crush. It is affirmed that there are now five thonsand neophytes in Damascus alone."

The Pall Mall Gazette adds: "We hear of Syrian villages en masse volnntarily offering themselves for conversion to Christianity, and among the converts are not only the poor but many of the richest Moslems about Damascus. And we have reason to apprehend that this 'revival' will lead to a collision between the Moslems and the Christians."

NO MAN is a better merchant than he who lays out his time upon God and his money upon the poor.

THERE IS NO DEATH.

BY SIR E. BULWER LYTTON.

There is no death! The stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore;
And bright, in heaven's jeweled crown,
They shine for evermore.

There is no death! The dust we tread
Shall change beneath the summer showers
To golden grain or mellow fruit,
Or rainbow-tinted flowers.

The granite rocks disorganize,
And feed the hungry moss they bear;
The forest leaves drink daily life
From out the viewless air.

There is no death! The leaves may fall,
And flowers may fade and pass away;
They only wait through wintry hours
The coming of May-day.

There is no death! An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
And bears our best loved things away,
And then we call them "dead."

He leaves our hearts all desolate,
He plucks our fairest, sweetest flowers;
Transplanted into bliss, they now
Adorn immortal bowers.

The bird-like voice, whose joyous tones
Made glad those scenes of sin and strife,
Sings now an everlasting song
Around the tree of life.

Where'er he sees a smile too bright,
Or heart too pure for taint and vice,
He bears it to that world of light,
To dwell in paradise.

Born unto that undying life,
They leave us but to come again;
With joy we welcome them the same,
Except their sin and pain.

And over near us, though unseen,
The dear immortal spirits tread;
For all the boundless universe
Is life—there is no dead!

DIFFERENCE OF OPINION RESPECTING PREACHING.

MR. EDITOR: Among the numerous privileges we enjoy in the present day, that of an itinerant gospel ministry must not be considered as the least; but the opinions of hearers respecting them are not the same.

What appears to engage the attention and impress the heart of one has not always that effect upon another; and here I do not allude so much to the ignorant, dogmatic professor, whose taste is capricious, who hears a sermon without judgment and determines without thought, as to the serious part, who sit under the gospel from the best of motives. Even among these we find a great difference and variety of opinions respecting preachers.

Some like the man whose reasoning is close, connected and argumentative—who can enter with peculiar acumen into his subject, trace out the subtilties of the sophist, and confront the positions of the infidel. Others cannot follow a chain of reasoning, but prefer him who can rouse their passions and animate them to duty by a plain but powerful and affecting representation of the mercies they have received, the privileges they enjoy and the obligations they are under.

Some, again, like to dwell in the tempest—they are best pleased with the lightnings and thunderings of divine truth. They will hardly give a minister credit for being faithful if he do not clothe himself with terror, and with vehemence reiterate the awful sentence: "Depart, ye cursed."

Others, on the contrary, love the calm and gentle method. They think more are to be drawn to the Savior by love than driven by fear.

Some, again, seem more profited by hearing the doctrines discussed and defended. It is doctrinal preaching, say they, that lays a foundation for knowledge and holiness, and will enable a man to render a reason for the hope that is in him.

Others, while they love the doctrines and rejoice in them, discover a greater partiality to that kind of preaching which is termed practical and experimental. They are edified under him whose talent it is to develop the depravity of the heart, who traces the windings and turnings of human nature, and who prepares and defends them against the various assaults of Satan and the temptations of the world, who stirs them up to duty by every motive the sacred oracles contain and the nature of their service requires, and who consoles them under all their afflictions by an animated and appropriate representation of the divine promises.

Among hearers of the gospel there are some few who dislike not truth the less for its being delivered with elegance and ornament, supposing that so rich a treasure deserves every appendage that can recommend it to notice. But others, not less wise, believe its own intrinsic excellencies to be so great as not to want any foreign aid or human embellishments to render it acceptable. Give us, say they, the preacher whom we can hear without an interpreter—whose words we can understand without a dictionary; who with plain truth, serious mind and energetic manner plunges, as it were, into our hearts, and carries us away captive by the force of the native truth he delivers. Thus in the religious world we see how the opinions of men vary.

Now to some it may seem strange that men who preach the same gospel, hold the same sentiments, urge the same motives, and have the same end in view, that they are not equally admired and as equally followed. Much, indeed, depends upon our natural tastes—the association of ideas, in the minds of ministers, resembling our own—our natural capacities, education, custom, situation, and the like. But I would resolve this into something higher than all these. I would consider it as the effect of that divine wisdom which is conspicuously displayed in all that variety we discern in creation and providence, as well as grace.

The various gifts of ministers and the different attachments of hearers are certainly in unison with the divine design, "for he gave some apostles, some prophets and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edification of the body of Christ."

The Almighty never intended that sinners should be called, or the general body of his people edified, under one man of a peculiar gift. He is pleased to work by different instruments in the same service, and accordingly disposes the minds of his people to these instruments, that his plans may be accomplished, and that herein we might see "the manifold wisdom of God."

Let not, then, the faithful minister be discouraged.

I have known some good men who have felt their minds hurt when they have heard others of different talents so much applauded, and have been ready to conclude that they were doing no good themselves. But such a conclusion ought not to be drawn, nor such a thought for a moment indulged.

"Very excellent men excel in different ways." The most radiant stones may differ in color, when they do not in value. Let no minister therefore despair, but cultivate his own talent, strive to be useful in the path God hath marked out for him, and his labors shall not be in vain.

Let not hearers of the gospel despise those faithful ministers under whom they say they cannot profit. How common, in these days, is it to hear even professors of religion pass sentence upon ministers: "Our preacher is not much." Another discovers no great penetration; this man has not much genius; that man no originality of thought—he is common-place. Now, even admitting this in part to be true, it should be remembered that the very men thus decried may be extensively useful to others, and may be to them. They may shine in the sphere they are placed in, although they may not be stars of the first magnitude.

May we learn to admire and adore the wisdom of that God who employs different capacities to carry on his work. Let us revere the wise and learn of the judicious, but be candid even to the weakest, remembering that good may be derived from all—"that a torch may be lighted by a match, and a knife be sharpened by an unpolished stone."

R. S. T.

BATON ROUGE, Louisiana.

Babes in Christ—New Creatures.

We understand babes in Christ to be those who have believed with hearts unto righteousness, or justification. We also understand that when we are justified we are regenerated—are "born again," "born of the Spirit," "born of God;" and further, we understand that all who are "born again" are "new creatures," for "if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." This is precisely the effect which we should expect from the cause. If we are born of the Holy Spirit, can we be born otherwise than holy? Can the Holy Spirit give birth to an unholy, or even partially unholy, nature? As well suppose a pure fountain can send forth an impure stream, or the sun, the fountain of light, pour forth darkness. But, notwithstanding the plainness of these Scriptures, and the reasonableness of these deductions, great and good men have taught that spiritually all the "old things" have not passed away, nor all things spiritually become new; but that there are certain "remains of the carnal mind"—"inbred sin," "indwelling sin." Now these expressions are not found in the Scriptures, and we hold that they are gratuitous assumptions, invented to express and sustain a theory. "Roots of bitterness" is another favorite expression of this class of writers. It is scriptural, but has no application to the use to which it is generally put.

It seems to us a wonderful and improbable thing that God, for Christ's sake, will pardon the penitent believer, and yet only imperfectly and partially renew his nature. We cannot help being born into the world with depraved natures, and cannot be blamed for it. (Note, we are writing about depravity—a morally diseased state—not about sin, which is an act, a voluntary transgression of the law.) We cannot renew our natures; we are wholly dependent on God for this gracious work. Is it reasonable to suppose that God will pardon our sins—adopt us and make us heirs and joint heirs with Christ—and yet leave our natures "carnal," and, if so, "enmity" to himself? We are not able to see it so.

"But," say the advocates of partial regeneration, "do we not see, especially in young Christians, weakness, ignorance, and are there not sins or temptations to sin that powerfully, and sometimes, alas! successfully assail them?" Certainly we do; but we can admit this, and, we think, satisfactorily account for it, without resorting to the solution of partial regeneration and the "remains of the carnal mind," as some are pleased to call the ignorance and weakness of babes in Christ.

As the Holy Spirit calls new-born souls "babes," this illustration must be descriptive of their state and circumstances. What, then, may be some of the analogies that exist between the babe natural and the babe gracious and spiritual?

First, a babe is ignorant; few young creatures are so much so. The babe in Christ is ignorant—ignorant of himself, of his constitutional or circumstantial weakness. All men have temptations that beset them with peculiar force toward the commission of particular sins, growing out of constitutional aptitudes, or the particular character of their position or business. Until experience clearly teaches them the existence and nature of these besetments, they are in danger of being led into these temptations more easily than into other temptations. A holy nature may be tempted, for Christ was tempted. The "babe" in Christ is necessarily to some extent ignorant of the "devices of Satan," his "wiles," and is in more danger of being deceived than he will be when he better understands the "enemy's" dark and crooked ways. The "babe" in Christ must be ignorant of much of God's word, which must be "spiritually discerned," and ignorant of God's dealings with his people. He has daily need to search the Scriptures. Knowledge is the second grace he is commanded to "add to his faith," before "temperance," "patience," "godliness," "brotherly kindness," or "charity," because in the childhood of Christian life this grace is so much needed.

Second, we note a babe is weak; few young creatures are so weak; it is entirely dependent on parental aid. This holds true of the spiritual babe; and many, alas, like the Hebrew converts, (Heb. v, 12-14,) long remain babes, and have need of milk when they ought to be so spiritually grown as to be capable of digesting and assimilating "strong meat." If a babe or young child essays to do in its own strength, it is soon overcome or pulled down; and so, spiritually, we have to learn that if strong at all, it must be "in the Lord and in the power of his might." Now this babe-like weakness may certainly exist, without the necessity of supposing the "remains of corruption" or the existence of "inbred sin," to explain a want of power, which nothing but a healthy youth can give.

And lastly, a babe is destitute of habits, though it can and does soon acquire them. The babe spiritual has no spiritual habits. To be without habits is much like a stream before it has cut a channel—it is not near so strong, because not so condensed and united, as when in a channel, and is therefore much more easily turned either to the right or left than it can be when the channel is deep-cut and well defined. The spiritual babe has no habit, it may be, of prayer, of Scripture searching, of church attendance nor of pious association; but he may, previous to his spiritual birth, have acquired habits of quite an opposite character. Now, with the new habits to take on and the old ones to resist and trample under foot, it is easy to see that the babe in Christ must have conflicts and temptations; and how it is possible for them to fall into sin without resorting to partial regenerations for the solution of these spiritual phenomena?

The normal and healthy babe is, as a babe, perfect in all its parts, but of course needing and capable of great development in all its members, senses, affections and intellect. So, spiritually, we take it, all divine births are perfect—that the gracious and spiritual babe has all the elements of a perfect man in Christ, so that we may and should grow, "till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ; that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine by the sleight of men and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the Head, even Christ; from whom the whole body, fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."—Ephesians iv, 13-16. This progress in all healthy and diligent children of God goes on, we doubt not, as long as life shall last, and, for aught we know, for evermore. It is not, as we understand it, some sudden and distinctive reconstructing work wrought within us, that we as babes need, but a continuous spiritual growth—a triumphant march along a path that "shineth more unto the perfect day." Thank God that he has made our spiritual nature so much superior to our material nature. This material body may soon reach its limits—it can essay no more—but our spiritual and immortal nature can forever approximate the infinite holiness of God.

It is a most encouraging thought that though a babe be ignorant, weak and without the strength of habit, the babe has one "desire"—the first it manifests, and the most essential—the desire for "milk," the very thing that makes it grow and develops in its whole nature. So every babe in Christ "desires the sincere milk of the word, that he may grow thereby." God's word is bread indeed, sweeter than honey; it makes wise unto salvation. Without this desire to be taught of God, to learn of God, the spiritual babe would perish; but while God's word is the man of their counsel, and their delight is in the law of the Lord, they are like a "tree planted by the rivers of water—their leaf does not wither, and they bring forth their fruit in season."

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Springville Circuit, Louisiana Conference.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a meeting of great interest at Pleasant Grove. We commenced on Saturday, October 28, and protracted the meeting for six days. It resulted in the conversion of twenty-five persons, from the age of nine years to the age of sixty, and the church generally revived. There were seventeen accessions to our church and twelve to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. We had a bright conversion of one who was deaf and dumb; also one old gentleman converted at home on a sick-bed. The oldest settlers say that it was one of the best revivals that has ever been known in that section of country. A number pledged themselves to go home and take up family prayer. A Presbyterian brother pledged himself to take the converts under fifteen years of age under his charge, and hold special meetings weekly for them, while a Methodist brother pledged himself to do likewise with the older converts. The Presbyterians and Baptists rendered us good service. Bro. Jones, Presbyterian minister, labored successfully for us; also Bro. Fulton, of this Conference, with Bros. Sherod and Gilbert, local preachers—all being in the spirit. We closed with twelve persons at the altar. We had almost despaired having a revival this year; but, glory be to God, he has wonderfully blessed us. We have three more protracted meetings to come off before Conference, and we hope to have a revival at each.

We have built a parsonage, one church, and two others under way, this year, and will bring up all the Conference collections.

Martinsville Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I give you a few items in reference to this circuit. This work lies between the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern railroad east, and southeast of Beauregard and Martinsville, and extends east to Pearl river, and south to the mouth of the Bahala. It lies in Copiah and Lawrence counties. There are six appointments in all. The nearest one to me is fifteen and the farthest one thirty miles. The work is one of those known among us as a piny woods circuit. The people are generally poor and plain, but intelligent, industrious and religious. In this work we have Methodism in earnest—real old-fashioned Christianity. Many of my people are not content with formalism, but go in for the power of the Holy Ghost. They want a religion that they can feel.

We have had fine meetings at every appointment save one. The number of conversions I do not know, but not as large as the number of accessions. About sixty-five have joined, and are doing well. Last winter the membership kept up prayer meetings at some points all through the winter without a single failure, notwithstanding the great quantity of rain and high water. During the Conference year, up to this date, I have traveled on the railroad four hundred miles, in buggy one hundred, in wagon twenty-three, on foot sixty, on horseback one thousand four hundred and seventy-five, making in all two thousand and fifty-eight miles. I have made one hundred and forty-three visits, preached seventy-five sermons, delivered five Sunday school lectures, organized three schools, baptized thirteen children and eight adults. I have also sold about $75 worth of our books, distributed five hundred tracts, and obtained nine subscribers to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. I have missed three appointments during the year—two on account of high water, one from sickness. Our finances are a little behind, but my stewards say they will bring up all.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS., Nov. 10, 1871.

DeKalb Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: We have been visited with refreshings from the presence of the Lord in the DeKalb circuit recently. We began early in the year prospecting, figuring, laboring and praying for a camp meeting. The enterprise passed through various phases of doubt and uncertainty, but was finally assured success. My time was so occupied and engrossed with preparations for the camp meeting that no special effort could be made, at other points, till the most favorable season for protracted meetings had well-nigh passed. The money for building a large board arbor, forty by sixty feet, had to be raised out of a people burdened with exorbitant taxes, and alarmed at the prospect of short crops. Besides, tents were to build, the ground to clear off, and the people attending the meeting from a distance to be fed and lodged. All these difficulties had to be encountered and surmounted. We began the exorcises of the camp meeting on the Friday night before the second Sunday in October. Bro. Hines, our excellent and efficient presiding elder, preached the opening sermon; at the close of the sermon he invited penitents, and several presented themselves. From this time to the close of the meeting the interest increased. At almost every service the altar was crowded with weeping penitents, many of whom were happily converted and added to the church. As the fruits of this meeting, we sum up forty-four additions to the church, and about as many conversions, several backsliders reclaimed, and the church generally greatly refreshed. On the Saturday before the fourth Sunday in October we began a protracted meeting at Spring Hill, which was continued nine days, resulting in twenty-four accessions to the church, and as many or more conversions. This was one of the best meetings I have attended for years, reminding me of scenes witnessed in my boyhood days. We were assisted by Bros. Morse and McLaurin, local preachers, greatly to the edification and profit of the attendants. At our camp meeting, besides the services of Bro. Hines, we were favored with the presence of Bros. Gann and Holland, from the itinerant ranks. Bro. Smith, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and Bros. Rye, Morse and McLaurin, from the local ranks, all of whom did efficient service. On Saturday before the fifth Sunday in October we began a meeting at Bethlehem, which was continued four days, resulting in two additions to the church. Since the first of October we have added, in all, seventy members to our communion.

D. G. W. ELLIS.

NOVEMBER 8, 1871.

Butler Circuit, Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: This work lies west of the Bigbee river, in Choctaw county. It is a large work—too large—containing ten appointments, and covering an extensive area of country. It is utterly impossible, in a work of this character, for a preacher to meet all the interests of the church.

A farmer, in the early settlement of the country, could cultivate almost twice the number of acres he can now. Then the soil was mellow, and did not require the labor it does now. The mode of cultivation was very different from the present. This is equally true of the church. Eighteen years ago I traveled this circuit, and I cannot see that the church has made any progress. True, it has had its successes and its reverses; but I have failed to discover any material progress; and, after a careful study of these things, I am decidedly impressed that it has not been the fault of the want of an efficient ministry, but requiring them to have oversight of too large a number of churches. Could the same amount of labor have been bestowed on a less number of churches, that truly perplexing question, "the support of the ministry," would have been better understood by the preacher and people, and I truly believe the church would be in a better condition, both financially and spiritually, than it is.

I am now upon my last round, looking back over the labor of the year. We cannot make as favorable a report as we had earnestly desired; and yet there is much, for which we feel thankful to God, to encourage us to redouble our diligence in a faithful discharge of our Christian duties. Between forty and fifty accessions to the church have been realized from a series of protracted efforts held on the work. A greater interest and more activity is being exercised by the older members of the church. Bro. Hood, of Demopolis, was with us at Mount Sterling, and was not only acceptable but useful to us, and may God bless his labors among us. At this church we have a large and flourishing Sabbath school—the best, in many respects, I have ever known. This school is an evidence of what sanctified learning can do. It has for its superintendent Bro. S. S. Mellen, president of the high school of Mount Sterling.

In conclusion, let me commend this school of Bro. Mellen's to all who may wish to educate their children. If you wish a thorough, practical education, if you wish their morals preserved, if you wish them instructed in true elegance of manners, send them to him. His wife, a highly accomplished and truly pious lady, comes as near filling the place of a mother to the pupils intrusted to her husband's care as it is possible for any one, save a mother, to do. The village of Mount Sterling and surrounding community is moral, intellectual and refined. In point of health it is good.

WORKS AND DAYS.

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

To break the gently undulating sea
With oars that seem to kiss it lovingly,
And watch the eddies as they circle back
Along my winding track.

To rest upon my oars, and, as I glide
With wind and current, in the cooling tide
To dip my hands, while something seems to say
Within me: "Let us pray."

As near as may be to the fringed shore
To keep my boat, and lean her gunnel o'er,
Watching the many-colored floor, untrod
Save by the feet of God.

His ways are in the deep; his sunlight, too,
Pierces its icy coldness through and through,
And touches many a wonder that abides
Below the lowest tides.

How beautiful the sunlight on the sea,
When waves by millions twinkle as in glee!
But 'tis the sunlight in the sea whose gleam
To me doth fairest seem.

It glorifies the pebbles with its rays;
It turns gray sand to perfect chrysoprase;
Plays with the amber tresses of the rocks
As with a maiden's locks.

Anon in some sequestered nook I lie,
And see the yachts, white-winged, go sailing by,
And feel, which ever quickest onward flies,
Mine is the truest prize.

I watch the race with neither hope nor fear,
Since none than other is to me more dear;
My prize the perfect beauty of the sight—
Unselfish, pure delight.

I sit and wonder what the cliffs would say
If they could speak, remembering the day
When first, "Thus far, no farther," it was said;
"Here thy proud waves be stayed!"

Since then what laughter and what cry and moan
The sea has offered up to them alone!
What suns have kissed, what storms have left their blight,
What silence of the night!

So wondering, how strange it is and still,
Save where, a mile away, the drogers fill
Their battered dories with the shingly store
Of the long-hoarding shore!

That far-off sound is but a gauge that tells
How deep the silence is; like Sunday bells,
Which, ringing, tell the resting village o'er
How still it was before.

These are my works and days; in these I drown
The cares and troubles of the noisy town,
And let it seethe and rumble as it may,
Day after weary day.

But when the summer days are sweetly fled,
And great fall clouds go floating overhead;
When asters lurk along the pleasant ways
With golden-rod ablaze;

Then I will back again to faces see
Than all these sights more beautiful to me;
Where friendliest voices wait for me to hear,
Than all these sounds more dear.

Old and New.

A GERMAN LADY'S VIEWS OF MARRIED LIFE.

BY N. S. DODGE.

I took occasion, one evening in Berlin, to ask Mary Meyer to tell me about silver weddings and golden weddings, which our people have borrowed of late years from the Germans. The lady is one of the most charming persons in the world; of literary fame; her house the rendezvous of the best of Berlin society; her heart full of sympathy for suffering humanity in every shape, and her life beautified with good deeds. She sat down and applied herself to the task of exposition with the gusto of congenial occupation. I knew she was in earnest, because, like Fadladeen in the Eastern romance, whenever he spoke oracularly, she folded her hands and began to twist her thumbs.

"The silver wedding," said she, musingly, "the golden wedding! Oh, yes; but I will begin with the real wedding. No;" (after a pause,) "I must go back farther—must begin with the 'polters abend.' No; further back still; in short, with—with the beginning."

Somewhat apprehensive that my fair informant would commence with the birth, rearing and education of the two illustrative lovers, who were in process of time to become husband and wife, I ventured to say that the very slightest notice of preliminaries would suffice. Miss Meyer bowed assent, and continued:

"When, in Germany, a gentleman experiences a tender sentiment for a lady, the first thing he does is to speak to her father and mother. If they look approvingly, then the gentleman asks consent to pay his addresses to the young lady; if not, there the matter ends."

I opened my eyes. "Has the young lady nothing to say on her own behalf?" I demanded.

"Not much; 'tis not like in the United States. We do things differently in Germany. Our way is better—far better."

"Why better?" I somewhat hurriedly asked—more hurriedly than good breeding in Germany allows, for the cool, assured manner of the lady annoyed me. "Why better, pray?"

"Why better?" she echoed with imperturbable self-confidence; "simply because it is."

I could not be otherwise than satisfied with the woman-like logic of the answer.

"If the lady's papa and mamma see no objection, and if the gentleman's papa and mamma see no objection, the two young people exchange rings, become engaged, call themselves bride and bridegroom, and advertise their engagement in the newspapers."

"But if the lady should happen to see a gentleman she loves better?" I asked very deferentially. Quick as quick could be, my words were caught up.

"A woman never loves twice," observed Miss Meyer, her face shadowed with an instant displeasure. "Women are not like men."

I did not argue the point, but went on, quite deferentially, to suggest the hypothetical case of change of feeling and opinion on the gentleman's part.

"A German young gentleman is only too happy to get a good wife," said Miss Myer. "He does not marry a girl for her beauty alone, or her style. He wants a helpmate, not a doll. Daughters are brought up in Germany to be good wives, no fashionable women. They know that husbands want comfort, and so they are prepared, the highest as well as lowest, to preside at his table, superintend his house, oversee the kitchen, make his coffee, light his pipe and bring his slippers. Germans betrothed do not wish to change their minds. They are quite different from Americans."

"Different! How? Why?"

"Because they are," said Miss Myer. I could not be otherwise than satisfied.

"If engagements are thus irrevocable," I inquired, "why don't the young people get married at once?" It was a stupid question. I ought to have reflected upon the pecuniary means. That was not, however, the point of view from which the lady contemplated the marriage postponement.

"The bride and bridegroom wait a long time—years sometimes, occupied in studying each other's character. Moreover, it is a pretty practice in some parts of Vaterland for the lady, however poor, to furnish the house and find the linen."

It was explained that want of dower did not often create the hinderance to marriage, because each of the bride's friends would give a present—not trumpery trinkets or silver or laces, but substantial household goods. In Germany a great number of the men are government employees; and in this case a man's income is known to a penny. A young lady does not expect to begin wedded life with all the luxuries enjoyed by her parents.

"Well, the wedding day being fixed, we come to the 'polters abend.' If you consult your German dictionary you will find that polter means a great noise—what you Americans call a row, and abend evening. Well, bride and bridegroom, brothers and sisters, friends and neighbors, meet together on the evening before the wedding, eating and drinking, singing and dancing, telling stories and playing games, according to the rank and taste of the family. Then, next day comes the wedding ——"

"And then the honeymoon," I added.

"Not in your American sense," she replied, "for the whole married life of a German couple is one lasting honeymoon; they never bicker, never get tired of each other. Incomes are mostly small, but certain; hence there is no money anxiety. People, knowing what they have to live upon, live upon it. Everybody being aware of the extent of everybody else's means, there is no field afforded for the display of that sort of small pride which shows itself in living or dressing beyond one's means. Then, again, German ladies find their chief pleasures at home. They look after the comfort of their husbands. A wife does not order her husband's pipe and coffee, slippers and dressing-gown, but fetches them. She superintends the cooking, keeps the keys of the pantry, does the marketing, hires and pays the servants, examines and repairs clothes from the laundry, knits the stockings and makes the shirts. They have a custom in parts of England of presenting a flitch of bacon to any married couple who have not quarreled for seven years. To carry out this practice in Germany would be impossible. Pigs enough could not be found to supply the bacon. So you see, if it should please God to grant twenty-five years of married life to a German couple, it is natural that some sort of rejoicing should take place. This we call the 'silver wedding,' not because the gifts made are of silver, but because the hairs of both husband and wife have usually turned to silver gray.

"And, lastly, now about the 'golden wedding.' Alas, it falls not to many folks to number fifty years of wedlock! Death, in most cases, will have laid his cold hand on man or wife ere then. It happens sometimes, however—the occasion for this golden wedding—and is celebrated as if it were the setting of an autumn sun in gorgeous skies upon a harvest of golden grain, not with rich presents, but with ceremonials of devout thankfulness, such as you would expect from a thoughtful and imaginative people."

I thanked Miss Meyer, and went musing to my hotel. Making allowance for a certain exaggeration in the style of her recital—not uncommon among clever women in Germany—there was not a little of what the lady had said that seemed both timely and interesting to us on this side of the Atlantic.—Christian Union.

THE WET GRIST.

"I have a story for your Guiding Hand page," said a long-known and beloved brother in the Christian ministry the other day. "Let us have it, then," was our reply. "I suppose," said he, "I owe my life to the providence of God; and I will write out the story for you." He did so, and it was as follows:

"My father was a man of prayer, and in our home the family altar was never permitted to fall down, nor its fires to expire or grow dim. Around that altar our dependence on God was constantly acknowledged, and the divine blessing continually invoked. Nor was that blessing sought in vain, but mercies new and fresh from day to day were granted in answer to a father's prayers.

"One bright morning in the spring of 1850, after commending us to the divine protection, my father put two bushels of rye into his wagon and started for the grist-mill at Rockland, Rhode Island, a few miles distant from our home. When more than half way there he had to cross a bridge called 'The Wharf,' along the sides of which there were no railings, but only some logs laid upon the end of the planks.

"When on the middle of this bridge the horse stopped and began to back. My father leaped from the wagon, and the horse continued backing till the hind wheels went over the logs and off the edge of the bridge, and the wagon-seat and grain-bag tumbled out and fell into the stream. At this moment the horse stopped, the forward wheels caught on the log, and the hinder part of the wagon hung over the edge of the bridge, being held by the horse and by the forward wheels.

"Four or five men soon came to the rescue, the wagon was lifted back, the grist fished up from the water, and in half an hour my father was on his way back home to dry his grist and get it ready for grinding again.

"There was a mystery about this whole transaction. We could not imagine what had made the horse back when upon the bridge. He showed no signs of fright, and had never acted so before. My father was troubled. He had earnestly prayed that morning that the angel of the Lord might encamp around about us that day, and now to be subjected to such an accident and so much inconvenience was something of a trial to his faith, though it did not shake his confidence in God.

"He returned home, and we went to work to dry our grain and prepare it for grinding; but when we spread out the rye upon a cloth in the sun to dry, we noticed, scattered all through it, fragments of a fine glittering substance, which, on examination, proved to be glass! Thousands and thousands of little fragments and splinters of broken glass were mingled with those two bushels of rye—enough to have caused the death of all our family and a hundred others if the grain had been ground and baked and eaten.

"We were amazed at this revelation; and with what grateful hearts we knelt around the family altar and thanked God for his wonderful providence which had so strangely preserved our lives!

"But how came the glass thus mingled with the grain? It was all explained very soon. The rye had been kept in an open barrel, and over this barrel our neighbors had smoothed ax-handles, using pieces of glass to scrape and polish them. These pieces of glass were thus broken and splintered, and the fragments dropped unnoticed into the grain, and were measured up and placed in the bag to be carried to the mill.

"No one suspected the danger, and if that grist had been ground no human power could have averted the calamity, or saved our family from the terrible influence of a poison so deadly as powdered glass. God in his providence interposed and preserved our lives; truly it is but right that they should be consecrated to his service.

The Lord knew the danger of his servant, and not only spared the life of the man who trusted in him, but also preserved his son, who is and has been for years an earnest preacher of the gospel.—The Christian.

THE SAL DEL RAY, or the great salt lake of Texas, is an immense bed of salt about five miles in circumference. The salt is formed naturally, and has only to be shoveled up and taken away to market. For table use it should be washed and ground. The income derived from this natural salt manufactory is reported to be only $20,000 annually; but it is said that the Mexican government formerly collected a revenue of $400,000 in taxes on the products of the lake.

A WORTHY MAN, unaccustomed to public speaking, being suddenly called upon to address a Sunday school, rose to his feet, and after struggling for utterance, at last hoarsely muttered: "Dear children, don't ever play with powder."

REVIVAL IN SUNDAY SCHOOL.—In the last Sunday School Workman Dr. Tyng recounts the incidents of a remarkable revival originating in his Sunday school at St. Paul's, Philadelphia, in 1831, and closes with these reflections:

But no such scene have I ever witnessed since. I am sometimes ready to wonder what has restrained the Lord's merciful hand. I fear our Sunday school teaching is not the same earnest talking of Jesus that it then was. I fear our public ministry is not the same earnest, simple preaching of the Savior's gospel which we then had. I am sure our prayer meetings are not what they then were, even where prayer meetings are maintained at all.

We need a far more earnest spirit, a far higher conception of the power and worth of the gospel, and a far greater zeal and desire for the real conversion of souls. The beginning of the whole must be in our Sunday schools. When they truly revive from their present apparent dead and formal state, all other interests in the Savior's church may be expected to revive with them. But the whole work of true religion among us will find its index and key in the condition of our Sunday schools.

WHAT THE DRUNKARD RELINQUISHES.—Mr. McLeod, an English writer, puts the following language in the mouths of those who visit the rumseller's den:

"There's my money—give me drink! There's my clothing and food and fire of my wife and children—give me drink! There's the education of the family and the peace of the house—give me drink! There's the rent I have robbed from my landlord, fees I have robbed from my schoolmaster, and innumerable articles I have robbed from the shopkeeper—give me drink! Pour me out drink for yet more; I will pay for it! There's my health of body and peace of mind; there's my character as a man, and my profession as a Christian; I give up all—give me drink! More yet have I to give! There's my heavenly inheritance and the eternal friendship of the redeemed; there, there is all hope of salvation! I give up my Savior! I give up my God! I give up all that is great, good and glorious in the universe—I resign forever, that I may be drunk!"

FITNESS FOR HEAVEN.—A clergyman riding beside a profane coachman, who discharged volley after volley of oaths, fixing his eyes upon him, said: "I cannot imagine what you will do in heaven! There are no horses or coaches or saddles or bridles or public houses in heaven. There will be no one to swear at, or to whom you can use bad language. I cannot think what you will do when you get to heaven!" Years after the same clergyman was called to see a dying man, who told him that he was saved through his rebuke: "I cannot think what you will do in heaven."

MECHANICS are the palace builders of the world; not a stick is hewn, not a stone is shaped in all the lordly dwellings of the rich, that does not owe its beauty and fitness to the skill of the mechanic. The towering spires that raise their giddy heads among the clouds depend upon the mechanic's art for their strength and symmetry. Not an edifice for devotion or business or comfort but bears the impress of their hands. How exalted is their vocation! how sublime their calling!

A CURIOUS OBSERVER of men, women and things in St. Louis has made the discovery that men and boys invariably run the heels of their boots and shoes over outwardly, while women and girls always run theirs over inwardly. Out of one hundred and forty-seven men and boys that passed the observer at a given point, this fact was true in every instance; out of sixty-seven women that passed it was true in every instance but one.

A CLERGYMAN who had been staying for some time at the house of a friend, on going away, called to him little Tommy, the four-year-old son of his host, and asked him what he should give him for a present. Tommy, who had great respect for the "cloth," thought it his duty to suggest something of a religious nature, so he announced hesitatingly: "I—I think I should like a Testament, and I know I should like a pop-gun."

A GIRL of seventeen years located a farm in Kansas some three years ago. The land was perfectly wild, and she employed no male help, but her success has been such that recently she was offered for her farm ten times the amount she paid for it. She refused the offer, and says that in five years more she will retire to the East and live on the interest of her property.

SPEAKING much is a sign of vanity; for he that is lavish in words is a niggard in deed.—Sir Walter Raleigh.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

A BIBLE SOCIETY has opened a shop on the Corso in Rome, and colporteurs are selling Testaments in the streets without interruption.

THE number of baptized Christians in Madagascar is now 153,000. The London Missionary Society has resolved to send sixteen additional missionaries to that fruitful field.

A JEWISH committee has constituted itself in Frankfort, and issued circulars for the object of re-establishing a Jewish community in Palestine. The undertaking has the support of leading commercial and financial men.

THE Evangelical Alliance has issued a circular calling upon Christians of all nations to observe the opening week of the new year, commencing January 1, 1872, as a week for united prayer for the conversion of the world.

THE New Jerusalem Messenger (Swedenborgian) complains of the slow progress of the new doctrine. The membership in America does not number more than 5,000. They are trying to make proselytes among the Germans. They have about ten German ministers and a German church paper.

THE entire endowment fund of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Chicago was so secured that none of it will be lost by the fire. Part of it was on bond and mortgage on property consumed, but the land is ample to secure the amount invested. The income for the present will be diminished, but will eventually be restored. A large addition to the endowment is essential to the success of the seminary.

"THE POPE," says the Levant Herald, "has sent Mgr. Plnym the sum of one million francs (£40,000) to aid in clearing off the heavy debts of the apostolic vicarate of Constantinople, the creditors of which are said to be inspiritually clamorous for payment." You see the Pope has plenty of money, and to spare. If you know how clamorous a creditor is who is inspiritually clamorous, you are wiser than we are.

A CATHOLIC UNION, says the New York Methodist, has been organized in this city, under the auspices of Archbishop McCloskey. Its object is stated to be, "first, to invite the co-operation of the whole Catholic world to unite in the effort to reinstate the holy father, then to devise every available method of controverting the tendency of the age to materialism, and to neutralize the effect of the daily press upon the minds of the people." Money is promised in abundance to aid its work.

THE Independent says the true Broad Church position taken by Dr. Dollinger may be understood from the words of a note which he sends to Rev. L. W. Bacon, of Baltimore, couched in the following words:

"In necessariis fiat—et fiet aliquando volente Deo—unitas. In dubiis manebit libertas et varietas opinionum. In omnibus dominetur caritas.

ION. DOELLINGER.

MUNICH, 4 Octobris, 1871."

For the benefit of non-Latinists we translate: "In things necessary there should be, and, please God some time there will be, unity. In things doubtful there will remain liberty and difference of opinion. In all things let love hold sway."

AN ALLOCUTION of the Pope is published, in which, while he recognizes the bishops appointed by the Italian government as possessing the requisite qualifications of their offices, he solemnly repudiates Italy's "guarantees" and protests against the invasion of the holy see. The allocution also condemns the course of Dr. Dollinger, and such as are following his example in warring against the decisions of the Ecumenical Council. A conclave of cardinals, to consider the action the college should take in the event of the Pope's death, is shortly to be held at some point in France. Cardinal Antonelli, the papal minister of State, is seriously indisposed, and the gravest apprehensions are entertained as to his recovery.

AN AMERICAN CLERGYMAN, who has recently visited Denmark, Norway and Sweden, writes of the great evangelical religious movement which has been going on there for some years, especially in the last two countries, in the Sailor's Magazine for November. "It began by converted seamen returning from America. It has been carried forward to a great extent by the agency of converted seamen, and the sailor missionaries of the American Seamen's Friend Society have had no small share in this work. Their labors have been greatly blessed. Thousands have been converted from the errors of the State church, which is hardly less corrupt and quite as intolerant as the papal church. A spirit of inquiry has been excited, and a desire for reform on the part of multitudes within the church which cannot be suppressed. Several hundreds of Baptist and Methodist churches have been organized, and the way is fast preparing for more, notwithstanding the persecutions and disabilities under which these Christian converts labor. State laws are very intolerant, and the consequence is that when men are converted they turn their eyes at once toward America. This keeps the infant churches here, many of which would otherwise be now large and flourishing, in a poor and feeble condition."

THE REV. JOHN KILNER, (English Wesleyan,) visiting the Ceylon work, "gives a fact or two." He had "full and free conversation with the native ministers, and kept both eyes and ears open. A great work and effectual has been begun and is being vigorously carried on." He mentions among most interesting points of mission economy and labor "arresting his attention:" "1. The real hold which Christianity has taken on the sympathies of many large sections of Singhalese villages. These are to a very large extent Christian; the prevailing public opinion is Christian. 2. The vital character of the work, too, impressed me. The people seemed to feel that the cause is theirs. All the local life seems to flow into the meetings. Moreover, a great deal of self-sacrifice was manifest. 3. The reality and strength of the native ministry struck me. Some of them are profound scholars, others pioneer men, some indefatigable plodders. Take an instance: the Rev. William Taylor, on visiting a certain circuit, where the chapel was too small, desired a larger building. The native minister at once planned, erected and furnished a large building. Mr. Taylor was charmed with the neatness and comfort of this structure. Some seventy-five souls were converted in it. 'Who paid for it?' I asked. 'I paid for it,' was the reply. 'How much did it cost you?' was my second query. 'Ten shillings; and yet I sold the beams again for as much as they cost, so I got the building done for nothing.' This is the sort of man we want. It would have cost the government £20 or £30. 'The people' did it. Admiring the pulpit of a new chapel, I said: 'I like that pulpit; it is roomy and real.' 'Yes, sir,' responded the same noble brother; 'yes, sir, and I made it by my own hands.' Grand, thought I. Oh! that we had a regiment of such pioneers, such determined men!"

PROTESTANTS AND ROMANISTS IN CHINA.—During the recent troubles in China, which were caused in a great measure by the proceedings of the Roman Catholics, we have, says the New York Observer, all along maintained that the natives make an intelligent distinction between the Protestants and Romanists. The testimony on this point is abundant and cumulative. The Rev. Dr. Williamson, the author of "Travels in North China, Manchuria and Magnolia," has journeyed extensively in the northern provinces of China, and was at times the guest of Roman Catholic priests. He has had abundant opportunities of witnessing the operations of their missions in various parts of the empire, and he is moreover a man of liberal mind, and disposed to do full justice to those of other communions. He writes: "Distinction between Roman Catholic priests and Protestant missionaries is very easily discovered and apprehended by the people wherever they have an opportunity of comparing us and our operations. With few exceptions, we retain our foreign dress; the priests adopt the Chinese costume in all its details. We preach publicly in our chapels and elsewhere; the priests never do so. We distribute and sell books; they abstain from this. We are, for the most part, married men; the priests are, of course, celibates. Our schools, of all descriptions, are open to the inspection of the neighbors, who go out and in at pleasure, and so there never has been a breath of evil suspicion in reference to our work in that direction; whereas the Roman Catholic establishments are generally within high walls and closed to the people. We have educated ladies engaged openly in the tuition of girls and the instruction of women; they have nuns, foreign and native, who live in nunneries. We have no confessional, no closeting of men and women. We claim no territorial rule, no magisterial authority, no official rank, and no ex-territoriality to our converts. Our sole object is the diffusion of light, the spread of a higher civilization with all its blessings; and, above all, the proclamation of the gospel—the message of God to man, which is the only medium of new life to men and nations, and of peace, and hope, and joy, to poor suffering humanity."

AMEN.—It is related of a certain minister of Maine, who was noted for his long sermons with many divisions, that one day when he was advancing among the teens, and had thoroughly wearied his hearers, at length he reached a kind of resting place in the discourse, when, pausing to take breath and looking about over his audience, he asked the question: "And what shall I say more?" A voice from the congregation, more suggestive than reverent, earnestly responded: "Say amen!"—Methodist Protestant.

THE THRONE OF GRACE.

Gnilt and helplessness are the conditions under which ths soul is impelled to Christ. A throne there must he, unless God has abdicated. The divine government is real; its powsr is infinite, rsaching to all creatures; its anthority is absolute, and its jnstice and purity are without stain. To coms to snoh a throne can hring no aid to the guilty. There mnst be power and anthority and righteousness associated with mercy. These are united in the great propitiatory, and in God as he dwells between the cherubim. The blood of sacrifice sprinkles the mercy-seat, and there is life and help for the transgressor. If we perceive nothing hut inflexible jnstice in the divine majesty, nothing but spotless holiness, we shall nsver be ahle to lift up our heads. It is this element of grace, as it shines enthroned in Jssus, that invites the weary and heavy laden, and hreathes hope into despairing hearts. Amidst the circumstances of the unapproachable glory there is a High Priest who carries our human nature into heavsn, and who, in that blaze of light and awful majesty, appears in the presence of God for us. There is a daysman betwixt us and the consuming fire—one who "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin."

"The throne of God and of the Lamb" is one, and from it proceeds the pure river of water of life. Take away Christ, and the throne remains in all its eternal grandeur and magnificence, bnt it is a throne of terror and of death to the sinner. No fountain for sin and uncleanness breaks out from it, and no welcome to the guilty is proclaimed. It is Christ, as the great sacrifice, that maintains the throns in its infinite splendor and authority, and at the same time makes it a refuge for the condemned and fallen. The problem of mercy is solvsd hy him "who bore onr sins in his own body on the tree," and who thns converted the throne of God into a throne of grace. We need this complete conception of government, as it is tempered and united with mercy. If sin had carried away all authority and all penalty the universe would have heen in ruins, and if no expedient for the pardon of sinners had been devised then the offenders had gone down heneath the stroke of justice. By this wonderfnl plan of atonement the throne stands, and the sinner may live. Here in Christ are blended strength and hope. What would have crushed hut for him, hecomes "a hiding place from the windy storm and tempest." Sinai, with thunders, fires and earthqnakes, and its inexorahle tablets of stone, was the symbol of pure and unchangeable law, a throne of power and terror and pnrity. Mount Zion is this same throne transformed by Christ into a stronghold and a defense for the trembling penitent. The throne that hlazed with lightnings, and thnndered with terrific voices, is in Jesns, as the mediator of ths new covenant, the symhol of a divine majesty, which beams with pity and love. Throne of grace! The description is complote as it affects our condition and wants. We cannot dispense with the throne; God could not be God and leave that ont, and thsre would be no anchorags for the universe without it. Bnt for us thers must be power, united with mercy. It must be a scepter of righteousness, and also of condescension and compassions. We need as sinners an ebenezer, and not an overwhelming avalanohe; a stone of help, which has the strength of God nnited with tenderness and love. Such is the gospel idea. A throne of favor which invites the conscience-stricken and the wsak, and which is luminons with promises, "that we might have a strong consolation who have fled for refnge to lay hold upon the hope set before us."

Our guilt and helplessness are both met here. Mercy and grace are the hlessings demanded—mercy for the penitent seeking pardon, and mercy amidst the imperfections of the Christian life. There is no period of our experience when this distinctive want of the soul shonld not be felt, and no stage of the spiritual life in which we can stand upon othsr ground. Grace flows from mercy as a stream from its fountain, and as the sun comes out of the dawn. It is snch favor as mercy sets free and pours out npon the pardoned sinner. It is the storehouse of infinite richss nnlocked hy ths hand of mercy, and the scattering of the treasnres freely and abundantly hy the same hand. Mercy throws open the windows of heaven, and grace is the descending shower. Guilt rsmoved is grace hestowed, inasmnch as the one makes way for the other; and yet they are twin streams dividing at the fountain, but ever flowing together. These are the two great wants, mercy and grace, embracing the entire sphere of the spiritual life, and making np the full-orbed experience of the child of God.

To feel these wants is, doubtless, the first motion toward the throne. Guilt and weakness are the convictions which first tnrn the eye to mountains of help. And thsn must follow this apprehension of God in Christ, and of Christ in God—this point of points, this plan of plans, wherein we have a throne of grace. God without Christ will meet us as a consuming fire, and Christ without God is only a mockery to our weakness. "The throne of God and of the Lamh" is the saving apprshension in which faith discovers the snhlimest hlending and union of law and atonement, of righteousness and of compassion. Onr lack of holdness may be in our feehls convictions of sin, or in defective and pervsrted views of the remsdy for sin. We shall come with boldness when these coms together, whsn guilt is truly felt, and when Christ, as ths great propitiatory, is vividly set before us. In proportion as the believer realizes his ntter helplessness, will he fly to this rock of strength; and in the degree that he estimates the sufficienoy of Christ's merits, will he draw daily supplies of grace. The sole condition is to come, and this coming is the boldness of a ruined spirit, with hut this solitary reliof within the horizon of hope. Faith it is, but sometimes the faith which is separated from despair by a single strand. Faith it is, but such faith as reaches out in a single direction, and finds but one objeot upon which its grasp can be fixed.

Of all the word-gems of Paul we know none brighter than this; of all the many terms of his which open like blossoms of inspiration to the heart, we think of none sweeter than this—"the throne of grace." To take in its meaning fully we must look at the whole scheme of redemption, and embrace in thonght the very foundations upon whioh the amazing structure of salvation is huilt. To comprehend the import of the expression we must tread the dizzy heights of the throne, which was "high and lifted up," and before which the abashed seraphim covered their faces and their feet; and we must penetrate the mysteries of an incarnation and an atonement whioh the angels desired to look into. Bnt still the hnmblest penitent and the weakest believer may he filled and comforted by the blessed words. They may find life and consolation, mercy, and grace, to help in the time of need." Only let them come, let sinners come, let tempted and sorrowing souls of every condition come—let them come boldly—to this throne of grace, and prove its matchless power to bless and to save to the very uttermost.

CALIFORNIA.

Los Angeles, Los Nietos and Santa Anna.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

Los Angeles, Nov. 4, 1871.

There are three rivers in the southern part of California, the Los Angeles, the San Gahriel and the Santa Anna, which form three valleys. These low lands are, like other depressed portions of California, very fertile and productive. They are surrounded by ranges of mountains which hold the snow one-half the year, and hy hot dnlls. These mountains are gray with white and black rocks, without trees, and the hills are naked elevations, seemingly of sand, hut in fact are of very rich and easily cultivated soil. In the winter they are crowned with the emsrald verdure of wild mustard, oat and crops of harley. The long drought renders onltivation here unnecessary after the crops are once in. It socms strange to hsar, though quite common, that a field bearing from sixty to one hundred bnshels of corn and mammoth pnmpkins has not had a single plowing after the first breaking and planting. Fortnnately a good brother, who is an honest man, a true soldier and a minister in good standing, is traveling with me, and stands ready to hack up anything I may say in thoss letters, when additional testimony is called for—the Rev. Dabney Ball. We have both seen a few things ont here, a part of which only can be safely told.

In one of these valleys, at Los Nietos, the Conference was held. The settlemsnt was three years old, the church just ceiled, the audience from Arkansas, Texas, Missonri, Sonth Carolina, Virginia and the Sonth generally. The house stood right out in a corn field—no fences, only a stock-law—and snoh corn as Tennesseeans and Northwestern farmers, not to say Southern planters, never see! The Conference numbers twelve preachers, hut a goodly number of local and semi-local preachers have bought homes hereabouts, with commendable instinot. We had a most encouraging Conference. The congregations were large and attentive. The missionary anniversary yielded $628—as much as both the Pacific and Columhia Conferences gave. They expsct to raise $1,200 next year at the anniversary. There were mourners and several conversions, and three young men were admitted on trial—Franklin McKean, Jesse D. Franklin and Charles W. Harris. Arizona is connected with this Conference. Two missions in it. Prescott and Salt River are placed on the San Barnadino district. One of these was filled by the Rev. Alexander Gravcs, the other by Rev. Franklin McKean. It was deeply interesting to hear their account of this field. They have done a good work in it the past year, and, as you will see by the appointments, go back there again. At Prescott a church worth $1,500 was bnilt.

The Conference was hospitahly entertained, and so warmly petitioned that it holds its next session at the same point. Just beforo the session a camp meeting had been held within a mile of the ohuroh, which resulted in more than one hnndred conversions. Rev. William Moores, formerly of the Little Rock Conference, was the circuit preacher, and Rev. W. A. Spnrlock the presiding elder, both living near the ohurch. With such workers no wonder the meeting succeeded. Here, too, I was pleased to find Bro. A. Adams, formerly of the Mobile Conference. It seemed much like getting home to meet these brethren. They are all delighted with their new homes. It is to be regretted that our people who went out to Honduras and South America immediately after the war, to get out of the way of the negro, had not known of these delightful regions. They would have fonnd here all the fruits of the Middle States growing in perfection side hy side with those of the Wsst Indies; a climate snited to the white man as well as that of Iowa, and as pleasant as that of Alahama; capable equally of those heavy crops of maize for which the Northwest is so oslshrated, of the finsst apples, and of immense orange groves, vineyards and olive orchards. Limes and lsmons are growing on the hsdges, Irish potatoes and swset potatoes are in the field, ths largest and the best, in delightful good fellowship; and almonds, English walnuts and chestnuts all stand in the same row. Had they known of this country, how much pining and heart-sickening disappointment would have been escaped!

The Conference begins the year in good spirits, with a tangihle membership of five hundred and fifty-five. It has a school under way, tanght during the past twelve months by Rev. George E. Bntler, who goes this year to the Los Angeles station. The snbstantial strength of the church has been also increased by the purchase of two lots in Los Angeles, worth $1,000; hy two lots in San Diego, worth $1,200; hy a church and lots in Arizona, worth $2,000. So soon as the Pacific and Texas railroad is done, the rush to these valleys will be immense. At present it takes a good deal of money to reach this side of the continent. But if our people can get here they will find lands at from $15 to $30 per acre, and in the Los Angeles Conference a nucleus of sound Southsrn Methodism, of much promise and vitality.

It is not to he supposed that such a region in this sin-smitten earth is without its drawhacks. There is the old Spanish population, thoroughly, nnchangeably Catholic; a great absence of rain; this is remedied hy a cheap system of irrigation—water enough for forty acres at a few dollars per year; occasional winds from over the sandy wastes of Arizona; and the entire absence of foliage and forest outside of the cultivated lands. So far as we can gather, thsre is none from disease. Fevers yield readily, and these are only such as can be brought on anywhere by exposure or imprudence.

After Conference we went down to the Santa Anna country, coasting toward the low sea-marsh and meadow lands which lie bstween Anaheim and its shipping port. These green surfaces abound in wild geese. In one afternoon we saw more white and black gssse than one ever sees in a lifetime at home. Some flocks contained not lsss than a thousand. It was not difficult for some of our party to secure a few of them. Their appearance, as they sit on the ground or just as they rise, white as the snow, is very brilliant, and to a sportsman, I can imagine, would be highly exciting. They come and go constantly. On the morning we returned the sky was traversed with a river of these beautifnl wild fowl; they flew in constantly-varying currents and eddies, one following the other in every curve and new arrangement of the line, stretching miles away. In the winter they fill the corn fields, and are supported by immense reinforcements of wild dncks. I suppose they all come down from the open waters of the Polar seas.

We passed large droves of shesp, which keep fat npon pastures that contain scarcely any green food, but abound in clover hurs and dried grasses. Below Santa Anna two of our party strained at a pumpkin and lifted it a few inches; and we saw snch nnmbers and growth of kershaw, melons, corn, potatoes and pumpkins covering unworked grownd as I have not credit enough, even with my friends, to venture upon describing.

I am now again on the Pacific, making my way hack to San Francisco. The following are the appointments of the Los Angeles Conference:

Los Angeles District.—W. A. Spurlock, P. E. Los Angeles, Geo. E. Butler; Los Njetos, J. E. Miller; Los Angeles circuit, to be supplied; El Monte, Abram Adams; Santa Clara, R. A. Latimer; Santa Barbara, Jesse D. Franklin; San Lnis Obispo, John W. Allen; Tehatchepie, to bs supplied by J. Pattie.

San Bernadino District.—William Moores, P. E. San Bernadino, M. W. Glovsr; Santa Anna, D. M. Rice; San Diego, to be snpplied; Milquatay, Charles W. Harris; Prescott, Arizona, Alexander Graves; Salt River, Arizona, Franklin McKean.

William Monk transferred to Wsst Texas Conference; Dabney Ball transferred to Pacific Conferenes and stationed at San Francisco.

HOMER COLLEGE.

Throngh some inadvertence we failed to call attention to the claims of Homer College early in the fall. The advertisement which stands in our columns will furnish onr readers with all the needful information concerning tuition, board and other details. We had hoped before now to have rsceived a communication from the president or agent in reference to the condition and claims of the institution. In the absence of this, we would state that the college is under the patronage of the Louisiana Annual Conferenss, and that its Board of Trustees is elected by the Confsrsnce. The location is in one of the most prosperous and salnhrious sections of our Stats, in the beautiful nplands of Claiborne parish, not very far from the Arkansas lins, and well situated to afford educational facilities of a high grade to both Louisiana, Arkansas and east Texas. The position of the college is, indeed, most happily ohosen to command the support of a large and popnlous region. President Cobb is well known throughout the church as a good scholar, and as an accomplished and successful educator. Since he assumed the prssidency the college has steadily improved in patronage, and in its literary and material interests. The account, which we published three or fonr months ago, of the last commencement, exhihited a most gratifying and hopeful condition of things. Bro. Cohb is assisted hy J. W. Nicholson, A. M., profsssor of pure and mixed mathematics, hy A. S. Calhoun, A. B., profsssor of languages, and hy E. M. Corry, A. B., tutor in physical sciencs. Thsse gentlemsn are filling their several chairs with ability, and ars performing their responsihle duties with laborions and conscisntions fidelity. A complete library and apparatus have besn lately purchased, and the curriculnm is not inferior to the course of study in any of our Southern colleges. The agent, Rev. T. J. Upton, is working for an endowment, and we are informed that the enterprise is advancing most encouragingly. An institntion so eligihly located, and so well supplied with instructors, is a blessing to the church and the country, and we can hardly overestimate what it has already done, and is still doing, for the advancsment of learning and the promotion of religion. Bssidss a large patronage, the rich and prosperous country accessihle to it should at once furnish an ample endowment, and place Homer College upon a strong and permanent foundation. It will do more for the country than a railroad, and will he a far better investment. Let us have both roads and colleges, but let us, hy all means, have the colleges. Are there not Methodists in north Louisiana and Arkansas who are willing to invest five, ten, and even twenty thousand dollars in Homer College?

We are glad once more to greet the Interior, as it comes out of the ashes and ruins of the Chicago fire. It has been, to our mind, one of the very best religious journals of the North, and we are heartily rejoiced to see it again looking as fresh and attractive as before the great conflagration.

The catalogue of the La Grange Female College, 1870-71, has been received. Besides the usnal catalogue matter the pamphlet contains the excellent baccalaureate address of President Callaway.

Mrs. Morris, wife of Bishop Morris, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died on the sixth instant.

PARSONAGES.

From all the facts brought out in a former article, we think it is clear that a local itinerancy is not best for the church. We think it is equally clear that the secnring of parsonages is not only a remedy, but the remsdy, for this destructive tendency in our economy.

The preacher with a family ought to have a honse—a home. A family is a private institution, so ordered hy divine appointment. The stswards have no right to require their pastor to board his family—much less to "hoard aronnd." Now the plan of renting a parsonage falls too heavily upon the preachers. Bnt ths church meets this expense—if so, then the renting plan falls too heavily upon the church. The stswards rent a house for $20 per month; at least five per cent. of that is put on by the owner to pay taxes. That house, owned hy the church for a parsonage, would be exempted from taxes. Here, then, is a clear loss to the church.

But, after all, does not all this money come out of the preacher's pocket? I know the most of official boards add the house-rent to ths preacher's salary; but do the people really pay a cent more on ths assessment than they would have paid if the preacher had been living in a regular parsonage? In most cases we believe they do not. Not only so, we believe in most cases the stewards themselves would have nearly the same assessment they did, if there had been no honse-rent to pay. There may be exceptions to both of these rules, but if so, they are farther hetween than angelic visits. Now, with thess facts before him, if the preacher he a good financier, the temptation is very strong to buy him a home, drive down his stakes, and feed around the length of his tether.

Again, the renting system forces the preacher to keep on hand an outfit of household and kitchen furnitnre, either to move aronnd at great expense and damage, or to dispose of and rebny at great less every time he has to move. Here is an annual loss or sxpense to the preachsr that might be saved both to the church and the ministry by having parsonages furnished with all the necessary heavy furniture. It is very littls trouble for a preacher and his family to movs from one furnished parsonage to another, though thsy be a hundred miles apart; but to require them to carry with them a full set of household and kitchen furniture, and rspeat it every few years for a lifetims, is a heavy hnrden indeed. To avoid this difficulty, varions expedients have been devised, all of which work dsstruction to a true, untrammeled itinerancy, sxcept a neat, well-furnished parsonage—that works like a charm.

There are hundreds of preachers to-day who would have been a tower of strength on the walls of Zion if the church had been supplied with parsonages in days gone by, hnt who have besn driven into local itinerancy and kept there until they have run the lsngth of their cable-tow, and are now rather a weight than a power in the church.

Everything that tends to localize a preacher, tends also to disqualify him for the itinerancy. There is an important sense in which hs is to feel that "the world is my parish." Whenever he drives down his stakes for life in a smaller compass than the honndary lines of his Conference, he has lost the spirit of a true itinerant, and is no longer worthy of a place among such a band of moral heroes! From that hour, owing to the very laws of mental being, all the interest of the church, beyond the sphere he has prescribed for himself, is seen through colored glasses. Such a man is snre to always have an ax to grind; more, he will always expect his brethren to furnish ths stone and water, and tnrn the crank for him, hy virtne of his being one of the firm. Here is the inverted pyramid whose fearful gyrations threaten to grind the very seed-wheat of itinerancy to powder!

Now, we hold that a neat, comfortable parsonage in each pastoral charge would lead to snch an interchange of preachers as would keep them in sympathy with the general interest of the church throughout the hounds of the entire Conference to which they belong.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Death of Rev. John S. Ford.—This venerable minister of Christ, says the Southern Christian Advocate, died in Macon, Georgia, on the tenth of November, at the house of his son, Dr. W. W. Ford, after a painful illness. He was in his eighty-second year, and had been an itinerant preacher since the year 1810—superannuated in 1854. He was one of the first preachers sent to the Mississippi valley. A more extended notice will he given of his life and labors next week.

The Rev. Julius T. Curtiss has been transferred hy Bishop Doggett to the Western Conference, and appointed to Helena station, in Montana Territory.

REV. ANDREW MONROE.

This venerable minister died at his home in Missouri on the thirteenth instant. The editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, announcing Father Monroe's death, says:

He was one of the very oldest itinerant preachers on the continent. He has left a lofty record of personal piety, and was in devotion to the church peer among the most noble in the illustrious generation with which his history is associated. The few words we may now write do not suffice for an appropriate memorial notice of such a life and character as his. It is a noticeable coincidence that the monthly report of his work as Conference missionary was in print in this issue, which announces his death. It is a record of his last labors and his last utterances to the church. It will be read with solemn interest. He makes appointments for the future, dying with the plans and love of labor for Christ upon his heart. The Master has granted a discharge to the faithful servant, worn out in his service. The happy "well done" is pronounced on earth and in heaven. The church mourns with the family and friends, and for its own loss.

DEATH OF DR. LELAND.—From a private letter just received, says the Southwestern Presbyterian of November 9, we learn that Rev. A. W. Leland, D. D., the venerable professor emeritus of pastoral theology in Columbia Seminary, has just passed away. On last Thursday he quietly and peacefully fell asleep.

The writer says: "With his splendid white beard and large manly form, I never saw him looking so magnificent in life as he did in death."

As is well known to the church, Dr. Leland has long been laid aside from active service. His former chair is filled by Rev. J. R. Wilson, D. D.

A. BROUSSEAU & CO.—The attention of our readers is directed to the advertisement of the above-named firm. Their assortment of carpets, oil cloths, window shades, etc., is very extensive, and in variety and elegance is sufficient, we should think, to gratify the most cultivated taste. They are numbered among our most reliable and respected merchants, and we take pleasure in saying that we think our friends wishing to make purchases in their line of goods will not regret calling at No. 17 Chartres street to examine their stock.

A. B. GRISWOLD & CO.—We know of no firm which has maintained a better reputation through a longer term of years, as competent and reliable jewelers and honorable dealers, than A. B. Griswold & Co. When friends inquire where they can purchase such articles and rely upon their being what they are represented to be, we take pleasure in referring them to the corner of Canal and Royal streets. See advertisement on fifth page.

GAINES & RELF.—With a large experience in their business, and an extensive acquaintance with the wants and tastes of our people, combined with ample capital, the above firm, as might be expected, have a splendid assortment of goods, well adapted to the necessities as well as to furnish the luxuries demanded in their line. See advertisement on fifth page.

NEW ORLEANS SAVINGS INSTITUTION, 187 CANAL STREET.—The officers and directors of the above-named institution have been selected from among our most competent and reliable business men, and in their well-known character for integrity and business capacity is the surest guarantee for the security of funds intrusted to this institution. See advertisement on fifth page.

W. DAUPHIN.—We call the attention of our readers to the extensive assortment of laces, trimmings, flowers, straw goods, etc., advertised by W. Dauphin, 150 Canal street. See card among our new advertisements.

INHALATION TREATMENT.—We direct attention to the card of Aristide F. Follin, M. D., which appears among our new advertisements in this issue.

DEATH OF LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR DUNN.—Lieutenant Governor Dunn died, at his residence in New Orleans, at six o'clock A. M. on the twenty-second instant.

PERIODICALS.

WE HAVE RECEIVED our Sunday school publications for December. The Visitor is better than ever. The Magazine opens with an article by Bishop McTyeire, on "Our Commentary," which is a very discriminating notice and deserved commendation of the work of Dr. Summers. For the rest, we have the Sunday School as a Missionary Society, and other pertinent articles, besides Illustrative Readings, Notes for Teachers, and encouraging words from the editor at the close of this first volume. Dr. Haygood has done well, and should be cheered and helped by all.

THE GALAXY for December contains: Adventures of the Duchess DeBerri; Mother of the Count Du Chambord; Black Friday; Admiral Farragut and New Orleans, and other articles, besides the usual excellent matter under the headings of Scientific Miscellany, Current Literature, Club Room and Nebulæ.

THE MUSICAL BULLETIN for November contains the latest news in the musical world, and many excellent pieces of music. Published by Charles W. Harris, New York, at $1.50 per annum.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE of November 18 contains: Aerial Voyages; Geoffrey Chancer; Bearings of Modern Science on Art; Prospects of Italy, and other valuable articles in prose and verse.

APPLETONS' JOURNAL of the twenty-fifth instant contains several handsome engravings of American scenery, and is an unusually interesting number.

HEARTH AND HOME will soon excel all the illustrated periodicals, if it continues to improve as of late. The Hoosier Schoolmaster is a story of great interest and power.

Obituaries.

DIED, on the twenty-fifth of October, 1871, after an illness of forty-eight hours, OSCAR GRAY, infant son of R. E. and Rosa B. Gray, aged six months and sixteen days.

The bereaved parents reside in Lawrence county, Mississippi. This short notice is given that their friends and relatives may receive the intelligence and sympathize with them in their bereavement. Parents, set not your hearts too much upon your children. Love them dearly, but love God supremely.

F. M. SHARBROUGH.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS., Nov. 10, 1871.

DIED, at his residence, near Coffeeville, Clarke county, Alabama, on the twenty seventh of September, 1871, Dr. CHARLES H. WILSON, in the seventy-ninth year of his age.

Dr. Wilson was born June 8, 1793, at Old Cambridge, near Abbeville C urthouse, South Carolina, and was the oldest of six children. His early advantages of education were good, and he availed himself of them to the extent of acquiring a good academic education and a fondness for the standard literary works of the age. At the age of twenty eight he graduated in medicine at the Charleston school, and the same year entered upon the practice of his profession in Augusta, Georgia. In 1852 he moved to Alabama, and settled at the place where he died.

Dr. Wilson was a high-toned, honorable gentleman, and was highly esteemed by those who were calculated to appreciate his modest worth. For the last fifty years of his life he was a consistent and exemplary member of the Methodist Church, and in his last illness he gave abundant evidence of his full preparation for death.

Dr. Wilson was married twice. His last wife was a Miss Sarah A. Harrison, of Georgia, to whom he was married in 1831. He survived her but two years, and has left a large family disconsolate at their loss. Requiescat in pace.

A FRIEND.

Atlanta (Georgia) papers please copy.

THE subject of this sketch, Captain Y. W. GRAVES, was born in Oglethorp county, Georgia, on the ninth of April, 1813.

His father moved to Alabama in December, 1817, and settled near Newport Landing, Lowndes county, on the Alabama river. In this section he spent his early boyhood, going to school but little—in all, about two years—and working a great deal. Here he became inured to habits of industry and hardship, and laid the foundation for usefulness and a practical knowledge of the business affairs of life, accumulating, by assiduous labor and economy, a large property. By his strong mental endowments and extensive reading he acquired a large and varied stock of general information; and in view of his acknowledged integrity as a correct and punctual business man, very many important trusts were committed to his care. His strict conformity to the rules of etiquette, and a nice and high regard for the opinions and feelings of those with whom he associated, drew around him many warm and devoted friends.

On the fourteenth of December, 1831, in his early manhood, he was married to Miss Mary Youngblood, of Dallas county, Alabama. In October, 1839, he was married to his second wife, Mrs. Sarah Clark; and in 1844 he was married a third time, to Mrs. Nancy A. Fisher, who, with six children, now survives him. In widowhood and in orphanage they mourn their irreparable loss. In 1847, while assisting in building a mill-house on his plantation, he fell from the upper floor, a distance of twenty feet, seriously injuring his spine, from which he never recovered. Captain Graves lived in Alabama until the fall of 1857, when he moved to Louisiana, and settled near the town of Keachie, in DeSoto parish. Here he made and gathered around him, by his ready counsels and good cheer, a large number of acquaintances and friends.

As a man of business he was prudent, energetic and enterprising, and maintained an enviable credit during his life. Warm and earnest in his friendship, his hospitality was without ostentation. Whenever his health would permit, Captain Graves was a regular attendant at the house of God, and the Sabbath school, in which he took great delight, and was always ready to respond with his means for the good of the church, the support of the gospel, and for all benevolent and charitable purposes. His heart and hand were ever open to the wants of the orphan and widow, and those who were worthy and needed his assistance.

During his residence in Alabama, at one time, he was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church; but when he became a member, and how long he remained in that church, is not known. A few years previous to his death he connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Keachie, and lived a consistent member of the church in precept and example. A little more than two years ago the writer made the acquaintance of Captain Graves, and soon after became his family physician, in which capacity a warm and endearing friendship sprang up between them, and he was the accredited and honored confident to whom he communicated all his affairs, troubles and sorrows; his hopes and fears, temporal and spiritual. His opportunities were such as to enable him to know him well. He was a high-toned gentleman, a true and good man; and no one could hear him supplicating a throne of grace, thanking God for his mercies and long-suffering toward him, who felt himself so unworthy, yet rejoicing that there was a name in which he could approach his Creator with hope and trust, and not feel convinced he was truly a child of God. The commencement of his afflictions dates back nearly a quarter of a century. Paroxysms of great severity and marked distress came on regularly every month, lasting three or four days, though during the intervals he seemed quite well, and apparently in vigorous health. The nature of his disease, however, was such as forbade any locomotion, save on a bed in his ambulance. For the last six months his paroxysms became more frequent, and he was deeply impressed that his stay on earth was short, looking forward to each attack as his last, when finally, after an illness of several days, he died at his residence on the fourteenth of August, 1871, of chronic spinal meningitis, aged fifty-eight years, four months and five days. The mortal remains of Captain Graves were followed to their final resting place by a very large concourse of friends and citizens, and the Mystic Brotherhood, who performed the last sad rites around the grave of our deceased brother, and consigned his body to the tomb—"earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust, and the spirit unto God who gave it."

A very able funeral discourse was delivered by Rev. C. B. Stuart, president of the Mansfield Female College, from Philippians, first chapter and latter clause of the twenty-first verse: "To die is gain." Thus has passed away a fond husband, a kind parent and a good citizen. Like Cato, firm; Aristides, just; like Brutus, stern, he lived in the faithful and conscientious discharge of the relative duties of life, encouraging virtue and frowning with sternness upon vice. There are those who, with the writer, feel that by the death of Captain Y. W. Graves they have lost one of their best earthly friends, and, with hearts submissive to the Omnipotent, will hope for and anticipate a happy reunion in the world of bliss.

SELF-EVIDENT FACTS.

THE CELEBRATED ARGYLE BITTERS, so long distinguished for their unrivaled efficacy as a Tonic, and for the purity of the articles used in their manufacture, are now offered for sale at reduced prices.

They combine all the elements of a first-rate family medicine—simplicity in manufacture, healthful and tonic ingredients, efficacy in action, and perfect safety in their use, for any age or condition.

Unlike all other Bitters, they do not increase the desire for alcoholic stimulants; but, by their peculiar action upon the digestive organs, serve rather to subdue the disposition for strong drinks, as can be testified to by thousands of our most respected professional and business men of every degree and condition.

They are Tonic, Alterative and Invigorating, and are a safe family medicine for either sex or for any age.

The Child's Corner.

A HYMN.

O little child! lie still and sleep;
Jesus is near,
Thou need'st not fear:
No one need fear whom God doth keep
By day or night:
Then lay thee down in slumber deep
Till morning light.

O little child! thou need'st not wake,
Though bears should prowl,
The wolf's fierce howl
And watch-dogs' bark the silence break:
Jesus is strong:
The angels watch thee for His sake,
The whole night long.

O little child! be still and rest;
He sweetly sleeps
Whom Jesus keeps;
And in the morning wake so blest
His child to be;
Love every one, but love Him best:
He first loved thee.

O little child! when thou must die,
Fear nothing then,
But say "Amen"
To God's command, and quiet lie
In His kind hand
Till He shall say: "Dear child, come, fly
To heaven's bright land."

Then, with thine angel wings quick grown,
Thou shalt ascend
To meet thy Friend;
Jesus the little child will own,
Safe at His side;
And thou shalt live before the throne,
Because He died.

Watchman and Reflector.

TWO AND ONE.

Two ears and only one mouth have you;
The reason, I think, is clear:
It teaches, my child, that it will not do
To talk about all you hear.

Two eyes and only one mouth have you;
The reason of this must be
That you should learn that it will not do
To talk about all you see.

Two hands and only one mouth have you;
And it is worth while repeating,
The two are for work you will have to do,
The one is enough for eating.

Guiding Star.

HARRY'S BROKEN SABBATH.

Saturday night, and Harry Lee sat by the fire thinking, and as he glanced first at the red glow of the coals, and then out at the fast-falling snow-flakes, he kept softly repeating to himself: "Remember, that thou keep holy the Sabbath day. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all that thou hast to do, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt do no manner of work, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, thy man servant, and thy maid servant, thy cattle, and the stranger that is within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that therein is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the seventh day and hallowed it." Over and over again he said the commandment, while he looked out of the window with longing eyes at the beautiful white snow, that fell so softly and gently, covering everything with its mantle of purity. It was too pure, too fresh from God's hand, to engender any such thought as came into Harry's head as he looked at it; but all that snow was worth to him, was for the pleasure which he derived from it; and as he thought of the long hill behind Squire Hays' house, that would be so smooth and white to-morrow, his eyes glistened, and he slowly repented the Fourth Commandment once more. When he came to the end he gave a satisfied little sigh, and returning to his seat by the fire, said: "There, I have said it all through six times, and there is not one word about play in it, so there won't be one bit of harm in my going to-morrow. Phil said there wouldn't, but"—and he stopped to think of his mother's sad surprise when she found it out.

Tea over, Harry went to bed, with a last injunction from mamma to be up bright and early in the morning, so as to be in time for Sunday school.

He did not go to sleep for a long while. Why was it, he wondered? Other nights he went to sleep fast enough, but to-night something seemed to be propping his eyes open, and somehow that coasting party for to-morrow would keep running in his head.

Would it be so very wrong? But he turned over, determined not to think any more about it, and at last dropped into a troubled slumber, in which sleds and hills mingled themselves strangely with Sunday schools, and a dull oppression as of some dreadful punishment coming to him.

There it is, boys and girls. There is where so many of you make the fatal mistake. You turn over and go to sleep, and won't think of any wrong thing you contemplate doing, when you know in your own hearts that if you did think of it carefully, you would find how wicked you were going to be. Think of it, my dear children. Don't be afraid to look anything straight in the face, and if you have any doubt about whether it is right or wrong, don't do it, for if it is doubtful, it's pretty near sure to be wrong.

With the first faint streaks of dawn Harry awoke, and as soon as he heard any one stirring in the house was up and dressed. He was down stairs in such good time that he received a word of praise from mamma for being so punctual, and after breakfast started off with his Sunday school books under his arm, and a very uncomfortable feeling in his heart, when he thought how little he would need them that day. That feeling soon wore off, though, when he met Phil Morris at the corner, looking so bright and fresh, and dragging "Snow Bird" after him. A little way further on they were joined by the other boys, and soon lost all thought of Sunday school in the great delight of coasting. The hill was perfect, and as old Squire Hays was not what is called a church-going man, he came out to see the fun, and cheered the boys on with his hearty voice, and even consented to be taken down once or twice, after which exhausting labor he returned to the house. The Sunday school was very "slim" that day, said Mr. Bright, the superintendent, as he closed the school; and up stairs, in church, one mother after another looked anxiously for her boy to come up and join the family in their pew; but Harry, and Phil, and Sam, and Lew, and half a dozen more were missing, and sadly the parents went home leading the little ones by the hand, knowing only too well what attraction had made their boys forget God and his service.

Dinner time came, and no Harry. He was comfortably seated in the farmer's kitchen, hugely enjoying the smoking dish of pork and beans, and never thinking of the sad hearts at home.

Oh! boys, boys, how can you? Aren't your parents, your little brothers and sisters, who look to you for their example, too dear to you; aren't you too much afraid of God to do these things?

What a glorious Sunday that was. It seemed as if God had showered down such wealth of sunshine, had spread above such fields upon fields of blue sky, and best, most beautiful of all, had given a "white robe, a clean robe" to the bare brown earth, who so gracefully covered herself with it, and smiled on everything conscious of her unwonted beauty—smiled even on our Sabbath-breaking boys, who continued their sport until dark, when they separated, and went their several ways homeward; but there was not one light heart among them, for the little inward monitor began to speak now, and one and all crept home like the cowards that they were, afraid to look their parents in the face, and afraid even to pray to God for forgiveness.

When Harry came within sight of his home he saw the lights gleaming cheerfully through the crimson curtains, and putting a bold face on the matter, went in fully prepared for a good scolding, and may be a whipping.

"Never mind, I've had my fun, and am willing to pay for it," was his boasting thought.

He hung his cap in the hall and went in. They were just sitting down to tea, and his mother's voice was the first he heard, saying very gently: "Come, Harry, you are just in time." Nothing more. No word of inquiry or reproof. No one made any allusion to his absence during the day.

This was very strange. It seemed as if he could hardly bear it. He could have stood a good whipping so much better than his mother's sad eyes, and his father's grave manner. After tea it became unbearable. It almost seemed as if he must tell all about it himself, and be done with it.

He sat for a few minutes restlessly handling everything in the room, and then making the excuse of being tired, bade papa and mamma good night, and went to his room. As he went up stairs he recollected that it was Christmas time, and wondered whether they would dress the house with greens early in the morning, as they always did. He reached his room and lit the light. "Why," he exclaimed, as the flames shot up and illuminated the room, "mamma has been here already," and going closer to read the motto which was formed in evergreens at the foot of his bed, expecting to see some ordinary text appropriate to the season, he read slowly and with the tears swelling up in his eyes: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." That was all his punishment, but it was enough, and an hour afterward, when he had confessed all to his loving parents, mother and son knelt together at that bedside, beneath that inscription, and prayed to God to forgive the sin which had been committed that day. Never would Harry have that motto taken down, and when he grew to be a man, and the evergreens were brown and withered, still that command, kept by him ever since that day, and placed there by a loving mother's hand, looks down at him night and morning.—New York Observer.

THE SNOW PRAYER.—A little girl went out to play one day in the fresh new snow, and when she came in she said:

"Mamma, I couldn't help praying when I was out at play."

"What did you pray, my dear?"

"I prayed the snow-prayer, mamma, that I learned once in Sunday school: 'Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.'"

What a beautiful prayer! And here is a sweet promise to go with it: "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow."

And what can wash them white—clean from every stain of sin? The Bible answers: "They have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."—Morning Light.

THE HONEST IRISH BOY.—There was a lad in Ireland who was put to work at a linen factory, and while he was at work there a piece of cloth was wont to be sent out which was short of the quantity it ought to be; but the master thought it might be made the length by a little stretching. He thereupon unrolled the cloth, taking hold of one end of it himself and the boy at the other. He then said: "Pull, Adam, pull." "I can't, sir." "Why?" "Because it is wrong, sir," said Adam, and he refused to pull. Upon this the master said he would not do for a linen manufacturer, and sent him home; but that boy became the learned Rev. Dr. Adam Clarke.

STRETCH IT A LITTLE.—A little girl and her younger brother were on their way to the store one windy, frosty morning. They were both poorly dressed, but the little girl had a sort of cloak over her. As they walked briskly along she drew the boy closer to her and said:

"Come under my cloak, Johnny."

"It isn't big enough for both," replied he.

"Then I will try to stretch it a little." And they were soon closely nestled together.

What a lesson! How many shivering bodies and sad hearts there are just because people do not stretch their comforts beyond themselves.

WATCH.—"O mother! I did want one of those big oranges outside Dick's shop-window."

"You did not touch one, I hope, Eddy," said his mother.

"I did not, mother; but I had to watch my hand hard not to let it grab," replied Eddy.

That's right, my boy, watch.

The Farm and Garden.

THE BEST COWS FOR THE DAIRY AND FARM.

We have no doubt whatever that for the milk pail no breed is comparable with the Ayrshire. For beef, where there is a good market in the neighborhood, and the farmer has plenty of food, the short-horn or Durham excels the Ayrshire; and where the object is to raise oxen for work on the farm, quick in motion and easily broke, the Devon is the best. For a combination of all these qualities—for a breed which will fill the pail, be good for the butcher, and prove of value under the yoke, whether in plow or wagon—it is our decided opinion that the Ayrshire will best answer all the requirements. In their native country, Scotland, it is not uncommon to find Ayrshire cows which give twelve or fourteen quarts at a milking, and yield one pound of butter a day, during the spring and summer months. We have heard of individual cows of this breed which far exceeded this performance, but we are satisfied, from personal observation, that between six and seven hundred gallons of milk, yielding a pound of butter to every twelve or fourteen quarts, constitute the average annual production of each Ayrshire cow.

They are a very thrifty and hardy breed of cattle, are much more easily fattened than the Durhams or even than the Devons, and while they rarely attain a very great size, often produce between five and six hundred pounds of beef.

The origin of the Ayrshires as a distinct breed has not been positively ascertained. By some it is supposed to have been a cross between an Alderney (from the channel island of that name) and the common stock of Ayr; and by others it is conjectured—and the weight of opinion seems to favor this view—that it was a cross with the Holderness. Others again pretend that the Ayrshires and Durhams have a common origin; but we have no doubt that this supposition is erroneous. The two breeds are perfectly distinct from each other in size, color and shape.

We have no experience of our own as to the adaptability of Ayrshires to our country; but our friend, Rev. C. W. Howard, the able editor of the Plantation, has had actual knowledge of the breed, having imported some of the stock direct from Scotland, and, if we remember aright, he told us not long ago, in Atlanta, that he believed the Ayrshires to be the best stock our people can raise, while he fully corroborated what we have stated in regard to their qualities as milkers, beef cattle and beasts of burden. Mr. Howard has given much attention to the subject of stock raising. He has examined the various breeds in Europe and in this country. He has spent time and money in investigating the question which is the best suited for the purposes of our farmers, and his opinion, the result of intelligent experience, may safely be regarded as excellent authority. We do not know of any better.—Southern Farm and Home.

TRANSPLANTING TREES AND VINES

The great difficulty to be encountered in transplanting trees, vines or plants of any sort, is that in most instances many of the roots are severed from the stem, and are left where they originally grew. It is seldom practicable to remove all the roots with a tree or bush. In case every little root and rootlet of a tree could be taken up without injury, and be transplanted carefully into a congenial seed-bed, the plant would suffer no perceptible injury in consequence of the removal. The chief idea in taking up and transplanting trees, vines or flowering plants is to place the roots in their new bed, as nearly as may be practicable, in the same position as they grew.

The former part of the growing season is a far better time to transplant anything than in late autumn, for the following reasons:

1. That a tree may endure the rigors of winter with the least injury, the roots must have a vital hold on the soil. When trees and vines are transplanted in late autumn, the roots will have no vital hold on the soil during the winter. Hence the branches must suffer more or less during cold weather, because this vital union has been severed.

2. Every tree and vine is a thing of life. Sap and moisture are constantly evaporating from the buds, twigs and branches, even after the growing season is ended. Hence, to supply such waste, more or less moisture must be taken up by the roots and conveyed to the branches, even in the winter. To prove that there is more or less circulation of the sap during the winter months, let a large branch of a tree be girdled in late autumn, sufficiently deep to cut off all the sap wood, and all above the girdle will dry and wither before spring, while other branches, not girdled, will remain green and full of sap. Mutilating the roots operates like girdling, just in proportion to the extent of the mutilation. If the ground where trees are standing be frozen solid and deep for a long period, the trees will often be seriously injured by the evaporation of more moisture from the bark and buds than could be supplied by the frozen roots.

By transplanting trees and vines at the former part of the growing season, they will be required to stand only a few weeks without a vital hold in the soil. The better period, therefore, to remove trees of any sort—either deciduous or evergreens or vines—is in the former part of the growing season, unless they are taken up with the frozen earth. Trees may live and grow satisfactorily after having been transplanted in late autumn; yet the same trees would have succeeded still better if they had been removed in the spring, before the buds had expanded.—New York Observer.

SHEEP ON A POOR FARM.

Some farmers of our acquaintance feel an antipathy to sheep for the reason that they "bite close." We consider this their chief recommendation; they can only bite close where the pasture is short, and the pasture is short only on a poor farm. A poor farm will necessarily be encumbered with briars, weeds and brush in the fence corners. Under such conditions, we would say to a farmer who has $20 or upward in cash (or credit for it, and then let him borrow the amount, if he has to pay one per cent. a month for the use of it,) invest it in as many ewes, not older than three years, as you can get for that money. Put them this summer in such a field as we have described, and give them, in addition to what they can pick up, a pint of wheat-bran and oat-meal daily, with free access to water and salt.

They will first "go for" the briars and clean them out; every portion of that field will be trodden over and over again, and the weeds will have no chance. Fold them on that field during winter, and carry to them feed sufficient to keep them thriving. Get the use of a good buck in season—Southdown would be preferable—and in the spring, if you have luck, (that means if you give them proper attention and feed regularly,) you will raise more lambs than you have ewes. The money will be more than doubled, and the wool and manure will pay for their feed and interest. In the spring you may put that field in corn with the certainty of getting fifty per cent. increase of crop.—American Agriculturist.

IRON FOR PEAR TREES.—A correspondent of the Rural Messenger writes as follows:

"I had a very fine pear tree (Flemish beauty) that became affected, first by blight in one limb, which I removed, and then another and another was affected in the same way, until I had removed a considerable portion of the top of the tree. Early the next spring I resolved to try the application of scrap iron to the roots. I procured my iron, removed the soil from the roots carefully, deposited the iron between them, and replaced the earth. There was no further progress in the blight, the tree continued to grow that season, and the next leaves and blossoms came out vigorously; no black spots appeared on the leaves, and the tree bore finely; and no appearance of disease was seen in the tree afterward. In subsequent conversations with friends I found that some of them had become informed on the same subject, and had tried the remedy with perfect success. Some told me they had procured turning and drilling chips from the machine shops, and had used them, as they thought, with much advantage to their trees."

GREAT FRUIT DISPLAY.—The exhibition of the American Pomological Society in Richmond, Virginia, was the finest display of American fruits ever seen in the country. The Virginia Pomological Society exhibited at the same time. A correspondent writes: "The United States Agricultural Department exhibits pears and wine grapes; New York is well represented in apples and pears. Virginia shows one hundred and thirty-five different sorts of apples from one orchard of Albemarle county, and exhibits the largest pear, weighing within a fraction of two pounds, from Norfolk. This pear is a Duchess D'Angouleme. Iowa presents one hundred and eighteen varieties of splendid apples, and some fine pears; while Kansas and Nebraska contribute beautiful apples, pears and peaches. South Carolina sends forty varieties of grapes, and southern Illinois sends a general assortment that is hard to beat. The Virginia grapes attract attention and interest. California, however, contributes apples, pears, grapes, quinces, olives, plums, etc., that excite everybody's admiration. The grapes especially are miracles in this latitude."

TAN is of very little value as manure beyond the vegetable mold it affords by its slow decomposition. When partly decayed it might do good in a heavy clay by reudering it lighter. It is sometimes used to advantage as a mulch. It would be of little value to mix with manure, unless, when quite old and dry, as a resolvent.

AFTER an asparagus bed is once properly made it requires but little care. Salt and sand seem to be its natural elements. Coming, as it does, so early in the spring, a very ready sale is found for it in the market. All old brine or salted water should be saved and thrown over the bed.

WHEN there is an abundance of straw it should be used plentifully for bedding, for it is transformed into manure quicker and more perfectly in this way than in lying in the yard to rot by natural process.

AS LITTER or absorbents in the stable, leaves have some value, but much less than straw, inasmuch as they lack the reedy character of straw and because they are far more difficult and slow to decompose.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

SWEET PICKLED TOMATOES.—Slice green tomatoes, pour over sufficient water to cover them; sprinkle salt over the top about a quarter of an inch thick; let them stand twenty-four hours, then drain from the brine. Put them into a large kettle; add a quart of sugar, and vinegar enough to cover them, and a good handful of allspice and cloves. Let them boil up, and take off the fire and put into jars.

PEA SOUP.—Soak a quart of peas in lukewarm water for three hours; pour off the water and boil in three and a half quarts of water well salted, until the peas are thoroughly soft. Then strain through a colander and throw the peas away. This will keep several days in cool weather. When used, take out the needful quantity, boil it with a bit of pork partially cooked, an onion, a pinch of salt and pepper, and serve hot with squares of toasted bread floating on top.

SODA BISCUITS.—Put two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar into one quart of flour; sift both together and rub in thoroughly two great spoonfuls of butter. Put one teaspoonful of soda into a tablespoonful of cold water, and stir till all is dissolved, then put it into a pint of cold water and pour it on the flour. Stir together quickly; if it cannot be rolled out, add a little more flour, but just as little as it is possible to roll out the biscuits with. Cut in shape and bake immediately. The great secret of making good soda biscuit is, to sift the soda with the flour—to have the soda thoroughly dissolved—the dough made as thin and as quickly as possible, and baked immediately.

CODFISH BALLS.—Soak in warm water as much salt codfish as is needed, judging by the size of the family. Let it stand in the water all night. In the morning pick out all the bones, press out the water, and chop fine. Boil the potatoes in the skin. When done, peel and mash, while hot, twice as much potato as you have fish; mix well together, and moisten with cream or a little new milk, with a great spoonful of butter. Have some well-clarified drippings or sweet lard ready in a saucepan. Let it get boiling hot, and then put in the fish balls. They should be made a little more than half an inch thick. Fry a good, clear brown, taking care not to scorch them. One egg well beaten is an improvement.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered incalculable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

AUTUMNAL TINTS of leaves are attributed to various causes. Some chemists determine that it is due to certain acids which are developed. Others aver that a diminished vitality in the plant causes the change of color; if this be true, then we must assume that there is such a thing as a "vital power" in plants which presides over their cyclical changes, and this cannot but be accepted as true as far as our present knowledge goes. One phenomenon, however, must not be lost sight of in seeking the causes of tinted leaves. Wherever one leaf overlaps another in the forest the under leaf will longest resist discoloration. The very form of the upper leaf may thus be stamped on the one beneath when the covering is only partial. This indicates that frost is a very important agency in the problem.

PETROLEUM.—Where does petroleum come from? is a question which has excited much discussion among geologists in America. Dr. Henry Hunt, F. R. S., of Montreal, avers that while certain limestones throughout the United States are so largely oleiferons as at present, it seems unphilosophical to search elsewhere for the origin of the oil, or to imagine it to be derived by some unexplained process from rocks which are destitute of the substance. In the neighborhood of Chicago there are enormous deposits of this oil-bearing limestone; some of the houses in the city are built of it, and after a while present a greasy appearance, from exudation of the oil. The least thickness of the mass is thirty-five feet, and it has been estimated from experiment that each square mile of it contains seven and three-quarter million barrels, each of forty gallons, of petroleum. As a means of comparison, we mention that the total produce of the great Pennsylvania oil region from 1860 to 1870 was twenty-eight million gallons. Four square miles of the Chicago limestone contain a greater quantity.

ONE of the most important papers read before the American Association was by Prof. E. T. Cox, on the Western coal measures and Indiana coal. Over the Western coal areas formerly existed two seas, in which were formed the subcarboniferous rocks. As the water became shallow from the accumulation of these deposits, a barrier was formed, which cut out the ocean, and cut off the supply of salt water supply. The waters of these seas became less and less brackish, so that the condition necessary for the growth of the great ferns and other plants of the coal period were gradually ushered in. He is unable to find that the beds of coal even in Indiana are equivalent, as many of our best geologists had supposed. He says that the new far West will look to Indiana for its supply of iron and coal, for the manufacture of which her coal is especially valuable. He predicts for Indiana a bright future as a manufacturing State, as there we find the last great belt of timber suitable for manufacturing purposes;" and after crossing her borders, thence to the Pacific ocean, no coal has yet been found that can successfully be used in the manufacture of iron.

IT WILL be a new fact to many that plants emit light. From an article on this subject in the Bowdoin Scientific Review we learn "that vague ideas of the existence of luminous plants in India and the neighboring countries still float about, as in the days of the old Hindoos and Greeks." There is a vague report that in Affghanistan grows a bush which at night from a distance appears on fire. Baron Hugel says that he was told that the Auk river, when swollen with rain, brings down from Thibet pieces of timber which "shine in the dark as long as they continue moist." The root of a grass in the Himalayas is said occasionally to be luminous at night during the rainy season. An inflammable atmosphere is generated about the European Dittany on a calm, still evening, due to the evaporation of a volatile oil. "If a candle be brought near it, this plant is enveloped by a transient flame, without sustaining injury." The tuberose is said, on doubtful authority, to have been observed of a sultry evening, after thunder, to dart small sparks in great abundance from such of its flowers as were fading. Josephus writes: "There is a certain place called Baaras, which produces a root of the same name with itself. Its color is like to that of a flame, and toward evening it sends out a certain ray like lightning. It is not easily taken by such as would do it, but recedes from their hands." Four persons on one occasion observed a luminous appearance on the double variety of the common marigold after a week of very dry weather. By shading off the declining daylight, a gold-colored lambent light appeared to play from petal to petal of the flowers, so as to make a more or less interrupted corona round its disk. Other plants are cited as being luminous. Moreover, the sap is luminous. Morney describes a tree in South America, with a milky juice, which gave out in the dark a bright light; and Martius says that the sap of a species of euphortia gave out a light. Another observer, on confining an Arum in oxygen gas, says that it gave out light as well as heat. Another observer saw three scarlet verbonas, each about nine inches high and about a foot apart, with faint flashes of light passing backward and forward from one plant to the other. This lasted about a quarter of an hour. There was a smoky appearance after each flash. The ground under the plants was very dry; the air was sultry, and seemed charged with electricity. The fungi are truly phosphorescent, especially some of the toadstools. One form in Brazil gives out at night a bright phosphorescent light, somewhat similar to that emitted by the larger fireflies, having a pale greenish hue. From this circumstance and from growing on a palm it is called by the inhabitants "Flor do Coco." Mr. Gosse, while living in Alabama, noticed one night a spot of bluish light, resembling that of a glow-worm, which he found to proceed from a foliacious lichen, growing on the bark in the form of a rosette, about as large as a shilling. The substance was luminous throughout.

"DON'T SHIVER for last year's snow," a saying of Archbishop Whately's, is particularly applicable to those who make themselves miserable over troubles that are past.

NUTS are sometimes as hard to digest as they are to crack, but it is said that a little salt will help the organs to dispose of them.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of truly unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

We have no material change to notice in the general market since our last issue. A fair business has been done in dry goods and some other branches of the wholesale trade, but from others we continue to receive complaints of unusual dullness for this time of the year. Sugar has been in fair request at steady prices for the better descriptions, while inferior has sold at lower rates. Molasses also has gone off freely, but ruled more in favor of buyers, without any marked decline. We have no quotable change to report in flour, but superfine and double and low treble extra continue in light supply and have ruled in favor of sellers. Corn has been in moderate request at about previous rates. Pork has further declined 25c. ₱ bbl., and bacon also has ruled in favor of buyers.

The weather has been variable, alternately clear and cloudy, with light rain and cool northerly winds. Nothing new of a definite character having been received from the country with regard to the crop, the presumption is that planters are making strenuous efforts to profit by every hour of fine weather for picking, and that if anything the indications are more favorable.

The river is 13 feet 6 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the seventeenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	13,867
Mobile	1,031
Florida	49
Texas	129
Total	15,077

On Saturday the movement was animated throughout the day, and the sales summed up 6,200 bales, mostly at a further advance of ⅛c. On Monday buyers again came forward freely, and 5,800 bales changed hands, at stronger prices in the morning but easier subsequently, closing without any quotable variation. Both on Saturday and Monday operations were restricted by scant supplies, the condition of recent arrivals preventing their being promptly sampled, and also by some orders being below the high pretensions of factors. On Tuesday the market opened with a pretty general inquiry, and although the demand appeared to be less active than on Monday, the sales were on a more liberal scale, summing up 6,500 bales.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 176,912 bales, against 239,938 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 155,830 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 26,009 to France, and a decrease of 78,264 to Great Britain, and of 24,981 to other foreign ports.

AGENTS WANTED
To sell the only Complete Unabridged People's Edition of
DR. WILLIAM SMITH'S
Bible Dictionary.

It contains over 1,000 closely printed, double-column octavo pages, and is illustrated with over 200 engravings, and a series of fine, authentic maps.

This DICTIONARY embodies the results of the most recent study and research of over sixty of the most eminent Biblical scholars in the world. Clergymen of all denominations regard it as the best work of the kind ever published, and one which ought to be in the hands of every Bible reader.

It is a great library in itself. The labor and learning of centuries are gathered in this one volume, to throw a clear, strong light upon every page of the inspired word. Agents are meeting with unprecedented success. One reports 55 orders taken the first three days of his canvass; another 76 in two days; another 212 in ten days; another 29 Dictionaries and 28 of our large Family Bibles in two half days; another sold 27 Dictionaries and 24 Bibles in one day.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT.
The King of Mineral Springs is the German Seltzer; and
Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient
is its duplicate. Letters attesting its wonderful Tonic Aperient and anti-Bilious qualities swarm in from every source. The question has been settled whether artificially medicated waters may not be equal to those which burst sparkling from the earth itself. They can; and the Seltzer Aperient, when undoubtedly pure and genuine, proves the fact. Be cautious. Accept none other.

VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1871. NO. 46.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—A very large crowd was at the depot this evening to meet the Grand Duke Alexis, hnt as he was in citizen's dress he was not generally recognized. He drove to Minister Catacazy's house. The latter called on Secretary Fish to-night and officially apprised him of the dnke's arrival.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.—At one o'clock carriages containing the grand duke and suite arrived and entered the Executive Mansion. The assemhlage on the portico gave a tremendons cheer as the prince alighted, which he acknowledged by lifting his chapean and bowing. The dnke, Minister Catacazy and Admiral Poissett were the first to enter, followed hy his excellency W. F. Machin, connselor of State, Connt Alonsafieff, Connt Shoveloff, General Gorloff, Dr. Cndiere, Lientenant Tuednr, and Mr. Sherkoff, of the dnke's suite. The dnke wore a hlue nniform, short frock coat with gold epanlets and sword, and pale hlne sash over his shonlders. He removed his chapean immediately upon entering the door.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—While the grand duke is in this country Minister Catacazy will be in attendance upon him; meanwhile General Gorlow will manage the Russian legation. It is nnderstood Catacazy will depart with the grand dnke. This is semi-officially annonnced as the solution of the trouhle of this country and Russia. It should he said in this connection that the tronble originated from cross pnrposes regarding the Perkins claim, and that the question of the reputation of certain excellent ladies has been hrought into the controversy for malicious and partisan purposes.

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—The World has the following London special: "A distinguished cardinal authorizes me to say positively that the Pope will not leave Rome nnless he is compelled to hy physical force or personal violence."

SALT LAKE, Nov. 25.—The church organ says if there are to be any further removals let the opponents of Mormonism themselves remove. The Mormons will not needlessly nor illegally nor unconstitutionally seek to annoy them. The Mormons repudiate those claiming to be Mormons who propose to send away their plural wives. Among those who have resolved to give np polygamy is Mr. Lawrence, of the firm of Kimball & Lawrence.

SALT LAKE CITY, Nov. 25.—Five or six feet of snow has fallen here, accompanied hy hail, sleet and lightning, with a terrific wind.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, Nov. 19.—A state of anarchy prevails throughout the entire repnhlic. The journals are filled with accounts of pronunciamentos, and the troops are growing revolutionary.

General Plofirio Diaz has formally prononnced, and is backed by the legislatnre of the State of Oaxaca, which has decreed to return to its own sovereignty. The greater part of the army is distrusted.

The Siglo of the nineteenth says that Jnarez was closeted with the American minister on the night of the seventeenth, who advised the president to change his cabinet. This report caused a great sensation in the city, and the people are expressing fears of American intervention. Positive assnrances are given hy the government of cabinet changes next month.

HAVANA, Nov. 23.—Reports received here from all jurisdictions of the island state that the growing sugar cane is in excellent condition, and a large crop is expected everywhere for next year.

BERLIN, Nov. 23.—In the German Parliament to-day a bill was introdnced and advocated by the Bavarian minister, providing criminal prosecution of clergymen who abnse the privilege of their office. This hill is understood to be the first of a series, hnt works against the encroachments of the church npon the liberties of the people.

PARIS, Nov. 24.—President Thiers received the Chinese embassy yesterday. The chief embassador expressed the hope that the treaty relations between France and China would be maintained, to which Thiers replied: "Your government must give proofs that our missionaries and consnls are respected. This is ahsolntely necessary for the preservation of peace."

MADRID, Nov. 24.—The Correspondencia says the answers which have been made to recent private inqniries show that Great Britain is ready to receive favorably from Spain proposals for the restitution of Gibraltar.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 25.—The rioting has been suppressed, hut fresh ontbreaks are apprehended. Additional troops are arriving.

LONDON, Nov. 27, 10 A. M.—The Prince of Wales passed a sleepless night; fever increasing, hnt the patient still holds ont against it. The Queen is constantly at his bedside.

VERSAILLES, Nov. 28.—At six o'clock this morning General Rossel, Ferre and Bourgois were taken from their cells under a large guard to the ontskirts of the city, near Camp Satory.

A hollow sqnare was formed, at one end of which the condemned men were placed. Their behavior was most conrageons. Ferre refused to he hlindfolded. At seven o'clock a company of troops advanced to within a few paces of the prisoners, leveled their mnskets, and at the word fire General Rossel fell, being instantly killed. The others were not so fortnnate; they writhed on the gronnd, when the soldiers, obeying orders, gave them coup de grace with pistols.

Their bodies were placed in plain coffins. Three thonsand troops witnessed the execntion, which prodnced a profonnd sensation. Yonng Rossel's death is lamented even hy those who deemed that the interests of the conntry demanded it.

LONNON, Nov. 28.—The latest official hnlletin annonnces that the condition of the Prince of Wales continnes to improve. He slept well last night and his fever is abating.

FOREIGN JOURNALS just received report that the total expenses of the Mont Cenis Tunnel have amonnted to $13,000,000, of which $4,000,000 is to he contributed by the Victor Emanuel railway, or railway of northern Italy. The sum was to be paid before the opening of the tunnel. It is reported that the French government agreed to pay $3,800,000 if the work was accomplished in 1882, with a preminm of $100,000 for every year gained npon the stipnlated time. As the tunnel has been completed eleven years before 1882, France, it is contended, is bonnd to pay $1,100,000 besides the original contract price. France, it is also argned, will have to pay five per cent. interest on the installments of money due as the work proceeded. Under these circnmstances, the charges borne by the kingdom of Italy, it is believed, will not amount to $4,000,000; and the reduction in expense, it is contended, has been fairly gained hy her diligence in carrying on the work. At one time the hard quartz which the excavators encountered rendered it extremely difficnlt to ascertain what the progress of the work might he, hut, fortunately, this stratnm was only one thonsand two hnndred and forty-seven feet thick, and no serions resistance was enconntered elsewhere. The masonry of the tunnel, it is stated, is excellent throughont, and no inconvenience whatever from smoke, steam or mephitic air is apprehended.

THE GOVERNOR'S PROCLAMATION.—Governor Warmoth issues a proclamation, convening the Senate in extra session, to open on the sixth of December next, for the following purposes:

To fill the vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor; to act on the appointments to office made, and the pardons granted hy the Governor during vacation; to devise and propose measnres of reform, to investigate the books, vouchers and accounts of the State officers and the officers of the General Assemhly.

HOME CHEERFULNESS.—Many a child goes astray, not because there is a want of prayer or virtue at home, hnt simply because home lacks sunshine. A child needs smiles as much as flowers need sunbeams. Children look little beyond the present moment. If a thing displeases, they are prone to avoid it. If home is a place where faces are sour and words harsh, and fault-finding is ever in the ascendant, they will spend as many hours as possible elsewhere. Let every father and mother, then, try to be happy. Let them look happy. Let them talk to their children, especially to the little ones, in snch a way as to make them happy.

HE WHO has not learned the lesson of resolute self-help has made little progress as a student, has grown little toward real manhood. Half the world refuses to do its own thinking, to toil throngh the solntion of its own knotty problems; hence, half the world who will not do this must be subject to the other half who will.

GOOD breeding is a guard upon the tongue; the misfortune is that we put it off and on with our fine clothes and visiting manners, and do not wear it where it is most needed—at home.

A YOUNGSTER of literary tastes lately described Darwin as the one who believed "we degenerated from a monkey."

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Lexington, North Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed a very interesting meeting at Lexington, North Mississippi Conference. Twenty were added to the church. I am certain the nnmber of professions and reclamations exceeds this. Long has been the dronght which prevailed in this part of the Lord's vineyard. The gracions Master has seen proper to cut it short by a shower of revival grace. We are encouraged, and hnmbly grateful to the Giver of all good for his kindly remembrance of ns. Thanks to Bro. R. J. Jones for a few days' efficient help.

JOSEPH D. NEWSOM.

LEXINGTON, Nov. 21, 1871.

Perote Circuit, Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Conference year is drawing to a close in Alahama. One more Sahhath will wind np the present campaign, and to Conference we will go to review the army, connt the spoils, survey again the hattle-field, rearrange onr plans, and, I hope, to send home the laggards, renew onr vows, and start ont again for another fight with the powers of darkness. Yes, we will soon meet at Mohile, and sing once more with glad and happy spirits:

"And are we yet alive, and see each other's face?"

Snnday next closes onr first year's labor on this charge. We are not prepared to report so favorably as we desired. Notwithstanding, we are thankful that our labors have not proved entirely abortive. During our pastorate we have had over one hnndred and thirty conversions and one hundred and thirty-one accessions of the best material afforded by the country. One new honse of worship, now bnilding, will be completed by the last of February next. A very considerable improvement in the finances; so mnch so that Perote will at once take rank ss one of the most pleasant and desirable works in the Alabama Conference.

L. PATTERSON.

NOVEMBER 24, 1871.

Salem Circuit, Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Will yon suffer me gratefully to record the goodness of the Lord to us in this part of his vineyard? Our revivals commenced at Watoola, at the third Quarterly Conference for the circuit. The church was greatly revived, backsliders reclaimed, sinners converted, and twelve added to the church on profession of faith. The presiding elder, William Shapard, remained several days, preaching effectively. I am indebted to Bros. Thomas F. McGee and A. B. Elliot for faithful preaching.

From Watoola I went to Society Hill, where we had a glorious time. The meeting continned seven days and resulted in mnch good; several reclaimed from their backslidiug, and eight added to our Zion. From thence I went to Pearco chapel, where we had a graciona time; continned four days, and eleven added to the church.

We commenced a four-days' meeting at a new church at Chapel Hill, on Thursday before the fifth Sahhath in October. The dedication sermon was preached by Rev. J. C. Carter on Sunday. The church has been hnilt by the indefatigable labors of Bro. Isaac Hill. The meeting continned some twelve days, and resulted in many conversions; twenty-seven were added to their nnmber—in all, thirty-nine. A wonderful change has taken place in the commnnity. We were assisted by Bros. L. F. Dowdell, A. B. Elliot, J. A. Green and J. Crowell, all lahoring faithfully. To God be all the glory.

WILLIAM B. NEAL, Pastor.

AUBURN, ALA., Nov. 16, 1871.

Old Snow Hill Circuit.

MR. EDITOR: I was employed as a snpply on this circuit; found it in a crippled condition in religion and finances, and have labored hard. I have traveled two thousand and thirty miles, preached ninety sermons; have now two good Sabhath schools that will not go into winter quarters, and two prayer meetings well attended. Last year this circuit paid a little over $200. This year the assessment is $700. It will nearly all be paid. The church has been much revived, and the finances have greatly improved.

Up to our fourth Quarterly Meeting we had received, by letter and otherwise, thirty-two members; and last, hnt not least, we protracted the Quarterly Meeting, which was held on the first Sunday and Saturday of November. We continned nntil Thnrsday night. The result was eighteen accessions to the church. It was a good meeting—the best that has been held at Monterey for years. Bro. Hudson, onr presiding elder, was with ns until Tuesday morning, and gave ns some good preaching, the effects of which were seen after he left. Bro. Scott, from the Farmersville circuit, came on Monday night. Many thanks to him for the seven telling sermons he preached. One circnmstance I mnst mention: Monterey was $86 deficient in paying up the assessment, and on the Sahbath, after taking up my Conference collection, Bro. Hudson askod the congregation if they would pay the $86. Four persons gave $10 each, and six persons $5 each, making $70. The balance was raised in twos and ones, and was done in ten minutes. The stewards had said, however, that it could not be raised; hnt how easy it was done, and no one hurt. I am satisfied if the stewards wonld do their dnty, and commence early in the year, there wonld he but little tronhle to raise the assessment on almost any circuit.

In administering the ordinance of baptism and extending the right hand of fellowship at the close, on Thursday night, we had a melting time. Many were happy. Many others, I think, will come into the church soon.

MOSES PADGETT, P. C.

ALLENTON, ALA., Nov. 14, 1871.

Millsdale and Cane Ridge, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I found this work in a very bad condition—hnt one church, and that very much dilapidated; no members, and the congregations small. The church at Millsdale was torn down by the Yankees during the war, and the members there transferred to Oak Ridge. In fact it seemed that the work was almost forsaken. There was not a praying man at either one of my appointments—that is, not one that prayed in public.

On the twelfth of August I commenced a meeting at Cane Ridge. The first day only one man present; continued seven days; congregations greatly increased. The Lord was present to bless and to build up. We now number at that place thirty-two members. My next meeting embraced the third Sahbath in August, at Millsdale. Congregations good and attentive, and the Lord came down with convicting power. A more general conviction I have never seen, thongh I was compelled to close with many penitents at the altar, as I had labored so recently at Cane Ridge that I broke down and could get no help, except Bro. Ben. Johnson, a lay member, who held my prayer meetings. We now number fifteen at that place. They expect soon to erect a church.

Bro. Dilly, a local minister, commenced preaching on the Sunflower on the first of June. They had never been blessed with preaching at that place. There were grown persons there who had never heard a sermon. The first of July he invited me to go with him to his appointment. We crossed the Yazoo river in a little boat, one horse at a time; the boat tottered, the horses trembled, yet we got safely across. We found the citizens very kind and hospitable. It is really novel to see men, women and children coming down the Sunflower, and up and down the Yazoo, in skiffs and dugouts—a cheap conveyance. They carry a sumptuous dinner at each appointment, and have two sermons. Since that time I have kept up a regular appointment on the fourth Sabbath in each month. Bro. Dilly and myself commenced a meeting on Saturday before the first Sabbath in October, and protracted it three days, when it was broken up hy the rain. The Lord blessed us, and we organized a society which now numbers twenty-one members. We are now holding prayer meetings through the country. The soil is rich and fertile, and I think if proper steps be taken the day is not far distant when a rich harvest may be gathered into the church. Steps are now being taken to build a church on the Sunflower.

A LECTURER undertook to explain to a village audience the word phenomenon. "May be you don't know what a phenomenon is. Well, I'll tell you. You have seen a cow, no doubt. Well, a cow is not a phenomenon. You have seen an apple tree. Well, an apple tree is not a phenomenon. But when you see the cow go up the tree tail foremost to pick the apples, it is a phenomenon."

"WAS the Roman matron, whose sons were jewels, a mother of pearls?" "No, my child, the Gracchi were Cornelians!"

NORTHWEST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

The session of the Northwest Texas Conference, held at Corsicana, Texas, has just closed. It was every way a delightful occasion. The finances were well up in every department. Church-building has been unusually active during the past year. Sunday schools are largely on the increase. A class of eleven was received on trial into the Conference—a very large class for so small a Conference.

The increase of members is one thonsand five hundred and fifty. The brethren report a wholesome discipline as being generally maintained. It is thought that there is decided, thongh not rapid, advance in family religion.

This Conference has a large frontier exposed to Indian depredations. This we have prepared to occupy pretty fully this year. Missionary collections during the year had looked to this.

The assessment for Bishops' fund was overpaid hy $29.39.

You will find the appointments below.

A LARGE COLLECTION.—Dr. Redford, speaking of the missionary collection at the Little Rock Conference, says:

The missionary meeting on Saturday night was a fine success.—Speeches were delivered by Dr. Young, Governor Wright, a full-blooded Choctaw, and Dr. Winfield, and resulted in a subscription of nearly $2,400, the largest amount subscribed at any anniversary I have attended since the war.

IN ORDER to conform to the present fashion of diminutives—Minnie, Vinnie, Lottie, and the rest—it is proposed to modernize the too severe scriptural names. Ruth should be changed to Ruthie, Boaz to Boozie, Hagar to Haggie, Joh to Johbie, and the apostles to Mattie, Markie, Lukie and Johnnie.

A WILD FLOWER

Gathered from Rev. J. Wesley's Tomb, City Road Chapel, London.

Sweet flower! thou hast a lovely place
For thy fair petals thus to bloom,
To beautify with native grace
The sainted Wesley's lowly tomb;
Crept out beneath a humble stone,
With right to claim its home thy own.

Though seldom seen by mortal eye,
It lifts its meek and tiny head
To catch the light of yonder sky,
Above the ashes of the dead;
To flourish in the open air
With beauty delicate and fair.

With green sward, forms a simple wreath
Around its base by nature given;
A balmy fragrance there to breathe,
Borne on the zephyr's wings to heaven;
Wet with the dewy tears of night,
To shine like stars in morning light,

In honor of the sainted dead,
Whose memory will through time survive,
While glory circles round his head,
With star-lit gems beyond the skies,
His crown will brighter still be set
With pearls from Jesus' gospel net.

Long may this tiny flow'ret turn
To meet the early rays of heaven
Beside the sainted Wesley's urn,
Which speaks of life immortal given;
The path he left is shining still
With light direct from Zion's hill.

HEALTH.

Health is a rosy maiden,
Delights in sun and flowers;
And always blossom-laden,
Laughs out in the darkest hours.
Life glows in her finger-tips,
Lurks in her laughing eyes,
Hangs on the glow of her ruby lips,
And deep in her blushes lies.

She loveth the cottage children
Who gambol on the lea,
And the winsome peasant's baby,
Asleep on its mother's knee.
She touched their cheeks with cherries,
And bindeth their brows with pearls;
And pretty, though brown as berries,
She maketh the Gipsy girls.

This nymph is nature's daughter;
Delights in the morning dew;
Drinks deep of the crystal water
That mirrors the bending blue.
Roams o'er the breezy mountain,
The prairies wild and wide;
Is found by the limpid fountain
That graces the valley's side.

Without her halls are dreary,
And palace gardens plain;
The life of a monarch weary,
And power and riches vain.
With her joy unbidden
Springs from the clover up,
And a world of grace lies hidden
In the depth of her pearly cup.

SUPERNUMERARY PREACHERS.

MR. EDITOR: It seems to me that there is, in many instances, a glaring discrepancy between the law of the church and the common practice in regard to that class of ministers known among us as supernumeraries; and there is also a conflict of opinion among some of our legal advisers as to what is law and what is not. This being the case—especially as some unpleasant misunderstandings have grown out of the fact—it may be well to ventilate the subject somewhat. It is not my wish to provoke a controversy from any quarter, but simply such a dignified interchange of opinions as may lead to uniformity of administration among the officials of the church in regard to supernumeraries. I propose to give my views in separate paragraphs:

1. Who are entitled to the relation of supernumerary in an Annual Conference? Only such as are "so disabled by affliction as to be unable to preach constantly." This affliction must be exclusively personal. So our College of Bishops decided in 1858, and so the "Manual of the Discipline" decides, which is now, by authority, the standard exponent of our ecclesiastical law. The relation of supernumerary has not been created as a convenient pocket to deposit an idle man in, who may wish to enjoy the prestige of belonging to an Annual Conference, and at the same time claim exemption from the responsibilities and labors of a regular pastoral charge; nor for one who may wish to cultivate a farm, merchandise, teach school, study a profession, or even stay at home to nurse an invalid family for twelve months without being encumbered with the duties of the regular itineracy. Least of all has this relation been created to afford presiding elders and Annual Conferences an opportunity to dispose of a man, for a year, whose general unacceptability is such that no pastoral charge within his reach will consent to receive him as their preacher, and who, notwithstanding, will not consent to a location. I hope the honored roll of supernumeraries will never be disgraced by placing such men on it. Rather let them be disposed of as the Discipline directs elsewhere. If a man, good and true, who is personally effective, is so afflicted in his family or embarrassed in his circumstances that he cannot do effective work all the year, let him remain on the effective list and do the best he can, and depend on a generous church, and especially on his Annual Conference, in view of all the facts, to exonerate him from all blame.

2. After the character of a minister has been approved by his Annual Conference, and he placed on the supernumerary list on account of personal disability to do full work, he is then in the hands of the Bishop, just as any other appointee of the Conference, with the exception that he shall only be required to do the amount of work "he may be able to perform," and that the Bishop may appoint him without limitation of time to the same field of labor. The Bishop has no alternative but to assign him to a definite pastoral work, and this appointment is not intended to be merely nominal. He is not to be considered a mere appendage to a pastoral charge; a sort of "lackey boy" for the other preachers, to fill a vacant place here and there. The Discipline requires him to enter regularly on the work assigned him, and to perform it according to his ability. He is neither to neglect his own work, nor undertake to do that assigned to others; and if he willfully "refuses to attend to the work assigned him" he exposes himself to the severest punishment known in the penal code of ecclesiastical judicature: from that of being deprived of his ministerial credentials to that of expulsion from the church. The law for the punishment of recreant supernumeraries is very explicit and emphatic.

3. But is a supernumerary entitled by law to a salary from the people he is appointed to serve, and must serve according to the best of his ability, or expose himself to the severest penalties? It would be a severe reflection both upon the intelligence and integrity of the General Conference to say that it had made no legal provision for the support of a class of ministers so worthy and deserving as most of our supernumeraries are. Because a faithful man is partially worn out by previous labor or the encroachments of old age, or partly disabled for a time by sickness or accident, is he to be thrown off from all church resources, and doomed, perhaps, for the balance of his life, to eke out a support for himself and family by engaging in some secular business? What! appoint a minister, true and faithful, to a definite work, and require him to do it to the best of his ability, and threaten him with the severest penalties in case of willful failure, and make no provision by law to pay him his well-earned wages? Such a course would certainly be very discreditable to the law-makers of the church; and yet some of our ministers occupying high stations have gravely decided that "a supernumerary has no disciplinary claim" for a pro rata share of the moneys collected for the support of the ministers on the charge he serves. I think these brethren have decided too hastily, without carefully analyzing the law of the church. To say nothing of former laws and usages in regard to supernumeraries which have been superseded by later enactments, I infer from the present law of the church that a supernumerary is as clearly entitled to his salary from the people he serves as any other appointee of the Conference. His character is approved and his relation fixed by the Conference. He is a minister in good standing, and is placed in the hands of the Bishop in common with all the other appointees of the Conference. The Bishop must assign him to a specific work; he must do that work, or, in case of willful delinquency, suffer the heaviest penalties; and hence I conclude that the same law which provides for the salaries of the other regular appointees of the Conference provides also for his, as he is included in the body of appointees. A supernumerary is as certainly a "minister," and, "by the rules and usages of the church, a claimant on its funds," as any other member of an Annual Conference. It is as clearly the duty of "boards of stewards to estimate the salary and traveling expenses of a supernumerary preacher on a circuit or station" as it is to estimate the salary and traveling expenses of any other preacher on a circuit or station. No one seems bold enough to deny the justness of a supernumerary's claim, but they are, I think, very unjustly cut off by asserting that there is no law showing how or by whom it is to be paid. In my opinion there is law enough for all practical purposes; but if the law is defective it ought to be amended so as to do away with the conflicting opinions of ministers, as well as laymen, occupying the high places of the church.

ALCOHOL.—ITS USES AND ABUSES.

NUMBER ONE.

MR. EDITOR: By your permission I propose to give you for publication in our most excellent ADVOCATE a series of articles on the above subject.

Temperance is defined to be moderation in the use of all things—eating and drinking, as well as in sleeping and waking—and is opposed to gluttony and drunkenness, and in other indulgences to excess. This definition is in perfect accord with the rule as laid down in our Discipline, with the exception of the use of alcoholic liquors. My understanding of the Discipline, and all commentators on it, with respect to that article, is entire abstinence. I think our authorities base their construction upon the words of St. Paul, Rom. xiv, 21: "It is good neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended or made weak." This is the true policy, in reference to alcohol especially. One man may partake with impunity a certain moderate quantity of alcoholic stimulus, and is satisfied; a brother, however, may see him thus indulge, but, being weak in resolution and strong in appetite, attempts it and is made drunk, not having the power to restrain his desire. I hold that the temperate man who gave the example is responsible. Paul said to his Corinthian brethren that he would not eat meat—and he no doubt included inferentially that he would not drink wine—so long as the world standeth, if he should thereby cause his brother to fall. He felt his responsibility on the one hand, and the force of his example on the other.

A correspondent, a few numbers back, offered "Toper" some very dangerous advice, taken from the Phrenological Journal, which was to attempt a reformation by "a gradual lessening of the quantity used." I have never seen one reform in this way. I hardly think it possible, much less probable. Could the appetite of a ferocious tiger be appeased by an occasional lap of blood? If so, the toper's appetite for alcohol may be appeased in the same way! If the first is possible, so may the latter be. No, sir; there is danger there, and I would advise no inebriate to undertake it. The best advice I have seen—and it is the only wise counsel to pursue—is that given in a previous number, (October 26,) in the article headed "Propensity to Intoxicants Taken Away." The grace of God is sufficient to do the work, and it is in reality the only efficient power. No man who has been a drunkard is safe outside this great fortress. Bro. Nicholson, in the same number, points "Toper" to this as "the only remedy." Let "Toper" know there is no substitute, nor should he trifle with anything given as such. As I am an M. D., (not a mule-driver, but a regular graduate as a doctor of medicine,) it will be supposed that I write with some degree of authority. I shall therefore commence with an attempt to show the influence of alcohol upon the physical, chemical and vital properties of the animal tissues and fluids.

The most important physical change which the contact of alcohol effects in the softer animal tissues is that of corrugation—a contracting or drawing together, puncturing—which change is entirely due to the difference in the capillary attraction (the disposition of minute, hair-like tubes or orifices to draw fluids within them) of the tissue for alcohol and for water, respectively. If animal membranes, a mass of flesh or coagulated fibrine be placed in alcohol in a fresh state, (in which they are thoroughly charged with water,) there are formed at all points, where water and alcohol meet, mixtures of the two; and as the animal texture absorbs much less of an alcoholic mixture than of pure water, a larger amount of water is of course expelled than of alcohol taken up, and the first result is a shrinking of the animal substance. "Thus," says Prof. Liebig, "9.17 grammes (a gramme, French weight, is a little more than fifteen grains) of bladder, fresh, that is, saturated with water, (in which are contained 6.95 grammes of water and 2.22 of dry substance,) when placed in forty cubic centimeters of alcohol, weigh at the end of twenty-four hours 4.73 grammes, and have consequently lost 4.44 grammes. For one volume of alcohol, therefore, retained by the bladder, rather more than three volumes of water have been expelled from it."—Liebig on the Motion of the Animal Juices.

This corrugating influence will be usually increased by the coagulating effect which it will exert on whatever soluble albumen (an animal substance similar to the white of an egg) the tissues may contain. Both these results will, of course, be proportioned in their degree to the state of concentration of the alcohol; but some physical change must always take place in the walls of the stomach whenever alcoholic fluids are introduced into it, and in the soft tissues of the body at large whenever alcohol has found its way into the current of the circulation. And that such is actually the case is found by the experiments of Dr. Percy, (Experimental Inquiry Concerning the Presence of Alcohol in the Ventricles of the Brain,) who found that when animals are poisoned by alcohol introduced into the stomach, the coats of that organ become so thoroughly imbued with it, throughout their whole thickness, that no washing or maceration can remove it. He found also that the tissues remote from the stomach became impregnated with alcohol when it has passed into the current of the circulation. But on this point we shall dwell more at length hereafter.

Yours fraternally,

JOHN SAMPLE, M. D.

USURY.

MR. EDITOR: Perhaps there is no Bible term, which is as easily understood, that is so often misapplied and misunderstood, both by preachers and people, as the term "usury."

To be guilty of usury is an offense condemned by the Scriptures, and also by our Book of Discipline; so it is a matter of some importance to have a correct knowledge of the Bible meaning of the term. If we define it to be an excess of interest on money loaned above that which the State recognizes as legal, and then condemn the offender as equally guilty with the robber and murderer, we think would be a very rash and extreme view.

So far as our knowledge extends in a business line in this State, (Louisiana,) there is a large proportion of men of traffic, in the church and out of it, who lend and borrow money at a greater per cent. than that which is considered legal by the State. They consider money as property, and they buy and sell it at the highest market price.

We read in the twenty-third chapter of Deuteronomy, commencing at the nineteenth verse: "Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother; usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of anything that is lent upon usury. Unto a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury; but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury," etc.

From this and other similar texts of Scripture it is apparent that the guilt of usury consists in taking advantage of the necessities of the poor, and in oppressing them.

We have no money to lend, neither would we be considered as favoring extravagance in traffic and trade; but we should be careful not to condemn what the Bible does not.

PARSONAGES.

We give another extract on this subject from a contributor to the Nashville Christian Advocate:

We do not hesitate to say that our people, as a church, have never put their ministry, in the matter of living, upon a social equality with themselves. The disparagement between our ministry and that of other churches in the same community is often humiliating to the former and of great advantage to the latter. Turn it which ever way you will, and writhe under it as you may, yet it will remain a fact that no man can be as useful, can do you as much good, while you force him into a social sphere below you. And this is specially so in reference to your pastor, because it originates in a want of appreciation of his high vocation, to begin with, and then has all the natural results added.

But the people are not able to provide thus for their pastor. Perhaps they are not, if they keep their own standard of living, in every particular, precisely what it has been heretofore. But suppose one hundred families would resolve to put their pastor on a par with themselves in everything pertaining to the comforts of life, what an easy matter it would be—just one dollar out of every hundred they spend for themselves! Now we have but few pastoral charges where there are not from fifty to one hundred families interested in this matter; and on the most of our circuits it is a notorious fact that the number far exceeds this. I have never yet seen the times so hard but that in the bounds of every pastoral charge some one lone man was building—did build and furnish a house by himself, out of his own means, which would have been all that was needed for a parsonage; and this went on year after year, by different individuals; and yet you say that fifty, one hundred or three hundred families are not able to build one comfortable house for their pastor! Why, sir, twenty men can do it if they are willing to come down to a level where they can meet their pastor; but they are not willing—there is the rub! When men say that they have no money to pay the preacher, to build the preacher a comfortable home, they simply mean that they have no money to spend in that direction; for they have money to build homes for themselves, to build barns and cribs, to build houses "to let," houses to sell, houses to hold cotton, houses to hold goods, houses to hold groceries, hardware, drugs, toys, books, tobacco and whisky, and houses to hold—money; but (let angels blush!) they have no money to build a house for the faithful pastor who gives his whole time and energies to their spiritual and eternal welfare! The people furnish the money to build houses (and often palatial homesteads) for doctors, lawyers, dentists, school teachers, merchants, bankers, brokers, quacks, dancing masters, stage actors and rum-sellers; and yet all these and the people together cannot build a comfortable home for him whose professional services are indispensable to civilized society, to say nothing of the world to come! Right in a town or city where they would rebuild a whole block, if it should get burned out, at a cost of several million of dollars, they will tell you they are not able to build a parsonage! Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, Washington, Philadelphia or New York might be laid in ashes to-night, and there would be plenty of money found to rebuild any one of them; but who has any money to build a parsonage?

The money that has gone out of the hands of the people who wait upon our ministry, during the last six years, to pay life insurance agents, would well-nigh have put a parsonage in every pastoral charge. We appeal to the Methodists of this land to supply this great want in our church. All that is wanting is a mind and a will to do it. The means, a hundred-fold over, are in the hands of the people; the question is, whether it will be turned into this channel or some other, or whether it shall be withheld and perverted until the Master, who lent it, shall call for both the interest and capital at the same moment! The interest on the capital the Lord has loaned some of us, if not paid soon, will bankrupt us hopelessly. Just one dollar for every hundred you have spent for your own comfort, from each one, will do the work. This is very little; and then the work is done for years to come. Sit down and make the calculation fairly, and see how much your part will be, and lay it by, for you are going to be called on—we must have a parsonage for your pastor. If all the people only knew how it would relieve the Bishops in making the appointments, how it would gladden and encourage the hearts of the preachers and their families, and how it would lubricate the whole itinerant machinery, and give a fresh impetus to Methodism throughout the land, I verily believe that in less than one year there would be a comfortable parsonage in every district, station and circuit in our connection. O what an opportunity this subject gives to our wealthy members to do something for the church that will live on when they have gone to their reward! We have men and women in our communion who could buy and furnish a parsonage, and present it to some district, station or circuit, and not feel it half as much as the preacher feels his house-rent every year. There are men who could build a parsonage every year and not feel it as much as our preachers feel their annual house-rent. "Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" May the Lord have mercy upon the people, and move them to provide comfortable homes for all our itinerant preachers.

PRIVATE PRAYER.

We should pray steadily at least thrice a day. The widow of a godly man who died recently told the writer that he always went to secret prayer four times daily: in the morning before he went to his work, again in his dinner-hour, once more when his day's work was ended, and at night before he retired to rest. There was a noticeable power in the piety of this man, and he died in great peace. Was not this attributable to his frequent fellowship with the Savior?

It is very helpful to spend a few moments in preparation before we engage in secret devotion. "You cannot," says Flavel, "come reeking hot out of the world into God's presence, but you will find a taste of it in your duties." How excellent was the plan of the mother of the Wesleys, whose habit was, when she went alone for prayer, to sit down and think of God for some minutes before she addressed him! Many a golden opportunity of fellowship with Christ is lost for want of this. Let us, when we enter our closet and shut the door, think: "I am now alone with God; no eye but his looks down upon me; no ear but his hearkens to my words. His presence surrounds me, and I kneel before him to implore his help. Let me, with deep seriousness and lively faith, address myself to the supreme God.

"I ought to pray before seeing any one. Often, when I sleep long, or meet with others early and then have family prayer, and breakfast, and forenoon callers, it is eleven or twelve o'clock before I begin secret prayer. This is a wretched system. It is unscriptural. Christ rose before day and went into a solitary place. David says: 'Early will I seek thee; thou shalt early hear my voice.' Mary Magdalene came to the sepulcher while 'it was yet dark.' Family prayer loses much of its power and sweetness, and I can do no good to those who come to seek it from me. The conscience feels guilty, the soul unfed, the lamp untrimmed. Then, when secret prayer comes, the soul is often out of tune. I feel it is far better to begin with God, to see his face first, to get my soul near him before it is near another. 'When I awake I am still with thee.'"—Robert McCheyne.

HOW TO READ THE BIBLE.

1. Read it every day.
2. Read, sometimes, one verse at a time.
3. Read, sometimes, a paragraph at a time.
4. Read, sometimes, a whole chapter; at others a whole book.
5. Sometimes read by subjects; e. g., the parables, by themselves, one after another; the miracles, one after another, etc.
6. Take one "character" and trace it through the Old and New Testaments; thus, 1, direct history or biography; 2, illustrative comment on, either in the way of enforcing as an example or exhibiting as a warning; 3, by contrast with others of different type.
7. Hunt up a doctrine through both Testaments. For example, God's watch-care over his people—God's sovereignty—election—predestination—the law of the Sabbath.
8. Find out the contrasts between the Old and New Testaments; between one saint and another; between some zealous Christian and some zealous persecutor; between Jew and Samaritan.
9. Take a verse, sometimes, to pieces, word by word, and find when the potential words are used elsewhere, and in what verses.
10. Use all the helps you can get; if you haven't a commentary, put by the difficult passages to ask your minister the meaning of.
11. Above all, endeavor to make your reading of God's word improve you in the article of self-examination and growth in grace.—Religious Herald.

AT A COLLEGE examination the students were asked the meaning of the word "hypothesis." One candidate answered that it was "a machine for raising water." Another said that it was "something that happened to a man after death."

CONSECRATION.

Savior, who died for me,
I give myself to thee;
Thy love, so full, so free,
Claims all my powers.
Be this my purpose high,
To serve thee till I die.
Whether my path shall lie
'Mid thorns or flowers.

But, Lord, the flesh is weak;
Thy gracious aid I seek,
For thou the word must speak
That makes me strong.
Then let me hear thy voice;
Thou art my only choice;
O bid my heart rejoice;
Be thou my song.

May it be joy to me
To follow only thee—
Thy faithful servant be,
Thine to the end.
For thee I'll do and dare,
For thee the cross I'll bear,
To thee direct my prayer,
On thee depend.

Savior, with me abide;
Be ever near my side;
Support, defend and guide—
I look to thee.
I lay my hand in thine,
And fleeting joys resign,
If I may call thee mine
Eternally.

TRUST.

BY ISAAC WILLIAMS.

The child leans on its parent's breast,
Leaves there its cares, and is at rest;
The bird sits singing by his nest,
And tells aloud
His trust in God, and so is blest
'Neath every cloud.

He has no store, he sows no seed;
Yet sings aloud, and doth not heed;
By flowing stream or grassy mead
He sings to shame
Men who forget, in fear of need,
A Father's name.

The heart that trusts forever sings,
And feels as light as it had wings;
A well of peace within it springs;
Come good or ill,
Whate'er to-day, to-morrow brings,
It is his will.

A NEW ROMAN FESTIVAL.

Those who have been familiar with Rome under the Popes, says the New York Observer, could hardly have believed their eyes if they had been present, on the second ultimo, to witness the festival of the schools held in the grand square of the statues of Castor and Pollux. It was the close of the first year of the existence of public schools, and was the occasion of the distribution of prizes. An ample theater of seats was erected, which was occupied by nearly five hundred children. It was gaily decorated with flags, and a band of about one hundred performers discoursed the music. We gather the following from the London Times:

"In front of the Palace of the Conservatori was a platform, on which, behind and at the ends of a long table covered with green cloth, sat the Conscript Fathers, the Sindaco, the members of the Municipal Council, and the ministers of State at present in Rome. A long, low railing extended to their right and left, behind which sat a row of ladies on one side and gentlemen on the other. These were the distributors of the prizes; while in front of them was a broad step, along which the children were to pass, ascending to it by a low flight of stairs immediately in front of the syndic's chair. Among the ladies who had undertaken this duty were the Princess Pallavicini, the Duchess Fiano, the Signoras Serraggi, Brenda, Cipolla, Marucchi, Lavaggi and others. On the temporary decoration behind the Sindaco two large pictures were hung, one of Cornelia showing her sons as they returned from school; the other of Horace confided by his father to the hands of his preceptor.

"The proceedings commenced with the Royal Hymn, followed by a chorus admirably sung by the children to very charming music, composed expressly for the occasion by the Maestro Domenico Lucilla. When this was finished one of the boys, a lad of about twelve years of age, advanced to the front, and in a fine clear voice recited some verses written by the Assessore Placidi. Then one of the girls came forward and gave a short recitation, after which there was another chorus, then some verses recited by other scholars, the alternate singing and recitation forming parts of one complete composition, the execution of which occupied about half an hour. It was loudly applauded at intervals, and one part vociferously encored. Directly the final applause ceased, addresses were delivered by the Sindaco, Prince Pallavicini, Correnti, the Minister of Public Instruction, and the Assessore Placidi, after which the distribution of the prizes commenced. The boys came up in successive rows before the gentlemen, the girls before the ladies, who handed the prizes to them with a few words of praise and encouragement, at the same time decorating the breast of each with a rosette of the Roman colors—crimson and orange, alternately. When the distribution of the prizes was finished the members of the Academy of St. Cecilia and of the Philharmonic Society, who had succeeded to the places vacated by the children above the orchestra, sang in conclusion a hymn composed by the Maestro Bornia. In the evening the city was brilliantly illuminated.

"Until now there have been, properly speaking, no 'public' schools in Rome. Such schools as existed, and they were very numerous, were either in convents or private houses, but all under ecclesiastical surveillance. The schools opened since October last, or rather since November, for little was done during the first two months, amount in number to fourteen day schools and eight evening schools for boys; eight day schools and nine Sunday (i. e., festa) schools for girls; one day and one evening rural school, (extra muros,) six day and seven evening drawing schools for boys, six day drawing schools for girls, and one gymnastic palestra for the boys, so that their bodily health is cared for, together with their intellectual development. The first schools that were opened filled very slowly, the people did not understand them, and every possible opposition was thrown in the way by the clerical party, but they have quickly learnt to appreciate the advantages held out to them, and the last opened have had every place filled immediately. The number of scholars entered, all included, to the present day, is 6,291; the average attendance has been 5,331. Those who have already sufficiently advanced to undergo examination number 4,224, of whom 1,518 have been promoted. Of those to whom the prizes were given 73 girls and 49 boys took first prizes, 105 girls and 74 boys second prizes, 210 girls and 193 boys received honorable mention—total, 388 girls, 316 boys, the advantage being greatly in favor of the girls, who only number 1,680 of the 6,291. The expenses thus far amounted to 208,174 francs, but more will be spent, and more done next year to bring up the Roman schools to a par with those of other Italian cities, of which Naples spends 804,000 francs, Florence 741,000 francs, Milan 734,000 francs, and Turin 1,000,000 francs annually on education.

GOSPEL WORK IN MEXICO.

BY AN ENGLISH METHODIST.

Since the year 1810 two parties, professing two diametrically opposite systems of thought—the one liberal and republican, the other Roman and imperial—have convulsed Mexico in their intense efforts to overcome and crush each other. The Liberal Republican party is now triumphantly in the ascendency, and is doing what it can to educate and elevate the people of this nation. The Mexican Roman party is now comparatively in ruins—its once great and powerful convent system destroyed; its hosts of friars and nuns scattered to the four winds, and prohibited from organizing into religious communities; its immense church property nationalized; many of their former church buildings used for secular purposes; their clergy, from the part they took in the French intervention, branded with the name of traitors; their convents cut up into private houses, ecclesiastical processions and robes prohibited in the streets, the church separated from the State, and entire liberty of worship established by law.

Spanish Bibles have at different times been sent to Mexico by the American and British and Foreign Bible Societies. A Roman Catholic presbyter, named Aguilar, through the study of the word of God, abandoned the Roman Church and established an evangelical congregation in this city. He died in extreme poverty, but bravely struggling on in behalf of the gospel. The good seed sown by Aguilar has grown with a rapidity unequaled in the history of gospel work in Spanish America, till there are now over fifty evangelical congregations in this city and neighborhood.

Through the generosity of some American Christians a most beautiful and grand church building—the noblest in this city after the cathedral, and the best situated of any—has been purchased for the gospel cause, and is now being repaired (though slowly, as our means are very limited) for an evangelical congregation, already numbering over eight hundred persons, that for the present meets in a former convent church.

This congregation is ministered unto by a once famous Dominican friar named Manuel Aguas, some time since converted to Jesus, and now a ripe evangelical Christian, a truly great preacher of the pure and precious gospel, being assisted also by another former Roman Catholic presbyter named Palacios, also converted to our Savior and his pure gospel.

This congregation may be expected to number over three thousand soon after the building, now being repaired for them, is finished and in use. We confidently hope that this church and congregation will form a most powerful center for the propagation of the gospel in this republic, draw to itself many of the most influential persons and families in this capital, organize by its side a greatly-needed theological seminary, and in many ways aid in establishing and developing the pure gospel, not only throughout this republic, but also in many other parts of Spanish America.

In the former great library hall of this church a most successful and thoroughly earnest Young Men's Christian Association meets weekly, and their fortnightly public meetings are very largely attended. In the same room a large Christian school of lads holds its sessions, where the Bible is carefully taught, and from among these lads the Mexican "Church of Jesus" hopes to obtain in the future many well-trained ministers. A call to the Christians in our principal congregation who wished to study for the ministry has resulted in the formation of a theological class of twenty-eight persons.

We have at our command a fine press, whose history in connection with the reformation in Mexico has much of deep interest. A pamphlet tract printed on it was the instrumentality used to lead Manuel Aguas to the earnest study of the Bible and to Jesus.

The consistent Christian lives of many connected with our congregations, their long suffering, calmness, resignation and courage under the most terrible and cruel persecutions on the part of the Romanists, their zeal and efforts to lead others to Jesus and his precious truth, their deep attachment to the Bible, has, by God's blessing, resulted in a grand triumph for the truth of the gospel in central Mexico.

It was only a few months since that the Roman Church in this city made a furious attack upon the gospel cause by every means in its power, spending immense sums of money to try and break us down. To-day she has fallen back in this capital disheartened, defeated, ashamed and baffled, while the Protestant Church, through Christ's help, has triumphed grandly.

To make this triumph a permanent one, and to greatly extend its precious influence, we who are at the front of the gospel battle in this land, struggling for Jesus amid many difficulties and dangers, appeal with deep earnestness to those who truly love him who spoke the parable of the Good Samaritan, not to pass poor Mexico by, but, on the contrary, to have compassion on this sister republic, and to do for her what Jesus would have them.

At a recent meeting of our Young Men's Christian Association one of its members remarked that "the gospel was in Mexico the religion of many of the very poor, but in the United States and England of many among the rich."

Many here on joining the gospel cause often lose not only their friendships, but also their business and means of livelihood, through the influence of the Romanists. Mexico, after fifty years of wars and revolutions, has been reduced to the most appalling poverty. Christians of wealth in the United States and England surely ought to aid their fellow-Christians in Mexico in their efforts to gain this land for Jesus.

The Romanists now, by means of the confessional and in other ways, try to induce all the persons they can influence to withdraw all business or modes of livelihood from Protestants, so as to try and starve them into submission, or thus drive them from the smaller country towns where they have (often after great persecution) succeeded in gathering an evangelical congregation. A congregation was thus scattered, not long since, in the town of Zumpango de la Laguna. Under these circumstances American and English Christians of wealth ought not to make unjust or impossible demands of us, but to sustain and develop the present gospel movement in Mexico for some time longer. The poor are the active friends of the gospel here, while among their bitter opponents, the Romanists, there is comparatively great wealth.

In behalf of many humble and true Christians here; in behalf of the pure gospel and a free Bible for poor Mexico, long neglected by Christians in the United States and England; in behalf of the whole of Spanish America, we appeal to Christians of wealth in both countries to generously aid the gospel work in the capital and republic in general, and thus enable us to build up a strong and effective work that may soon very powerfully exert a most precious influence not only throughout this country, but also in Cuba and South America.—New York Christian Advocate.

CITY OF MEXICO, 1871.

"How do you feel with such a shocking-looking coat on?" said a young clerk of more tailors' bills than good sense, one morning. "I feel," said old Roger, looking at him steadily with one eye half closed, as if taking aim at his victim—"I feel, young man, as if I had on a coat which has been paid for. I hope you may enjoy the luxury some time."

A CEMETERY sculptor lately published this card: "As the holidays are approaching, and the time for presents is nearing, I beg to call attention to my stock of tombstones."

GOD'S RELATION TO MOTHERS.

BY REV. H. A. NELSON, D. D.

When a true-hearted mother "feels, for the first time, her first-born's breath," she not only is conscious of her tender relation directly to that new-born creature, but feels a new tenderness and sacredness added to her relation to her husband. Dear as the babe is, considered simply as her own, it is yet more precious because it is his. Closely and tenderly as she was united to him before, she feels the union to be closer and tenderer now.

In a still higher sense does a Christian mother find that her experience of maternity gives a new preciousness and sacredness to her relation to God. She was his creature before; now she is the mother of his creature. The great God has come very near to her. He has made her the subject of the most marvelous exercise of his power which nature ever exemplifies. However lightly and profanely this may be treated by some, the Bible teaches us to regard it with the utmost reverence and solemnity.

The birth of a child is a more wonderful event than the creation of a material world. God causes a new human life to begin in mysterious connection with the life of the mother. It is possible to receive such a gift with natural joy, without duly regarding the divine Giver. It is possible to feel the gush of that new fountain of affection without thoughtfully considering who has opened it. It is perhaps possible for a mother to look upon her own child, and feel the pleasing emotions connected with the thought that it is her child, without solemnly remembering that it is a gift from God. It must not be so with Christian mothers. They should remember that God has come near to them in a wonderful manner, and has brought them into a new and peculiar relation to himself. This relation is distinctly recognized in his word, and he has made it the subject of a special covenant. This covenant is indeed with both the parents, if they both are believers.

I would fain encourage all such to take a strong hold upon God's promise that he will be a God to them, and to their seed after them. But in order to claim this promise, Christian mother, you must make the same unreserved commitment of your child to God which you are required to make of yourself. This, when you view God rightly, will be your highest privilege. You will commit your child to God more trustfully, more joyfully, than you lay it in the arms of its father. This may involve your consent to painful separation. You may be called to give up your child in death to him who gave it, or you may be called to consent that the winds and waves shall bear that child far away from you to some distant heathen land, where "the Lord hath need of him." There are many mothers who know by experience that, keen as the pang of such parting is, there is also a peculiar new joy which springs up from it like a clear fountain, and flows on in a serene and steady stream of precious experience through all the life.

When Christ is so precious to you that you freely give to him not only yourselves but your children—those dearer than selves—when you have learned to think of them as his, and to train them as his, and to love them as his—even as you have always thought of them and loved them as the children of him who, of all men, is the object of your strongest affection—then will you know how sacred and how sanctifying and how heavenly God has designed and fitted the maternal relation to be.—Evangelist.

A PRESIDING ELDER of the United Brethren Church was preaching in Minnesota, and was much annoyed by persons talking and laughing. He paused, looked at the disturbers, and said: "I am always afraid to reprove those who misbehave in church. In the early part of my ministry I made a great mistake. As I was preaching, a young man who sat before me was constantly laughing, talking and making uncouth grimaces. I paused, and administered a severe rebuke. After the close of the service one of the official members came and said to me: 'Brother, you made a great mistake. That young man whom you reproved is an idiot.' Since then I have always been afraid to reprove those who misbehave in church, lest I should repeat that mistake, and reprove another idiot." During the rest of that service, at least, there was good order.

FULL DRESS BEFORE THE KING.—"In one respect there is some resemblance betwixt the custom of the court of princes and of heaven. No admittance into the latter, as well as the former, unless in full dress. Every soul who enters perfect bliss must have on the resplendent robe of Christ's righteousness by imputation. This is absolutely necessary to have a seat in the court of heaven." Toplady.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

AT BOMBAY the high priest of the Parsees has produced a grammar of the Pehlvi language, which extends to five hundred pages.

THE American Bible Society has just issued the Gospel of Matthew in the language of the Nez Perces, or Flathead Indians of Oregon.

THE students of the Syrian Protestant College consist of Druses, Maronites, Greek Catholics, Roman Catholics—in short, of all sects in Syria except Moslem.

THE Church Journal gives a conspicuous place in its editorial columns to a notice of a lady in New York who stands at the head of the ecclesiastical embroiderers in this country.

THE London City Mission was established thirty-five years ago. It began with but two missionaries, and now employs three hundred and sixty-nine. Its receipts for the past year were over $200,000.

THE Baroness Lionel de Rothschild supports a girls' school in Jerusalem, which is attended by about eighty girls, most of whom are orphans. Their instructions are in needle-work, reading, writing, arithmetic and prayers.

THE revisers of the New Testament Company, at their thirteenth session at the Jerusalem Chamber, with eighteen members present, completed the revision of the eleventh chapter of St. Mark's Gospel. The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol presided.

THE CHICAGO CHURCHES.—The total number of churches destroyed in Chicago, it is now ascertained, is sixty, of which the Roman Catholics lose the largest number, fourteen; the Methodists, ten; the Lutherans, nine; the Presbyterians, eight; the Episcopalians, six.

A BAPTIST missionary among the Choctaw Indians, west of Arkansas, writes: "I feel encouraged in my labors here. I have been an Indian missionary from Georgia for fifteen years, and a thousand converts or more, living and ever living, are the fruits of this mission."

THE evangelical churches of the United States reported last year that they had on their rolls about 5,400,000 communicants. According to the national census the whole population of the country was 38,535,153. Very nearly one-seventh of the inhabitants of the land, therefore, are members of these churches.

THE "Old Catholics" of Cologne have combined for the purpose of establishing an "Old Catholic" congregation with a separate church. In the meeting, Prof. Tangermann, as one of the Munich committee, emphatically denied the truth of the rumor that there was a difference between Dr. Dollinger and the committee.

THE Presbyterian missionary in Utah, Rev. Mr. Welch, writes hopefully to the Presbyterian Banner as follows: "The prospect for the Presbyterian Church is flattering; much brighter than the most hopeful of its friends had anticipated. Our greatest drawback at the present is for want of a place to worship. We expect to organize in three or four weeks."

WE LEARN by telegram from Rome, says the New York Observer, that many of the religious Romish societies are preparing to leave Rome to establish convents in England and America. We may expect a great increase of these establishments. They have plenty of money and easily make more. The Legislature of the State of New York votes away large sums every year for the support of such schools as Rome itself is now casting out.

DR. E. R. LEWIS, writing to the Observer from the Syrian Protestant College, says that a wonderful change is taking place in Syria. The people are awakening to a desire for instruction. On every side schools are springing up—native schools, Catholic schools, Jesuit schools, and even the Moslems are erecting a fine building for educational purposes. The people are reacting from superstition and priestly bondage, and seeking for knowledge.

THERE has been a steady aggregate increase of membership in the Society of Friends in Maryland and Virginia since 1860, and the increased religious life and interest has been even more manifest. The increase of members has been mostly in the West and South. The missionary work of the society has not been so earnest and extensive as it now is since its earlier days; it is among the Indians and freedmen, and in Mexico, Madagascar, India and Norway. The Friends have four colleges and four large boarding schools in the United States, besides organized systems of education through day schools, and they have over twenty-five thousand children in their Sabbath schools.

AS IN Ogdensburg and Scranton, so in blessed old Ireland itself, and in Londonderry itself, the Roman Catholics find it more to their mind to mob Protestant preachers than to answer them. On a recent Sunday evening, while a Wesleyan minister was attempting to conduct outdoor services, a mob of about one thousand persons gathered, chiefly Roman Catholic, and disturbed the services by the most dreadful yelling, cheering and hooting. For a time the mob confined its attention to groaning and yelling, but when the preacher showed no signs of discontinuing his discourse, he was jostled, fists clenched in his face, and a general rush made at the eminence on which he stood. Ultimately the minister ceased preaching, and was escorted away amidst the wildest confusion.

MR. F. A. WYLIE, an intelligent Englishman, who has been traveling in Germany, and who has made a special study of the new Reformation, having seen and conversed with many of its leaders, writes to the London Times a letter giving his impression of the movement. Before the meeting of the Munich Congress he had an interview with Prof. Von Ranke, who expressed his opinion that the position of the Alt Catholic leaders—neither in the Romish Church nor out of it, excommunicated by Rome, and yet refusing to adopt the Protestant creed—was an equivocal and weak one. Dr. Hoffman, the general superintendent or primate of the Protestant Church of Prussia, expressed the same opinion; and added that if, at the meeting of the council, the leaders should take up Tridentine ground, matters would be worse rather than better as respects the hope of the movement issuing in a reformation of the Church of Rome. The Munich Council has since met; the ground it has taken up is very decidedly that of Trent, and so ends the hope, in Dr. Hoffman's opinion, of the movement becoming a reforming one. Prof. Vogel, of Vienna, also expressed his belief that the movement would have no future. "All these men," says Mr. Wylie, "very clearly see that the position taken up by the Old Catholics has not breadth enough for a popular movement. It may influence intellectual and speculative men; but it will fail with the masses. Those Protestant ministers who have lately visited Austria all agree in saying that the Catholic population of that empire are not prepared to follow their leaders." Mr. Wylie had an interview with Dr. Dollinger, "in which," he says, "I expressed my opinion, delicately but plainly, that the movement, to succeed, must be based upon the Bible, and the exemption of the conscience from all other authority. But Dr. Dollinger protested, as he had declared in public, that his standing was on history—that is, on the historical development of an infallible rule of faith in a living and organized body, the 'church' to wit." Mr. Wylie comes to the following conclusion, which appears to have reason in it: "But I don't think the movement will die. If not as a reforming, it will live as a destructive power. Rome, by her excommunication of Dr. Dollinger and his compatriots, has secured this. Rome cannot revoke her sentence, and the Alt Catholics cannot bow to it; and so they must go on to form a church of their own, and are, in fact, doing so already. To support themselves, and make way against their great opponent, they must agitate and discuss, and, above all, enlighten the people. Every day their views will enlarge and their sympathies widen, and this alone will be no slight emancipation from a system where there is but one principle—authority; and but one virtue—obedience. In short, in this movement we see another agency added to the many already existing, both political and intellectual, which are slowly breaking up the iron unity of a body which has weighed so heavily upon the liberty and civilization of the world." Private letters from Dr. Dollinger, which have been received at Rome, announce that the expulsion of the Jesuits from Germany has been definitely agreed upon in Berlin. We cannot help feeling that this is a great blunder of the Reformers. It is an act of persecution which the Old Catholics should never demand, against which the Protestants should unitedly protest, and which the German government should have too much dignity to allow. Let the Old Catholics be protected in their rights, by all means; but there are better methods of contending against the Jesuits than those of physical force. We have further indications of the bitterness of the warfare which is springing up between the two parties in the Catholic Church, in a telegram from Munich that Drs. Korber and Sigl, two Ultramontane newspaper editors, have been sued in the courts for calumny against the Old Catholic leaders. Dr. Korber has been sentenced to two weeks' imprisonment and costs for calumniating Dr. Dollinger; and Dr. Sigl, for a similar offense against Dr. Zirngiebl, to a week's imprisonment and twenty-five florins' fine and costs.—Independent.

EUCHARISTIC.

It is a sad fact that so few people give God thanks in any way. They act as though it were his business to take care of them beyond that point where they are not able to take care of themselves; and that, so far as he intervenes, it is a matter to excite neither gratitude nor surprise. How far the President and the Governors were moved by thankfulness in the proclamations which they have made is not for us to say. The very general terms which they use are such platitudes and commonplaces as anybody might accept as the expression of a moderate theism. If, however, there is no recognition of Christ in them, there is at least the idea of a good Providence over us, and a respectful intimation that it is comely to think of the Giver, and even in a national way to say that we are not atheists.

The simple Bible notion that things come from God is a wholesome one, and all the more healthful when we get away from the clouds and fogs of science, falsely so called, and rest in the ultimate and true philosophy that God is as much in the last as in the first link of the chain which binds us to himself. By whatever processes it is brought about, and under whatever reign of law it happens, "every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights." It is the directness of the gift that inspires the heartiness of our thanks. One reason of the lack of gratitude is in the distance at which we place the Author of all. Men speak of him as the great first cause, as if he were not the great last cause as well, and as if he were not as potentially and actually present in the middle as at the beginning and end. He must be in every note of the gamut, sounding along every string and chord in the music of the universe; and as the alpha and omega, his inspiration is in every letter, syllable and word of the grand oration.

Besides this disposition to explain the divine agency out of the middle and end of things, and of things which lie nearest to us, and touch us in our personal affairs, there is this conceited self-complacency which takes the benefactions of heaven as a matter of right. The fact of sin does not appear to us at the same time that we feed and luxuriate in what an offended Creator provides. Angels, with no sense of guilt, can hardly praise enough while they rejoice in the exuberance of light and life. It is the nature of sin to be filled with the conceit of merit where there is nothing but deserved condemnation. Besides, if we have been industrious, skillful and painstaking, have we not come by our wealth and comforts ourselves, and what is there to thank God for? God is not in all the thoughts of the man who has built his own great Babylon, who has carved out his own fortune, and who feels that he has earned whatever he possesses. If the gift is from above, it has been merited, and it ought not to be otherwise. If bounties overflow, the building of greater barns occupies the mind to the exclusion of any reference to the source from whence they come. The fact of sin and of unworthiness should give a peculiar point and emphasis to gratitude, and should deepen the sense of benefits received. But in truth it is commonly the other way, and that which blinds the moral perceptions makes men insensible to the temporal exhibitions of infinite goodness. Those who have more occasion for thankfulness than the seraphim exhibit less than the brutes that perish. They estimate and enjoy, but not as from God. They value earthly treasures as the chief good, and as the sum of life, but not as the expression of that impartial goodness and of that perfection of the divine fatherhood which sends the rain and the sun upon all.

Owing to a certain perverseness in human nature, the mere suggestion of a general thanksgiving arouses a spirit of discontent in some minds. It has the unhappy power of calling up the hardships and failures, the disappointments and sufferings of the past, and of awakening a repining and rebellious spirit. While others are giving thanks, and with reason, for the prosperity which attends them, they have "seen affliction by the rod of his wrath," and are struggling under the burden of misfortune. But there is a ground of gratitude so high that all may stand upon it—an elevation where the rich and the poor, the prosperous and the unfortunate, may meet together, and where, if there be a difference in the heartiness of the praise, it will be in favor of those who suffer. Existence, as redeemed and immortal, lifts itself so far above the accidents of time that the transitory pleasures and sorrows of earth are lost from view. So grand are the proportions of the mountain, as it towers in the golden sunlight, that the rugged features at its base are essential to its symmetry. In view of life and immortality, and the mission of suffering to nourish the glory which shall be revealed in us, there is reason for universal thankfulness. It is well to remind us of the bounteous harvests, exemption from pestilence and earthquakes, and of such material blessings as we have; but if this were all, our thanksgiving would be mean and contemptible in its measure, and there would be many silent harps where all ought to be strung. Our temporal blessings, after all, are the mere shadow of that greater good which the Father is pouring upon us. Grace is the real archetype of what we see in the teeming fields, the groaning warehouses and the deeply-freighted ships; and all these forms of earthly plenty are only the fringes of the garment of infinite mercy. Beyond them are the true riches, the true vine, the true bread from heaven—God's unspeakable gift. To stop at them in our conceptions of God's benedictions is to toy with the wavelets and ripples of the beach, while the deep sea is unsounded and unexplored. Directing our thoughts, in the spirit of an executive proclamation, too exclusively to material benefits, we may overlook the highest reason of gratitude. There is danger that, with these partial views of divine goodness, we shall fail to go aloft and take in the wider horizon which embraces the spiritual, and which connects the visible with the unseen and the eternal. Here is a ground of thanksgiving which never shifts, and upon which all may stand alike. Here the prosperous and the unfortunate may unite in grateful adoration. Of temporal mercies there are enough in every case to open the fountain of love, and to shame our want of it; but of God's tender mercies in Christ, these are so manifold and so rich that no heart should be less than all aflame.

WOMEN, however lovely they may be in person, rarely excite true admiration if they are ignorant of the art of conversing well.

LETTER FROM CHINA.

[The following letter is addressed to W. H. Foster, superintendent of the Felicity Street Sunday School of this city.]

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Oct. 10, 1871.

MY DEAR BRO. FOSTER: I did not receive a letter from you by the last mail, but Bro. Allen tells me the Sabbath schools of New Orleans have sent more funds for the support of our schools in China. A thousand thanks to you and to all those dear children for untiring perseverance and zeal in this blessed work. Please excuse me if I do not write a lengthy letter this time, for I have been suffering several days from fever. I am now a little better, but not well. The fever has left me, but I am quite weak. Twice during the time I had a rush of blood to the head, which made me quite blind for a few moments; but, thanks be to God, I am yet the spared monument of his goodness. I have not been able to attend to any work for four or five days. It is good, at times, to be afflicted, and my constant prayer to God, through Jesus, my blessed Savior, is to sanctify my affliction to the good of my soul and to the glory of his holy name. I hope, if it be the Lord's will, yet to be spared to labor long among these dying people who know not God. These people have shown, and do still show, a great deal of hatred to foreign missions and to Christianity; but God will cause the wrath of man to praise him.

I will in this give you some account of what has recently occurred in Tientsin, which will show the extreme degradation of this people and the darkness of their minds. Just now the whole country is flooded, and thousands of lives have been swept away. Before the river broke a messenger was sent to see the threatened spot. There was a small hole, and in it a fish. This was declared to be a god; and as it was the will of Heaven, it would be folly in them to try to stop it. When it did break, and all attempts to close the break having failed, the story changed, and it was said there were two fish—one had gone up the country and the other had remained around Tientsin, and it would be utterly useless for them to do anything until his return. A few days later the tocitai of the city went to the break to sacrifice to a fabulous tortoise or fish, who is supposed to control the waters. He went in great state, accompanied by many mandarins. Tables were arranged and everything prepared that was necessary, and then they began their performances. The tocitai offered a long prayer to the tortoise, and told of the suffering of the people by the flood of waters, and that they had made many fruitless efforts to repair the break, and begged the fish-god to let them now repair it. They then began to repair; but soon the swelling of the waters swept away everything.—The tocitai became very angry, and went again to the spot; but there was no offering and no incense this time. Cannon were brought, and the mandarin in rage abused the god for not complying with his wishes. "Did I not tell you so and so and so, and you paid no attention. You do not care for the trouble caused by so many thousands of people," etc. Bang! bang! bang! went off the big guns at the fish-god; and then the mandarin went home, feeling that he had done his duty, and that he had convinced the people that he was not responsible for the flood.

After the above occurred, a serpent was found and was at once declared to be the dragon, and was forthwith worshiped by all the mandarins and people. It seems that many centuries ago a man, and an officer of the government, while living on the Yellow river, the bank gave way, and all he did to close the place against the rising waters was in vain. He then threw himself into the breach and it closed up immediately. When the body was recovered the spirit possessed a man near by, who revealed to them that the man whose body was just found had been changed into a dragon. The Emperor hearing of it, deified his faithful servant who had sacrificed his life, and he was known and worshiped by the name of Golden Dragon. And thus millions now worship the dragon. The Golden Dragon is said to be in Tientsin now. It seems some boatmen on a grain junk belonging to a wealthy Mohammedan in Tientsin, while coming up the Grand Canal, saw something in the water, when one of them reached out his boat-hook toward it and it crept upon the book, and he recognized it to be the Golden Dragon. This they brought to their master. Another story is that an old man hailed a boatman to take him to Tientsin, when he refused. The old man told him he would lose nothing by it. He then took him, and in going, in a short time, to that part of the boat where the old man was sitting, he saw nothing but a small snake; but he recognized it to be the Golden Dragon. It was taken to Tientsin, and the most wonderful stories are circulated about it. Some say he has a square head with characters on it. It is said to have a moustache, and the ears and horns of a dragon. His tail is said to be fishy. He is said to be the color of gold and changes at pleasure; and though so small, he is said to be able to extend himself to near a mile. He appears and disappears, accompanied by several other dragons. The Mohammedan made haste and informed the officials, who at once set about to make preparations to entertain him. The officers, one and all, went to this man's house to receive the dragon. They prostrated themselves before it and burned incense. The serpent was then placed on a small dish, with some bits of yellow paper for it to lie on, and covered with a little of the same. The officer took it in his chair, carrying it in his hand to the temple, and there they all prostrated themselves again before it. The highest officer in Tientsin, the governor, went also and paid it divine honor by prostrating himself before it. Two missionaries went to see what was causing the excitement. They went up steps into a room where the serpent was, and found it very dark. They could see persons in the room, in different places, dressed in state and very quiet. Incense and candles were burning, and a great deal of fruit was placed before this serpent-god. There was a tablet, and on it written: "The divine throne of the Golden Dragon King." In front of this was the dish with the serpent on it. As they went up the steps some one cried out: "Don't let Tai-wang see the foreign devils." The mandarins did not seem to regard them with much favor as they approached the Golden Dragon. These two missionaries were recognized by a Buddhist priest, who removed the cover for a moment, and they bowed in acknowledgment and retired. Tai-wang, the Golden Dragon, turned out to be an ordinary snake, some five inches long and a little thicker than a common lead pencil. There was nothing special either in the shape of the head or the color of the skin. After this three other English gentlemen saw it, and their impressions were the same.

These are the people who are the rulers of China, and these the people the missionary has to labor among. Pray with us that God may assert his right to reign in the hearts of the millions of China. Pray for us that we may be faithful in pointing them to Jesus.

I am ever yours in the bonds of Christian love.

CENTENARY COLLEGE MEETING.—By reference to special notice in another column it will be seen that a meeting for the college is called, to be held at Lyceum Hall on Wednesday night, December 6, at half-past seven o'clock. We trust that all the friends of education will be there to hear the distinguished speakers who have consented to deliver addresses on the occasion. We must rally as one man, and make the meeting, in its attendance and results, worthy of the noble institution it is sought to build up.

MOREAU STREET CHURCH.—A protracted meeting in this charge closed on last Sunday, resulting in fourteen conversions and the same number of accessions to the church. The converts are mostly heads of families, and some of them far advanced in years. The church has been greatly revived, and the Sabbath congregations are larger than we have seen there for a long time. Bro. White, the pastor, has reason to be encouraged with the prosperity which has attended his labors this year. Bro. Leith, from the lake shore, Mississippi Conference, and the preachers of the city rendered valuable aid during the progress of the meeting.

EDUCATED MINISTRY.

This subject has already been pretty freely ventilated in our columns. Bishop Marvin, in the St. Louis Advocate, sums up his views as follows:

1. No one desires that preachers should be educated more than I do. Let it be done as far as possible. Let the church tax her resources to the uttermost. Let us have a theological school. Let us have a chair of divinity in our colleges, where it can be done.

2. But when the utmost has been done we will not turn out educated men as fast as the demands of the work will require.

3. Large classes of men will always be found to whom men of good sense, though not highly educated, will be acceptable; more acceptable than the learned man, if he have the air of a pedant.

4. Many men in the church now, who are in demand in the very best and most cultivated communities, are such as have had no early advantages beyond the common school.

5. The college will not make a brilliant, attractive man of a naturally dull one. Many educated men never become acceptable preachers. If a man has no "gift," no training can give it to him. My conviction is, that if a man does not become a respectable public speaker on the basis of a fair English education, he would never do so with all the help in the world. You must have the "timber" to begin with.

6. I apprehend that exaggerated hopes are entertained of the results of a college course; yet I do not deprecate the present agitation of the subject. Good will come of it—has already come of it. But brethren will be disappointed in many of the young men that will come to their pulpits out of the colleges.

7. I should deplore most deeply any legislation that would make a liberal education a condition of membership in the Annual Conferences. The hand of God will be on many a man who can never take a classical course. I am not sure but some men—very useful men, too—whom I have known, would have been spoiled by any attempt of the sort. I am almost tempted to give names. H. S. Watts will pardon me for writing his.

8. If in any measure Methodist preachers lose their simplicity through affectation of learning, it will be a black day for us. If ever geometry and Greek, "the objective and the subjective," come to reduce our estimate of personal holiness as the prime condition of a truly useful ministry, we may write "Ichabod" upon our altars—for Methodism will be dead.

There is in some places an actual vice, which may properly be denominated a lust for fine preaching. Men go to church from very much the same motive that takes them to the theater—not to be edified, but to enjoy fine declamation.

For these reasons it behooves our colleges to maintain a high order of Christian life. Let the young men being formed for the ministry be made constantly to feel that our great qualification is a holy life—a faith that gives men power with God, and a depth of spiritual experience that gives power with men, and that all their knowledge is mere chaff if the kernel of holiness be not in it.

There is danger that preaching may become too scholastic, that the pulpit in the pride of learning may displace the cross by other themes; or if the cross be not displaced, the egotism of knowledge and of display may hide it by a heavy drapery of alien matter. The profoundest philosophy, the most consummate knowledge, is an impertinence, a shame, a crime, in the pulpit, if it shade Christ. Only when it pronounces that name, adoring, trembling—only when it gives a deeper, fuller utterance of that name—is it of the slightest value.

Preaching is nothing—worse than nothing—it is a mockery—if it does not bring men to the cross. All we know must be felt to be of use only as it helps us to get God's truth before the eyes and into the ears and hearts of men.

MISS ANNIE M. DOGGETT.

Bishop Doggett has the prayerful sympathy of the whole church in his bereavement. The death of his daughter was most beautiful and triumphant. The Richmond Christian Advocate speaks of her as follows:

This lady died of pulmonary consumption, at the residence of her father, Bishop Doggett, in this city, on the second instant. Her sickness was long, wearisome and painful, and was borne with the heroic fortitude of Christian faith. At the funeral her pastor, Rev. Dr. Granbery, said that of all the texts in the Bible none seemed so suitable for the sad occasion as the sublime words of St. Paul: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law; but thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." The large number of friends who followed her remains to the grave on a dismal, rainy day, and stood around in silence, only broken by the solemn voice of the minister and the deep sobs of grief, until the last floral tribute had been laid on the fresh earth, attested her worth and the loss they had met in her death.

Gifted by nature with a brilliant mind, a warm heart and a generous disposition, she made many devoted friends. For months previous to her death she hesitated to speak with certainty as to her religious experience, though attending conscientiously to the duties of a Christian. But God had better things in store for her than she dared to hope. When her father's Conferences came on in the West, though extremely feeble, she urged him to attend them, and when he left she clung to the hope of living until his return. On reaching home the Bishop found her rapidly sinking into the dark valley. The closing scenes were full of tenderness and love and faith. One sentence, which had been suggested to her by a dear friend as potent to dispel her doubts, was almost constantly on her lips: "Jesus died for me." With this she fought the enemy to the very last. Only the day before she died, as the family and her pastor, with the writer and two lady friends, sat by her bedside and watched the feeble, flickering flame of life, we could hear, now and then, in a whisper, coming up out of the valley, those precious words: "Jesus died for me." They were her watchwords at the gates of death. Turning her eyes to the window, and looking at the pouring rain, she said: "I feel somewhat disappointed to-day; last night I expected to be in heaven this morning." She then added: "I fear I am too anxious to be at rest." A few days before her death, as her father was alone with her, she asked him to take her hand in his and pray for her. The Bishop did so, and while they both prayed there fell upon father and child such a baptism of the Holy Ghost as neither had ever before received. They were filled with joy unspeakable and full of glory. In this happy frame she continued until the weary wheels of life stood still, and death placed his signet on her brow. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." The family are bowing under the burden of this sore affliction, but they are filled with consolation by reason of the victory won through the grace of God. The church will not forget to pray for our beloved and devoted Bishop and his family in this day of trial and sorrow. The beautiful hymn of Charles Wesley, "Lo, the prisoner is released," was sung at her funeral, as expressive of her triumphal entrance into the company of the redeemed.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Preachers and delegates will pay full fare on the railroads coming to Meridian, and on certificate of the secretary will be returned free. Those coming on the Mobile and Ohio, and perhaps those traveling on the N. and J. railroad, will be required to buy, on starting, tickets for the round trip.

Inasmuch as the trains arrive at a late hour of the night, it will be necessary for brethren to take lodging and breakfast at the hotels.

Prior to Wednesday members will be met at the Methodist church, at eight o'clock A. M. On Wednesday and days following they will be met at the Presbyterian church, at the same hour. Any arriving in the day-time will call at the parsonage.

JOHN A. ELLIS.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Members on their arrival in Monroe will please report at the parsonage.

Captains Dick Sinnott, J. W. Blanks and Gus. Hodge, of the Ouachita river steamboats; the North Louisiana and Texas railroad, running from Delta to Monroe; and the stage lines from Bastrop and Shreveport to Monroe, have kindly consented to convey the preachers at half fare. The certificate of the Conference secretary will enable those who pay full fare by these routes coming, to return free.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

DICTIONARY OF DOCTRINAL AND HISTORICAL THEOLOGY. Edited by the Rev. John Henry Blunt, M. A., F. S. A. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. London: Rivingtons, 1871.

This volume is a large octavo of 825 pages, bound in cloth, and the typography and paper leave nothing to be desired. A copious index adds much to the value of the work. The author is a prolific writer, and is well known by his extensive labors in the field of theological lore. More than a dozen different works has he given to the public, among which may be noted: The Annotated Book of Common Prayer; The Reformation of the Church of England; A Plain Account of the English Bible; Directorium Pastorale. A Dictionary of Sects, Heresies and Schools of Thought, by the same author, is soon to be issued. The Dictionary of Doctrinal and Historical Theology is written from the standpoint of the Anglican Church, and is imbued with the High Church spirit from beginning to end. Prelacy is offensively prominent, baptismal regeneration is insisted upon, and the author avails himself of every opportunity to sneer at Methodism, and to frown upon dissent. Apart from its high Anglican theology and manifold distortions of prejudice, the work is a valuable one, evincing research and learning, and containing a vast amount of information upon the subjects which its title legitimately embraces.

THE EARTH: A Descriptive History of the Phenomena of the Life of the Globe. By Elisee Reclus. Translated by the late B. B. Woodward, British Museum. Illustrated by two hundred and thirty maps inserted in the text, and twenty-three page-maps printed in colors. New York: Harper & Bros., publishers, 1871.

This work is an octavo of 567 pages, and copiously illustrated. The publishers assure us that it "is the result of more than fifteen years' careful study, travel and research, by one of the most able living French authors, Elisee Reclus." It has already passed through two French editions. The work treats of the earth as a planet, the land, the circulation of water, and subterranean forces. From the examination we have been able to give the volume, we have been favorably impressed with its merits. For sale by Ellis & Bro.; New Orleans.

THE ANCIENT HISTORY OF THE EAST, from the earliest times to the conquest of Alexander the Great, including Egypt, Assyria, Babylonia, Media, Persia, Asia Minor and Phoenicia. By Philip Smith, B. A. New York: Harper & Bros., publishers, 1871.

This work has been universally commended by the press, and is indeed a useful compend of ancient history. None could have done better than the author in covering so long a period in such a condensed form. He has availed himself of the latest discoveries, and draws freely upon the best sources of information.

IMMORTALITY AND WORTH OF THE SOUL: Ten Scenes in the life of a lady of fashion; and miscellaneous pieces. By James B. Walker. Chicago: Henry A. Sumner; J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia; Gould & Lincoln, Boston; Sheldon & Co., New York.

R. J. Harp, of the Depository, 112 Camp street, has laid this beautiful volume upon our table. The writer is the well-known author of "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation" and other religious works, and his character is a sufficient guarantee for the purity of the present work. Of its merits as a poem we cannot speak at present, but of its high religious tone and aim we have no doubt. Price, $1.50.

ON THE MIRACLES OF OUR LORD. By George Macdonald, LL. D. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1871.

This work is delightful reading, and profitable to the soul. The author's exposition of the miracles is in his usually simple and direct manner, and so plain that a child can understand and be edified. The volume is a handsome little 12mo, sold at $1 by R. J. Harp, Depository, 112 Camp street.

THE TEETH AND HOW TO SAVE THEM. By L. P. Meredith, M. D., D. D. S. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co., 1871.

This work is designed for the people, for non-professional readers, and should be read by them. It is written in the interest of the dental profession, but also for the good of all. For sale by R. J. Harp. Price, $1.25.

GIDEON'S ROCK is a well-written religious story by Katherine Saunders. J. B. Lippincott & Co., publishers. For sale by R. J. Harp. Price, $1.

HARPER & BROS. have just issued Life and Letters of Catherine M. Sedgwick. The volume is edited by Mary E. Dewey. Miss Sedgwick died about four years ago, and this is the first and only memorial of her that has been published. Those who knew her as a woman, or admired her as an author, will be glad to have this Life and Letters. For sale by Ellis & Bro.

SOUTHERN VOICES is a volume of poems by William H. Holcombe, M. D., published by Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia. From a hasty glance at the contents, and imperfect sampling here and there, we think there are many pieces of genuine poetic merit. The subjects cover a wide range—religious, patriotic, personal, sentimental. The friends and admirers of Dr. Holcombe will be pleased with this contribution to our literature.

HANNAH is by Miss Mulock, now Mrs. Craik, and published by Harper & Bros.

Southern Methodism in Baltimore.

A correspondent of the Richmond Christian Advocate writes as follows:

For the information of your readers, especially those assembled in Conference next week, allow me to say that Southern Methodism in Baltimore, and I believe throughout the entire bounds of the Baltimore Conference, is in a better and more flourishing condition than ever before. Dr. Huston has had a considerable accession of members to his church (Trinity;) the Rev. Dr. Munsey's church (Central) has been undergoing a process of thorough renovation, at an expense of $2,800; and, better than this, Central church has been greatly blessed by that renovation which can only come from above, a revival of religion being in progress now, in which Dr. Munsey is much assisted by his friend, the Rev. Dr. Huston, and others. St. Paul's church, Rev. Mr. Eggleston, pastor, is completed, and will be dedicated to the worship of Almighty God on the first Sunday in December. The Rev. Dr. Duncan, of your Conference, will preach the dedicatory sermon. Bishop Paine has also been invited to be present on that occasion, and the people are in great hope that the Bishop will find it convenient to honor Baltimore with his presence. The Rev. John L. Clark preached a memorial sermon on last Sunday to as large a congregation as the house could possibly contain, in the "old stone church" on Frederick avenue, of which the Rev. J. H. DuLaney is pastor. At three o'clock an experience meeting was held, and at night the last services were held in the old church, on which occasion the pastor administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper to his congregation. This week the old church, which stands immediately in front of the new edifice, will be torn down; so that the magnificent new building,

"With glistening spires and pinnacles adorned," will on Sunday next appear fronting the avenue, as if placed there by magic. The Rev. Dr. Huston will preach the first sermon in this church, and dedicate it to God's service, on Sunday morning next.

The corner-stone of the new church in South Baltimore was laid a few Sundays ago; addresses were made on that occasion by Rev. Messrs. Canter, Clark, and Dr. Huston, at the close of which $1,000 were subscribed on the spot, which amount, added to that previously contributed, it is thought, will enable the building committee to finish the house without incurring any debt.

OUT OF POCKET.—From the statement below, which we find in an exchange, some idea of the cost and profits of a first-class paper may be found:

The Advance, (Congregational,) of Chicago, with a large list at $2.50 a year, sunk about $75,000 in four years, and had not become self-sustaining when the late fire occurred. Its subscription price is raised to $3 a year.

The Interior, (Presbyterian,) in less than two years, has used up a capital of nearly $50,000.

The Standard, (Baptist,) with a list of fifteen thousand, had never been self-sustaining. Its publishers had to draw on the profits of other branches of business to make up deficiencies in the income of their paper.

COLORED M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.—Bishop Vanderhorst received into this church, recently, at Barnwell, South Carolina, one African Methodist Episcopal church of one hundred and forty members—three of them preachers; and another church at White Bluff of one hundred and forty members.

WE ARE pained to learn, says the Raleigh Episcopal Methodist of November 15, that Gormon, son of Rev. R. L. Abernethy, died on Thursday last from a wound inflicted by a gun accidentally discharged in the hands of a younger brother. We tender our Christian condolence to the bereaved parents.

"FASHIONABLE" dress and equipage are the uniform of the army of "the god of this world," and "fashionable customs" are his tactics.

Married.

At the residence of the bride's father, near Oak Hill, Alabama, November 2, 1871, by the Rev. T. K. Armstrong, Mr. WALTER H. DANIEL, of Sumpter county, Alabama, to Miss IDA F. WILLIAMS, of Wilcox county, Alabama.

On the tenth of October, 1871, at the residence of Mr. Cotnam, by Rev. J. S. Harris, Mr. BENJAMIN F. COTNAM to Miss MARTHA S. CARMAN, all of Warren county.

By Rev. J. S. Harris, on the thirtieth of October, 1871, at Cane Ridge church, Mr. EUGENE BRIOOS, of Yazoo county, to Mrs. P. M. MOZINGO, of Warren county.

Obituaries.

MRS. LADSANNA CALDREN BRITTON, wife of Captain Alexander Britton, was born in Clarksburg, West Virginia, in March, 1811, and died November 5, 1871. She was converted and joined the Methodist Church in September, 1824, and was married to Alexander Britton on the third of December, 1829. She resided at Rockport, Indiana, from 1837 to 1850. From 1850 to 1870 she lived in New Orleans. In February last she removed with her family to Jefferson, Texas. Having been in bad health for some months, she left home with her husband for New Orleans, with the hope that the change might prove beneficial; but she grew rapidly worse, and expired on the steamboat on Red river. Sister Britton was for twenty years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in New Orleans, and for many years was under my pastoral care. She was a most exemplary Christian, devoted to the church, and a meek and loving disciple of Jesus. Many who knew her in the church and in the social walks of life will bear witness with me to the manner in which she adorned the doctrines of God, her Savior, by her uniform and consistent piety. Her religion was beautifully exhibited in the domestic circle, and made its hallowing and sanctifying influences felt in her relations as wife and mother. From the time of her conversion, in her thirteenth year, until her death she walked closely with God; and when the final hour came she was without fear and ready to depart. Her path was "like the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Her last moments were full of peace and assurance, and she died with a smile upon her face. Sister Britton was the mother of ten children. Her husband and three children survive her. To them her memory is as ointment poured forth, and her life and death point them to the Lamb of God and to the home of the blessed in heaven. LINUS PARKER.

DIED, at her residence in Summit, Mississippi, October 19, 1871, Mrs DELIA HAYNES, daughter of Robert and Eliza McCay, who was born in New Orleans, Louisiana, May 19, 1822, and was married, in Pike county, Mississippi, October 21, 1847, to Bythell Haynes, Esq., of Clinton, Louisiana.

Her early married life was spent in Clinton, where she enjoyed a great deal of happiness with her husband, who was known and esteemed as one of the best citizens of that place.

She became a member of the Methodist Church many years ago, and was a worthy exemplar of the religion of Jesus. She became religious not from the force of circumstances, but from a deep, settled, fixed principle; and the same motive urged her forward in every good word and work, encouraging all good Christians, and rejoicing in the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom under every name where the banner of Christ was unfurled. Her mental capacity was of a very high order. She loved to talk on the subject of religion and theology, and her good sense and well-informed mind made her conversation pleasant, instructive and edifying.

The long affliction that ended her pilgrimage wrought in her the fruits of holiness. When her body was tortured with racking pains, so that death at any time would have been a happy relief, the vigor of mind rose above this, and the patient, submissive spirit cried out, in the language of Job: "Though the Lord slay me, yet will I trust him." To a friend she was the truest of friends. To her aged mother, sisters and only daughter she was very precious. God hath taken her to rest. The weariness and tosses of life are ended. The better world has added to its society one whom we prized highly and loved dearly. The amiableness of her spirit and her strong confidence in God are an example worthy our imitation.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

Instructions for shipping should be full and explicit. A little care in this respect may prevent weeks of delay, for which we cannot be held responsible, when it results from haste or carelessness in the instructions.

In remitting, Agents who have accounts with the Book concern, as well as the ADVOCATE, should, in all cases, state to which account the amount remitted is to be applied.

THOMSON & Co.—Carriages.—These gentlemen's card appears elsewhere. Our friends from the country and others will find it to their interest to call on the above firm when they want anything in their line. We can recommend them as turning out good workmanship, and at the same time reasonable in their prices.

SMITH'S LIFE TONIC AND PULMONIC SIRUP. This new remedy is made from a vegetable product found in the Louisiana swamps, and is a sovereign balm for consumption, catarrh, bronchitis, etc. These gentlemen have a long list of names, all of which bear testimony as to its curing them of the different diseases specified in the advertisement, many of them old residents of this place. The large business that they have done, and are still continuing to do, compels them to enlarge their laboratory, which they are doing at a large expense. Messrs. Smith & Co. have opened branch offices in nearly all the large cities. We refer our readers to their advertisement.

MUNFEE'S PLOW.—Our young friend Mr. Kelly is the agent for this improved plow. It has given general satisfaction wherever used. We invite our patrons to call and see him when they want a good, durable and cheap plow.

THE "DOMESTIC"
IS THE "KING"
Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.
ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."
All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.
You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.
Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

SELF-EVIDENT FACTS.
THE CELEBRATED ARGYLE BITTERS, so long distinguished for their unrivaled efficacy as a Tonic, and for the purity of the articles used in their manufacture, are now offered for sale at reduced prices.
They combine all the elements of a first-rate family medicine—simplicity in manufacture, healthful and tonic ingredients, efficacy in action, and perfect safety in their use, for any age or condition.
Unlike all other Bitters, they do not increase the desire for alcoholic stimulants; but, by their peculiar action upon the digestive organs, serve rather to subdue the disposition for strong drinks, as can be testified to by thousands of our most respected professional and business men of every degree and condition.
They are Tonic, Alterative and Invigorating, and are a safe family medicine for either sex or for any age.

DEACON DODD.

Deacon Dodd once feelingly said
About his Betsy, long since dead,
"If ever an angel loved a man,
That angel, sir, was Betsy Ann;
If I happen'd to scold her, she was so meek,"
(Which the deacon did seven times a week!)
"She'd clap her apron up to her eye,
And never say nothin', but only cry."
But, ladies, p'haps you'd like to be told
That Deacon Dodd, like other men,
Waited a year, and married again;
But he married a most inveterate scold.
And now 'tis the deacon's turn to be meek,
As he gets well rasped from week to week;
But rather than "open his head" he'd burst—
He wishes the second was with the first!
But as she's as tough as a hickory limb,
No doubt she'll live to say of him,
"If ever a saint the footstool trod,
That man—that saint was Deacon Dodd."

FIRST THOUGHTS OF GOD.

When Helen was about five years old her mother left her one night, after putting her to bed, saying:

"Helen must be a good girl and go to sleep; God will take care of her."

Her mother had been talking to her about God, in a simple way, hoping to lead her to see him through his works, the beautiful things which he has made, as flowers and trees and birds.

Helen did not feel very sleepy; so she lay awake thinking how strange it was that God would take care of her, when she could not see him.

Then she talked in her childish way, as she looked toward the window, where she could see the moonlight and the stars, saying:

"God is very good to make a bright moon, that all his little children may have some light in the dark. God's little birds have had their supper, and have gone to sleep on God's trees. God will take care of them, and wake them up in the morning. God has a very large place to live in. The stars are very high. Pa couldn't reach them with a ladder; but God is higher. He won't let them fall down. I like God."

I relate this little incident that children may see the goodness of God in revealing himself as a friend and father, and in showing his character by the beautiful works of creation which we see around us; which are made to give us pleasure, as well as to teach us of him.

The youngest children can learn something of God, and they should thank him that he has given them minds capable of learning about him, and friends to teach them.

God had begun to teach Helen by his Spirit impressing on her mind the instructions of her parents, and by directing her attention to his works. This was not too small a work for the great God; for he tells us that he notices even the fall of a sparrow, and counts the hairs of our heads. This means that our smallest concerns are known to him, and that he is interested therein.

Helen recollects this incident, now that she is a woman. The next thing which she remembers of her ideas of God, and her relations to him, was when she had reached the age of eight years. She awoke one night when all was silent, and so dark that none of the objects in the room could be plainly seen. Soon these words of a hymn, which she had learned some time previous, came to her mind:

"Almighty God, thy piercing eye
Strikes through the shades of night,
And our most secret actions lie
All open in thy sight."

Helen thought of God as knowing all her thoughts and words and actions. Then a voice seemed to whisper within her bosom:

"Helen must be a good girl, kind and obedient and diligent, and grateful to God."

Then she felt that she had not been a good child, and she remembered many things she had done, unkind and angry words spoken, selfish acts, and still more naughty thoughts. Also she thought that many times she had not cared much about her prayers, and sometimes omitted them altogether. She thought of all this, and was afraid God did not love her.

She was conscious of sin, and thought of one in particular which she had kept concealed from her mother. But she consoled herself, saying she would think more of God, and try to become a better girl. Then she thought of many ways in which she could improve. Thus she quieted her conscience, and soon fell asleep.

Helen did not take the right course. The Holy Spirit had convinced her of sin, and was endeavoring to lead her to Jesus. Instead of trying to make herself better, she ought to have gone at once to him, confessing her sins, and asking him to make her truly sorry for them; also praying for his grace to help her to become a good child.

But her resolutions were made in her own strength. She had not been to Jesus, and therefore had no power to do right; for he alone can give this.

At last she went to Jesus, feeling that there was no goodness in herself, and that of herself she could never become better. So she asked him to forgive her sins, and to walk by her side, leading her by the hand, that she might do the things that please him. For this is just what he does to those who ask, although they cannot see him or feel his touch. He is there, close by their side, to help them in all they do, and he makes them feel his presence in their hearts.

Helen's prayer was heard, and after this, by looking unto Jesus, she found it easier to do right.

HAPPY FOR THREE PINS.

We once saw a little girl ask her mother for a piece of the moon. She thought that beautiful thing would make her happy. We knew how many would be pleased if they could get something not to be had.

We knew a little girl who told her papa if he would buy for her a little thing covered with gold beads she would be so happy. She promised, if she could only once own that glittering thing, she would never ask him for anything else. Her father was very kind, and, although he knew that it would only make her happy a very short time, yet he bought it.

That little girl's cup of pleasure was full. She was so delighted that everybody meeting her thought her face was like sunshine, because her heart so rejoiced. But a few of the gold beads dropped off. The charm was gone. Her source of pleasure was dried up. Not one week had passed before she thought her bright, beautiful present was good-for-nothing.

We were lately riding in a 'bus, and there was a neatly-dressed old lady who had on her lap a large bundle of newly-washed clothes. It was a windy, dusty day. Her newspaper wrapping but poorly covered her clean linen. She drew up one end, and the other was loose. She needed four, instead of two hands, to keep out the flying dust. We could wish she had a better covering. When we handed her three pins, it would have done your heart good to see how happy those simple pins made the old laundress. Had we presented her with $5 they could not have done the duty of the pins. Her regular employment for months—perhaps years—may have depended on the cleanliness of those pieces of linen. How little will make us happy, if we have a contented heart and never forget that we deserve so little.

The good old Christian who, in her deep poverty, invited a tract distributor to sit down at her red-pine table, made the visitor wonder. She had dry bread and turnip-tops for her frugal meal. Said the visitor: "Aunty, where is your salt." "My dear child," said the aged saint, "that would be too much for a poor sinner like me. I bless God for what he gives, and ask him for a thankful heart."

That humble meal had a happier guest than a thousand princely tables groaning with every kind of luxury. "How little we need to make us happy," said a fellow pilgrim to the writer, as he sat in a tomb in Africa, sharing the humble food prepared by an Arab. But to learn this lesson aright we must go where St. Paul went. "I HAVE LEARNED TO BE CONTENT."—Rev. W. H. Van Doren.

THE HALF-WAY PLACE.

"John," said the teacher, "have you found the beloved disciple's place, in Jesus' bosom? Are you with him today?"

John's eyes and glad smile said even more than his "I hope so."

"And Fred, how is it with you?"

"I guess, if there is any half-way place, I'm there," said Fred, who had been halting some time between Christ and the world.

"And how long do you mean to stay there?"

"I don't know. I can't get any further."

"Ah, you mistake. Where is the half-way place? Where would it have been to the prodigal, had he stopped there? Still a long way from home. No father in sight. No home near. No food. No clothes. No fatted calf. No golden ring. The feast not made. He never would have heard those precious words: 'My son was lost and is found.' He would still have been lost. Half way home would have been no better than the far country. But there is no half way place. Half a Christian is still a sinner. Half way to heaven is nowhere near the pearly gates. Half way to Christ is still on Satan's ground, for 'he that is not with me is against me.' Christ wants your whole heart or none. Do you like half-way friends?"

"No; I despise them."

"Do you suppose Christ wishes such friends? Do not stop any longer where you are. If the Lord be God, serve him; if Baal, follow him.

"The half-way place, if such there be, is Satan's favorite ground."—Sunday School Times.

A LITTLE PREACHER.—"I am going to preach the gospel, and tell the world of the coming of Jesus," said Willie.

"He will come before you know enough," said his brother.

"Then I'll be good, and show them what God likes us to be," said Willie humbly.

Yes, indeed, we can all do that. It is the best preaching in the world.

A TOUCHING REPLY.—A Chinese convert being asked, "Who is the children's friend?" replied: "Their parents are their friends, their teachers are their friends. God the Father is their friend, and the Holy Spirit too, but I think Jesus Christ is their best friend."—American Messenger.

INVINCIBLE.—Why did the Invincible Armada perish, despite the beauty of its vessels, and the long-tried experience of its mariners? Probably the very fact that it called itself invincible had some share in its defeat. God allows us the epithet only after the fact.

The Farm and Garden.

THE CATTLE DISEASE.

The great losses from the death of cattle in the West and Northwest induced General Capron, late Agricultural Commissioner, to appoint a commission of scientific and practical gentlemen to investigate and report upon the several diseases of cattle, supposed to be contagious, and from which such heavy losses had resulted.

The commission consisted of Dr. Gamgee, an eminent English veterinary physician, Mr. H. W. Ravenel, of Aikin, South Carolina, Colonel T. J. Billings and Surgeon Curtis, of the United States army.

Their report is lengthy, but interesting. A considerable portion of it is devoted to splenic or periodic fever in cattle. This is the disease to which cattle of higher latitudes are liable, when brought in contact with those recently driven from Southern and malarious regions.

Dr. Gamgee, after the largest observation upon Texan cattle driven to the Northwest, states that if Texan and Northern cattle are separated merely by a fence, disease is not communicated by the former to the latter; but that if Texan or other cattle from low latitudes graze upon a piece of land, and if Northern cattle soon after graze upon the same land, that the latter will be liable to the splenic fever, which is ordinarily fatal.

His conclusions on this very interesting subject may be thus summed up:

Southern cattle have a latent form of disease, caused by the soil and vegetation upon which they feed, and the water which they drink; that their systems are charged with poisonous principles which accumulate in the bodies of acclimated animals that enjoy an immunity; that Southern cattle may be driven so that they improve in condition, and yet, for some weeks, and probably not less than three months, they keep excreting the deleterious principles which poison the cattle of the States through which the herds are driven on their way North and West; that all cattle in Northern States, without regard to age or sex, if they feed on grass contaminated by Southern droves, are attacked by splenic fever; that the disease occurs mainly in the hot months, and never after the wild grasses have been killed by frosts; that heat and drought aggravate the disease; that it has no analogue or counterpart among human diseases, but is, however, developed under conditions which prevail where the so-called malaria injuriously affects the human health; and that it is an inourable disease, as we know of no antidote to the mysterious poison inducing it. The only prevention of this disease is driving the cattle very late during the fall or in the winter.—Practical Planter.

WHEN TO APPLY FERTILIZERS.

The best time to apply any kind of fertilizers is before the soil becomes utterly impoverished, before the crop suffers for the want of it, and the season of the year or particular time with reference to the crop or growth to be immediately affected by it, should be early enough to allow of the seasonable ripening of whatever is influenced by it. Plaster, ashes, lime, composted manure or uncomposted, guano or anything else of this kind, should be applied either the fall or winter preceding the season you expect its first benefit. When applied late, the growth is carried on out of season, at a time when the ripening process alone should be going on. Late manuring brings a train of disadvantages, for all know that it is far easier to keep up a plot of ground than to raise it when exhausted, and more profitable; and as to the part of the year when fertilizing should be attended to, there can be no doubt in the minds of thoughtful fruit-growers that if they expect their trees and vines to stand the cold of winter, come into fruit-bearing, healthy growth the best possible, the young shoots and canes must be ripe, hard, and the buds developed, and not soft, spongy, green and half matured, half developed. More depends upon the perfect ripening of grape vines for good manuring and bearing than many have been in the habit of thinking. Late manuring, late summer cultivating, over-manuring with coarse raw manure, too short pruning and over-cropping, are among the causes that produce this state of things.—Pleasant Valley Fruit and Wine Reporter.

AUTUMN AND WINTER GARDENING.

At this season the work will partly consist in preparing for winter. Cold frames should now be made and filled with well-rotted manure; good rich soil should be placed on top to the depth of from ten inches to a foot. These cold frames can be filled out with lettuce, radish, parsley and such small vegetables as are generally used in seasoning soups. This will be a great convenience in bad and cold weather, as all these little necessaries can be obtained without plowing and wading ankle deep in mud and water; and besides, they are indispensable. A moderate bottom heat, composed of oak leaves, stable manure and some cotton seed, will act well for forcing asparagus, if three year old roots are planted in boxes or small tubs, with well-enriched soil for them to grow in. They will pay very well for the labor bestowed on them. It is a delicate and refreshing vegetable, and recommended highly by physicians for persons recovering from sickness as nutritive and invigorating. In the cold frames the dwarf early-frame pea can be grown with success; dwarf snap beans and small quantities of potatoes will do fine in cold frames, and a sufficient quantity to supply the family table until those in the open ground are ready for use.—J. P. in Our Home Journal.

PAINTING HOUSES.—The best time for painting the exterior of buildings is late in autumn, or during the winter. Paint then applied will endure twice as long as when applied in early summer or in hot weather. In the former it dries slowly and becomes very hard, like a glazed surface, not easily affected afterward by the weather, or worn off by the beating storms. But in very hot weather the oil in the paint soaks into the wood at once, as into a sponge, leaving the lead nearly dry and nearly ready to crumble off. The last difficulty, however, might in a measure be guarded against, though at an increased expense, by first going over the surface with raw oil. By painting in cold weather, one annoyance might certainly be escaped: namely, the collection of small flies on the fresh paint.

IRISH POTATOES.

Irish potatoes may be planted now with as much certainty of success as at any period of the year. Planted now, they will come to maturity much earlier than if delayed till close of winter. Maturing, as they will, early in the season, the first crop can then be removed, and another planted immediately upon the same land. We may easily raise two crops of potatoes on the same ground in one season, even when the first planting is delayed till March. I have lately been shown some very fine "early rose" potatoes, the product of a second planting made in June.

Potatoes planted now will come up and be cut down several times during the winter by the frost. This makes little or no difference, however, as all below the ground will continue to grow—slowly, it may be, yet surely; and thus, when the mild weather of spring comes on, the plant has nothing to do but to put up its stem again and go right off to growing. Then, in a few weeks, you will have potatoes fit for the table. Try a few now, and report your success therewith.

Potatoes being one of the most productive, and, therefore, cheapest, are at the same time one of the most palatable and wholesome articles of food that a beneficent Providence has bestowed on fallen man. We cannot have too many of them; as they are good for man and beast, and in season all the year round. By all means, plant potatoes, and plant some now.—B. W. J. in Our Home Journal.

HANDLING HOGS.—A practical breeder gives the following advice, which in the main we think sound for those whose herd is not too large, and who are engaged in mixed husbandry: "To handle hogs to the best advantage, a pasture is needed of mixed grasses, clover, blue grass and timothy, and it is best if there is no running water or stock ponds in the lot. Hogs do better where there are no branches or stock ponds to wallow in. In place thereof, have good well water pumped for them. Have troughs made, and nail strips across, eight inches apart, to keep the hogs from lying down in the water, and let these hogs be put on floors, to keep them from digging up wallowing holes. If any feed be given it should be soaked in swill barrels for twelve hours before feeding—no longer—and feed to them as drink."—Germantown Telegraph.

THE SEX OF EGGS AND PLANTS.—A correspondent of the Ruralist gives the following rule for determining the sex of plants and eggs: "Now, permit me to say, I can instantly, on a general principle, determine the sex of eggs and other things. In walking through your garden please notice the acute-pointed buds and the obtuse ones on your cherry tree and other fruit, and when the season of efflorescence occurs, in every instance the obtuse form produces the flower, the others the leaf. So also with the strawberry vine: the roundish form of leaf is producing, and the pointed leaf non-producing; and so with the eggs: in every instance the roundish form produces the female, and the long eggs are invarinbly males."

GRAFTING POTATOES.—A novel experiment was tried by a neighbor of mine this season. He took an early Goodrich potato, cut out every eye and inserted in their place the eyes of the old-fashioned red potato. He made only one hill of the grafted potato, and he dug from that one hill sixteen and a half pounds of potatoes that were neither like one nor the other.—W. P. in Country Gentleman.

RYE sown in November or December often produces a good crop. Where the land is not prepared in season for wheat, it may be sown to rye with profit.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

BRUISED PEACH LEAVES are said to be a certain, easy and painless cure for warts; and also a sure agent for healing punctures of nails in the foot, either of man or beast.

TO REMOVE IRON RUST.—Dissolve half an ounce of oxalic acid in a bottle with cold, soft water; cork it and label plainly, "Poison," and it is always ready. On washing day dip the rusted spot in the solution, and hold it in a current of steam, such as will issue from the spout of a teakettle when the water within does not cover the base of the spout. Repeat, if necessary. Then wash.

A USEFUL PRECAUTION.—There is a very simple process by which muslins used for ladies' and children's dresses can be prevented from catching fire. Dissolve a small piece of alum in the water in which muslins are rinsed. When dry, if a light be put to them they will smoulder away slowly, but not break out into a blaze. And this, so far from being injurious to muslin, improves its appearance greatly.

PASTE THAT WILL KEEP A YEAR.—Dissolve a tablespoonful of alum in a quart of warm water. Add flour sufficient to give it the consistency of thick cream and stirred in smoothly; put in a thimbleful of powdered rosin and half a dozen cloves. Then pour into this a teaspnful of boiling water, stirring well all the time; let it remain over the fire till it is thick like mush, which will take but a few minutes. Put into an earthen dish, cover and set in a cold place. When needed for use soften a portion of it with warm water.

TIN CANS.—Every one knows the difficulty experienced in ordinary domestic economy of opening or unsealing the soldered tin vessels containing canned or preserved fruits, meats, etc. The suggestion has been made of using fusible cement, instead of the ordinary solder, which, while sufficiently tenacious at ordinary temperatures, will readily yield to the heat of boiling water poured on it. An additional advantage of this method would be that any one could fasten up a can filled with the substance to be preserved without the aid of a tinner or his soldering irons.

DAMP WALLS.—The following recipe has been recommended as a cure for damp walls: Remove the whole of the damp plaster down to the surface of brick or stone walls, rake out the joints, clean and well wet the surface; lay on a coat of good hydraulic cement, mixed with one-sixth sand; be careful to cover every part of the brick or stone, and broom or otherwise roughen the surface of the cement while soft; let this stand a few days to get a hard skin on it, then replaster in the usual way. It will not do well to finish the inside surface with hydraulic cement, as condensations will take place on the surface in damp weather. If speed in execution be desired, the surface may be finished with plaster of Paris, or hard finish.

MISCELLANEOUS.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do,

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

CERTAIN colored rays of light are particularly favorable to the development in organic infusion of infusorial life, while other rays are more favorable for the production of microscopic forms of vegetable life. Thus, W. Pouchet says, white light is the best fitted for obtaining the former result, after which comes the red ray, then the violet, the blue, and finally the green ray. On the contrary, for the development of vegetable "proto-organisms," the green ray is the best fitted; next to this the blue and violet rays; and lastly the white light; the red ray hindering the development of these organisms.

ABOUT ICE.—Besides the fact that ice is lighter than water, there is another curious thing about it which persons do not know perhaps—namely, its purity. A lump of ice melted will always become purely distilled water. When the early navigators of the Arctic seas got out of water, they melted fragments of those vast mountains of ice called icebergs, and were astonished to find that they yielded only fresh water. They thought that they were frozen salt water, not knowing that they were formed on the land, and in some way launched into the sea. The fact is, the water, in freezing, turns out of it all that is not water—salt, air, coloring matter, and all impurities. Frozen sea water makes fresh-water ice. If you freeze a basin of indigo water, it will make it as pure as that made of pure rain water. When the cold is very sudden, those foreign matters have no time to escape, either by raising or sinking, and are thus entangled with the ice, but do not form any part of it.

THE FALL of a meteorite last May in Maine has drawn fresh attention to the subject of meteorites, which has been discussed in a recent number of the Bowdoin Scientific Review. It has been calculated that the number of these bodies which pass through our atmosphere in twenty-four hours, and would be seen by the naked eye if it were dark enough, is not less than seven and a half millions; and that at least four hundred millions would be visible by the assistance of the telescope. On many nights the number of these has been so great that they might be compared to snow-flakes falling through the air. On the twelfth of November, 1833, during the space of three hours not less than two hundred and forty thousand were seen from one point of observation.

"These bodies are undoubtedly, for the most part, very small, though sometimes weighing several hundred pounds; and they possess a proper motion about the sun, precisely as do the planets. The planes of their orbits cutting that of the earth's, they are liable, of course, as a consequence, to be drawn to the earth by its superior attraction whenever a near approach occurs; or they may possess sufficient velocity to enable them to pursue a modified but uninterrupted course through the upper regions of its atmosphere. In either case it is easy to see that the resistance and friction arising from their enormous velocity must result in raising their temperature to a glowing heat, or in dissipating them in vapor; whence the light and luminous trains which they so frequently leave. The actual fall of meteorites, when observed, is generally accompanied with loud explosive reports. These find their explanation in the obvious fact that the air must be very greatly compressed in front of them by their rapid flight; and, in rushing past them laterally, it quickly falls in and fills the more or less complete vacuum formed in their rear, thus producing the series of reports, like musketry or artillery fired in rapid succession. The reason why so few reach the earth is found in the fact that, for the most part, they do not exceed a few grains in weight, and hence become entirely dissipated in vapor before reaching us; or in the fact that their velocity and direction enable them to escape the earth's atmosphere before this result is reached. The bodies which compose the November shower are, for the most part, exceedingly small—very few weighing more than a pound, and most of them only a few grains. It is calculated that they begin to burn at a height of seventy-four miles, and are burnt up and disappear at a height of fifty-four miles. Their visible paths are about forty-two miles in length. Those which are of a sporadic character may be distinguished from those which have a close relation to each other by attending to their frequency, which is much less, and to their directions. Those which constitute the so-called showers occurring in August and November have been found to be revolving about the sun, in either case in elliptical orbits. The November ones have their aphelion just beyond the orbit of Uranus, and their perihelion on that of the earth; and the plane of their orbit is inclined to that of the earth about seventeen degrees. The points in the heavens whence these and other meteoric showers seem to proceed are called radiant points. Upward of fifty such points have been observed, thus suggesting that there may be upward of fifty rings of these bodies in constant motion about the sun. Chemical analysis has shown the presence of oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, sulphur, phosphorus, carbon, silicon, iron, nickel, chrominm, tin, aluminium, magnesium, calcium, potassium, sodium, cobalt, manganese, copper, titanium, lead, lithium and strontium. Careful microscopic study has shown that the matter of which meteorites are composed was at one time in a state of fusion; and that proximately they are made up of small rounded globules, which have accumulated and been more or less fractured by mutual impact, and finally consolidated by the heat produced by their flight through resisting media."

"AND SO ye have taken the teetotal pledge, have ye?" asked one Irishman of another. "Indade I have, and am not ashamed of it aither." "And did not Paul tell Timothy to take a little wine for his stomach?" "So he did; but my name is not Timothy, and there is nothing the matter with my stomach!"

"MOTHER," said a little girl who was engaged in making her doll an apron, "I believe I will be a duchess when I grow up." "How do you ever expect to become a duchess, my daughter?" her mother asked. "Why, by marrying a Dutchman, to be sure," replied the girl.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of Text-School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in the most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

We mentioned in our last issue that the State Fair having attracted a large number of visitors from the country, the general market had presented an appearance of more animation. Sugar was in good request on Saturday, but has since been unsettled by more liberal receipts, closing on Tuesday with more steadiness at about previous rates. Molasses has been still more unfavorably affected by the pressure of the supply on the demand, and on Monday gave way 5c. ₱ gallon, but on Tuesday showed more firmness. We have no quotable variation to report in flour. Corn has been in light supply and fair demand, and prime white has commanded fuller prices. The demand for pork has improved, and prices have advanced 25c. ₱ bbl. Bacon also has exhibited more steadiness, especially on Tuesday, when it closed with increased firmness.

The river is 13 feet 9 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-fourth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	19,072
Lake.....	27
Arkansas.....	3,724
Mobile.....	2,657
Texas.....	88
Total.....	25,568

On Saturday, under favorable telegrams from Liverpool, factors raised their pretensions ¼c., which checked the movement, but a moderate business was done during the morning at an irregular improvement of ⅛@¼c. Later in the day, buyers refusing to go on at the full advance claimed, factors were compelled to meet the demand more freely. The sales, nevertheless, did not exceed 3,800 bales, and the closing quotations showed an improvement of barely ¼c. On Monday, the telegrams from Liverpool being again encouraging, factors were more stringent in their pretensions, and the sales during the morning were at full prices, but later in the day the advantage was on the side of the buyers, and at the close the previous improvement had been nearly lost. Being enabled, however, to operate at easier prices, the movement was more animated, and the business embraced 6,900 bales. On Tuesday the demand fell off, and there being but little competition among buyers, and a more ample supply, factors were compelled to give way ⅛@¼c. in low middling and the better grades, and ¼c. in the lower. Prices at the same time exhibited considerable irregularity, some transactions in low middling and middling showing a decline of fully ¼c.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 219,460 bales, against 279,966 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 149,651 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 36,886 to France, and a decrease of 108,439 to Great Britain, and of 38,098 to other foreign ports.

SUGAR.—The crop is coming in more freely, and liberal receipts have unsettled the market. Buyers hold off, hence prices have ruled lower. On Saturday most of the receipts were disposed of, but on Monday the supplies were only partially sold, and prices ruled at 5@6½c. for inferior, 6¾@7c. for common, 7¼@7½c. for good common, 7¾@8c. for fair, 8¼@8½c. for good fair, 8¾@9¼c. for fully fair, 9½@10c. for prime, 7½@9½c. for seconds, 9¼c. for centrifugal, 10@11½c. for yellow clarified, and 10¾@12c. for white.

MOLASSES.—The receipts have been liberal, and prices have declined fully 5c. ₱ gallon. On Tuesday some 2,300 bbls. were received, and the supplies were mostly sold at 20@25c. for inferior and fermenting, 30@37½c. for common, 40@43c. for prime, 44@45c. for strictly prime, and 47@48c. for choice.

PORK.—There has been quite a good demand for small lots, with very little offering. Holders have been asking $14.50@$14.75 ₱ bbl. On Tuesday the supply was light; there was a good inquiry and prices were higher. 80 bbls. mess sold, in three lots, at $14.50 ₱ bbl. Subsequently offers of $14.50 were refused, and $14.75 asked. It is retailing at $14.75@$15.25.

BACON.—The market has ruled in favor of buyers, and only fresh lots have been in demand. On Tuesday there was a fair demand, especially for fresh lots. There was not much offering, however, and prices were decidedly firmer. 8 casks clear rib sides sold at 7¾c., and 12 do. clear sides at 7¾c. ₱ lb. Subsequently offers of 7¾c. were refused for clear sides, and 8c. asked.

HAMS.—There is little or no demand for them, and prices are nominal. Choice sugar-cured hams are offering at 14@16c. ₱ lb., as in brand. They are retailing at 16½c.

DRY SALT MEAT is dull and depressed, with a good supply on hand.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request, and opened on Tuesday at 110⅞@111⅛, (against 110⅞ at New York,) and closed at 111@111¼, (against 110⅞ at New York.)

American half-dollars are quoted at 108½@109½, and Mexican dollars nominal.

In bonds we notice sales of $6,000 Jackson Railroad first mortgage on Saturday at 89½, and $10,000 City seven per cents at 66; and $1,200 City ten per cents on Monday at 86.

AGENTS WANTED
To sell the only Complete Unabridged People's Edition of
DR. WILLIAM SMITH'S
Bible Dictionary.

It contains over 1,000 closely printed, double-column octavo pages, and is illustrated with over 200 engravings, and a series of fine, authentic maps.

This DICTIONARY embodies the results of the most recent study and research of over sixty of the most eminent Biblical scholars in the world. Clergymen of all denominations regard it as the best work of the kind ever published, and one which ought to be in the hands of every Bible reader.

It is a great library in itself. The labor and learning of centuries are gathered in this one volume, to throw a clear, strong light upon every page of the inspired word. Agents are meeting with unprecedented success. One reports 55 orders taken the first three days of his canvass; another 76 in two days; another 212 in ten days; another 29 Dictionaries and 28 of our large Family Bibles in two half days; another sold 27 Dictionaries and 24 Bibles in one day.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT.

The King of Mineral Springs is the German Seltzer; and
Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient is its duplicate. Letters attesting its wonderful Tonic Aperient and anti-Bilious qualities swarm in from every source. The question has been settled whether artificially mineralized waters may not be equal to those which burst sparkling from the earth itself. They can; and the Seltzer Aperient, when undoubtedly pure and genuine, proves the fact. Be cautious. Accept none other.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!
THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. The Christian Advocate.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1871. NO. 47.

of supporting it was enforced. Its circulation was increasing, but was not sufficient to employ an editor exclusively, and the duties of that department had been discharged, at the expense of greatly increased labor, by the presiding elder of the district. The recommendation that the Committee on Publication be reorganized, its members to be taken from different parts of the Conference, was adopted.

Dr. Linus Parker, the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, made some remarks about the condition and claims of that paper. It was doing something, and ought by all means to be sustained, occupying, as it did, the position of a breakwater against the tide of Catholicism.

Third Day.

MONDAY, December 4.

The Conference met at the stated hour. The religious exercises were conducted by W. H. Ellison.

Ninth Question—What traveling preachers are ordained deacons? The Bishop reported the following ordinations yesterday: A. Stacy Douglas, Clarence J. Nugent, I. Z. T. Morris, Charles B. Dubose, J. S. Williams and T. O. Summers, Jr.

Thirteenth Question—What traveling preachers are ordained elders? William M. Winn and H. M. Gillis.

Fifteenth Question—What local preachers are ordained elders? Nohal A. Moore, S. A. Jones and Philemon O. Harper.

M. S. Andrews offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the District Conference shall be composed of all the traveling and local preachers of the district, and of six delegates from each pastoral charge, to be elected by the Quarterly Conference.

The Bishop read the following decisions on questions proposed earlier in the session:

First question, arising from application for restoration of the credentials of Junius Jordan, whether this Conference can entertain the request when the deposed preacher was not licensed de novo before the Quarterly Conference recommended restoration of credentials. Answer: The action of the Quarterly Conference was irregular, and resolutions asking restoration of credentials cannot be entertained. Deposed preacher should have been recommended by the society or leaders' meeting, and licensed by the Quarterly Conference a preacher, in order to bring him properly under the provisions of the law for the restoration of credentials.

Second question, whether a superannuated preacher is a member of a Quarterly Conference, and, if so, of what Quarterly Conference? Answer: He is not a member of any Quarterly Conference.

The Bishop appointed W. A. McCarty in place of T. O. Summers, Sr., on the committee raised on Saturday to confer with other Conferences on the University.

T. F. Mangam, from the Committee on Books and Periodicals, nominated the following as the Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: W. A. McCarty, A. W. Lampkin and E. Wadsworth. The report was adopted.

The nomination of the following trustees of the Southern University was confirmed: Rev. A. Hunter, Rev. A. R. Winfield and W. C. Hearn, of Little Rock Conference.

In answer to the twenty-first, twenty-second, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth questions, the statistical secretary made his report.

On motion the Bishop appointed S. A. Pilley to Lowndesboro Female Institute; also E. D. Pitts to Opelika High School.

On motion J. E. Foust was appointed on the Committee on Second Year's Course of Study, in place of J. B. Cottrell, transferred to North Mississippi Conference.

Rev. R. J. Harp, of the New Orleans Depository and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, addressed the Conference on the interests of that establishment.

Eighteenth Question—Who are superannuated? John A. Spence.

Twenty-seventh Question—What amount is necessary for the superannuated preachers, widows and orphans? Answer—$8,000.

Twenty-eighth Question—What amount has been collected on the foregoing account, and how has it been applied? Answer—$5,407.70.

The following were elected members of the Legal Conference: J. Hamilton, A. H. Mitchell, D. M. Hudson, P. G. Wood and M. S. Andrews.

The Board of Finance recommended the passage of the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this Board of Finance it is improper that any part of the Conference collection be paid to the claimants thereon before the ensuing Conference.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

CHICAGO, Nov. 29.—The Mississippi river is entirely closed above the bridge at Dubuque.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—The government will hereafter, and until a better condition of things shall exist in the Island of Cuba, keep a strong naval armament in Cuban waters. While this will have no hostile significance, it is designed to be an intimation to Spain that if that power is so weak as to be unable to secure peace and good order on that island in case of insurrection or other grave public disturbance, this fleet will be used in such case for the protection of American interests on that island, if needs be, to the full extent of the power of the government.

A special dispatch from Havana reports that the government refused to deliver the bodies of the executed students to their parents. The students sentenced to the chain gang have been working in the streets with criminals since yesterday. The father of one of the executed students has died from grief, and the mothers of two others have become insane.

NEW YORK, Dec. 1.—The reading of the Lord's prayer at Hunter's Point school was interrupted to-day. The principal called the police, when many children left. Subsequently several were expelled—one that threw filth at the principal was taken to the stationhouse. No pupil hereafter will be admitted unless known to be willing to obey the rules.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—The Senate will hold a caucus on Monday morning upon the election of new officers.

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 2.—Lieutenant Governor Powers has been inaugurated Governor, and Governor Alcorn has gone to Washington.

C. K. Marshall will deliver the annual address at the State Fair, which opens next Thursday.

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—The purser of the steamer Ville de Paris has been detected in smuggling.

The Russian fleet leaves for New Orleans at an early day, where it will await the conclusion of the grand duke's tour, thence it will proceed to China.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—Mr. Revos, a resident of Flushing, who arrived yesterday from Havana, stated that he went to Cuba on business. While there he was arrested by Spanish agents and was given three days to quit the island on pain of death. He showed papers proving himself an American citizen, and appealed to the American consul for protection, but the latter advised him to leave as soon as possible. Revos departed by the next steamer without transacting his business.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 3.—The death report shows two hundred and thirty-three deaths from smallpox for the week, an increase of eighty over last week. The number of new cases is three hundred less than last week.

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 3.—The grand jury found thirty-five indictments for the Chinese massacre and severely censure the municipal authorities.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 4.—A grand ball was given to the Grand Duke Alexis to-night at the Academy of Music.

OMAHA, Dec. 4.—The snow in Republican valley is two feet deep, and many persons have been frozen to death. A party of seven men were frozen to death. The train arrived twenty-four hours behind time. No new trains to start.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—A letter from Havana says: The only desecration of Castanon's grave consisted in breaking the glass case covering a niche, and removing immortales and substituting wreaths of garlic.

For this eight students were shot, eleven sentenced to six years in the chain gang, nineteen to four years in the chain gang, and four to six months' imprisonment.

The students asserted that their action was more a frolic than anything else, but the volunteers ruled the hour; they raided the streets all day, shooting eight Cubans.

The condemned students were not allowed an hour's respite to see their friends. Those executed were mere boys. Their parents offered large sums to save them, the father of one offering $1,000,000, but all in vain. Captain General Valmaseda was absent at the time, but fully sanctioned the executions upon his return.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Both houses organized. M. Dawes, chairman Committee of Ways and Means; Mr. Garfield, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; Mr. Pollard, chairman of the Committee on Insurrectionary States.

The President's message was not received at ten o'clock, when a recess of half an hour was taken.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—There is heavy ice in the Potomac and navigation to Acquia creek difficult.

The removal of the whites from the Osage reservations has been ordered. They consist of six hundred families, or three thousand five hundred persons. Their removal at this season of the year will cause much suffering.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, Nov. 29.—The government to-day received a dispatch from Havana announcing the execution in that city yesterday of eight medical students. The news created a profound sensation in Madrid, and the ministry was immediately convened for the purpose of considering what action should be taken in the matter. The departure of the mail steamer, which was to have sailed to-day from Cadiz for Cuba, was postponed twenty-four hours.

BERLIN, Nov. 29.—The press throughout the country comments with indignation on the frequent assassinations of German soldiers in the occupied districts of France, and the almost total immunity of the perpetrators from punishment, and demands of the military authorities energetic and efficient action to put a stop to such outrages.

ROME, Nov. 29.—The Pope protests against all idea of compromising with the rulers of Italy.

PARIS, Nov. 30.—Cremieux, the Communist, was executed yesterday at Marseilles. He died courageously. His last words were: "Vive la Republique!"

LONDON, Nov. 30.—The Prince of Wales is quiet to-day, though there is no further abatement of the fever. The symptoms of the past two days are unchanged.

MADRID, Nov. 30.—It is reported that the government has resolved to send thirty thousand reinforcements to Cuba, and to remove Count Valmaseda.

LONDON, Dec. 1.—Lord Chesterfield contracted the disease which caused his death at the same time and place with the Prince of Wales.

PARIS, Dec. 1.—President Thiers, in his message to the National Assembly on the reopening session, refers to the treaty between France and Germany, the commercial convention with England, military law and the general reorganization of the administration, but offers no suggestions as to constitutional changes, and makes no allusion whatever to political subjects.

CALCUTTA, Dec. 1.—The explosion of a powder mill and cartridge factory at Fort Agra killed thirty-six, including two commissioned officers.

BOMBAY, Dec. 1.—The cholera is raging with great mortality in the city of Delhi.

BERLIN, Dec. 2.—The settlement of the difficulty with Brazil is still pending. The German Gazette gives account of a brutal attack on some officers and sailors of a German frigate on the streets of Rio Janeiro. It declares that it was made in accordance with a prearranged plan, instigated by French residents and connived at by the local police. The Gazette declares that nothing less than an apology from the Brazilian authorities and indemnification of the parties injured will be satisfactory to the German government.

MADRID, Dec. 2.—King Amadeus was present at yesterday's cabinet meeting. He showed deep concern for the condition of the Cuban people, and expressed a desire to proceed to Havana himself and direct measures for pacification.

It is rumored that Great Britain and the United States threaten immediate intervention in the affairs of Cuba.

The cabinet held a protracted session yesterday. The King was in consultation with the ministers up to a late hour.

BERLIN, Dec. 4.—In consequence of the frequent murderous assaults made upon the Germans in the French provinces occupied by Germany, said provinces are declared to be in a state of siege, and the perpetrators of such assaults will hereafter be tried by German court martial.

LONDON, Dec. 4.—The condition of the Prince of Wales is unchanged; there is no abatement of the fever, though the symptoms continue favorable.

The crisis will be reached this morning, which if safely passed, the patient will be considered out of danger. The Queen continues at the prince's bedside.

The fire at Warwick Castle last night did irreparable damage to the great hall, the dining and other rooms being also gutted. The destruction of ancient armors, pictures and curiosities was very great.

PARIS, Dec. 5.—The National Assembly effected an organization today by re-electing President Grevy and vice presidents of last, as legally elected representatives of the people.

The status of the Orleans princes promises to be one of the leading questions before the Assembly.

Bills restoring to them confiscated estates and all their rights as citizens of France, are preparing, and will be introduced at an early day.

It is anticipated that the measure will give rise to long and exciting debates. The extreme left wing will meet them for proposals for general amnesty, which, setting free the thousands of Communists still held prisoners in Hulks and elsewhere, will be considered an equitable compliment act of justice proposed to the House of Orleans.

Jottings to and from the North Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: After saying good-by to you at Mobile, I stepped into one of the Mobile and Ohio railroad cars, and found, to my delight, Dr. A. S. Andrews, of Mobile, and Rev. A. P. Sernggs, of St. Louis, en route for Columbus. Although it was one of winter's most cheerless nights, we were pleasantly transported to Columbus, Mississippi, by ten A. M. the following day. I found the North Mississippi Conference to be as intelligent and refined a body of Christian men as it has ever been my good fortune to meet with. I found Columbus to be a most beautiful city, with broad avenues and fine churches, splendid mansions, and intelligent, hospitable citizens. I met several of my friends and brethren of other Conferences, who are still in the great itinerant field working for the glory of God. I heard a good sermon by our brother, Rev. A. B. Ely, on Friday evening. I met with much encouragement from the brethren for Centenary College. The Conference passed resolutions recommending it to the patronage of the people within its bounds. Several brethren kindly promised to spend from one to three days in raising money for the college immediately on their return to their field of labor. I look for material help from this effort. We are also promised some students by the brethren.

Bro. R. J. Jones kindly furnished me a statement of what had been done by the Conference up to Saturday evening, which will be found at the close of this. On Saturday evening, at half-past seven o'clock, in company with Bro. Harp, I started for Mobile. Another snowy winter's night, but we were very comfortably transported in one of those elegant Pulman palace cars through the night. On awaking we found ourselves nearing Mobile, at which place we arrived in time to hear that most excellent gospel sermon, delivered to that large, attentive congregation in the St. Francis Street church, by Bishop Pierce, at eleven A. M. Would that we had more such preachers and preaching. At half-past one o'clock P. M., with Bro. S. Schroeder, I found myself moving down toward the gulf. While passing out through Grant's Pass, I saw on a little hillock of sand, in the sea, a large sign, and on nearing it, behold, it was: "Get your shirts at Moody's." I thought, what enterprise! And yet, sir, although your paper is read by thousands of the best people of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, still he does not advertise in it. Night came on with the blackness of darkness; and then the winds sang, and the waves rocked us to sleep until morning.

B. F. WHITE.

DECEMBER 4, 1871.

The North Mississippi Conference met at the Methodist church, in Columbus, November 29, 1871.

Bishop Kavanaugh was present to preside. John Barcroft was elected secretary, R. J. Jones assistant secretary, B. B. Brown statistical secretary, and James Fort railroad secretary.

Quite a large number of ministers and lay members were present on the first day.

Dr. Summers and Dr. Green, from Nashville, S. P. Whitten, Bible agent, Dr. Andrews, president of Southern University, B. F. White, agent of Centenary College, R. J. Harp, Book Depository, New Orleans, W. C. Johnson, of Western Methodist, and others, were present; also Dr. Scruggs, of St. Louis.

Antony T. Scruggs, James F. Cunnyngham, Robert P. Mitchell, James L. Hening, Benjamin D. Brown, William B. Mitchell, Enos B. Forest, Felix G. Hocutt, John M. Lawrance, David O. Hughes and Zacharia Baize were admitted on trial.

Dr. Green brought the proposed Central University before the Conference, and T. Y. Ramsey, Philip Tuggle and A. B. Ely, clerical, and L. C. Garland, W. H. Kirkpatrick and H. W. Foote, lay members, were appointed to confer on this subject with committees from other Conferences.

It is believed there has been a large increase in members. The financial condition of the Conference is encouraging. The statistics have not been reported in full, and we cannot report them.

Three members have died during the year—C. B. Harris, A. J. See and J. I. E. Byrd.

The business of the Conference is progressing satisfactorily, and the Conference will adjourn probably by Tuesday evening.

Ministerial Educational Fund; Mississippi Conference.

The subscribers to the Ministerial Educational Society of the Mississippi Conference will please send up their first installment to the next session of said Conference, to be held at Meridian on the thirteenth of December. If you will pay this installment punctually, it will help the association to begin in earnest in the efforts to assist in the biblical and literary education of the young men who feel called to preach, but feel the need of more knowledge. Let me earnestly urge you to meet your promise.

THOS. REED, President.

FAYETTE, Nov. 23, 1871.

BISHOP KEENER reached home on Friday, December 1, spending a day at the Alabama Conference in Mobile on his way, where he was welcomed by his old friends, and where he delighted the brethren with his society and the account he gave of California. We regret to learn that the Bishop has suffered severely from the inclement weather, and perhaps also from overwork, and that he has been pretty much confined to his room since his return.

THE agent of Homer College, Rev. T. J. Upton, is in the city, and looking as if his work agreed with him finely. He informs us that Homer College is under way with improved prospects. We bespeak for Homer the generous aid of our people in New Orleans and throughout the State.

REV. DR. E. WADSWORTH, of the Alabama Conference, we are glad to know, is spending a few days in our city. He will remain until some time next week. His Conference did a good thing in placing him on the Publishing Committee of the ADVOCATE.

IS THERE ANY MOTHER HERE?—A little girl once followed the workmen from her father's grounds, when they went home to their dinner, because she was very fond of a kind old man, who was one of them. When he looked from his door he saw her sitting on a log, waiting for him, and invited her to go into the cottage. She looked in, saw the strange faces around the table, and hesitated. When he urged her, she raised her sweet little face and inquired:

"Is there any mother in there?"

"Yes, my dear, there is a mother in here," he answered.

"Oh! then I'll go in; for I'm not afraid if there's a mother there."

Her child's experience had told her she could place confidence in a mother's sympathies. A home may be small and mean, but if it is the shrine of a mother's love, it is a happier place than a palace would be without this blessed presence.

For the Advocate.

I LONG TO BE GONE.

So slowly! oh so slowly!
The wearisome days pass on;
Of the heavenly land I'm dreaming,
And I long, oh I long to be gone!

Yet not for the fadeless roses
That border each soft flowing stream,
Nor yet for the crystal waters
That mirror each golden gleam.

Oh! not for its mansions of beauty,
Adorned with gems precious and rare,
And not for its groves of verdure,
Nor the fountains that sparkle there.

'Tis not for its heavenly fruitage,
On trees perennial grown,
Nor yet for its glorious city,
That I long, I long to be gone.

But to mingle again with the loved ones
Who dwell on that beautiful shore,
And sing in the sweet tones of angels
The praise of the Lamb evermore.

There's a dark-rolling flood to buffet
Ere the toil and the struggle are done;
But my heart's dearest treasures have passed it,
And I long, oh I long to be gone!

WEST FELICIANA, 1871. A. O. W.

A CALL TO THE MINISTRY.

MR. EDITOR: Preaching is an institution almost as old as the race of man. Noah was a "preacher of righteousness." God has in all ages of the church made his ministers the great center of action. So far as human agency is involved in the work of salvation, he has in all ages, by special appointment, kept a living ministry in the church. The manner of calling men to preach seems to have been a matter directly between the Spirit of God and the parties called. The Jewish priesthood, although of direct divine appointment, were not in spirit elevated to the same standpoint with the prophets, apostles and many preachers of more modern times. The higher spiritual life of the church has always been directed by a few men specially called of God. Apart from the ministry usually manufactured by the church the vital question is, does a man know that he is to preach? We answer, a man know that he is Is not the existence of the main and only positive or proof that he is regenerated, does not all probable evidence grow out of the fact itself? But is it not probable that a man may be regenerated and not know it? If so, can any one else know it for him? What sort of a salvation is that which a man can have and not know it? What sort of a call to the ministry is that which the man himself cannot know? Could he feel much conviction or suffer much remorse for refusing to obey such a call? All such calls to the ministry had better be prayed over until further developed or abandoned.

The Bible is plain on all subjects that pertain to the kingdom of God. From Moses to Paul there is not a single instance where a doubt was left upon the mind of prophet or apostle on this subject. There is not an instance in which the soul of the preacher in his call was not stirred to its very foundations. Every genuine minister of Christ must, in the very nature of the case, have a special baptism, by which his soul is separated from the world and the love of it, and brought into the knowledge and fellowship of the sufferings of the Lord Jesus. They are actually separated from the world, by the power of God, in a higher sense than other Christian men are. They have promises, of a special nature, of support and protection peculiar to their calling. The Savior took his apostles into a closer union than his other followers. He prayed for them specially.

You never hear of complaints of suffering, poverty or sacrifice from a preacher who is really called of God. Until by apostasy his call ceases to influence his convictions, cross-bearing, poverty and persecution are all a part of the life of a true minister; and no man is in a state of mind and heart suited to preach the gospel who would not give all he has for the privilege to preach. There is a false impression that prevails in the church, and in some instances among the preachers themselves, that if a man who has been converted thinks he can do more for the cause of Christ by preaching than by acting as a private member of the church, he may preach without doing any violence to the laws of religion. The Gadarene was anxious to follow Jesus; but he forbade him, and commanded him to go home and show what Christ had done for him. Many of the Protestant churches have long opposed what they regard as too high a claim for the ministry, as set up by some of the churches. The result of their teaching is that in many minds, even of good Christians, the reverence and proper fear which all Christians should have for the embassadors of Christ is lost. This induces the world to place rather a low estimate upon ministers generally. The effect upon the man himself who attempts to preach unbidden of God is anything but favorable to either his growth in grace or his confidence in the power of the gospel. He soon becomes dissatisfied with his position, doubts the use of revivals in the church, and becomes infidel on the subject of instantaneous conversions under preaching. In a word, such a preacher is anything else but a happy man. He cannot feel the providence of God close to him in the support of himself or family. He never can feel that the life of a preacher is one of great dignity and honor. A man uncalled of God may preach the truth; but the truth cannot save, any more than an engine can move itself, much less to carry the train of loaded cars. It is the fire in the engine that gives the power. It is God in the truth which convicts and saves the soul. Why is it that so many educated, talented men preach from year to year without fruit? They are popular; but who is saved by their ministry? Can a man be really called of God to preach the gospel, and no one under his preaching believe to the saving of the soul? While the church is inviting and doing more than formerly to prepare men to preach, would she not do well to look a little more carefully into the subject of a divine call?

S. P. RICHARDSON.

[illegible], ALA., Nov. 20, 1871.

[illegible] Compared to the Grass and [illegible] of the Field.

[illegible] likeness between the [illegible], and the grass [illegible] because both are the [illegible] of God. When we take [illegible] in our hands we immediately perceive a delicacy of structure and a richness of coloring which no human skill can possibly equal. If we were to view it through a magnifying glass we should behold new beauties at every survey. It is the work of God, and the meanest flower has its name painted on every leaf, and shining in every blossom. You may sometimes see elegant imitations of flowers or of grass; but how mean and inferior do they appear when compared with the ornaments of the garden or the attire of the meadows! They may seem beautiful at a distance, but the more closely they are inspected the more evident and glaring are their defects. If all the philosophers in the world were to combine their uttermost art and skill they could not make a blade of grass or form a simple daisy. The God who has clothed the fields in their verdant robes, and decorated them with their variegated flowers, is likewise our Creator; and if we examine ourselves we shall see great reason to admire his skill and praise his goodness. The beautiful structure of the body, the suitableness of its members to their several functions, and the connection of matter with spirit, may lead each of us to exclaim: "I am fearfully and wonderfully made; marvelous are thy works; and that my soul knoweth right well!" And not only has God created, but he has continually preserved this complicated machine in all its varied movements. The throbbing of the heart and the heaving of the lungs, the activity of the limbs and the sensibility of the nerves, with all their operations, grand or minute, are governed by divine wisdom and goodness. He who causes the juices to circulate through the plant diffuses the blood through our frames; he who forms the branches of the tree has made our limbs; and he who paints the hues of the flower has depicted the beauties of the human countenance. But when we consider that grand display of divine workmanship—the immortal soul—here resemblance ceases. This is the only perennial flower—a flower worthy the creation of an infinite Being, and formed for an unbounded eternity. There is a decided resemblance between us and the grass and flowers, because both are exposed to similar dangers. The flower is exposed to many dangers. Just as it springs from the ground insects may devour it; it may be trodden under feet or the [illegible] may destroy it. Children of the tenderest age are liable to [illegible] the fairest number of them are cut off in infancy. Even if the flower be permitted to continue some [illegible] days and to display promising buds or opening blossoms, the sun may wither it; and while it excites universal admiration by its beauty and perfume, "the wind passeth over it, and it is gone; and the place thereof shall know it no more." How often is this the case with the young! While we are blooming in youth, and are the delight of our parents, the admiration of our friends and the hope of our teachers, we may hear the blast approaching, laden with sickness and death; we may droop and we may die. How important it is to prepare to meet our God in early youth!

MAGGIE.

Castor Circuit, Louisiana Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Last Sunday night we closed a series of meetings, the most interesting and profitable to the church that we have witnessed for years. At all my appointments, six in number—we have been blessed with a gracious revival. Some of the very best material in the land have been added to the church. Many of the most prominent men in the land—men who have for years resisted every means of grace—have at last been compelled to cry out: "What must we do to be saved?" One can hardly realize the improvement that has taken place in this section of the country in twelve months; no [illegible] change has been merely of a temporal character, but the heart has been taken up. Prayer and class meetings are frequent and well attended. Scores of reformed drunkards [illegible] where formerly [illegible] jewelry and dancing were practiced. Our young converts go from appointment to appointment, participating in the worship of God with a readiness and marked [illegible] that convinces all of the depth of the work and the earnestness of those concerned. We have taken into the church, to date, one hundred and forty-nine, while the number of conversions exceeds two hundred. I have in my possession the application of four brethren, of [illegible] worth, for license to preach, which will greatly add to our means of supplying the people with the word. I would like to add that I have been greatly assisted in all these meetings by the Revs. C. A. C. Herlong, J. B. Sanders and Nicholas Crocker.

VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

We clip as follows from the proceedings of this Conference, up to the fifth day, as published in the Richmond Christian Advocate:

The Virginia Conference of the Southern Methodist Church commenced its seventy-seventh session in Dinwiddie Street church, Portsmouth, November 15. Bishop Paine, of Mississippi, presides. Rev. Dr. Lee conducted the opening religious services.

This Conference consists of one hundred and seventy ministers and forty lay delegates.

Paul Whitehead was elected secretary, and P. A. Peterson assistant secretary.

The roll was called, and one hundred and thirty members answered to their names.

Communications from the Nashville Publishing House were read, representing the Concern in a prosperous and improving condition. Assets, $260,614.22; liabilities, $4,466.67.

Dr. McFerrin, general missionary secretary, reported the prosperity of the Missionary Society, more than $10,000 having been collected during the past year in excess of the amount received the year preceding.

Bishop Paine announced that Bishop Early had sent through him love to the Conference, and a message to the effect that his work is done. He does not repine, but calmly awaits his change. It was stated that William H. Hopkins, of the Lynchburg district, had expressed a desire to change his ministerial relations, and had taken certain preliminary steps toward entering the Protestant Episcopal Church, and that while occupying pastoral relations on the Appomattox circuit, Mr. Hopkins requested the appointment of a committee to investigate his case, as he could not publicly state his reasons for the course he had pursued.

Rev. Dr. Duncan submitted an able and extended report of Randolph Macon College, showing one hundred and forty-two students, twenty-three of whom are preparing for the ministry, and twenty are sons of ministers. The institution is steadily growing in public favor. He urged the preachers to labor to increase the patronage of the college, and also to raise funds for its support, stating that the present patronage would not enable the college to educate ministers' sons and those preparing for the ministry free of tuition fees, as at present it is doing. The report asks the appointment of a preacher as financial secretary. Rev. Alexander G. Brown, presiding elder of Norfolk district, [illegible] appointed to that position. Bishop Paine made a short but [illegible] address in eulogy and advocacy of the college.

Peter G. Brown read a letter [illegible] Carson, the oldest member of Conference, expressive [illegible] ment in not being [illegible] session, and of [illegible] for the members. [illegible] stated that he was [illegible] the ministry of [illegible] Douglass, and that [illegible] and reared to young [illegible] the bounds of what [illegible] Virginia Conference. [illegible] Peter G. Brown moved that [illegible] Conference express its deep [illegible] for Bro. Carson, and assure [illegible] its prayers for his welfare; which was adopted.

Bishop Paine submitted a letter from J. A. Riddick, of Sussex county, asking a supernumerary relation; which had already been granted.

On motion of H. B. Cowles, the Conference expressed its sympathy with Bishop Early in his affliction and its unabated love for him. On motion of Dr. Edwards, E. M. Peterson submitted the report on Sunday schools. It declares that religious training of children is next in importance to the ministry of the word. During the year hundreds of scholars have been converted. "At no period has greater interest been manifested in Sunday schools." There are now about thirty thousand scholars in bounds of Conference. The report asks no reappointment of an agent, but urges increased efforts in the cause, and the importance of teachers' meetings; of the adoption of the one-lesson system. It favors denominational instead of union schools, indorses Sunday school publications of the Nashville house, asks that conversions in the schools be annually reported, and requests the Executive Committee to report to the next Conference for the support of a general agent.

Summary of Foreign Missions of the M. E. Church.

AFRICA (Liberia) was the first occupied of our foreign mission fields. The number of ministers (all colored) is 19—the same as in 1860. But during the ten years from 1860 to 1870 the number of ministers has increased 655, and of Sunday school scholars 495. The present outlook in Liberia is not promising in civil or political affairs; but the country in the vicinity of the republic is inviting laborers.

SOUTH AMERICA begins to fulfill the hopes entertained by the early [illegible] Kidder, Dempster, Norris and others. Many of the Latin race have been enrolled as converts; some who were enemies have become zealous workers for the spread of evangelical truth.

CHINA.—New converts are and have been steadily reported by every mail for years past. One hundred and ninety members were reported in the Methodist missions in 1870. The increase is nearly one hundred per cent. annually. Fifteen hundred children are under the care of the missionaries.

GERMANY.—The Methodist missions are fairly rooted in the soil, and are spreading rapidly.

DENMARK, SWEDEN AND NORWAY.—The work is spreading with great rapidity in these countries.

INDIA.—Our missions had in 1870 18 missionaries, with 15 assistants, 6 native preachers, and 80 exhorters and local deacons. Large additions have been made to these numbers during the year. The number of members reported is 839; of children in the schools, 3,912. A great impulse has been given the work in this country by the introduction of female Scripture readers and teachers among the women, and of woman doctors of medicine. The prospect here is very hopeful.

BULGARIA.—The work has made more progress here than is indicated by the small number of organized churches. Many witnesses have been raised up, and converts have shown themselves amid persecution. A church containing, by the last report, twenty-three members, was organized at Tulstcha. In Sistof also there are witnesses to the gospel. A hopeful sign is the quickening which has been given to the intellects of the Bulgarian young men by the preaching and publications of the missionaries.

Our missionary work owes much to the earnest labors of the secretary of the society, the Rev. Dr. Durbin. During his administration the missions to the Scandinavian States, to India and Bulgaria have been organized; the annual receipts of the society have grown from $84,045.15 to $618,226.64. The church has been educated to understand it as a law of church life, that the church and the missionary society are inseparable.

SLEEP ENOUGH.

BY CHARLES D. WARNER.

Doctors of medicine are either growing complacent or sensible. A great many of them have concluded that it is better to become allies of nature than to fight her and repel all her kindly aid. Perhaps the physicians were always wise, (they always looked wise,) and only yielded to popular prejudice in their Sangrado practice and their rigorous counsel. We have all been taught there is merit in wasting as few hours as possible in sleep, and that early rising is one of the cardinal virtues—admitting for the Protestant moment that cardinals have virtues. We have all been educated to believe that the time given to the bed is lost, and that we gain all the hours we steal from it. Children have been taught that prompt rising in the morning is a beautiful thing.

I am not sorry, therefore, that one of the medical faculty, Dr. Hall, has had the good sense to tell the world that children until the age of eighteen, and old and feeble people, (and he might as well have said everybody,) need ten hours' sleep, and that bouncing suddenly out of bed in the morning is as hurtful as it is disagreeable; that fifteen or twenty minutes spent in gradually waking up, stretching the limbs, and letting the blood slowly resume its wonted circulation, is time well spent. For the sudden sending of the blood to the heart is a severe shock, and the person who gets up in this hasty and reckless manner is certain to be drowsy by midday, unless he or she is an editor or a belle, and does not get up till afternoon. I concur in this—in fact, I always knew that it was true; and think, further, that pulling anybody out of bed ought to be a states-prison offense, and doubt not that conviction for it could be had before any of our ordinary sleepy juries—if they were awake enough to hear the evidence.

Many people seem to think it is unbecoming to sleep much anywhere, except in church and at evening lectures. They speak of it as a merit that they do with so few hours' sleep at home. This is one reason why there are so many stupid people in society—admitting for the argument that there are so many; they got up too soon or too suddenly, and so are never fairly awake all through. What seems to be stupidity is really want of sleep. A good many of the sermons, and now and then an editorial, are written in this state of mind; and even fashionable people go gaping around, making yawning calls upon acquaintances who ought to be in bed and who wish the callers were.

The world is all astray about this matter of sleep, led away by nursery couplets about early to rise, and the examples of Napoleon, Peter the Great and other military heroes, who are reported to have been satisfied with an hour or two of sleep snatched from the twenty-four, taken on a plank, while their half-dozen scribbling secretaries were not allowed to sleep at all. We all know what became of Napoleon. Even Mr. Abbott cannot make it appear that he had much more than a respect for the Ruler of the universe. These sleepless people have made most of the mischief in the world. Catherine de Medicis was, we believe, a light sleeper. George Washington, on the contrary, took his time, waked up the Father of his Country by degrees, got out of bed with deliberation, and dressed himself with thoughtful slowness. What a ridiculous idea it would be to think of that great man as bouncing out of bed at the first bell, and dressing himself as if there was a fire next door.

The instinct of children against early and especially sudden rising is well founded; and it is pleasant to have the learned faculty confirm a long and growing conviction that it is not a sin to lie in bed till the second bell rings. It is the experience of the majority of people that the most delicious moments of the whole day are those when they are to get up, and do not.

Hereafter let them linger in this delightful borderland with a quiet conscience. Nature is about to be vindicated by the scientists. If the whole of life could be like that brief interval between half awaking and getting out into the cold world—that rare space of time when duty calls so faintly that there is a sweet delight in letting it call before conscience is aroused at all—one might like to revise the hymn book, and live alway. We have been now for several thousand years going to the ant and getting away from the sluggard to that degree that we have developed a very nervous condition. To say nothing of being defrauded of our rights, and of the legitimate and healthy luxury of sleeping long and waking up slowly, as plants do, no doubt many of the nervous diseases that are attributed to stock gambling, tobacco and unrequited love, are due to want of sufficient sleep, from childhood up.

It is not an idle fancy that we moderns do not sleep enough. It is perhaps right to shoot soldiers, who are hired for that purpose, for sleeping at their posts. It disciplines them; but it might be better to relieve guard oftener and send them to bed. Yet civilians generally ought to be lectured for sleeping too little. All the passages in school books about early rising should be stricken out, and there should be verses promising a moderate competence as the reward of sleeping enough and coming out of sleep by degrees. In old times, perhaps, it did not matter so much, when the world was less busy, and there was less strain upon the faculties during the waking hours. But every one can see now that the world is red hot with money-getting and vast enterprises and politics and ritualism, and all sorts of rights, patent and some that are not so patent, and a feverish literature; and, in order to bear the wear and carry the load of it, a man needs to sleep more hours than he did when he only rose to eat and drink, and hunt the wild boar, and slay a few of his neighbors before an early dinner. But we do not sleep as much as the former generations did, who had less to do.

We are becoming more and more wakeful, so that we cannot sleep soundly in the season we give to rest. It is a nervous wakefulness, however, and not the full vigor of all the powers which should result from proper rest of the system. No one can be at his best in any hour unless he has given as many hours to solid sleep as his system requires. The demands of business and the exactions of society keep most of us out of bed unmercifully, and in time we get jadedly used to the unnatural life, and take credit to ourselves that we can do with the fewest hours of sleep. It is a great mistake. There have been great men who were able to accomplish a great amount of work with little sleep; but we may be sure that, if we want to be great men, or, what is more important in this day, great women, we shall reach the goal soonest by being good sleepers. That was an honorable epitaph on the Dutchman's tombstone: "He vas a gut sleeper." It will not be said of many of this nervous, excited generation.

It is well, however, to plead for the children. Let it be understood that it is no merit in a child to pop out of bed instantly upon the strike of the bell, like a surprised and obfuscated jack-in-the-box. And give everybody time to wake up decently and in order. And let all the people say blessed is the medical man who preaches the gospel of morning "cat-naps."—Independent.

DR. JOHNSON once silenced a notorious female backbiter, who was condemning some of her friends for painting their cheeks, by the remark that "it is a far less harmful thing for a lady to redden her own complexion than to blacken her neighbor's character."

THE ANGEL AND THE CHILD.

An angel with a radiant face
Above a cradle bent to look,
Seemed his own image there to trace,
As in the waters of a brook.

"Dear child! who me resemblest so,"
It whispered, "come, O come with me!
Happy together let us go,
The earth unworthy is of thee!

"Here none to perfect bliss attain;
The soul in pleasure suffering lies;
Joy hath an undertone of pain,
And even the happiest hours their sighs.

"Fear doth at every portal knock;
Never a day serene and pure
From the o'ershadowing tempest's shocks
Hath made the morrow's dawn secure.

"What, then, shall sorrows and shall fears
Come to disturb so pure a brow?
And with the bitterness of tears
These eyes of azure troubled grow?

"Ah! no, into the fields of space,
Away shalt thou escape with me;
And Providence will grant the grace
Of all the days that were to be.

"Let no one in thy dwelling cower
In somber vestments draped and veiled;
But let them welcome thy last hour,
As thy first moments once they hailed.

"Without a cloud be there each brow;
There let the grave no shadow cast;
When one is pure as thou art now,
The fairest day is still the last."

And, waving wide his wings of white,
The angel, at these words, had sped
Toward the eternal realms of light!
Poor mother! see, thy son is dead!

Jean Reboul, translated by Longfellow.

STEP BY STEP.

BY DR. J. G. HOLLAND.

Heaven is not reached by a single bound:
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.

I count these things to be gradually true,
That a noble deed is a step toward God—
Lifting the soul from the common sod
To a purer air and a broader view.

We rise by the things that are under our feet,
By what we have mastered in greed and gain,
By the pride deposed and the passion slain,
And the vanquished ill we hourly meet.

We hope, we resolve, we aspire, we trust,
When the morning calls to life and light,
But our heart grows weary, and ere the night
Our lives are trailing in the sordid dust.

Wings for the angels, but feet for the men!
We must borrow the wings to find the way—
We may hope, and resolve, and aspire, and pray,
But our feet must rise or we fall again.

Only in dream is the ladder thrown
From the weary earth to the sapphire wall;
But the dreams depart and the visions fall,
And the sleeper wakes on his pillow of stone.

Heaven is not reached at a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.

CANON KINGSLEY ON THE ORIGIN OF MAN.

At the Devonshire Association of Science, Literature and Art, at Bideford, Mr. J. A. Froude, the outgoing president, resigned office in favor of his friend, Canon Kingsley, who delivered an inaugural address, in the course of which he said:

"As scientific men we shall be wise, I think, in withholding our assent to certain modern hypotheses as to the human race. I do not say that they are altogether untrue, but I do say that I cannot yet regard them as proven. I believe that there is a very large class of facts, which have been overlooked, and a very large class which have been interpreted by hasty and insufficient induction, in the modern hurry to make them fit in with a hyper-analytical philosophy. We shall be wise in refraining from any judgment, I believe, with regard to the question which is now so confidently answered in the affirmative by many good men and true: Did man start from a condition anything like that of a modern savage? It seems to me that the very antiquity of the human race, which these gentleman assert, makes their theory about savages questionable. I fully accept the immense antiquity of the human race. I even accept as possible the guess of a very distinguished scientific friend of mine, that before all is done we may stumble yet on the remains of a Silurian man. But I say, the older man is proved to be, the more likely he is to have changed meanwhile. As for the Esquimaux-like savages, whose implements of flint or bone are found in caves and river gravels, they may have been the earliest human race which appeared, or reappeared, in Europe when it recovered from the great catastrophe of the Glacial epoch. That, it seems to me, is all that we can say of them. As for their being the original type of man, as for our being able to argue from their habits what were the habits of our remotest ancestors, that I must deny, as utterly as I deny it of any and every savage now existing. In the first place, man, hairless, feeble, and possessed of no natural weapons, must have begun his career in the tropics, probably in some part of the tropics where there were no large or dangerous beasts of prey, and no violent inclemencies of weather. In a word, he must have commenced his career, as Mr. Darwin allows, in some earthly paradise. But once being there, with food and comfort ready to his hand, he would stay there as long as he could. The hunters of reindeer and bison and rhinoceros and mammoth on the then barren moors of France, Belgium and England, must have come thither against their natural inclination. The mere fact of these poor people having pushed northward is firm reason for supposing that there were even then, down south of them, strong, and it may be, civilized races, from the face of whom they were fleeing to take refuge among the northern snows. And it is on the ground of this very possibility that I am led more and more to doubt whether we can ever know anything certainly about primeval man at all. For see, the more ancient you confess the human race to be, the more time you allow for whole peoples to have risen, become great, strong, civilized; and the more time, too, for whole peoples to have fallen again, and become weak, base, barbarous; for civilization may fall as well as rise. Those who talk of a continual progress upward in man forget how many facts are against them. Has Greece risen or fallen in the last two thousand years? Has the whole East risen or fallen in the last thousand years? Has Spain risen or fallen in the last two years? In America alone have not two great civilizations, that of Mexico and that of Peru, sunk into savagery again during the last three hundred years? And how many times may not the same thing have happened on the earth? We have a right to ask: Does science teach us that savages are the crude material of humanity? If so, she can only teach us by facts; by proceeding from the known to the unknown. But where are her facts? Undeniably, the facts show that degradation in mankind is as easy and common as progress. You have only to leave civilized human beings to themselves for them to become savages, and the struggle of all wise and good men is to counteract that tendency in man to fall and not to rise. If I am asked for my facts on my side, I answer: Facts! Why, we have hardly any facts which are not on that side. May God—for man will not—deliver us from the facts, they are so many. Are not all the philanthropists in the world working day and night to prevent the facts spreading and breeding by natural laws, and so ruining society? Go into our great cities and see what human beings become if left to themselves. Is not an average street Arab as very a savage as a Fuegian, and far more a savage than an Esquimaux? That is in the natural tendency of man by the laws of his nature—not to become a Shakespeare, still less a Moses—but to become a dirty, lying ruffian, like an average, and like, alas, too many English men and women and children. Civilization is not of the outer, but of the inner man. The old Hebrew patriarchs were, according to the records, more civilized men than an average Parisian. Homer's heroes, as they stand in the "Iliad" and "Odyssey," a thousand years before the Christian era, with very few clothes, indeed, when their armor was off, were more civilized men than their so-called descendants of the Greek empire, a thousand years after the Christian era. Civilization, I say, is within a man, and from within a man; and railroads no more make a civilized man than billiard tables do. They may use both; but they may be just as civilized if the two arts of steam and billiards had never been discovered. Whatever is made out on either view, it will still remain a mystery—to me, at least, as much as to Isaiah of old—how this utterly abnormal and astonishing creature called man first got into his foolish head that he could cut a thing out of wood or stone which would listen to him and answer his prayers. Yet so it is; and so it has been for unnumbered ages. Man has been defined as a speaking animal or cooking animal. He is best, I fear, defined as an idolatrous animal; and so much the worse for him. But what if that very fact, diseased as it is, should be a sure proof that he is more than animal? The question of the physical origin I decline to touch here. It is strictly a physiological and anatomical question, not to be discussed in a mixed assembly. It seems, moreover, less important to me than it does to many persons on both sides whom I revere and love. However physical science may hereafter decide the controversy, I say boldly, as a man and as a priest, that its decision will not affect one of my duties here, one of my hopes hereafter."

DR. JOHNSON ON CONVERSATION.—There must be, in the first place, knowledge—there must be materials; in the second place, there must be a command of words; in the third place, there must be imagination to place things in such views as they are not commonly seen in; and in the fourth place, there must be presence of mind, and a resolution that is not to be overcome by failure. This last is an essential requisite; for want of it, many people do not excel in conversation.

A NEGRO once gave the following toast: "De Guhernor ob our State—He come in wid berry little opposition; he goes out wid none at all."

PRAYER MEETINGS.

BY REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE.

The meeting is open for remarks; but let us have no great speeches. There is nothing that takes the life out of a prayer meeting sooner than rhetoric. I would as soon have a meeting buried in dry dust as to have it smothered in flowers. The best speech I ever knew a man to make in a prayer meeting was by a young convert who got up, said nothing, and broke down crying. We all cried with him.

Rhetorical-prayer meeting talkers are apt to be cold and cheerless. Icebergs are brilliant to look at three miles off, but ships steer clear of them; and these men that float down cold, hard and brilliant, are dangerous.

Is there any man here with a trouble? Let him talk it right out. Trouble handed around is like delicate glassware, which, passing through a good many hands, drops and breaks all to pieces, and there is nothing much left of it. If you belong to a church where there are six hundred members, you ought to be obliged to carry only a six-hundredth part of any one trouble. Every Christian, coming near you, ought to subtract his part of the annoyance.

Have you a joy? Out with it! Set your candle up on the mantelpiece. When in boyhood, in the country, I went to prayer meeting, we went across the cornfield in groups, and father would take a lantern and go ahead, and we would all follow in the light of that one lantern, not stumbling or losing our way. Let your light so shine before men! Don't sit during prayer meeting with your head down in your hands as though you had been asleep two weeks. The homeliest part of you is the top of your head. Let your face shine.

It is astonishing how dull religious audiences do look! In lecturing halls you see people with eyes wide open, nudging each other and nodding to the sentiments offered. In prayer meetings the same people look dull. They cultivate the dull look. They have an idea that to be devotional they must look sleepy. A brother gets up to talk, and a father in Israel puts his head down on a cane, and a mother in Israel her head on the back of the seat in front of her, and another looks up to the ceiling and seems to be counting the cracks in it. Now when a man is trying to talk, look at him. There is inspiration in the human eye. Many a time I have, through pressure of other work, gone into the pulpit with little to say, but in the upturned faces of the people I have seen twenty sermons, and the only bother was to know which I should preach. The venerable Dr. Tyng said the other day, after preaching that eloquent sermon in our Tabernacle: "It takes no brains to preach to such an audience as that! The very looks of it is an inspiration, and you cannot help but talk!"

The reason there are so few good talkers in prayer meeting is because there are so few good listeners. When a brother gets up and makes a slip of the tongue don't snicker, or, what is worse, look mortified. Let your countenance say: "Try that again! We have all been through the same process. We must all creep before we walk." It is a heavy cross to carry. One-half of the people who talk in prayer meetings go home discouraged, half sick, and cross about the remarks they have made. They feel disgusted. Seek them out, and tell them they did first-rate (that is, if you can do so without lying.) The genuine Christian man never does half so poorly as he thinks he does.

The reporters do not get the best speeches. When a man, warm with religious hope, gets up to encourage others, though it be in broken sentences, and with a phraseology that no grammarian would attempt to parse, the speech is telegraphed to heaven before the man is done, and published before the throne, and not only the group in the prayer meeting, but a million glorified spirits attend and approve. If we get to heaven we will not be stopped at the gate to see if we can parse, or whether we know the difference between the perfect and the pluperfect.

Are there persons here to-night who would like to be saved? Let us hear from them. There are men and women present who know Christ so well they could in five minutes put your case in his hands. The path between the house and the country well is worn, and the grass has no chance to grow there. Between these Christian hearts and the well of salvation the path is deeply worn.

Let us all be honest in our prayer meeting duties. Sometimes the most inconsistent Christians make the most shining talks at class meetings. One of the worst liars I ever knew was always talking in prayer meetings about the imperfections of Christians. If your experience is at a discount don't pass it off as above par, or try to make us believe that a chromo is an oil painting.

I think the keeping of diaries sometimes gets people into the habit of religious inaccuracy. No man likes to put down in his diary just what he feels. I have no doubt that Payson and Baxter sometimes committed sins that could not very well be put into blank verse. If we keep a diary of experiences we ought to put down things just as they are. I tried that once, but soon tore up the book for fear somebody would get hold of it and read it.

God help us all to be honest and faithful in this night's work! Let us gather our chairs close up around the fire. Put more sticks on the blaze. Let us have a good hearty talk about the things that most concern us. Soon our company will break up, and our last chance for helping each other will be gone forever. But God grant that the fire may still burn on the altar, and our children pile on the fagots, till all the world shall come and sit in the warm shining!—Interior.

GEMS FROM HAMILTON.

FRUITS OF THE SPIRIT.

Love.—When a rosebud is formed, if the soil is soft and the sky is genial, it is not long before it bursts; for the life within is so abundant that it can no longer contain it all, but in blossomed brightness and swimming fragrance it must needs let forth its joy, and gladden all the air. And if, when thus ripe, it refuses to expand, it would quickly rot at heart, and die. And Christian love is just piety with its petals fully spread, developing itself, and making it a happier world. The religion which fancies that it loves God, when it never evinces love to its brother, is not piety, but a poor, mildewed theology—a dogma with a worm in the heart.

Joy.—Joy is the happiness of love; it is love exulting; it is love aware of its own felicity, and rioting in riches which it has no fear of exhausting; it is love taking a look at its treasure, and surrendering itself to bliss without foreboding.

Peace.—Peace is love reposing; it is love on the green pastures; it is love beside the still waters. It is that great calm which comes over the conscience when it sees the atonement sufficient, and the Savior willing. It is unclouded azure in a lake of glass. It is the soul which Christ has pacified, spread out in serenity and simple faith, and the Lord God, merciful and gracious, smiling over it.

Gentleness.—Gentleness is love in society; it is love holding intercourse with those around it. It is that cordiality of aspect, and that soul of speech, which assure us that kind and earnest hearts may still be met with here below. It is that quiet influence which, like the scented flame of an alabaster lamp, fills many a home with light and warmth, and fragrance altogether. It is the carpet, soft and deep, which, while it diffuses a look of ample comfort, deadens many a creaking sound. It is the curtain, from which many a beloved form wards off at once the summer's glow and the winter's wind. It is the pillow on which sickness lays its head, and forgets half its misery, and to which death comes in a balmier dream. It is considerateness. It is tenderness of feeling. It is warmth of affection. It is promptitude of sympathy. It is love in all its depths and all its delicacy. It is everything included in that matchless grace, the gentleness of Christ.—The Advocate of Holiness.

GOOD ADVICE.—Boys, you have it in your power to do much for yourselves during those intervals of leisure that come to every one upon the farm. By careful study and observation and the reading of good books—not novels—you may lay the foundation of a comprehensive education that will fit you, when you arrive at manhood, to take your place in the world as useful and valued members thereof. Don't think, because you do not go to a school, perhaps, that you will never be anything. If a boy has the steel, he will rise in spite of schools. Schools are very useful institutions, and you should try to get them if you can; but if you can't, do not despair.

You have to educate yourself by thinking, either in school or out of it. Books are teachers. Try them. You can surely get books. Besides, there is the great book of nature spread out before you, and you may read therein while at your daily toil. Yes, study nature. There is much to be made clear in natural history, chemistry or meteorology. Study the birds, insects, flowers or plants that you daily meet with. Try, and see, now, how much you can learn that others do not know about all these things.

WASHINGTON IRVING, in conversation, once alluded to a man of superior pomposity as "a great man, and, in his own estimation, a very great man—a man of great weight. When he goes to the West, the East tips up."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

TWENTY earnest Christian workers are teaching a Sunday school in the Toronto jail.

DURING the year past 14,000 Bibles, 10,000 New Testaments, and 54,000 copies of the gospels have been distributed in Spain.

THE Waldensian Theological Seminary of Florence has just sent out five Italian students, making the entire number of graduates twenty-one.

THE Berlin Missionary Society has thirty-one stations in South Africa, in which are employed fifty-one laborers. The number of communicants is about two thousand.

MR. TRAILL AND DR. COOPER have their followers in the Old Country. "A Free Church of England," independent of Episcopal control, has been established at Wolverhampton.

LIBERAL.—Ten thousand pounds are to be spent on a Wesleyan chapel in Rome, and two gentlemen, one of whom has given largely in another direction, divide the cost of the erection between them.

THE Rev. Mr. Nevin is now in the United States endeavoring to raise $40,000 toward building an Episcopal church in Rome. He expects to obtain $70,000 more among the worshipers in that city.

THE Presbyterians of Kansas are flourishing. The synod embraces one hundred and seventeen churches and one hundred and one ministers. Of new churches, twenty-five have been organized, and fifteen new edifices have been erected during 1871.

FIVE YEARS.—The following figures, taken from the General Minutes of the Methodist Episcopal Church, show the increase in membership during the last five years: 1866, 48,402; 1867, 100,753; 1868, 88,399; 1869, 54,447; 1870, 58,387—total, 350,388.

THE American Bible Society finds itself able, and our own country so well supplied with the Scriptures as to lead it to express, through its secretaries, a willingness to furnish grants of Bibles to all our different missions abroad, for use and distribution in their great work.

TURK'S ISLAND, in the West Indies, has recently taken a census, and the following figures, which are evidently mere estimates, are reported as that of the general religious denominations in the colony: Baptists, 1,800; Episcopalians, 1,500; Wesleyans, 1,400; Presbyterians, 100.

THE Evangelist states that there are in the city of New York at least four Presbyterian churches each one of which spends more in the salary of its pastor, support of their choir, etc., than it costs to conduct the whole business of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, which extends its operations to all parts of the earth.

THE Episcopalians in Kansas are in excess of their resources, and not only are their parishes without clergymen, but there is a cry for aid from quarters where no organization has been effected. The church, says one authority, needs $15,000 a year for five years, and Bishop Vail is now seeking to obtain this amount of pecuniary assistance.

THE Baptist mission among the Chinese at Bangkok is led to ask why, when the houses are open from the palace of the king to the shed of his humblest subject, and the missionaries may preach anywhere and at any time to their full capacity, and the people will listen, "only a few scores have been gathered into the kingdom. Do Christians in America pray for this mission?"

A CORRESPONDENT of the Intelligencer (Dutch Reformed) shows that that denomination has in this country sixty-three thousand four hundred and eighty-three communicants, and that their benevolent contributions for the last year amounted to $326,039—an average of $5.21 for each member. In their memorial year the Presbyterians gave $5.40 each; but the Reformed expect to double that in their centennial year.

HENRY BOEHM, the oldest living minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, officiated on the first of October at the laying of the corner-stone of the Third Methodist Episcopal church in Lancaster, Pennsylvania. Sixty-eight years before he preached the first Methodist sermon ever delivered in that city, and organized the first society, consisting of six members. One person was present at the corner-stone laying who heard the first sermon, in 1803.

CHURCHES have been largely built up in Madagascar among the places which witnessed the terrible persecution there in 1849. There is one standing on the site of the prison where the martyrs of that persecution were confined, another whose corner-stone rests where the stake was planted at which they were burned alive, and another just above the ditch wherein they were buried. So, literally, churches "spring out of the blood of martyrs."

ON THE ninth of October the first native Methodist Episcopal church of Mexico was organized, in the midst of a densely-settled community, about twenty miles from La Junta, in the Pueblo district, Colorado Conference. As one sign of the hopeful state of Methodist mission work in that republic, this is supplemented by this also: that a native Mexican, with a heart for it, is preparing for the ministry, that he may preach nightly through the Scriptures to his people.

THE IRISH PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—From the minutes of the Assembly, lately published, it appears that the total number of ministers is five hundred and twenty-eight, and the number of congregations five hundred and fifty.... The Irish Presbyterians are making arrangements to have a lay conference in London, at which representatives are to be present from all the congregations in the country, in order to give greater extension and completeness to their central sustentation fund.

"GREENLAND'S ICY MOUNTAINS," about which we sing in the monthly concert, are far from being the abodes of heathenism. About half of the population of Greenland belong to the Lutheran communion, and the whole country is well supplied with churches, pastors and catechists. At Jacobshaven and Godthaab there are seminaries for the education of young men for the ministry. The salaries of clergymen range from $800 to $1,400, which is better than the average in this country.

THE workingmen of Great Britain have organized a committee for promoting the separation of Church and State. In their address to the working classes, this committee declares: 1. That religion is a matter of conscience, with which the State has no right to interfere; 2. That the Establishment in England has failed as badly as in Ireland, and the one has no more right to exist than the other; 3. It is expensive, obstructive and a source of national weakness.

THE printing press is sure to follow the Protestant missionary. Not many years ago the Fiji Islands were the home (if home that may be called which home was none) of none but a degraded and fierce race of cannibals. The Fiji Times—a good-sized eight-page paper, containing twelve columns of reading matter, taken largely from foreign journals, seventeen columns of advertisements, and two of ship news—now finds there and among that race its sufficient support.

DEACONESSES.—A Lutheran synod in Pennsylvania has adopted the following resolutions: "1. That it is desirable to re-establish the office of deaconess in our congregations; 2. That believing and intelligent women should be regularly appointed by the congregations and formally inducted into office; and 3. That the synod should instruct its liturgical committee to prepare a form for the installation of such officers and a general statement of the duties to be attended by them.

THE American deputation to Russia, on the part of the Evangelical Alliance, made a formal report on Monday, through its president, S. F. B. Morse. The detailed account of the mission differs in no important respect from what we have already published. It appears, however, that the influence of the delegates was so far efficacious that the Lutheran persecutions at Riga and Mitau have been temporarily suspended, and the Esths have been assured that their religious rights will be respected.

CHURCH BUILDING IN COLORADO.—The Stuart Reunion Presbyterian church of Denver (Rev. W. Y. Brown, pastor) is erecting a neat and substantial church, seating three hundred persons, which is rapidly approaching completion. The cost of the lot and building will be about $12,000. Denver now contains a population of about ten thousand, and is the commercial center of the vast mineral region east of the Rocky mountains, and of an extent of territory larger than the whole of the Middle States combined.

A MAJORITY of the members of the Methodist Protestant church at Hopewell, Virginia, went over to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and attempted to transfer their church property to that denomination; but Judge Wingfield decided that the minority had the right to hold the property. Such of the trustees as had dissolved their connection with the Methodist Protestant Church were removed from the board, and their places were filled with new members, who are to hold the property for the use and benefit of the members of the Methodist Protestant Church.

ONE of Disraeli's admirers, speaking about him to John Bright, said: "You ought to give him credit for what he has accomplished, as he is a self-made man." "I know he is," retorted Mr. Bright, "and he adores his maker."

BEARS are numerous and hungry in Wisconsin. A Norwegian was lately attacked and killed by them near the town of Bloomer.

AT CONFERENCE.

We were not able to reach the Alahama Conference nutil Friday morning. Two days' proceedings wsre done, and the bnsiness was well advanced. Bishop Pierce in the chair, looking a trifle older than when we last saw him, five years ago, hnt remarkably well, considering his nnparallelsd labors dnring the year. The personnel of the Conference impressed ns mnch, with its excellent proportion of aged, middle-aged and yonng men, and with its large average of husincss capacity, intelligence and general effectivsness. To ns thers seemed to be a superahnndance of material for one Conference, and we covetsd at leaet a score of the younger men to fill up the wasted ranke in Lonisiana. A better hchaved, better dressed or better looking body of preachers we have never seeu. The old guard of veterans was there. Turrentine, LeVert, Spence, McDanisl and others of like years, etill in the harness; and Hamilton, Summers, Mitchsll, Ellison, Shaver, Wadsworth, Cotton and many others of eminsnt experience, ripening gracefnlly, and guiding affaire with their wonted industry and vigilanco. Among the represantative men of tho educational interests were Dr. A. S. Andrews and T. O. Summers, Jr., of the Southern University; President Price, of the Tuskegee Femals College; Rev. B. B. Ross, of the East Alahama College, at Anburn; Rev. E. D. Pitts, of the institution at Opelika, aud Rev. A. J. McVoy, of Summorfield. The committee reports were generally short and well digested, and the discussions upon them were hrief and temperate. Wo havo never seen so much business dono without hurry, and so well and quickly done. Only one death during the year—the vonerable and eminently usefnl J. Phillips Dickinson, of whom a fitting memoir wae adopted by tho Conference. It was our privilego to hear Rev. E. V. LoVert, Prof. Price, Dr. Wadsworth and Bishop Pierce preach—all of them masters in their way, and excellent sermons all. The sermou of Bishop Pierce on Sunday morning was equal to any we have heard from him, and exhibited all those well-mixed elements of good preaching for which he is noted. Tho missionary anniversary for Satnrday night was prevented hy rain. The Conference was generously entertained by tho good people of Mohile, and their hospitality would have been equal to a General Conference, if so much were reqnired. We saw the interior of only the St. Francis Street church, in the basement of which the Conference sessions wers held. This basement is better fitted np for Sunday school purposes than any we know of, and the Sunday school ie admirably organized and conducted under a model superintendent, Bro. William R. Baker. Bro. Baker must, by all means, send us an acconnt of his school for the information of our readers. Felicity Street and other celebrated schools must look to their lanrels. We were compelled to leave on Monday, hefore adjournment, and jnst as Dr. Andrews was closing his impressive address on the interests and claims of the Southern University. A noble institution, nobly advocated! May the good president sow and reap abundantly! Our thanks are due to the brethren of the Conference for many kindnesses and much courtesy, and to our host and hostess on Government street for abounding hospitality. May the Lord reward them in that day! Onr report of the proceedings is made up partly from the columns of the Mobile Daily Register and partly from notes furnished from the secretary's records. We hope the very efficient and patient secretary, Rev. B. B. Ross, will forward the reports of committees and the statistics for pnblication in a shert time. The collection for missions this year was between $4,000 and $5,000, and some increase over last year's fignres.

THE PACIFIC AND—HOME.

BY BISHOP KEENER.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 18, 1871.

My last was from Los Angeles. Leosing from its ssaport, Wilmington, we fonnd onrselves ont once more on ths broad, bright Pacific. The winds at first were gentle, but at length it qnieted to a glassy calm. Upon its bosom conld he seen the circles started by the lighting of a sea-bird; while beneath its surface the grand swell continued, upon which the vessel rose and fell regularly, as if by the pnlsations of lifs. These snrges are some hnndred feet apart, and break upon the shore-rock and cliff in ceaseless thnnder. At all times the edges of this sea are white with dashing foam. For steaming purposes it is as available and safe ae the Mississippi Sonnd. On the morning of the third day we neared the Goldsn Gats. The sea-lions conld bs hsard distinctly barking as a pack of hounds on a warm ecent. The note wae sxactly that, and they shonld have been called ssa-dogs. Presently we came near enough to Seal Rock to make ont dimly these slow-ballied monstere throwing themselves np npon its jagged sides. A few days after onr arrival we rode down to the Cliff honse to take a last visw of the ocean, and see moro satisfactorily these unconth croatures that, for the most part, are associated with solitary, nntamed regions of polar ice. But here thoy wsre, within five miles of a city of one hnndred thonsand inhabitants. The road to the cliff is better than onr shell road, and is the favorite drive ahout San Francisco. The house stands on a bluff, over against the seal hannt. A gouins for making money, quite fnlly developed in this new conntry, ponld uot ovorlook the chance which nature had presented in the sqnirming, yelping sides of this rock. It is about the size of a cathedral, rising right ont of the deep sea, a quarter of a mile from ths shore. Wo could see distinctly not less than one hundred lione and seals spread over it, basking in thosnn; some were swimming ahout, taking advantage of the swell to land themselves on the base of the island, and othsrs were rolling themselves off into ths flood. The largest held tho peaks and got most of the snn. Their hides are hairy and tawny, and they have qnite a dignified way of sitting npright, to look out over the expanse of wator. One old fellow, that would weigh somo three thousand pounds, raised himself, and for ten minutes sat np as grandly as an ancient sea-god. His lion-like head aud profile needed only a crown of kelp leavee to make a very passable Neptune.

One looks out on the Pacific with awe. Just now we have newe of the destruction of thirty-three whaling ehips hy the pack and ice-floes of its arctic winter. I suppose that yon are not greatly interested in this, lose, ae it falls mainly upon Massachuestte and Rhode Island, or I ehould add the names of the vesecls. The crews wore all saved. This comes in as an item while we stand over the sea and watch its thunderoue force hsrs, breaking itself upon a high iron cliff, and while ths mind rnns back to these low, shelving sands of onr Southern gulf, with which thers the Almighty curbs the restless Atlantic.

Leaving ths Pacific, in a fsw hours I was on the way to the Santa Clara valley to dedicato a church. This I did on the following Sabbath. A bright, sunny house, heantifully complste, even to vases of flowers by the pnlpit. An nnusually long house, bnt of admirable aconstic quality. It did ons good to be present and there worship nnder a vine and fig tree where no one might make ns afraid. The preacher in chargo, the Rev. I. L. Hopkins, has ths church-hnilding energy in him, and this was hnt one of sevsral that havs been secured to us hy his ministry. A collection sufficiently impressivo to be remembered was a part of the occasion, and prepared ths honse for its dedication—a free gift to the Lord, without encnmbrance, from the Bayview church.

On the following Wednesday morning I preached at an excellent church of ours—Rucker's chapel—to a good congregatiou of solid, earnest people. Yon wonld hardly conceive that these lines, which depict a very pleasantly-moving panorama of sea and land, of preaching and traveling, give no indication of the increasing sickness nnder which I had been laboring ever since ths Conference at San Joss; and which now, after a full month of strnggle, ends in a lung fsver, and a total winding np, for this year, of my work on the Pacific coast. I returned directly to this point, have called in a physician, and by his skillful treatment hope to hs ahls to start home in a week. It ie ons of the greatest disappointmente I ever suffered not to be able to go to Gilroy. They have bean waiting for two months to have their beantiful house dedicated. It ie to be a reunion of Pacific Confersnce Methodism; and now that the time has come, here am I absolutsly nnable to hold family prayers. Up to the last moment I imagined myself there by eoms means; but as I hsvs seen an ox road-weary, down hy the roadsids, with fsver in every limb, hopelessly given out beyond persuasion, unable even to get up, so am I—having only a good conscience. The dry air of this coast is in great contrast with ths humid atmosphers which I have been hreathing these past twenty-five years, and has suporinduced eoms serious stricture and irritation in my breast and throat.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 4, 1871.

Shortly after writing the above I started for home. The scenery on the Central Pacific and tho Union Pacific railroads, ending in the largely advertised, windy town of Omaha, is dreary heyond speech. The whole can be described in two words: three daye of sand, ono of rocks and two of snow. All the writing and engraving possiblo cannot relieve its boundless monotony. At Omaha I hsard a sermon, from a New England Millenarian, in keeping with this dreadfnl dnllness, and which I shall always consider a part of the trip. Stopped a day at St. Lonis—hopeful, grsat St. Lonis. Found everybody thero in place and hard at work. On my way down the Mohile and Ohio railroad I fell in with companies of preachers going to the North Mississippi Conference at Columbus; and thsn next with Dr. Snmmers, making his way on to Mobile, to tho sssion of the Alahama Conferance. You may bs snre this was liko getting home. The doctor kindlod me up generally, and by hie sound advice I stopped a day at the Couference, though in sight of homo. Bishop Pierce was proeiding. Aud thero before me were many of the nohlest spirits I have ever known—men who took me first hy the hand and introduced me to the privileges and glories of the itinerant life in Southern lands. There wae hut one thing moro to wish for; and that—thanks be to Him who has kept me during the dangore of a long journey!—I now also have: to bs at home.

ARCHBISHOP PINAL and the Bishop of Guatemala had both been expelled from Gnatemala for meddling in the late revolution.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE
OF THE
METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

Thirty-Ninth Session.—First Day.
WEDNESDAY, November 29, 1871.

The annnal session of the Alabama Conferance commenced at nine o'clock A. M., at the St. Francis Street Methodist church, Bishop Pierce presiding.

After singing, and prayer by the presiding Bishop, the roll was called, when the following members answsred to their names:

A. S. Dickinson, J. Hamilton, S. F. Pilley, W. B. Neal, A. H. Mitchell, W. I. Powers, J. Barker, J. W. Shores, W. H. Ellison, B. B. Ross, E. Phillips, H. Urquhart, William Shapard, S. H. Cox, M. S. Andrews, J. Bancroft, J. M. Patton, J. W. Jordan, W. A. McCarty, R. S. Woodward, W. A. Sampey, W. C. Robinson, J. W. Rnsh, Neil Gillie, M. E. Bntt, W. P. H. Connerly, T. F. Mangam, L. Patterson, J. A. Pace, J. E. Fonst, E. S. Smith, S. P. Richardson, A. J. Briggs, W. G. Perry, William S. Turner, T. K. Armstrong, W. W. Graham, M. M. Graham, E. M. Bounds, R. M. Powers, H. M. Gillis, Isaac Spanglor, R. F. Perdne, S. H. Cooper, S. M. Thames, J. M. Brown.

Rev. B. B. Ross was olected secretary, and Rev. J. Marshall Brown assistant secretary.

The districts were then called for the names of lay delegates appointed, and the following were reported, only a part of whom were present:

Mobile District.—A. W. Lampkin, C. W. Bntt, L. A. Jones, John Thames.

Demopolis District.—A. W. Cockrill, S. S. Mellen, Henry Ware, A. K. Ramsay.

Selma District.—P. G. Wood, L. W. Reeves, T. Inloe, J. Bradfield.

Greensboro District.—Daniel Pratt, (by S. P. Smith, alternate,) J. G. L. Huey, John Massey, C. M. Howard.

Montgomery District.—J. H. Harris, E. T. Glenn, H. C. Armstrong, Rev. John G. Motley.

Eufaula District.—T. J. S. Kimborough, E. M. Banks, I. F. Culver, Alto V. Lee.

Marianna District.—P. M. Dowling, John Dowling, A. F. Powers, Robert Crawford.

Camden District.—W. C. Farris, A. R. A. Purifoy, (by —— Padgett, alternate,) John Savage, Samuel Tisdale.

Union Springs District.—R. H. Powell, J. R. Rogers, Rev. P. O. Harper, W. H. Zeigler, (by J. B. Stanley, alternate.)

COMMITTEES.

Sabbath Schools.—A. W. Lampkin, William S. Turner, S. F. Pilley, J. Bancroft, E. D. Pitts and R. S. Woodward appointed.

Education.—A desire being expressed that this committee shonld bs a full one, comprising representatives of all parts of the Conference, J. R. Rogers, J. Massey, S. S. Mellen, J. G. Motley, J. Bradfield, A. J. Briggs, S. P. Richardson, I. Spangler, W. P. H. Connerly, I. F. Culver, J. W. Rush and S. P. Smith wsre appointed.

It was suggested that the committee consist of two from each district, but objection was made to large committees, with which the president coincided. J. Chain, of Pensacola, however, was added, as it was deemed desirable to have a member from that quarter.

The Bible Cause.—C. W. Butt, S. A. Pilley and W. H. Ellison appointed.

Memoirs.—J. W. Shores, E. M. Bounds and W. A. Sampey appointed.

Inquiry being made as to a Committee on Finance, the president replied that they had one.

"Is it full?"

"They fill their own vacancies; the Conference has nothing to do with it."

"Do we need a Committee on Temperance?"

Bishop—"I doubt. We have a very good general rule on the snbject. We have been in the habit of appointing a long time, and I never saw any good of it."

Accompanying the circular of the missionary secretary was a statement of the contributions of the respective Conferences, the largest being about $7,000 each from North and South Georgia; that of the Alabama Conference was $5,000, of the North Alabama $2,000.

On motion of Rev. Dr. Hamilton the plan of last year was renewed, that when the preachers' names are called, each shall read his entire statistics, and Rev. J. E. Foust was appointed to procure the printing of the necessary blanks. In the subsequent proceedings this method was found impracticable in the present instance, as the blanks could not be obtained in time.

The Conference then proceeded with the regular minute business.

First Question—Who are admitted on trial?

Answer—From Greensboro district, John A. Patterson; Montgomery, Joseph Spear and William Scott Wade; Eufaula, William H. Wetherby.

Second Question—Who remain on trial?

The Committee of the First Year reported J. M. Mason, E. D. Saffold, C. J. Nugent and J. M. Brown, who were continued on trial, together with others who were passed for the present in the absence of a full report.

William A. Montgomery was readmitted.

EXAMINATION OF ELDERS.

The rule being that this examination be held with closed doors unless the Conference shall decide otherwise, on motion of Rev. A. H. Mitchell the doors were opened, except as some special case may occur.

A resolution was here offered that the Bishop be requested to make the districts as large as possible, with a view to the most economical distribution of the work. The Bishop remarked that this matter, by law, belonged to his duties. His preference had always been for large districts. If the Conference adopt the resolution, very well, as he liked to be backed up by the Conference; but if not, he should arrange the districts according to his own best judgment. The resolution, which was apparently introduced to elicit an expression of opinion, was withdrawn.

Second Day.

THURSDAY, November 30.

The session of the Conference was resumed at nine o'clock A. M., Bishop G. F. Pierce presiding. Reading the Scriptures, singing, and prayer by Dr. A. H. Mitchell.

After reading the minutes, the minute routine was resumed.

Seventeenth Question—Who are supernumeraries? J. G. Rush.

Sixteenth Question—Who are located? C. C. Ellis, at his own request.

Dr. Hamilton gave notice to members that the theological library of the late Rev. T. W. Dorman is for sale in the city, and contains many books of great value to preachers.

Second Question—Who remain on trial?

Under this head several classes were disposed of. On the question of electing to orders, the inquiry whether or not it were proper for lay delegates to vote was answered affirmatively.

Charles B. DuBose, A. Stacy Douglas, Robert H. Harris, Isaac Z. T. Morris, Clarence J. Nugent and Jare. S. Williams were admitted to full connection and elected to deacon's orders, and were examined touching their calling, and their assent and promise of obedience to the rules of the church.

W. F. Norton, who is an elder, was admitted to full connection.

William M. Winn was admitted to full connection and elected to elder's orders.

Twelfth Question—What traveling preachers are elected elders?

H. M. Gillis and M. J. Law were reported—the latter transferred.

Tenth Question—What local preachers are elected deacons?

James M. Crews and E. R. Williams, of Mobile district, and P. G. Malley, of Greensboro district, were elected.

Fourteenth Question—What local preachers are elected elders?

Pleasant L. Martin, of Mobile district, and Jubal A. Moore, of Union Springs district, elected.

A recommendation was presented from a Quarterly Conference, to recognize as a local elder William J. Hilliard, late of the Methodist Protestant Church, who has been acting under a temporary certificate from Bishop McTyeire. In his absence, and he not having sent up his subscription to the rules of the church, the Bishop decided that the Conference could not give a certificate, nor could the Bishop grant him a temporary certificate, but he must act, for the present, under the authority of Bishop McTyeire.

Dr. J. Hamilton, from a committee appointed at the last Conference, to secure a unification of effort for male education, made a brief report. After two days' consultation the committee had been able to agree upon but one point—a recommendation that there be but one male college; all the members, unfortunately, being personally interested in one or another locality.

Rev. W. A. McCarty thereupon moved that a committee of seven be appointed with full powers for the disposal and direction of the East Alahama Male College, at Auburn, stating that the object was to prevent discussion, and that both parties (the friends of Auburn and of Greensboro) were satisfied with the measure. Adopted, and committee appointed: W. A. McCarty, William Shapard, E. D. Pitts, J. W. Glenn, J. H. Harris, B. B. Ross and O. R. Blue.

P. G. Wood was placed on the Committee on Books and Periodicals, in place of J. W. Glenn, who had leave of absence.

The examination of elders was resumed.

Twentieth Question—Are all the preachers blameless in life and official administration?

Again there was an interesting series of reports of faithful, effective labors, and of trials and struggles under difficulties, but the statements were, as has been intimated, of too personal a nature to be appropriately reported. An exception may be made of the case of Rev. Eugene V. Le Vert, who has recently completed his seventy-sixth year, a preacher for over fifty years, the oldest man in the Conference, and the only one present (the only survivor, we believe, with a single exception) who assisted in 1832 in constituting the Alahama Conference. He had been requested, last year, to preach at this Conference a historical or semi-centennial sermon, hnt had declined, as that was a mode of discourse to which he was unaccustomed. His name heads the list as an active stationed—not supernumerary or superannuated—preacher.

One preacher (this was yesterday) said that for twenty-seven years he had always thought his appointment was the very best in the Conference, bnt a year ago he thought otherwise. It was with difficulty that he found a place for his family, or even for himself, and finally he had to preach in a billiard saloon. For a time he had almost despaired, bnt the blessing had come at last, and he did not think he would ever flinch again. He said this not for his own sake, bnt for that of the younger brethren. Bishop—"Much obliged for that speech; some of them will read it." And we must not forget to mention the case of Bro. Turner, of Pollard, "one of the best preachers among us—polished style;" which was accounted for by the fact that he was raised a printer. As Mr. Shandy said of St. Optat, of course—how should he fail.

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

The hour of noon having arrived, the presiding Bishop announced an intermission of business for Thanksgiving exercises, inasmuch as it became a Christian people to recognize these national appointments.

Dr. Summers, to whom the conduct of the exercises was assigned, commenced them with a hymn, all the congregation standing.

Dr. Hamilton followed with a fervent prayer, in which, while all devoutly joined, we doubt not that the supplication, "Save us from the power and machinations of wicked men in high places," was responded to with the most deep-drawn "amen" of all. How else could it be while human nature remains what it is, and the thought of the authority by which this "national thanksgiving" was proclaimed would not down in any breast?

The hymn, "When all thy mercies, O my God," was then given out by Dr. Summers, and sung by the congregation sitting; and the doctor concluded the services with an impressive prayer, in which the nation, its rulers, the church and the ministry were remembered. Prayer was made "for all that are in authority, that they may fear God, hate covetousness, and work righteousness;" for the end of the evils which now so sorely afflict society, and, to this end, that the people may be brought under the power of the gospel; nor will any who were present soon forget the tone of trust, of confidence, of gratitude which breathed in the acknowledgment, "Though we have done harm to ourselves, and others have done harm to us, thou hast never done us harm!"

Third Day.

FRIDAY, December 1.

The session was opened at nine o'clock A. M., with reading the Scriptures, singing, and prayer by Rev. M. C. Turrentine; Bishop Pierce presiding.

Dr. Summers read the report of the trustees of the Southern University, at Greensboro, which was received and referred to the Committee on Education.

The question, from one of the Quarterly Conferences, was presented to the Bishop: "Is a superannuated preacher a member of a Quarterly Conference; and, if so, of what Quarterly Conference?"

D. C. Stanley, having passed his first year's examination, was continued on trial.

Eighteenth Question—Who are superannuated?

The inquiries under this head brought out interesting remarks by or concerning the veterans of the Conference, quite a number of whom were present. S. T. Pilley reported himself ready to go if wanted, and wherever he was wanted, but not wishing to cumber the work which could be more efficiently performed by young men. William Murrah had not religion enough to make him happy and to be idle, and desired not only to have work, but to have it at the hands of the Conference. It was a strange fancy of Methodist preachers, and he had felt it himself, to have little relish for any work except what they received in charge from the Conference. From his position, it would be acceptable to him to be transferred to the North Mississippi Conference, living, as he did, at the very point where four Conferences meet; but he did not think it Methodistic to transfer a superannuated preacher. M. C. Turrentine received with pain his assignment, last year, to the superannuated list, and his health being greatly restored, would be gland, if it suited the better judgment of the Conference, to be reinstated as an "effective." He entered the ministry in 1821, his first work being in the Little Pedee circuit, South Carolina.

Rev. E. P. Palmer, of the Presbyterian Church, was introduced and welcomed by the Conference.

Of the superannuated who were absent, kindly notices were made. Among them was Zaccheus Dowling, converted in 1810; E. W. Story, superannuated twenty years; G. Garrett—for forty-two years the answer had still been "nothing against Bro. Garrett," but the question would not be asked or answered much longer.

The attention of the Bishop was called to the cases of Elders Giles Luther and Riley M. Pordue, from the Methodist Protestant Church, whose orders were recognized by the last Conference, but to whom the Bishop, from oversight, had failed to give certificates.

Dr. Hamilton read the report of the Legal Conference. The McAllister estate, in Marengo county, had been disposed of for $8,400, part cash, and part in installments, the second of which, not paid when due, had since been secured. A bill of legal fees, due in the matter of the Tuskegee Female College, had been paid. After having been twice paid for, and receiving a loan of $5,000, not to mention law expenses, it seemed to be doubtful to whom it belonged, and there was said to be a claim of $3,000 against it, in judgments.

Eufaula was chosen as the place for holding the next session of the Conference.

A question had been brought up whether drafts on mission account for 1869 ought to be paid out of this year's money, and the Bishop referred it to Dr. Summers as president of the Missionary Board. He, in turn, referred it back, and they both pronounced decidedly that it could not be done. The rule had been adopted that each year must pay for itself—that there can be no such thing as arrearages, and if a preacher's allowance is deficient there is no remedy; nor was there any reason why a distinction should be made between the missions and other work.

Fourth Day.

SATURDAY, December 2.

The Conference resumed its session soon after nine o'clock A. M., Bishop G. F. Pierce presiding. Reading the Scriptures, singing, and prayer by Dr. William Murrah.

Rev. J. Barker, to correct the misapprehension of some lay members, explained that the preference given to Eufaula over Opelika as the place for the next Conference was due to the fact that the Conference had been held at Opelika not very many years ago. Something like a promise was made that Opelika should be the next place selected.

Dr. Summers reminded the Conference that the Publication Society was bringing out a new edition of Watson's Sermons; also things for the little folks.

Rev. S. A. Pilley presented the report of the Committee on Bible Cause. Great destitution exists, but energetic labor is being employed to supply it. Since the war $40,000 worth of Bibles and Testaments have been distributed within the Conference. The resolutions commend the American Bible Society, and indorse the agent, Rev. S. P. Richardson.

On motion of Rev. William Shapard, the vote by which Rev. Morgan C. Turrentine was yesterday placed on the superannuated list, was reconsidered, and he was restored to the effective list.

A resolution was offered by Dr. Mitchell, expressive of a desire that the meetings of the Conference be held later, and nearer to the Christmas holidays, as the present arrangement interferes with the financial business—has interfered at this session, though not so much as was feared. One member remarked that since he had been here he had received a remittance of $25 from his stewards in a postoffice order, they not having been able to get the money before. It was suggested that the change would interfere with the attendance of lay members, who would be busy about Christmas in renting, hiring, etc.; but it was answered that a postponement of two weeks is as much as is asked for. The resolution was adopted.

Rev. J. W. Rush presented the report of the Committee on Education, giving a favorable report of the principal institutions under the charge of the Conference, as to financial condition, (in part prospective,) attendance, revivals, etc. Among the male students are twelve candidates for the ministry. The report recommended that the Legal Conference be instructed to take steps to perfect the title of the Tuskegee Female College; the fostering of the schools of the Conference, and the establishment (as extensively as circumstances permitted) of parochial schools; all which resolutions were adopted.

Prof. Price, president of Tuskegee Female College, spoke of the condition of that institution, and explained the history of the Thompson fund. This, amounting to $16,000, was in 1859 parceled out among three institutions, $4,000 being appropriated to Tuskaloosa, $7,000 to Summerfield, and $5,000 to Tuskegee. The last was directed to paying the debts of the college, but on the condition that the college be responsible for the interest, at eight per cent., to be devoted to the free education of the daughters of the preachers of the Conference. It was so appropriated, but in 1867 the institution had so declined that the boarding department was closed; but since that time such as applied had been received and boarded without charge.

The report as a whole was then adopted, including the nominations for the respective boards, as follows:

Tuskegee Female College.—R. F. Ligon, B. F. Howard, J. B. Bilbro, Dr. W. J. Gautier, J. G. Motley, J. E. Cobb, J. L. Adams, R. H. Wood, Colonel J. W. Portis, Dr. C. M. Howard, M. Tatum, Dr. W. Haden, J. R. Rogers, O. R. Blue, M. S. Andrews, Dr. J. Hamilton, Dr. A. S. Andrews, W. Shapard, W. A. McCarty, A. J. Briggs, J. W. Shores, W. M. Motley, J. W. Rush, B. B. Ross, E. M. Bounds, Dr. E. Wadsworth, E. L. Smith.

Centenary Institute.—Dr. A. H. Mitchell, Dr. J. Hamilton, S. P. Richardson, M. S. Andrews, George F. Ellis, Silas H. Cox, J. W. Shores, T. F. Mangum, A. J. Briggs, J. W. Rush, J. Barker, Mark Canning, J. W. Barker, Euclid Johnson, J. R. John, Hon. W. Byrd, Hon. J. E. Cobb, Dr. R. D. Jackson, A. J. Phares.

A. W. Lampkin presented the report on Sunday schools. Omitting the matters pertaining to the general statistical report, this dwelt more upon the practical working of the schools, 283 of which were reported, being an increase of 88. Of these, 128 used the uniform lessons; 253 were reported successful, and of the 30 not successful only 2 used the uniform lessons. Only 84 were kept up throughout the year. During the year 1,175 members had been received into the churches from the schools. The deficiencies exhibited by this report formed the basis of valuable pertinent suggestions, among which was the importance of pastors giving their personal attention to the schools, which they would find to be not an addition, but an aid to their labors.

Dr. Wadsworth presented the report of the old missionary debt, showing $1,768 paid, out of $1,850 assumed and subscribed. In discussion the deficiency was, in part at least, explained. Some preachers who had pledged themselves to raise a certain amount, that is, in their new field, found on reaching it that their predecessors, on returning from Conference, had made their collections there, instead of waiting until they arrived at their new work. Time was given until March 1 to make up the deficiencies.

Rev. W. A. McCarty presented a report on books and periodicals. The periodical literature of the church is extending in circulation, and improving in many respects. There is still need, in some quarters, of improvement in taste, a little more sprightliness, and, moreover, a religious paper ought to be religious. The Southern Quarterly was recommended. Sunday school literature has greatly improved, and is improving. The central organ of the church, the Nashville Christian Advocate, was recommended, and members were urged to exert themselves for it wherever it can be circulated without damage to the organ of this Conference, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Report adopted.

Rev. J. W. Shores, from the Committee on Memoirs, read a brief memoir of Rev. J. Phillips Dickinson. He was born in Lenoir county, North Carolina, March 17, 1802; joined the church in 1819, and died July 30, 1871, after laboring more than half a century as an exhorter, local and itinerant preacher; having been licensed to exhort in 1820, and to preach in 1824; ordained deacon December 18, 1831, and elder in December, 1836. After laboring in Georgia till 1858, he was transferred to Alabama, where he continued till his death, having been superannuated in 1868.

Dr. Summers called the attention of the Conference to the newly projected University, indorsed by several Conferences that had appointed committees, each consisting of three preachers and three laymen, to meet together and deliberate on the plan, which contemplates a higher order of education, somewhat on the European plan, with a department for the education of ministers already licensed and looking to the itinerancy. He moved the appointment of a like committee, which was agreed to, and Drs. T. O. Summers, J. Hamilton and A. H. Mitchell, and Messrs. William Byrd, D. Clopton and S. S. Mellen were appointed.

A second report of the Committee on Books and Periodicals was read, having special reference to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. This was the recognized organ of the Alabama Conference, and the duty

Obituaries.

GEORGE LEAKE, son of David and Rachel D. Willis, was born November 26, 1867, and died near New Iberia, Louisiana, of congestion, November 4, 1871.

W. C. HAISLIP.

REV. J. Y. REGISTER was born in Washington county, Georgia, December 3, 1818, and died in Geneva county, Alabama, August 5, 1871. He was married to Miss Margaret Campbell, March 12, 1840, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church about the same time. He was licensed to preach in the year 1841, and moved to Alabama in 1844.

Bro. Register was a local preacher in our church for twenty-seven years, during which time he was employed to fill several pastoral charges within the bounds of the Mariana district, Alabama Conference. These charges he served with acceptability. The present year he was employed by the writer to take charge of the Calhoun mission, and he had just made one round when he was taken sick. In that one round, however, he made such a deep and favorable impression for good that the people will never forget him. From this round he returned home with the seeds of disease and death sown in his system, and after some weeks of lingering and suffering he passed gently and peacefully from earth to glory.

Bro. Register was a noble man. He lived in the midst of numerous friends, and died regretted by a wide circle of acquaintances. He leaves a wife and several devoted children to mourn his death.

CAROLINA INSURANCE COMPANY.—The card of this company appears on the fifth page. It is a sufficient guarantee that the company is sound, and in all respects worthy the confidence of all true Southern men, when we say that the Hon. Jeff. Davis is its president. Its vice president, Moses J. Wicks, is one of the wealthy men of the South. Those contemplating assurance would do well to investigate the claims of this Southern Mutual Insurance Company, and to give their aid and influence in extending its business by insuring their lives, and persuading those of their friends who may want assurance. It is one of the solid institutions of the South, and which ought to commend itself to the patronage of the Southern people. We can recommend this company to our friends. Parties will do well to call and see their general agent for Louisiana, Mr. West, and be will convince them. We are satisfied that the Carolina is a sound company.

BOOTS, SHOES, TRUNKS, ETC.—We can recommend Mr. William Hogan, Nos. 99 and 101 Canal street, to our friends, both in the city and country, when they require anything in the boot and shoe line. Mr. Hogan has been in business in this city since 1843, and has built up a good business mainly through honest and fair dealing. Call and see him. Mr. Hogan is also agent for the Empire Sewing Machine.

GOOD WAGONS.—We commend to the attention of those who wish to purchase wagons of superior manufacture the advertisement of Messrs. Harper, Gutman & Co. It is well worth the time to examine their stock.

DR. F. FOLLIN, assisted by G. S. Blanc, 165 Canal street, promises speedy relief to those suffering from diseases of the throat, lungs and heart. We refer our readers to the card in another column.

SHIRTS.—We heartily recommend Mrs. Parrish to our friends who enjoy a good-fitting shirt. She guarantees to fit in all cases. See advertisement and give her a call.

PACKWOOD & BROTHER.—Call and see the Messrs. Packwood, grocers, at 95 and 97 Camp street, if you want something good in their line for Christmas.

Instructions for shipping should be full and explicit. A little care in this respect may prevent weeks of delay, for which we cannot be held responsible, when it results from haste or carelessness in the instructions.

In remitting, Agents who have accounts with the Book concern, as well as the ADVOCATE, should, in all cases, state to which account the amount remitted is to be applied.

SELF-EVIDENT FACTS.

THE CELEBRATED ARGYLE BITTERS, so long distinguished for their unrivalled efficacy as a Tonic, and for the purity of the articles used in their manufacture, are now offered for sale at reduced prices.

They combine all the elements of a first-rate family medicine—simplicity in manufacture, healthful and tonic ingredients, efficacy in action, and perfect safety in their use, for any age or condition.

Unlike all other Bitters, they do not increase the desire for alcoholic stimulation, by their peculiar action upon the digestive organs, serve rather to subdue the desire for strong drinks, as can be testified to by thousands of our most respected professional and business men of every degree and condition.

They are Tonic, Alterative and Invigorating, and are a safe family medicine for either sex or for any age.

For sale by all leading merchants throughout the country. no16 1m

THE CHILDREN'S OFFERING.

I am but a penny
From a baby hand;
Can I bear glad tidings
Over all the land?
Baby's love goes with me,
So her penny's blest;
God's love joined with baby's
Will do all the rest.

I'm a piece of paper,
Worth ten cents, they say;
Ah! that boy worked for me,
Giving up his play;
Digging in the garden,
Though he longed to run
Where his young companions
Joined in boyish fun.

I'm a silver "quarter:"
Little stitches neat,
And full many an errand
Ran by childish feet,
Earned me very bravely.
Little girls can do
Noble work for missions.
When they're good and true.

I'm a bright gold dollar:
Ah! the child who died
Loved me, 'mid her treasures,
More than all beside.
One sad, mourning mother
Held me very dear,
And my bright face glistens
With her parting tear.

Surely God will bless us—
Some a little "all"—
As into the treasury
Of the Lord we fall.
Dropping, dropping, dropping,
Off'rings great and small;
Dropping, dropping, dropping,
Hear us as we fall!

JOHNNY AND THE CIRCUS.

"Oh, mamma, do let me go to the show! There are so many pretty horses, red caps, monkeys and everything I want to see."

"Won't you stay with mamma and little sister?"

"Well, all the boys are going, and I won't have any one to play with me. I have some money. Do let me go!"

"I do not object so much to giving you money to spend for your pleasure occasionally, my son; but I dislike for you to go to a circus. I fear you will see and hear many things that I would not have my boy to hear. I'll play with you. We'll build a pretty house, and I'll tell you some nice stories, and you shall buy what you please with your money."

"Well, mamma, I'll stay."

They gathered Johnny's toys, and were soon busy enough playing; for as he was only nine years old, he had not given them up entirely. While he was busy making a house with his blocks, and his mother weaving her pretty stories, all among the little walls they heard the wild music pealing through the air, giving a quicker step, a merrier laugh and a louder hurrah to every one who heard it. Looking from the window, they beheld the magnificent car, drawn by the snowy horses. Crowds were following close after, making the welkin ring with their cheers.

"Oh, mamma, let me go," said Johnny.

"Go, Johnny, if you will. I won't make you stay, for fear the ungratified wish might do you more harm than going. But I wish you would stay with us."

A thoughtful expression came over the face of the little boy. After a moment he said: "Mamma, I'll stay." They watched the car until it passed by, and were soon busy again.

They had enjoyed themselves some time, when Johnny thought of his money. "Mamma, what shall I buy?"

"What would you like to have? I want you to please yourself."

He named in order the toys he could think of, but nothing seemed worthy of the money he had saved by self-denial. At last he said: "Mamma, whatever you say I'll do."

"Would you like to get something for little Mattie?"

"Yes'm. I would so. I wonder what she would like to have?"

"Perhaps you could go to see her and find out."

"Yes'm, I'll go if you say so."

After his mother's consent was gained, he found his cap, and putting his money in his pocket, and taking a book in his hand, he was soon out of sight.

Now little Mattie was quite a favorite with Johnny. In the bloody strife her father had found a lowly resting place in a distant State. "The smiles of his children awaited him in vain," and he was sleeping too far away for that lonely widow to cull from the sacred spot the tiny daisies, and plant in their places the modest forget-me-nots. She grieved for this; but it was not the only sorrow that clouded her heart. Not long after the death of her father, Mattie, with her mother and little brother, were riding out. The horses became frightened, and while the mother was vainly trying to cling to Mattie, as well as to the tender babe in her arms, they were all thrown from the carriage. The mother and babe escaped with a few bruises, but poor little Mattie had both limbs broken just above the knees. Very sadly looked the kind-hearted physician after his first visit. "She might live," he said, "but she would never walk."

All through the long, cold nights of that dreary winter did the mother watch the little sufferer. When the birds began to carol their songs upon the budding branches of the oak at the door, little Mattie was strong enough to sit at the window and breathe the fragrance of the spring flowers.

With all this sorrow the widow's cup was not full. She lived to see all her earthly goods swept away, and she was compelled to earn her bread by her needle. It was then that she felt how kind had been her Heavenly Father in sparing the little crippled girl; for all through the long days her merry tongue cheered her mother's heart, and when that mother was too sad to answer her many questions, her plaintive voice would pour forth a melodious strain, so full of trusting pathos that the mother would forget her sorrows in seeing the little girl so resigned to her fate. It was not strange that Mattie had many friends, and it was rarely the case that she was sad. When Johnny reached the cottage he was surprised to find her in tears. He approached her gently, and, taking her hand, asked what it was that troubled her. At first she refused to say; but her little heart was pining for sympathy, and she could not keep her sorrows from one who had always been so kind.

She told Johnny that her mother was away, and when she saw the children all going to see the wonderful sights, looking so gay and happy, it made her feel so sad to think she must stay all alone. She said, too, that so many of them had such rosy-cheeked apples, and she felt as though she would enjoy one so much. She knew, she said, if her kind papa, who, they said, was sleeping in his narrow home far away, could come back, he would bring her the pretty apples, and her mamma could stay with her all the while. Johnny brushed from his eyes the big tears which had somehow found their way there while Mattie was talking; but it did not escape her observation, and she felt comforted to know that she had some one to weep with her. Johnny showed her a nice book he had brought, and while she was looking at the pictures he skipped out and gathered the flowers he knew she loved. She soon forgot her sorrows; and her mother, coming in a while afterward, did not know that the clouds had hovered over her little girl. While Mattie was telling her how she had spent the evening, Johnny left the room, and, going to the nearest store, invested his money in the prettiest apples he could find. Oh how his little heart did swell with pleasure as he placed them in Mattie's lap, and she lifted those sweet blue eyes, so full of grateful tears. Without waiting to hear the thanks he knew were trembling on her lips, he ran out the door, and was soon with his mother. "Oh, mamma," he exclaimed, "how glad I am that I stayed with you." He then related to his mother all that had happened, and told her he would rather have comforted Mattie than to have gone to a thousand shows. "You see," said the loving mother, "how much more blessed it is to give than to receive."

EYES AND NO EYES.

You have all read the story in the school readers of the two boys who went over the same route, one with his eyes open, and the other with them shut. It is old, but worth repeating and worth remembering every day; so many things slip by us, so many things worth knowing go on right under our eyes without being noticed.

I knew a man—I think I may have told you of him before—a busy man, who had very little time for reading or study, but whose mind was a perfect storehouse of information on almost every subject.

"How does it happen that you know so much more than the rest of us?" I asked him one day.

"O," said he, "I never had time to lay in a regular stock of learning, so I save all the bits that come in my way, and they count up a good deal in the course of the year."

"That boy," said a gentleman, "always seems to be on the lookout for something to see."

So he was; and while waiting in a newspaper office for a package, he learned, by using his eyes, how a mailing machine was operated. While he waited at the florist's he saw the man setting a great box of cuttings, and learned, by the use of his eyes, what he never would have guessed, that slips rooted best in nearly pure sand.

"This is lapis lazuli," said the jeweler to his customer; "and this is chrysoprase."

And the wide-awake errand-boy turned around from the door to take a sharp look, so that in the future he knew just how those two precious stones looked. In one day he learned of the barber what became of the hair clippings; of the carpenter, how to drive a nail so as not to split the wood; of the shoemaker, how the different surfaces of fancy leathers are made; of a locust, that his mouth was of no use to him in singing; from a scrap of newspaper, where sponges are obtained; and from an old Irish woman, how to keep stove-pipes from rusting. Only bits and fragments of knowledge, but all of them worth saving, and all helping to increase the stock in trade of the boy who meant to be a man.—Little Corporal.

DOES GOD HEAR?—Arthur, in the angry haste of the moment, swore. No sooner had he time to think than he felt bad about it, very. It was the first time, and the first time sinning pricks the conscience awfully.

"Never mind," said his cousin; "never mind; I would not trouble myself about it"; perhaps God didn't hear.

What does the Bible say about that? Does God hear?

EVERY BIT OF IT.—One evening, at a prayer meeting, many newly converted persons, both old and young, arose to tell what God had done for their souls. Among the rest a little girl about seven years old jumped up, her face beaming with happiness, and said: "I have given my heart to Jesus, every bit of it."

The Farm and Garden.

A CHEAP GREENHOUSE.

In reply to a correspondent the Farmer and Gardener, of Augusta, Georgia, gives the following directions for the construction of a cheap greenhouse:

A good greenhouse, suitable to amateur horticulturists, can be constructed at far less expense than is generally thought. The few greenhouses that we find at rare intervals are, as a rule, constructed at considerable expense as compared to their size, and unfit to grow plants in.

We will suppose that our correspondent needs but a small house, say twenty-five by twelve feet. Our plan for a building of this size would be to sink the floor two to three feet below the level of the soil; this has many advantages over houses built entirely out of the ground. The foundation walls should be made of brick, or, where material is at hand, of concrete. If the latter is used dig a trench one foot wide to the required depth; line the inside with rough boards, and fill up with stones, gravel and mortar. The soil of the inside can be dug out afterward, and this will give a solid and economical foundation. The roof should be what is termed span roof. We object to lean to or single pitch houses. Plants will require more attention in the latter, and must frequently be turned to prevent growing one-sided. The light is equally distributed in a span-roof house, and obviates this drawback.

The roof should be formed of portable sashes seven feet long by three or three and a half feet wide. Every alternate sash is screwed fast to the sill and ridge pole. The others are movable, and elevated by an iron bar attached to the sash by a staple. The bar can be hooked upon an iron pin in the ridge pole when the sash is open for ventilation. The interior arrangements of the house consist of a table of four feet wide on each side, leaving a walk in the middle. The ends of the house to be of inch plank. A common brick flue running on one side of the house will answer for all the necessary heating apparatus—the flue to be of bricks placed edge upon edge. When bottom heat is required to propagate plants, or for other purposes, it is advisable to board up the side of the table under which the flue runs, one board to be hinged so low as to throw the heat all over the house if needed.

The tables are to be covered with an inch of sand, upon which the pots are placed, and in a house of this description nearly all classes of plants can be grown. We do not advise, however, to keep the temperature at a high degree, especially if a miscellaneous collection of plants are placed in the house, as it would not suit hard-wooded and half-hardy plants to be forced in vegetation early in the winter, but advise that fire will only be made to keep the thermometer from getting too low in extreme cold weather. A simple covering of gunny bagging rolled on the outside of the glass during the night will, in ordinary weather, be sufficient to keep the temperature at the desirable degree without fire heat.

The cost of such a house need not be over $150, if constructed in a plain but substantial manner; where the work is partly performed by the amateur a lesser sum will cover the cost of construction.

THICK AND THIN SOWING OF WHEAT.

Wherever the question of thick and thin sowing of wheat has been carefully tested by actual experiment during a series of years, judgment has been strongly pronounced in favor of thin sowing. The question is one of great importance to Southern farmers, and yet it is one to which they have generally given but little attention. Indeed, we believe that a majority of them favor thick sowing, even to the extent of a bushel and a half, or two bushels to the acre, when the land is rich. If the opinion of the most experienced wheat raisers in England be entitled to any weight, this practice not only involves a heavy loss in the waste of seed, but a positive injury to the crop. They have made elaborate experiments to test the matter thoroughly, and they have arrived at the conclusion that the more grains sown the fewer the number of ears to each grain per acre. By thorough preparation of the soil, heavy manuring, the use of the best and purest seed, and allowing one foot square of soil to each seed, the authors of the experiments to which we refer have raised as much as one hundred and sixty-two bushels per acre, and, as the general result of all the experiments, they say that "the yield is at least doubled by thin sowing." Mr. Mechi, of Tiptree farm, one of the most noted scientific farmers in England, says that the thick sowing of wheat is a "great national calamity," and that "more crops fail to yield well from too much seed sown than from too little manure."

Liebig, the great agricultural chemist, says that "the greatest enemy to a wheat plant is another wheat plant, for the very obvious reason that both require the same food. Small heads and kernels, and weak, flabby straw are the natural consequences of this competition."

Broadcast sowing of wheat has almost entirely disappeared among English farmers. They sow all their small grain with a grain drill, leaving the drills not less than a foot apart, and regulating the machine so as to drop one seed at every foot. By selecting the finest heads of wheat before cutting, picking out by hand all the best grains, and rejecting all that are defective or small, they secure seed which never fails to produce a perfect stand. Mechi never sows more than one bushel to the acre. He made the experiment of sowing one bushel per acre against two bushels, both drilled, and the drills the same distance apart, and the difference in favor of the one bushel was, he says, equal to a rent of thirty shillings per acre. We believe that the experience of those who have tested the question in our country will corroborate the English opinion. Dr. J. S. Hamilton, of Columbia, one of the most skillful and enterprising planters in Georgia, as well as one of the most extensive planters, told us, if we remember correctly, that one of the best crops of wheat he ever raised was from a sowing of less than half a bushel to the acre.—Southern Farm and Home.

PLASTER FOR CORN.—A correspondent of the Rural New Yorker says: "The past season I used plaster alone on one piece of corn, skipping two rows each side of the unplastered. This was a triangular-shaped field of one acre and one-fourth. The corn on the two not plastered weighed one hundred and eighty-two pounds; shortest rows, plastered, two hundred and twenty-four pounds; longest rows, plastered, two hundred and seventy-four pounds; or about one hundred pounds of corn by using plaster to seventy-three pounds where not used. There were one hundred and fifty bushels of corn on this piece."

THE GREAT STRAWBERRY TRADE.—J. B. Lyman says that in 1866 Norfolk sent to New York about a hundred crates of strawberries a week for three weeks, now Norfolk sends 10,000 crates a week by water, and 3,000 a week by car. The Wilson is the principal variety. H. T. Williams says the amount from Norfolk to New York is 1,500,000 quarts; and from the Delaware peninsula 3,000,000 quarts; that New Jersey sends to New York and to Philadelphia nearly 2,000,000 quarts; and that the borders of the Hudson river send annually to Boston 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 quarts.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

THE discovery has been made that grape leaves make a yeast in some respects superior to hops, as the bread rises sooner and has not the peculiar taste which many object to in that made from hops.

MOLASSES DROP CAKE.—One cup of molasses, half a cup of butter or lard, half a cup of water, three cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of ginger, one teaspoonful of soda. Beat well together, and drop with a spoon on a buttered pan, or in muffin-rings. Bake quickly.

TO RESTORE FURNITURE.—An old cabinet-maker says the best preparation for cleaning picture frames and restoring furniture, especially that somewhat marred or scratched, is a mixture of three parts of linseed oil and one part spirits of turpentine. It not only covers the disfigured surface, but restores wood to its original color, and leaves a luster upon the surface. Put on with a woolen cloth, and when dry, rub with woolen.

THE following is a new French plan of making bread from the whole wheat: The wheat is washed in water, which cleans and swells it considerably. It is then tumbled in a plate-iron cylinder rough upon the inside, so as to rasp off the chief and coarser part of the skin of the wheat. Then there is another soak in lukewarm water with a little yeast, which bleaches and swells the kernels still more. Finally, the drained wheat is crushed between rollers into a pasty mass, salted, leavened, risen, and baked in loaves.

LEMON CAKE.—Two cups of flour, two of sugar, six eggs, six tablespoonfuls of butter, four of milk, two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar sifted with the flour, and one teaspoonful of soda. Beat all well together, and bake in two loaves. For the jelly to use with it, take three-fourths of a pound of sugar, one-fourth of a pound of butter, six eggs, the rind of three lemons grated, and the juice. Beat the sugar, butter and eggs thoroughly together, and set in a dish of hot water until heated, then add the grated lemon and juice; stir until thick enough, then split the cake and put this jelly in while warm. It is very delicious.

TO CRYSTALIZE FLOWERS.—Construct some baskets of fancy form with pliable copper wire and wrap them with gauze. Into these tie to the bottom violets, ferns, geranium leaves—in fact any flowers except full-blown roses—and sink them in a solution of alum, of one pound to a gallon of water, after the solution has cooled. The colors will then be preserved in their original beauty, and the crystalized alum will hold faster than when from a hot solution. When you have a light covering of crystals that completely covers the articles, remove the basket carefully, and allow to drip for twelve hours. These baskets make a beautiful parlor ornament, and for a long time preserve the freshness of the flowers.—Journal of Chemistry.

MEDICAL.

The New Louisiana Remedy
FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as
G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,
and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.
A Purely Vegetable Compound
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF
RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.
THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.
The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.
What the Annihilator Will Do.
1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.
2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.
3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.
PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

Scientific.

It is very commonly understood that water expands in freezing. The law that heat expands and that cold contracts meets an exception in the case of ice. M. Boussingault has been trying experiments to determine whether freezing will be prevented nuder conditions that forbid expansion. He constructed a stout cylinder, which was filled with water, and upon which a cap was screwed down. This was then reduced to a temperature of eleven degrees below zero without freezing, as evidenced by an iron ball within the apparatus which still moved freely, as it could not have done if there had been ice. Immediately on removing the cap the water turned into ice.

A very novel theory was recently presented in the Academio des Sciences, called by its author—M. Latterade—"The Theory of Two Suns." He contends that the warm period which is demonstrated hy the presence of tropical fossils in Sweden and Norway was produced by the proximity of a very powerful star, which had given to the earth an immense quantity of heat, and which from that time has receded in the abyss of celestial space. He also contends that the supplementary sun has not disturbed the elements of the planets, because its attractive power was smaller than its warming power. He states, moreover, that the warming power does not vary according to the mass, like the attractive power.

The history of the introduction of India rubber overshoes is not a little curious. We must rely on the Scientific American for its authenticity. Before 1821 the rubber had been imported only in the form of curiosities, such as crocodiles, turtles, and other objects. A sea captain at that time brought, among other devices, some rubber wrought in the shape of small shoes, and gave them as a present to an intelligent boy. They were closed over the top, and our hero cut them open to find only some clay within in the form of lasts. His next desire was to put them on his feat, but as they would not stretch enough, he used boiling water to soften them, and then succeeded in his purpose. To color them he used ink which soon washed off, but finally hit upon the plan of smoking them up in the chimney. He then had complete the first India rubber shoes ever used in this country, and his success was the beginning of a business which has now immense proportions.

The Mud at the Bottom of the Sea.—It is a curious fact that the precise nature of the mud which is formed at the bottom of the sea has been only recently determined. It is found, on analysis, to consist largely of organic matter, more or less decomposed, interspersed with minute round bodies about sixteen-one-hundredths of an inch in diameter. These bodies have been called coccospheres and coccolites, and are so set in the mud as to resemble mosaic work. Some of these look under the microscope like thick watch glasses. Immense numbers of minute shells are also found. The mud is excessively sticky, being rendered so by minute pellets of a jelly-like consistency. These pellets are dotted all over their surface, and are found to contain great numbers of granules, from one-four-thousandth to one-twenty-thousandth of an inch in diameter; they are undoubtedly organic in their character, forming, perhaps, one of the representatives of the assumed ground between plants and animals.

The Nutritive Value of Milk.—Dr. Oliver C. Wiggin, of Providence, Rhode Island, bears the following testimony to the value of milk:

The nutritive value of milk, as compared with other kinds of animal food, is not generally appreciated. There is less difference between the economical value of milk and beefsteak (or eggs or fish) than is commonly supposed. The quantity of water in a good quality of milk is 86 per cent., in round steak 75 per cent., in fatter beef 60 per cent., in eggs about 68 per cent. From several analyses, made last winter, I estimated sirloin steak, (reckoning loss from bone,) at 35 cents a pound, as dear as milk at 24 cents a quart; round steak, at 20 cents a pound, as dear as milk at 14 cents a quart; eggs, at 30 cents a dozen, as dear as milk at 20 cents a quart. Many laborers who pay 17 cents for corned beef would consider themselves hardly able to pay 10 cents for milk, when, in fact, they could as well afford to pay 15 cents. Milk is a most wholesome and economical food for either rich or poor. It ought to be more largely used. If the money expended for veal and pork were expended for milk, I doubt not it would be an advantage both to the stomach and pocket, especially during the warm season. Relatively speaking, then, milk at 10 cents, or even 12 cents a quart, is the cheapest animal food that can be used.

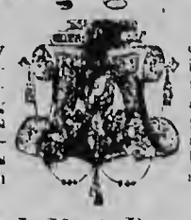
"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,



An Association composed of many of the several Southern States, feel—School Books which should be unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern the facts of history and science—of School and College Text-books and educators named below, which of the most eminent citizens of ing the necessity for a series of tirely unsectional, unpartisan, and should not be offensive to the people—which should present only are now issuing a complete series by the eminent Southern scholars are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

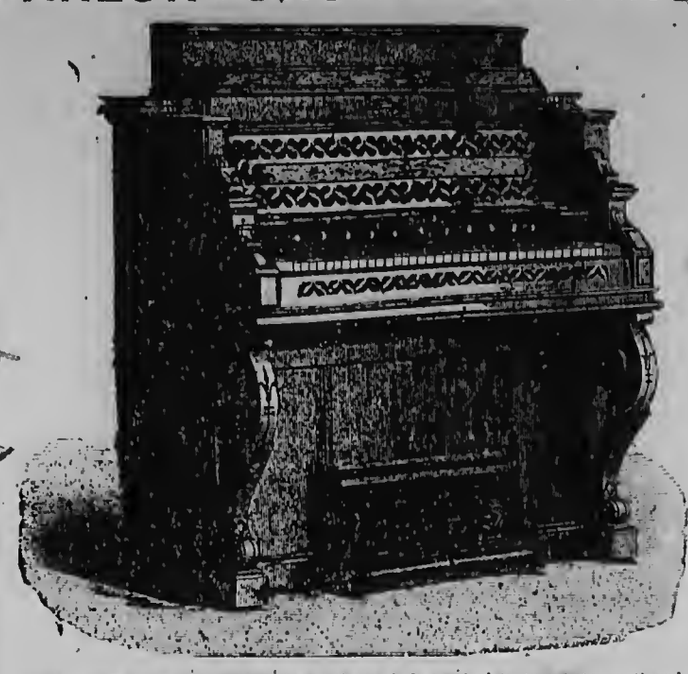
ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.



To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO STOPS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION and Elegance of Design.

All material used in the construction of our Instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All Instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The general market has presented no new features since our last issue. Most branches of the wholesale trade have done a fair business, but from some we hear repeated complaints of unusual dullness for this time of the year. Corn has come forward more freely, and the previous improvement has hardly been maintained. Pork is in light supply and has ruled at firm prices. Bacon has shown no material variation.

On Saturday the weather was inclement and rainy, on Sunday alternately clear and cloudy, on Monday clear but cold, followed by a hard freeze during the night, and on Tuesday clear but cold for this latitude. As yet we have had no intelligence from the country of the effect of this severe change, but there is little doubt that it has killed whatever cane remained in the field, as well as all the green bolls of cotton. In fact all hopes of any considerable yield from the late top-crop have been abandoned, and there is a general disposition to reduce crop estimates.

The river is 13 feet 9 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the first instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	16,962
Mobile.....	3,083
Florida.....	11
Texas.....	399
Total.....	20,455

On Saturday the movement was checked by the stringency of the money market and difficulty in passing exchange, which confined the sales to 3,800 bales. Prices at the same time exhibited some irregularity, opening easier, showing more firmness subsequently, and closing flat. On Monday the same causes continued to check the movement, and foreign exchange gave way ⅛@¼ ₱ cent., yet the demand improved and continued active throughout the day, resulting in sales of 7,100 bales, while prices, being strengthened by the New York and Liverpool telegrams, ruled much more in favor of factors, closing at an advance of ⅛c. in the higher grades, and ⅛@¼c. in the medium and lower. On Tuesday the market opened with a good demand and at stiffer prices, which were strengthened by encouraging telegrams from Liverpool and New York, and several buyers operating quite heavily the sales summed up 8,450 bales, which is 550 bales in excess of the largest previous business this season. Prices at the same time continued to exhibit an upward tendency, and the closing quotations showed a further advance of fully ⅛c., making the entire advance since Friday ¼@⅜c. in good middling and strict middling, and ⅜c. in middling and the lower grades.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 258,205 bales, against 326,303 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 171,039 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 65,073 to France, and a decrease of 112,813 to Great Britain, and of 45,521 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

STEAM.—The market has been firmer, with a good demand since our last review. The supplies on Saturday and Monday, embracing 2,500 hogsheads, were mostly sold at 6@6¼c. for inferior, 6¾@7c. for common, 7¼@7½c. for good common, 7¾@8¼c. for fair, 8⅝@8¾c. for good fair, 9@9½c. for fully fair, 9¾@10c. for prime, 10¼c. for strictly prime, 10¼@10½c. for strictly prime to choice, 8@9¾c. for seconds, 10¾@11¼c. for yellow clarified, and 10¾@12c. for white.

MOLASSES.—The supplies have been disposed of, but at easier prices for buyers. On Tuesday the demand was slack, and prices ruled lower. The supplies were mostly disposed of, however, embracing 1,000 bbls., at 20@25c. for inferior, 27@30c. for common, 33@36c. for fair, 38@41c. for prime, and 42c. for strictly prime, a few lots of choice commanding 44@45c. ₱ gallon.

PORK.—The stock is light, and the market is firmer, with an active demand. On Tuesday the demand was good, and 811 bbls. mess sold, of which one lot sold at $14 75, and five lots heavy weight, on the landing, at $15 ₱ bbl. It is retailing at $15.25@$15.50.

BACON.—The market has not shown much animation since our last review. Clear rib sides are in light supply, and shoulders are in fair supply, but clear sides are plentiful and dull. On Tuesday 60 casks sold, in three lots, at 7¾c. for shoulders, and 8c. for clear sides; and 5 casks clear sides on private terms.

HAMS.—There is little or no demand for them, and prices are nominal. On Tuesday 5 tierces new choice sugar-cured hams, uncanvassed, sold at 15½c. ₱ lb.

DRY SALT MEAT.—On Tuesday the market was quiet but steady, and shoulders were quoted at 5¾@6c. ₱ lb. 10 casks shoulders sold at 6c., and 10 boxes clear sides at 6¾c.

LARD.—Tierces are quoted at 9@9¼c. for packers', and 9½c. for refined; kegs 9¾@10c. for packers', and 10¼@10½c. for refined.

BREAKFAST BACON.—Prices are still lower, and are now quoted nominally at 9½@10c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request, and opened on Tuesday at 110¾@110¾, (against 110½ at New York,) and closed at 110⅜@110⅝, (against 110⅝ at New York.)

American half dollars are quoted at 108¾@109⅛, and Mexican dollars at 1¾@2¼ per cent. premium in gold.

NOTE—Bishop Early, being superannuated, is without appointments. He will visit such Conferences as he may find convenient.

Centenary College Mass Meeting.

There will be held at the Lyceum Hall, opposite Lafayette Square, New Orleans, on the evening of December 6, at half-past seven o'clock, a meeting in the interest of Centenary College. The friends of home education, the alumni of the college, and all the members of our church in the patronizing Conferences are especially invited to attend. We will have addresses from some of the first men of the State.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"
IS THE "KING"
Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some fuel wood or coal, and cost the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. The Christian Advocate.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1871. NO. 48.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 6.—Hon. J. M. Smith, speaker of the House, has bsen nominated by the Democratic convention for Governor.

The Democrats elect a full ticket by a large majority, in the mnnicipal election to-day.

Washington, Dec. 6.—Senate.—Senator Anthony introduced a bill amending the election act, making it a criminal offsnse to use any writing, device, token, word or gesture with intent to intimidate voters, or counseling or indirectly procuring the use of snch means of intimidation.

Senator Robertson, of South Carolina, endeavored to introduce an amnesty bill, but was declared out of order.

Senate then adjonrned.

House.—This body had the apportionment bill under consideration, but reached no conclusion.

In the Ku-klux Committee Mr. Stevenson offered a resolution removing political disahilities, extending the time which the writ of habeas corpns may be suspended, and making every member of the Ku-klux or other treasonable conspiration responsible civilly and criminally for the acts of their fellow-members.

Vicksburo, Dec. 6.—The Repnblicans elected the whole city ticket, except two aldsrmen.

Omaha, Dec. 6.—Tbe snow is still drifting. Twsnty freight cats on the Pacific railroad are piled by encountering a drift at Sherman. Othsr trains are reported off tho track. Passengers complain of the exactions hy division superintendents and hotel keepers. The road is practically hlockaded for the present. The supply of coal is nearly exhausted, and many are using corn for fnel.

New York, Dec. 9.—The committee of Internationals who made application for permission to parade to-morrow, received the following from Governor Hoffman's private secretary:

"I am directed hy the Governor to say that the law places the whole matter of paradss on Sunday in the hands of the police authorities."

The committee met to-night, and denunciatory addresses were delivered, and a committee appointed to frame a protest to the people, which reported, and the meeting adopted, the following:

"We, citizens of the United States and members of the International Workingmen's Association, intending to commsmorate in a general procession both our brother members executed lately in Frauce, and having applied to the police for an escort, have been refused and prevented from parading. We, the committee of arrangements, protest against the action of the polics, but, being in favor of peace and order, we submit, bnt appeal to the people, from whom we, the working people, expect justice. We cannot afford to parade on a week day, and have selected Sunday, knowing no more solemn occasion than a funeral procession for our hrother members—victims in the canse of humanity. Further, we do see nothing in the city charter, the constitution or the usages of the city of New York or the United States that forbids our procession, and we believe the act of the police authorities to he despotic, tyrannical, arhitrary and nnnecessary, making the police instrnments of oppression rather than protection."

Washington, Dec. 12.—In the Senate Mr. West introduced the following:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be reqnested to inquire into the expediency of exempting from the payment of customs duties all materials, including iron ties, imported into the United States which are used for the purpose of baling or bagging cotton."

New York, Dec. 12.—A Rio Janeiro letter reports a row in the halls of the Paraguayan Legislature, between the president, who appointed an unpopular minister, and Congress. The people took part, and several were killed and wounded.

Cairo, Dec. 12.—A locomotive exploded near Centralia, Illinois, on the Central road, killing three persons; one was hlown two hundred yards.

FOREIGN.

Matamoros, Dec. 6.—Government troops have been compelled to abandon the city of Saltillo, after several days' severe fighting, and now only occupy one fort ontside.

The revolution is apparently gaining ground.

A second loan has been enforced at Monterey by the revolntionists. Foreign merchants mnst pay or close np. Many business men have left the city, and stores closed. Mexican merchants who don't pay are pressed into the army.

Great consternation prevails at Monterey among foreign merchants.

General Quirago, the rebsl commander, is organizing at Monterey for further operations.

General Cortina, the government commander of the river, still waits the results of Trevino's and Quirago's movements.

London, Dec. 7.—The Prince of Wales is steadily improving.

The Rspnblican meetings held at Birmingham and Reading were very disorderly. The meeting at Reading broke up in a row.

Sir James York Searlett, lieutenant general in the British army, is dead, aged seventy-two years.

London, Dec. 8.—The physicians it attendance on the Prince of Wales have jnst issued a bulletin stating that his royal highness is still very much prostrated.

Matamoros, Dec. 8.—It is reported Saltillo has surrendered, and that the revolutionists are marching on San Luis Potosi from Saltillo, and advancing from Monterey on Misr and Camargo.

General Cortina is said to have imprisoned several foreign merchants, in Mier, for sympathizing with the revolutionists.

There are fears of a pronunciamento here and business has been suspended.

London, Dec. 9.—Twonty-eight ladies have bsen matriculated in the University of Edinburg dnring the present term.

Paris, Dec. 9.—The weather here is extremely cold. Thermometer sixteen degrees below zero. The Seine river is frozen over.

London, Dec. 10.—A change is imminent in the French government. Thiers will resign in favor of D'Aumale. Thiers agrees to this movement with the approval of the dnke, and all the influential members of the Right approve it.

All the details are arranged. The canse of the change is Thiers' inability to withstand the Right, which has returned from the provinces very hostile, and Thiers fears the constantly increasing power of imperialism in the army.

Madrid, Dec. 11.—The elections for members of the Cortes took place to-day throughout Spain, and it is already known that the Republicans have triumphantly elected their candidates in twenty-three of forty-eight capitals of provinces, and in forty-three smaller towns.

London, Dec. 11.—A dispatch from Bombay states that the cholera is raging with great fatality among the nativss of Lucknow and vicinity.

An unofficial telegram, dated Sandringham, one o'clock, says it is evident from the distress there that the last hour of the Prince of Wales is approaching. The whole household of the throne is depressed and gloomy.

It is reported on good authority that the Prince of Wales has been unconscious, with bnt one interval, since the first.

The Prince's children, the Qneen and other members of the royal family were repeatedly summoned to the bedside yesterday and to-day.

Sandringham, Dec. 12, 5 P. M.—The Prince of Wales has been somewhat less restless this afternoon, hnt his general condition is nnchanged.

Sandringham, Dec. 12, 10 P. M.—The Prince of Wales passed an unquiet evening, but prostration does not increase.

Madrid, Dec. 12.—The elections in Spain wherein the Republicans were so successful were for municipal conncils, and not for the Cortes.

Paris, Dec. 12.—The National Assembly, at its session of to-day accepted, by a vote of 289 against 277, a recommendation, from the committee having charge of the subject, for the alienation to the state of the crown jewels.

I see there is no such way to have a large harvest as to have a large heart. The free giving of the branches of our present estate to God is the readiest means to have the roots increased for the future.

The King of Dahomey attended a grand feast the other day, wearing a quantity of druggists' labels as decorations.

As it is the characteristic of great wits to say much in few words, so it is of small wits to talk much and say nothing.—Rochefoucault.

Why is a carpenter's wife an unhappy woman? Because her husband is always a-jawin' 'er.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The statistics of this Conference, says the Western Methodist, embrace the following aggregates, viz.: White members, 22,855; local preachers, 191; adults baptized, 2,121; infants baptized, 998; Sunday schools, 233; superintendents and teachers, 1,190; scholars, 9,293; volnmes in library, 17,488; requisites, 1,266; Visitors taken, 1,720; moneys expended, $2,130; number of churches, 348; sittings, 106,905; value of churches, $348,355; number of parsonages, 10; value of parsonages, $18,500; other property, $3,144; Bishops' fund, $1,225; Conference collection, $2,213; missions, $2,111; tracts, $1.15; Ministerial Aid Society, $150; poor, $101; other objects, $10,952; amount of hooks sold, $2,085; periodicals taken, 2,520; presiding elders' salaries, $10,345; receipts, $7,110; salary of pastors, $49,147; receipts, $40,645. But we cannot enlarge here. We thank the brethren most cordially for adopting the Western Methodist as the special organ of the North Mississippi Conference, and shall strive to meet their wants. Columhus displays an elegant and generous hospitality toward members and visitors. Next week we must add to this brief notice.

"DISGRUNTLED."

The word is not in the dictionaries, but it is a very good word to describe one who is "upset" generally, as is the case with our correspondent, "Old Fogy." And he shows the "disgruntled" state of mind he is in by firing off a volley of invective adjectives against some things he deems especially offensive; but others besides himself would be "disgruntled" likewise, were we to put the case to them in precisely the language he uses. Therefore we soften it a little, and speak only in general terms of some things he reprobates.

The first is chewing tobacco in church, and defiling the floor with "amhier," always offensive—doubly so when the "snuff brush" has promoted the flow of saliva. "Tell it not in Gath! publish it not in the streets of Askelon!"—a woman—who ought always to be a lady—chewing tobacco, or doing what is equivalent, if not worse, in the house of worship! It is time for the men to quit it—to throw out their "quid" before they enter the church doors.

Secondly, he anathematises the church-going dogs—and he does it well, too—but perhaps public opinion will not sustain him when he says "that a man who will let a dog follow him to church ought to be prosecuted for interrupting public worship." It is, nevertheless, a heinous offense against propriety, and ought to be guarded against.

Our "Old Fogy" has something to say on the beard question, though the "mustache" is his particular abhorrence. Here he grows eloquent, though the minuteness with which he details what he has observed may not be very edifying to some of our friends. Yet sometimes we can hardly help sympathizing with him. His remedy, however, is not the razor, which we would recommend; but he says—somewhat roughly—"if a gentleman will persist in being nasty, let him furnish his own drinking utensils." We have seen gentlemen, however, to whom such advice would not be necessary.

So much for our "disgruntled" correspondent—which he has a right to be.—Southern Christian Advocate.

The General Conference of the Evangelical Association at its recent session voted that union with the Methodist Episcopal Church is still inexpedient, although such a union under some circumstances "might be desirable." It was also decided that it is unwise for the denomination to change itself into an anti-secret society church. Nevertheless members and ministers were urged to keep aloof from secret societies, and the laying of corner-stones of churches by such bodies was declared "an offense against Christian propriety."

The emigration of French Canadians to the United States this year, according to the Quebec Mercury, has been double what it was last year, and this, too, in the face of the extraordinary efforts that have been made to induce them to remain at home.

COMPLIMENTING PREACHERS.

The following judicious paragraphs are taken from a letter written by Dr. W. E. Munsey to the St. Louis Advocate:

I do not object to complimentary notices of preachers and sermons if the terms used are concrete, and the notices are just and discriminative. The writer must not stultify his judgment or compromise his conscience. He must not try to compliment. If his notice is complimentary, it must rather be so in virtue of the facts he records than in an effort upon his part to make it so. He is writing for the public, and no personal reason must enter into his notice. He must not write "unequaled" when he means "good." If it is wrong to exaggerate and lie in his family, it is wrong in the newspaper. No Christian correspondent and editor should ever write a line of commendation of men or measures unless they are sincere in the matter. No sermon ought to be complimented as a mere matter of course. Occasions and men do not give character to sermons. These must be judged upon their own merits. It is not necessary, however, to publish to the world that a brother's sermon is a poor or moderate one. The public understands the editor when he lets the preacher alone. To criticise a sermon unfavorably might ruin the preacher; yet to praise extravagantly has ruined more preachers than the former course, if employed, could possibly do. Sometimes, when a writer wishes to give the general character and effect of a sermon, he may use abstract terms; but, as a general rule, his words ought to be concrete. I once saw a complimentary notice of a distinguished preacher in a religious newspaper which was so indiscriminating and abstract that I substituted the preacher's name with that of Singer's sewing machine, and, saving a few details, thus read, the notice made fair sense.

It is a shame that people in attempting to report for the newspapers will patch up sermons with their own rags, till the preacher himself is scarcely able to recognize the original piece. Such persons are most apt to take those parts of sermons which few men, if any, can report, and whose principal charm consists in their effect. Such persons had better write about the sermon and never try to give it. But is it not a greater shame that editors will publish such trash, to the injury of the preacher and the detriment of the church? Are such men qualified to publish church organs? O! brethren, spare the young preacher. Do not, by extravagant praise, give him a reputation he cannot maintain. If your compliments are just, deal them out sparingly, else you furnish a temptation to the young preacher to maintain a reputation at the expense of the gospel of Christ. A young preacher may be sent for to assist a brother in a distant village in holding a revival meeting. When the young preacher arrives he sees that a plain, direct appeal to wicked young men is appropriate at that time, and he would make it, but a religious newspaper has heralded him forth as a "prodigy," and to meet public expectation he must preach his great sermon on the Hexahemeron, or Ezekiel's wheels, and go to the judgment with the blood of these wicked young men on his soul. It is wrong in the preacher to permit such a motive to influence him; but why tempt him? Where one young man is benefited by such compliments, ten are injured. At least let the editor first know his man.

Significant.—The progress of our church in Illinois, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, seems to be appreciated in certain quarters. The General Missionary Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North,) at their late meeting in New York, appropriated to the Southern Illinois Conference $14,000. Their statistics claim for their church, in that fertile region, 22,586 members. What does this mean? They appropriate for Oregon only $4,500; California, $5,000; Arizona, $2,000; and Nevada, $3,400.

Some people seem to think that money can do everything—that it can even force a church-growth upon an unwilling people. It can buy proclaimers, or a few preachers so called, but money cannot do everything. Our Conference in Illinois has been and is supported by the people there entirely.

Difficulty in trying Tweed before a New York jury—They can't find a foreman worthy of his steal!

THE TEXAS CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: The Texas Conference convened in Galveston on day before yesterday, December 6. Bishop Marvin, apparently enjoying the best of health, was at his post, and opened the Conference session, as is usual, with religious exercises. With but few exceptions the members, both lay and clerical, are present.

The business of the Conference progresses very smoothly.

Very affecting it was to me when, on yesterday, the examination of the character of elders occurred. Robert Alexander, D. D., our great and beloved pioneer of Texas Methodism, arose and asked for a superannuated relation. His health is failing very much; and not a few eyes were moistened with tears when the Bishop remarked that this circumstance was an epoch in the history of our church in the Lone Star State, Bro. Alexander being one of the first three—Fowler, Ruter and Alexander—who planted Methodism in Texas.

Dr. Wilkes, suffering from the effects of a paralytic stroke, also gave notice that probably before the close of the Conference session he would be constrained to ask for a change in his relation. "But," said he, "I shall wait a little longer. My prayer is that the Lord may restore my health, that I may be on the effective list of our Conference so long as I live on earth." This morning the Conference was made glad when his son, Ames B. Wilkes, was recommended and received on trial in the itinerancy. The Bishop remarked that it was a source of special gratification to him to see the sons of preachers join the ministry.

On Wednesday evening I heard Bishop Marvin preach in the new and elegant St. John's church.—Bishop Marvin is a Methodist preacher—a very good preacher.

Dr. Walker is quite at home in Texas. He is not only very much beloved by his membership here in Galveston, but also by the entire body of this Conference.

I. G. John, editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, looks rather care-worn; but is, notwithstanding, cheerful, and sanguine of success as regards the publishing interests in Texas.

Last night the anniversary of the Educational Aid Society (Dr. Mood, of Soule University, president) was held at St. John's church. My duties calling me to our German church, I was not permitted to attend this meeting; but learn this morning that Bishop Marvin, Dr. Walker and Dr. Mood were very happy in the delivery of their speeches. Quite a large sum of money was raised for the support of young men preparing for the ministry.

Yours truly,

J. B. A. Ahrens.

AN INQUIRY.

Mr. Editor: An old man, a member of my church, whose name is John Brannan, having lost sight of his sons during the war, requests all who can do so to give him information of them.

William Brannan lived in Claiborne parish, Louisiana, and married there about a year before the war.

Anderson Brannan lived in Jackson parish, Louisiana; left there before the war, and it is thought went to Alabama.

Stephen Brannan, Parker county, Texas. Last heard from him just before the war.

These, the sons of John Brannan and his wife Elizabeth, (who are now at this place, and very poor,) have not been heard from in some years, though repeated efforts have been made to find them. If this meets the eye of one who can inform their father of their whereabouts, he will confer a great favor by writing to him at this place.

BREAST THE WAVE, CHRISTIAN.

Breast the wave, Christian,
When it is strongest;
Watch for the day, Christian,
When the night's longest.
Onward and upward still
Be thine endeavor;
The rest that remaineth
Will be forever!

Fight the fight, Christian,
Jesus is o'er thee;
Run the race, Christian,
Heaven is before thee.
He who hath promised
Faltereth never;
The love of eternity
Flows on forever!

Lift the eye, Christian,
Just as it closeth;
Raise the heart, Christian,
Ere it reposeth.
Thee, from the love of Christ,
Nothing can sever;
Mount when thy work is done;
Praise him forever!

A SOUL SAVED.

Night has come, and with it the quiet that brings the busy mind to a repose; not, however, of idleness and indifference, for the day, with all its turns and many-sidedness, lies mapped before it for inspection. There are weaknesses to correct, faults to chide, wandering thoughts to lecture, time unoccupied to lament, and a thousand links in the chain of life to overhaul. But in this vast workshop there is a space also for joy, and this night gives occasion for joy. To know that an immortal soul has broken the fetters of sin, and taken shelter in the loving arms of Jesus, brings a joy to the heart that no object or good the world offers can approximate. One soul! Ah, reador! have you ever computed the value of this jewel? None ever can until they shall weigh the crimson drops ponred ont on Calvary and tell the value of each of them. When the agony of the garden looms up to our view, then does the soul stand out as something beyond the power of mortal to value. That which required the blood of the Son of God to ransom is no mean germ, and when even one is recovered from the mire of sin and washed in the fountain opened for uncleanness, showing its brilliancy, burnishing it for its proper setting in the crown jewels of heaven, is there not reason for joy?

No more, dear friend, a wanderer from God; no more standing in the garb of one condemned, looking for the fearful storm of wrath to break upon you; but folded in the arms of a mighty Savior, peace flows like a river through your soul. What a mighty leap does grace enable a poor sinner to make. Death eternal was but a span since your doom; now eternal life and a crown. Deformity and pollution were your garments but a little while ago; now beauty and a white robe of purity are your dress.

May its capacities and powers be consecrated to thee, O Lord! and at the judgment may its influence bring a train of other souls to sit at Jesus' feet and sing the lofty song of redeeming love.

A BEREAVED SUNDAY SCHOOL.

MR. EDITOR: Two years ago our (the Methodist Episcopal) Sunday school was called to mourn the death of our venerable superintendent, Uncle Samuel Stondenmire, as we all called him, for he was the superintendent for forty years. One year after death again entered the school, and removed from us our beloved superintendent, Jacob H. Golson, one whom to know was to love. Again, a few months ago, our assistant superintendent, W. N. Thompson, was summoned to his rest on high. Truly, this school has an interest in heaven for our dear brothers. All died in the faith, and there is no doubt but that they are now enjoying the happiness prepared for the faithful. And now we are again called to record the death of another member of the school. In this case not the old, but a young scholar—a good boy—one who was just merging into manhood, and gave promise to be useful to the church and a source of comfort to his widowed mother. But death loves a shining mark. Our brother is dead, but yet he liveth. The following resolutions of respect were passed by the school, and I was requested to forward to your paper and request their publication.

Yours in Christ,

A. W. MCNEIL.

WHEREAS, In the providence of God that stern messenger, Death, has again visited our school and taken from our little band our young friend and associate, MELTON F. HOWARD; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we bow submissively to this dispensation of Providence, ever remembering that it is God who gives us breath, and God who takes it away, and that he "doeth all things well."

Resolved, That while we mourn for him, cut down, as he was, in the bloom of opening manhood, and drop the tear of sympathy over his early grave, yet we do not sorrow as those who have no hope, but we feel that our loss is his eternal gain.

Resolved, That in his death our school has been deprived of a punctual, dutiful and attentive pupil; and the church of a young disciple who gave great promise of usefulness in the Master's work.

Resolved, That we fondly cherish his memory, forgetting whatever faults he may have possessed, and striving to imitate his virtues.

Resolved, That we are again admonished that pale death is no respecter of persons; but that the young, the middle-aged and the old alike fall before his destructive shafts.

Resolved, That we are again reminded of the shortness and uncertainty of life, the certainty of death, and the necessity of keeping our lamps trimmed and burning.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathies to the bereaved family and friends, and point them to the Lamb of God for consolation in this their great affliction.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family, and also that a copy be forwarded to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Enon Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I have just closed my first year's labor on the Enon circuit. I have spent the year very pleasantly among the kind people of this circuit. The Lord has been with us, and blessed the word which has been preached to the salvation of some of the hearers. We have received forty-six into the church. Twelve infants and ten adults have been baptized during the year.

Your brother in Christ,

J. S. PARKER, P. C.

NOVEMBER 21, 1871.

North Bossier Circuit, Minden District, Louisiana Conference.

MR. EDITOR: We have cause to rejoice greatly on this circuit on account of the presence of the Lord. We commenced a meeting, on the twenty-eighth of October, at Walker's chapel, which lasted until the thirty-first, resulting in seventeen accessions to the church and about twelve conversions. The membership was greatly revived.

We commenced another meeting at Red River church November 4, and continued it until Thursday night. We then adjourned until the following Tuesday night, and closed on Sunday at eleven o'clock. The result was fourteen accessions and fourteen conversions. The church was greatly revived.

May the good work go on until all are brought to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ.

H. O. WHITE, P. C.

NOVEMBER 24, 1871.

Marion Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I have closed a long round of protracted meetings on my circuit—ten in all. At nine of them God was present. Souls were converted, and fifty members were added to the church. There were seventy-five accessions to the church this year on my work. Many thanks are due to the following ministers for their help: Rev. J. D. Hays, of Enterprise station; Rev. John A. Ellis, of Meridian station; Rev. J. M. Gann, of Spring Hill circuit; Rev. George Bancroft, of Toomsuba mission; Rev. Messrs. Wingfield, Jones, Linton, McCarthy, Moore and Blndsworth, local preachers; Rev. A. McBride, Rev. Mr. McCullock and Rev. Mr. Ross, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church; not forgetting my worthy presiding elder, Rev. W. B. Hines, who was present at several of my churches, and preached with power and unction, as he always does.

At three of these meetings I was sick, and did but little. The meetings were conducted by other brethren. May God reward them for their labor of love.

I have done some little for the ADVOCATE this year—eighteen subscribers, I believe. I am now trying to collect some old debts due the paper. I hope to succeed to some extent, at least. The ADVOCATE should be in every family, for several reasons: First. The religious spirit it breathes is indispensable; at least I think so, for I would not be without it for double its cost. Second. The valuable information derived from reading its pages. Every preacher should feel interested in putting the paper in every man's hands, because it is the best steward on any of our circuits. It is a stimulus to church officers to learn what God is doing in the different sections of our Zion. God grant that our people may soon learn its great worth.

This is my third year on this circuit. The work is in a prosperous condition in every way except finances. It is to be hoped that our final report will be somewhat better. Mr. Editor, it is a pity that our people do not regard the divine assessment as more binding on them than what they do. If they did God would prosper them more. Blights and mildews, droughts and storms—in a word, God's signal judgments in many respects—might be averted. But, alas! how sad the reverse. The preachers have to pay for hard times. The lawyer, the physician, the merchant and the tax collector must be paid; but the minister of God is sometimes told to live by faith. Some brethren are very expert in quoting Scripture to feed preachers and their wives and children, while at the same time their purse-strings are securely tied. These brethren forget that the days are past when God fed his prophets through the ministry of ravens. They do not seem to be mindful that the good Lord requires them to contribute some of the means he has deposited with them (subject to his order) to the support of his ministry, who are endeavoring to evangelize the world. It is true, Mr. Editor, that my circuit has always paid me up to this time, and I hope they will this year also. I have a good circuit—a worthy people, whom I love very much.

Your brother in Christ,

J. C. BROGAN.

MARION STATION, MISS., Nov. 29, 1871.

THE PROPOSED UNIVERSITY.

The project for a great central University finds favor in all directions. Of course some doubt its feasibility—some question its expediency; but it finds warm supporters, and not a few. The theological element, as we expected, meets with special favor. Opinions differ widely as to the character of the proposed institution. But there must be a chaos before there can be a cosmos. We must bring together all kinds of materials, and then eliminate such as shall be deemed inexpedient. We have invited suggestions—we still invite them.

One of our foremost men has given us the following hints, "which would be considered." He says:

"1. Do not locate the institution in a small town, but in one large enough to swallow up the university population, and to bring them under municipal protection and the social influence of citizenship. Do away with the necessity of the dormitory system, which has been one of the greatest curses in our collegiate system of education. Herein may be saved thousands of dollars that are usually expended in brick and mortar. You want nothing but lecture rooms and public halls and libraries and cabinets, and other appliances for imparting knowledge.

"2. Besides being a large city, its location should be a Methodist stronghold. The true plan is to place students in pious and polished domestic circles, and bring them under the power of social life. We want these private circles to be thoroughly Wesleyan, that piety may be cultivated, as well as refinement of taste and manners.

"3. The University should be composed of distinct schools, each of the highest grade, and capable in every respect of taking rank with the best in Europe.

"4. You may begin with one school at a time, if you can do no more. And, as we are most in need of a theological school, why not begin with it?

"5. Give us a fine, large library room, and three or four lecture halls, and nothing more in the way of buildings is wanted. Invest all of your money, and spend its income, upon the library and the support of lecturers, and let them be so well supported by your permanent fund as to require no tuition fees. Let knowledge be made as free as the air we breathe, or the sunlight by which we walk. Let every young man have access to your instruction who can afford to live at the site of the University. And, being in a large city, a student may rent a room and contract for but one meal per day, as many students at the German universities do, making the two lighter meals on cold bread and coffee, or tea, prepared in his own room. The cost of living may thus be so far reduced as to bring it within the means of every poor young man whom God may call to the ministry—and certainly so, with a very trifling aid from the educational societies of the Conferences.

"6. For the present our colleges and high schools may furnish us with the trained material upon which to operate. The elementary studies may well be prosecuted there, until you shall have accumulated the means of establishing other schools in your University, both literary and scientific; and when these latter shall be established, they ought to furnish courses complementary to those of the colleges, whereby no collision of interests can occur and no jealousies be excited.

"I venture to assert that the promises already given of large donations are made in view of a theological school. Money enough to support four officers and to purchase some eight or ten thousand volumes, as the nucleus of a library, and a location such as I have described, will do to make a beginning with. A proper agent soliciting books as donations by the publishers, both at home and abroad, would obtain, perhaps, the number named. Twenty thousand dollars appropriated for books, combined with such an agency, would give you a good start in this particular. One hundred and twenty thousand dollars invested, and yielding ten per cent., would support four lecturers. So that (the halls being provided) $150,000 will set a theological department of your University in operation upon a footing to meet the wants and to sustain the character of the church. More than this, I understand, we have already pledged to the cause. Then why delay?"

These suggestions have been made to us by our correspondent in the freedom of private correspondence. We beg his pardon for committing them to print. He asks us to discourse on these several points. This we cannot do at present. But this we do say, they appear to us to be eminently wise and practical. We respectfully request our friend, Dr. Garland, who knows more about this business than any one else of our acquaintance, to discuss these points at large in the Advocate. Our people need information, and we earnestly request our Bishops and others who have considered these questions to give us their views in this paper.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

CONFERENCE ITEMS.

NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

This Conference, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, was held at Florence, November 15–20. From the minutes of Bishop Pierce, who presided, we condense as follows: Admitted on trial, G. W. Hamilton, Z. A. Parker, J. G. Gibson, M. B. Johnson, F. C. Stephenson, E. W. Jones, J. D. Perkins, J. M. Cochran, R. J. Wilson, J. B. Cole, G. B. Wilson and M. L. White. Discontinued, B. Vaughn. Admitted into full connection, L. F. Whitten, G. R. Lynch, C. M. Livingston, V. O. Hawkins and D. W. Ward. Readmitted, J. M. Wright, A. G. Copeland, D. Phelps, C. Godby, J. F. Randall and Z. Parker. Received by transfer, J. C. Mials, R. H. Rogers and C. L. Dobbs. Elected and ordained deacons, T. G. Whitten, L. F. Whitten, G. R. Lynch, C. M. Livingston, V. O. Hawkins, D. W. Ward and I Q. Melton. Local preachers elected deacons, W. B. Taylor, J. G. Gibson, S. P. Garrison, W. C. Beaver, J. Webster, M. A. Pearce, J. H. Meadows, J. H. White, C. L. Kirksey, T. B. Parks, W. R. Rainey, J. P. M. Woodall and R. Moore—the first seven were ordained. Elected and ordained elders, H. L. Booth, B. F. Lea, J. H. Anderson and B. J. Gaston. Local preachers elected elders, R. S. Price, J. V. Carter, J. M. Barnes and H. H. Thompson—ordained, R. S. Price, J. C. Wallace and A. L. Davis. Located, W. S. Harwell, D. M. Booth, L. H. Gruhbs and J. A. Barbee. Superannuated, T. Moody, G. J. Mason, W. Rhodes, E. McMeans, J. N. Glover, J. M. Towles and U. Williams. Died, E. C. Odom and J. B. Powers. White members, 24,013—increase, 1,553; local preachers, 309—increase, 50. Baptized: infants, 590; adults, 1,687. Sunday schools, 290; teachers, 1,516; scholars, 10,562. Necessary for claimants, $2,800; collected, $1,447.54. For missions, $1,986.05; old debt, $969.55. The next session is to be held at Tuskaloosa.

MEMPHIS CONFERENCE.

The Memphis Conference held its session at Trenton, Tennessee, November 15–21. Bishop Kavanaugh presided, and our Memphis confrere, the editor of the Western Methodist, was, of course, secretary. We have not yet received the minutes, but we have received a good account of the session from brethren who were in attendance, and from the Western Methodist of November 25. The book agent writes:

Mr. Editor: I reached Trenton, Tennessee, on Thursday morning, November 16. I found the Memphis Conference in session, Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair, and W. C. Johnson at the secretary's table, with D. R. S. Rosebrough and Edgar Orgain, assistants.

Everything I have seen and heard indicates the fidelity of the preachers to their work, and the blessing of God upon their labors. Revivals of religion have crowned the prayers and toils of the ministry and membership in almost every portion of the Conference. The statistical report, which I beg leave to insert, shows a gratifying increase in every regard: Number of local preachers, 278—increase, 17; members, 28,032—increase, 2,855; infants baptized, 804—increase, 183; adults baptized, 2,515—increase, 911; Sunday schools, 275—increase, 31; Sunday school teachers, 1,861—increase, 75; Sunday school scholars, 13,541—increase, 1,557.

The collections for superannuated preachers, widows and orphans amounted to $1,435, while the interest on notes realized for this purpose is $412.46, making a total of $1,847.45.

The amount apportioned to this Conference for Bishops' support has been entirely met, while the collections for missions exceed those of last year, the Somerville district alone contributing more than one-half the entire amount.

The most important question before the Conference at the present session is now under discussion—involving the future of Andrew College. Not only the utility, but the importance of this institution to the church, within the bounds of the Memphis Conference, should induce the adoption of prompt measures on the part of the Conference for placing it on a basis that will not only secure its success, but its prosperity. The president, Rev. S. W. Moore, D. D., is a graduate of Randolph Macon, and deservedly takes rank, both in the pulpit and as an educator, with the first men in the church. His labors for Andrew College since 1866, when he became the president, have been unremitting, and the sacrifices he has made to perform the duties assigned him should not be without their reward. If the Conference should fail to meet its present necessities, and thus imperil its existence, many years may come and pass away before another institution of learning will bless the field they occupy. The location of Andrew College is excellent, in one of the most healthy and beautiful towns in west Tennessee.

Another advantage to the college is to be found in the location, in Trenton, of the Melrose Institute, a female college, under the presidency of our old friend and brother, W. K. Jones. Mr. Jones founded this institute in 1869; and although this is only the third year of its existence, it closed its late session with one hundred and seventy pupils. The Melrose Institute buildings are new and beautiful, the grounds inviting and pleasant, the president an accomplished gentleman and devout Christian, and the teachers selected with great care. Thus you see that persons who desire to educate their sons and daughters in the same place may find every facility for doing so at Trenton.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

WHITE RIVER CONFERENCE.

Bishop McTyeire returned to Nashville, November 24. He informs us that the session of the White River Conference, at Batesville, November 15–19, was very pleasant. James Wickersham was secretary. From the minutes we learn that T. A. Craig, J. J. Alexander, J. M. Talkington, J. Denton and J. L. Short were admitted on trial. W. M. Whitehead, N. G. Murphy, D. W. Reid, C. S. Floyd, J. H. Porter, R. Blassingame, M. B. Pearson, R. W. Massey, R. G. Britton, J. J. Prather, J. F. Armstrong, B. F. Hall, A. Davis and E. A. Garrison were elected and ordained deacons. A. M. Jones, J. M. Talkington, E. T. Church, J. Denton and E. S. Pearson (local) were elected and ordained deacons—and W. H. Oyler, T. Sutton, W. R. McVey, W. N. Green and J. J. Beam (local) were ordained deacons. N. E. Brady and W. H. Jernigan (local) were elected and ordained elders, and J. H. Baxter and H. T. Blythe (local) were elected elders. R. Blassingame, E. W. Coleman and J. P. Webb were located. W. A. Cobb, superannuated. White members, 8,827—increase, 974; colored, 26—decrease, 9; local preachers, 92—increase, 6. Baptized: infants, 393; adults, 832. Sunday schools, 78; teachers, 388; scholars, 2,627. Necessary for claimants, $800; collected, $737.60. For missions, $437.20. The next session is to be held at Augusta, Arkansas.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

KING ALFRED AND THE ORPHAN.

King Alfred was sitting one day in his palace dispensing justice, and surrounded by his barons or thanes—as the nobles were called in those days—when, as his eye glanced over the assembled group, he observed that the place of one faithful servant was vacant, and, in answer to his inquiries as to the cause of the absence of the Earl of Holderness, he was informed that the noble thane and his lady had both died some short time previous. Before the monarch could express his grief, his informant, the warrior Wulph, proceeded to ask Alfred to confer on him the estates of Holderness as a reward for his prowess in war. Instantly another noble, the wise Thurstan, spoke: "Nay, King, it would be more just to bestow them on me, for dost thou not remember how, when at thy command I crossed the sea, my wisdom was of more avail at the Danish court than all the warlike skill and bravery of Wulph?"

At that moment a door at the further end of the room opened, and a pale, toil-worn woman entered, leading by the hand a lovely boy, whose flaxen hair, blue eye and fair complexion plainly showed his Saxon origin. With difficulty she pressed through the throng of anxious and excited nobles, until she stood before the monarch himself; then bending low, she said:

"O gracious King, I ask thee justice may he done to this boy, the only child of the late Earl of Holderness and the Lady Alice. He has no father now to defend him, no mother to take care for him, but he looks to thee for protection; his is the orphan's claim. O King, regard it!"

Here she was interrupted by one of the thanes, who angrily exclaimed: "His claim, forsooth! What dost thou think, then, that our King needs the services of babes such as that? No; in these troubled times, when our Danish foes are threatening us on all sides, we want men with active bodies, stout arms and brave hearts. If the lands of Holderness be given to that child, what could he do to guard his country?"

The little fellow lifted his bright blue eye to the stern speaker, and replied: "I would pray to God in heaven."

The good King Alfred—than whom a nobler or better never sat on England's throne—looked earnestly first at the upturned face of the boy, then upon his thanes, who were anxiously awaiting the royal decision, and said slowly and solemnly: "The King will gladly give all praise and due reward to the faithful thanes who have served him so well in times of need, but the estates of Holderness must be restored to this child, for they are his by birthright and his claim; the orphan's claim is before all other—his Father is God who reigns in heaven."

A GENTLEMAN traveling in England tells this story, illustrating the extent of sermon manufacturing in that country:

"In the morning I went to church and the preacher—a tall, thin man—gave forth the text: 'The word that I speak unto you I speak not of myself.' He divided his subject into four 'heads,' and concluded with an 'application to ourselves.' Now there was nothing at all remarkable in this; but what happened subsequently I thought very extraordinary. The following Sunday I was located in the north, and again attended divine service. A short fat man occupied the pulpit; and to my utter astonishment, not only his text, but every word of his sermon, was precisely what I had heard on the preceding Sabbath. The Sunday after, I was at a fashionable watering place; and I could scarcely credit the evidence of my senses when I heard the same discourse over again from the lips of a red-haired, weak-eyed, squeaky-voiced youth."

It is to be presumed that the traveler by this time had discovered a force in the words of the text which the rest of the hearers hardly apprehended.

JUST HIS TRADE.—The Rev. George More was riding to the village of Howgate, in the vicinity of the city. The day was stormy, snow falling heavily. Mr. More was enveloped in a Spanish cloak, with a woman's shawl tied around his neck and shoulders. These loose garments covered with snow and waving in the blast, startled the horse of a commercial traveler who chanced to ride past. The alarmed steed plunged, and menaced to throw its rider, who exclaimed: "You would frighten the devil, sir!" "May be," said Mr. More, "for it's just my trade."

REV. J. A. THOME, for twenty-three years pastor of the First church in Cleveland, has accepted a united call to the new Congregational church at Chattanooga, Tennessee.

THE Presbyterian church at Freehold, New Jersey, was partially demolished by a gale recently. Loss $30,000.

IN THE WOODS.

PERDITA.

Wild Bird, O Wild Bird! singing so free,
What is thy song and rich choralle?
What the new joy in thy fluttering heart?
I would share it, then songster—come, give me a part!

"Four tiny birds in my warm new nest;
A sweet little mate, of all birds the best!
I'm happy and glad the whole sunny day;
That's why I sing the bright hours away!"

Rose-bud, O Rose-bud! blushing so red,
Why art thou glad when the sunshine hath fled?
Why art so sweet when thy life is so fleet,
Thy silken red leaves make thy pale winding sheet?

"The dews of the even are the loves of the stars,
That kiss me all night; and the golden bars
Of crowning rays are messages glad;
Oh I am happy—how could I be sad?"

Daisy, O Daisy! so timid and small,
Thou hast no fragrance; why bloomest at all?
Thou'll be crushed in the forests of tall green grass,
And can'st but just peep at those that pass!

"But yet I am happy; for on tip-toe,
Many bright glances around me I throw;
And somebody said, as he passed this way:
'I'd love to be happy as Daisy to-day!'"

Nature, glad Nature! why art so free,
The whole world seems singing a choral glee?
"The whole world is busy, from the least to the great;
Come, join our anthem—we've no time to wait!

'Tis noble and grand to labor and sing;
Now the heart flutters, as though 'twere a wing!
'Tis joyful to labor for those we love,
And Nature is working for One above!"

Singing and praising while th' ages roll round,
Feeling so glad as the echoes resound,
With her great heart deep throbbing with perfect love,
Whose pulse-beats are heard by the Master above!

'Tis such a wonderful, joyful thing,
That the least of us all has cause to sing—
Even the daisy and roses that die;
Sing and rejoice, great World, will I!

WESLEYAN ANECDOTES.

BY AN OLD METHODIST.

"Marvelous things."—PSALMIST.

It was once my privilege to spend a most agreeable afternoon with Rev. R. R., of the Wesleyan Conference. He alluded, with much interest, to many of his old associates in the itineraney. He had never heard a preacher superior to Samuel Bradburn. Bradburn was full of sublimity, mighty, grasping thoughts and melting pathos, and yet mingled with the whole, in the strongest contrasts, an exhaustless wit. "Dr. Coke," said Mr. R., "used to declare that there was but one man whom he could hear preach longer than forty-five minutes, and he was Samuel Bradburn." A number of young preachers were speaking once rather whiningly of having given up all for the ministry. They put too much emphasis on their sacrifices, in Bradburn's estimation; he wished to rebuke them, and did it with his usual felicity. He had been a cobbler himself, as well as a tinker, and most of the young men in the company had been in equally humble occupations. "Yes, dear brethren," exclaimed he, "some of you have had to sacrifice your all for the itineraney; but we old men have had our share of these trials. As for myself, I made a double sacrifice; for I gave up for the ministry two of the best awls in the kingdom—a great sacrifice, truly, to become an embassador of God in the church and a gentleman in society." * *

Mr. R. spoke with enthusiastic affection of his old friend Gideon Ousely, the apostle of Methodism in Ireland. "Ousely," said he, "was one of the most eccentric of men, yet full of faith and the Holy Ghost. His mind was strong, and he had a university education. His family belonged to the aristocracy, yet he became a Methodist itinerant, and traveled the Irish highways, preaching the gospel, for more than two-score years. He preached everywhere—at cock-fights, horse-races, fairs and markets, and hundreds of times has he proclaimed the gospel on horseback. His sermons were at least three a day—usually two in the open air and a third in a barn or meeting house. He preached often in the Irish language—a speech rich and powerful for exhortation. Ousely rescued hundreds, perhaps thousands, of his countrymen from the superstitions of popery. He was often attacked by popish persecutors, and lost one of his eyes in a scuffle with them; but though frequently beaten and left for dead, he was as bold as a lion, and scattered light among them at every point. Many of his persecutors were overtaken by unnatural deaths, and the papists dreaded him as protected by the devil. When his uncle, Sir Gore Ousely, died, he inherited his wealth and title, but abandoned all, preferring the honor of being a Methodist itinerant above the estates and titles of nobility. Such a man is one of God's genuine noblemen."

I inquired of him particularly about Charles Wesley, whose position in Methodist history has always appeared to me vague, if not ambiguous. "Charles Wesley," he replied, "was a High Churchman; he could not appreciate the mission of Methodism. Much of his own ministerial conduct was in violation of his High Church opinions, for his good feelings could not yield to his prejudices. Yet Methodism owes much to him. He was the first of the brothers converted, and the first who received the appellation of Methodist. He stood by John till death, though dissenting from many of his measures.

"Three elements prevailed in his mental constitution—music, poetry and faith. He was all soul, from head to foot; full of vivid though pensive enthusiasm. He was an excellent musician; melody was sweeter to him than honey or the honey-comb; and his sons, through his example, were prodigies in the art from their infancy. In the poetic art, who equals him among uninspired writers of the sacred lyric? He was incessantly expressing himself in poetry. He has touched the lips of all our hosts with live coals from off the heavenly altar, and will touch the lips of millions to come. But the hymns in our hymn book can afford no idea of the extent of his poetical compositions; they would fill volumes, and they uniformly possess his characteristic terseness and harmony. As is usual with poetic genius, he was subject to intervals of melancholy, and often so profoundly dejected as to long for the relief of the grave. His faith, however, kindled in the enthusiasm of his spirit, and aspired above his depressions. These three elements made him, as a man, most affectionate and generous; as a writer, always rhythmical and inspiring; and as a preacher, one of the most affecting and powerful in our history. He far excelled his brother in the unction and effect of his sermons. At times he became almost seraphic, and melted all hearts by the pathos of his feelings and tones. Such was Charles Wesley." * * * * *

He spoke eloquently of Fletcher: "John Fletcher is a name associated in my mind with every saintly quality. He was 'the angel of the church.' His temper was as felicitous as it was holy. Religion illuminated his life like a perpetual sunshine. He was a living example of the spiritual doctrine of Methodism, as well as its controversial champion. Like the angel at the gate of Paradise, he defended it with a flaming sword from the intrusion of error. He seems to have been providentially raised up to assist Wesley in the revival and defense of the apostolic doctrines. While the latter traversed the realm, publishing them, the former, with a polemical acumen seldom equaled, was defending them by his pen in his solitude at Madeley. His writings are an impregnable rampart around the theology of our church, and will endure while the church endures. Wesley said he was intimately acquainted with him for above thirty years. He conversed with him morning, noon and night without reserve, during a journey of many hundred miles, and in all that time he never heard him speak one improper word, nor saw him do an improper action. In all the compass of his extensive acquaintance, he declared that he knew not one so devoted to God. And then his death—what a scene for the contemplation of angels! His joyous spirit grew holier with the lapse of each day, until it burst forth with triumphant raptures, and ascended, like a flame, to heaven." * * *

Again the conversation ran off into the more striking scenes of early Methodism. Mr. R. related several remarkable cases of conversion. "John Furz, one of my old associates," said he, "was listening to one of our preachers, who exclaimed: 'Two witnesses, dead and buried in dust, will rise up against you. These are they'—holding up the Bible—'the two Testaments which have been buried in dust on your shelves.' 'I recollected,' said John, 'that my Bible was thus neglected, and that I had actually written my name with my finger upon the lid. I thought I had signed my own damnation on the back of the witness.' He was horror-struck; went home and called upon God for mercy, and lived and died a faithful preacher. John Thorpe, another old friend of mine, was converted in a still more singular manner. He and his comrades were one day ridiculing and mimicking the Methodists. They attempted to preach for a wager. John's turn came last. He mounted the table full of hilarity, but, on opening the Bible at the text, 'Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish,' he was seized with terror; his hair stood on end, and he preached in earnest. At the close he ran home, called upon God in genuine repentance, and afterward went preaching through the land. * * * I have known of a tavernkeeper who, relishing music, went to one of the meetings merely to hear the singing. He was afraid of the preaching, and, that he might not hear it, sat with his head inclined and his fingers in his ears. But a fly lit upon his nose, and, at the moment he attempted to drive it away with one of his hands, the preacher uttered, with power, the text, 'He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.' The word took hold upon his conscience, and he found no relief till he became a converted man. * * * In Wexford, Ireland, a conversion occurred still more odd. Our people were persecuted by the papists, and met in a closed barn. One of the persecutors had agreed to conceal himself beforehand in the barn, that he might open the door to them after the people were assembled. He crept into a sack hard by the door. The singing commenced; but the Hibernian was so taken with it that he thought he would hear it through before disturbing the meeting. At its conclusion he thought he would hear the prayer also; but this was too powerful for him; he was seized with distress and trembling, and bawled out with such dismay as to appall the congregation, who began to believe that the evil one himself was in the sack. The sack was at last pulled off of him, and discovered the poor Irishman a weeping penitent, crying for mercy. He was thoroughly and permanently converted."

Thus passed a cheerful interview in reminiscences of the great men of our Israel, and anecdotes which are marvelous instances of the grace of God, however touched with humor.—Methodist.

LUX LUCET IN TENEBRIS.

(MOTTO OF THE WALDENSES—"THE LIGHT SHINETH IN THE DARKNESS."

BY PROF. HENRY M. BAIRD.

Of the many dark epochs in the long history of the Waldensian persecution, none surpasses in tragic interest the year 1655. Incredible as it may appear, there never was perpetrated within the memory of man a massacre all the incidents of which were characterized by more revolting barbarity than marked the one that took place in the heart of civilized Europe, only a little over two hundred years ago, at a time when Louis the Fourteenth occupied the throne of France, and Oliver Cromwell was Protector of the commonwealth of England. It is a sad reflection for the philanthropist that the highest culture may be thus exactly cotemporaneous with the most atrocious cruelty, and that while Pierre Corneille writes, and John Milton is musing over his great epics, the Duke Charles Emmanuel may be murdering innocents, even to the babe in the cradle.

The Waldenses, at the period of which we speak, were by no means a numerous people. Once they had had one hundred and forty places of worship; they had now scarcely a tenth of that number. Ages before they had penetrated into the lowlands, or Piedmont proper. Now rigid edicts, enforced remorselessly, confined them to the three valleys of Lucerna, Angrogna and San Martino. Their entire territory might measure twenty-two miles from north to south, and eighteen miles from east to west, but the greater part of the surface was absorbed by rugged mountains, incapable of sustaining human life, and often barely accessible to the intrepid adventurer.

The pretext for a fresh outburst of fanatical zeal was found in the fact that the Waldenses were accused of having gone beyond the narrow limits that were assigned them, and of inhabiting forbidden territory. Accordingly on the twenty-fifth of January, 1655, in the midst of a winter of unparalleled severity, an order was suddenly promulgated, commanding every Protestant living in Lucerna, La Tour, and five or six other places that were named, to abandon their homes. They were graciously allowed to remove to Bobi, Villar, and a few other localities designated by name, where they were to be tolerated during the duke's good pleasure. The penalty for remaining was to be death and confiscation of goods. The unfortunate Waldenses in vain sent deputies to beg the duke to recall this infamous decree, and proved that the territory from which they were to be expelled had been guaranteed them by former patents. While their deputies were still in Turin, an army of fifteen thousand men, under command of the Marquis of Pianesse, appeared at the entrance of the valleys, on the seventeenth of April. The little body of Waldensian youths capable of bearing arms was utterly inadequate to meet this force in the field, and retired to the heights, which it resolutely and successfully guarded. But it was far otherwise in the lower parts, where the old, the sick, or those who had been surprised in their flight, fell into the hands of the savage soldiery.

Finding that the places prohibited to the Waldenses were deserted, the Piedmontese advanced to those where a safe refuge had been promised. Everywhere ruin and devastation marked their progress. Houses, churches, barns—all were burned. But it was against the inhabitants that their fury was chiefly directed. At a signal given from the hill above La Tour, the dreadful work began. No age or sex was spared. The men that fell into the soldiers' hands were murdered in every manner which a depraved ingenuity could suggest. Some were frightfully mutilated, and left to perish by a lingering death. Some were flayed alive, and their skins preserved as a memorial on the grated windows of the "Palais" of La Tour. Powder was poured into the mouths of others, that their enemies might enjoy the sight of their agonies when it was fired. Children were torn limb from limb. A girl of ten years of age was impaled on a pike, and carried in lieu of a standard, until, fatigued by her weight, her merciless tormentors left her by the roadside, where she was found by the returning Waldenses. Upon women the foulest indignities were perpetrated almost without exception, and then they shared in the fate of their fathers and husbands. The dead were hacked to pieces, and, in a few instances, the inhuman persecutors did not hesitate to indulge in orgies worthy of cannibals. To be a Protestant was an unpardonable sin. "Say 'Josu Maria!'" was the ordinary exhortation of the murderers, and at every refusal of their victims they redoubled their blows. "Well, Barbet," (the popular designation for a Waldensee, derived from the name of his minister, generally called Barbe, or "uncle,") "will you go to mass?" they repeated in the ears of one whom they were slashing with swords. "Rather to death than to mass," he replied again and again. And the spirit of the entire work was expressed by the cry: "Kill the Barbet, kill the Barbet, who will not be made a Christian!"

It was the report of such tragic incidents as these carried to England that stirred Oliver Cromwell to make those earnest remonstrances both to Charles Emmanuel and to all the other prominent princes of Christendom, which secured an early repeal of the edict out of which the horrible persecution had grown. It was John Milton who, in the Protector's name, wrote those immortal plans for religious tolerance, scarcely less famous than the sonnet in which he sang:

"Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints, whose bones
He scattered on the Alpine mountains cold:
Even them who kept thy faith so pure of old,
When all our fathers worshiped stocks and stones,
Forget not; in thy book record their groans.
Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold,
Slain by the bloody Piedmontese, that rolled
Mother with infant down the rocks."

Missions often precede commerce, and prepare the way for the merchant, and make it safe for him to land and to traffic on strange shores. At some of the Micronesian islands it was not safe for vessels to touch until after the missionary had set himself down among the savages and taught them something of the ways of civilized and Christian lands. Now a traffic which is worth thousands of dollars every year has sprung up among those very people who were utterly inapproachable but a few years ago. The testimony of a Scotch sailor is striking in respect to the change wrought by the labors of missionaries. When asked if he thought the missionaries had done any good in the South Sea Islands, he replied: "I will tell you a fact which speaks for itself. Last year I was wrecked on one of those islands, where I knew that eight years before a ship was wrecked and the crew murdered; and you may judge how I felt at the prospect before me—if not dashed to pieces on the rocks, to survive only for a more cruel death. When day broke we saw a number of canoes pulling for our ship, and we prepared for the worst. Think of our joy and wonder when we saw the natives in English dress, and heard some of them speak in the English language. On that very island the next Sunday we heard the gospel preached. I do not know what you think of missions; but I know what I think." Dr. Kane also testified: "Before missionaries came to Greenland it was unsafe for vessels to touch upon the coast; but now it is safer for the wrecked mariner than many parts of our own coast." Commerce owes much to missions.—Independent.

WEEDS.—I was once walking with a farmer through a beautiful field, when he chanced to see a tall thistle on the other side of the fence. In an instant he sprang over the fence and cut it close to the ground.

"Is that your field?" I asked.

"Oh no," said the farmer, "but bad weeds don't care much for fences, and if I should leave that thistle to blossom in my neighbor's field, I should soon have plenty in my own."

I wish all fathers and mothers would think of that. The evil weeds in your neighbor's field will scatter seeds in your own. So it is worth while to pull them up in self-defense. Every weed pulled up in your neighbor's field is a dangerous enemy driven away from your own.

WHY ARE washerwomen the silliest of people? Because they put out their tubs to catch soft water when it rains hard.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

ON SUNDAY, November 5, at the Colored Baptist church in Louisville, Kentucky, one of the supporting pillars of the house gave way, resulting in a slight depression of the ceiling. The pastor had completed his sermon, and the audience, as yet undismissed, and disposed, indeed, to regard the accident as nowise perilous, still kept their seats when the cry was raised that the building was falling. An instant rush to the doors was made, every one was seized with panic, and in the crowding and excitement eleven persons were trampled to death, while many others received serious physical injury.

A LONDON TELEGRAM announces that a Roman Catholic mission, consisting of four priests, has set forth under English auspices to labor exclusively among the colored population of the United States. They are due in New York in ten days. At the celebration of mass previous to their departure, his grace, Archbishop Manning, of Westminster, addressed the missionaries. He said: "This mission has been established by the church in England because this country had imposed slavery on America, and it was fitting that Englishmen should be the first to move for the amelioration of the condition of the newly emancipated race."

METHODISM IN SCOTLAND.—Methodism has found Scotland a hard field, and for several years previous to 1856 the work of the denomination in that country was declining; but since that time the tide has turned, and the results are now encouraging. Most of the burdensome church debts have been paid since then, and fifteen or twenty new chapels have been erected or purchased. The number of ministers has been increased during the same period from twenty to thirty-one; the number of church members is larger than at any former period. Within the last fifteen years there has been an increase of members which has more than compensated for the steady decline of half a century previous.

THERE is another crisis in Spain. This time it is about the maintenance of the church by the State. In the recent revolution the treasures of the churches were seized, the pay of the clergy was stopped, civil marriages were made legal, and in other ways the ecclesiastical powers were severely handled. Now the government is asked for indemnity; and it responds with a proposition to pay one-third of the whole amount due to the church, leaving the rest to be made up by the provincial assemblies and the town councils. The Ultramontanes will have no bread rather than the third of a loaf; so they have raised a furious opposition, the result of which is the defeat of the ministry by a vote of 173 to 118, and the immediate prorogation of the Cortes. The government has acted with decision; but whether it will be able to weather the popular storm remains to be seen.—Independent.

WE HAVE something, says the New York Observer, even better than the Young Men's Christian Association in New York; it is that of the Young Ladies. Its object is to extend Christian kindness to young women who come from the country to seek employment or instruction. Such persons are directed to suitable homes, and their residence in the city made safe and agreeable by society with the refined and good, libraries and reading rooms, churches and lectures and evening entertainments. The room where the officers may be constantly found is at 64 Irving Place, and we advise pastors and others who may know of young women coming to town to direct them to this place. It may be the salvation of some. It is an inestimable blessing to many.

TRACT ANNIVERSARY.—The anniversary exercises of the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church were held in Wilmington, Delaware, Sabbath week. Sermons were preached in the various Methodist Episcopal churches by Drs. Wise and Bartine, Rev. D. H. Ela, Rev. C. S. Vaneleve, Rev. William Simpson, and S. H. Nesbit, D. D., of the Pittsburg Christian Advocate. A platform meeting was held in the evening, at Grace church, Rev. Messrs. Wise, Nesbit, Ela and Bartine making addresses. Dr. Wise, in reading his report, stated that the Tract Society was not a publishing agency, nor a book agency, but simply a distributor of tracts. Its income for a few years had averaged about $1,600 a year. Last year it printed about thirty-nine million pages of tracts. The exercises throughout were highly interesting.

THE stated meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society was held at the Bible House, on Thursday, the second ultimo. Interesting statements were made as to Bible colportage among the Chinese in California, and as to the usefulness of the Scriptures in railroad cars. Communications were received from various foreign countries. Grants of books were made amounting to five thousand five hundred and five volumes, including nine volumes in raised letters for the blind. Besides this, others were granted to the amount of $5,600, of which $5,000 were to the Chicago Bible Society, to meet demands occasioned by the late fire, their depository, with all its contents, having been destroyed. The resignation of James Lenox, Esq., president, which was tendered some months since, was accepted, and several gentlemen were nominated to fill the vacancy. The election was postponed.

THE Christian Instructor says that the Reformed Presbyterian Church is alive and at work in the cause of foreign missions. Eleven years since, its synod resolved upon a mission in Syria, and sent out Rev. Messrs. Dodds and Beattie, who at length fixed upon Latakia, on the shore of the Mediterranean, north of Beirut, as a proper point for at least commencing their work. At a later time Dr. Metheny and family, of Allegheny, and Miss Crawford, of Philadelphia, went to their help. From the outset the work has been steadily carried on; and there are pleasant tokens that it has not been in vain in the Lord. On the first day of January last, at the communion in Latakia, twenty-four native converts sat down with the missionaries at the Lord's table. One is studying for the ministry. The work is also extending out. Aleppo has been occupied, and several points in the vicinity of Latakia have been visited.

THE progress of the gospel in Tinnevelly, Southern India, is very wonderful. The word was first preached here by the great missionary Schwartz and his native assistants, and converts were gathered. In 1820 there were upward of three thousand Protestant Christians in the province. Now they number between fifty-six and fifty-seven thousand. A goodly band of native ministers has also been raised up. Some have gone elsewhere to do the work of evangelization, and in Tinnevelly district no less than thirty-three are now laboring in connection with the Church Missionary Society. There is also a numerous staff of readers and subordinate helpers. Laborers in the gospel from Tinnevelly are found in other parts of India, Ceylon and Mauritius. Many schools have been organized in connection with the mission. A seminary for native preachers has done excellent service in raising up native preachers and missionaries. Located at Palamacotta, it opened with fifty-eight students, and has educated, in all, three hundred and eighty-five during the twenty years of its operations, many of whom are now doing honorable service as ministers of the gospel of Christ.

THE fifth annual convention of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America was held in Rochester, New York, the session beginning on Thursday, the second ultimo. Delegates were present from the synods of Pennsylvania, New York, Pittsburg, English synod of Ohio, English district synod of Ohio, Michigan synod, the Augustana synod, Iowa synod, and the synod of Canada. The new Norwegian-Danish Augustana synod was received at this convention, and its delegates took their seats. Rev. C. P. Krauth was re-elected president. The first and second morning sessions were occupied by doctrinal discussions, which form one of the most interesting features of the council. Dr. Krauth read a paper on justification by faith, which was earnestly debated. It was voted to publish an edition of Luther's Catechism separate from the church book, in both the English and German languages, and to add to it Luther's questions and answers for those who receive the Lord's Supper. Saturday evening was set apart for addresses on foreign missions, and Monday evening for addresses on home missions. The Evangelical Lutheran Church in this country has about five hundred thousand members and ministers. These are divided into fifty-four synods, forty of which are embraced in general bodies, viz., the General Council, the General Synod North, and the General Synod South. The synods not in connection with either of these general bodies are chiefly located in the West—in Missouri, Wisconsin, Minnesota, etc. The General Council comprises English, German, Swedish and Norwegian ministers and congregations. All of these nationalities were represented on the floor of this convention. The council represents the conservative branch of the Lutheran Church in this country, which adheres unreservedly to the doctrines of the Augsburg confession and the ancient services and cultus of the oldest and largest Protestant denomination.

LOOSING FROM TROAS.

There are many devoted preachers who are annually exercised about the field which they should enter. The Bishops usually allow a man to choose his Conference, and hence the question, Shall I transfer, and where? The only trouble in the case should be to know the mind of the Spirit in the premises; and when that has been reached, to go or stay. Before Paul and Silas came to Troas they "were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia." Afterward "they assayed to go into Bythynia; but the Spirit suffered them not." At Troas the vision appeared to Paul in the night. "There stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia and help us." Gathering from this that the Lord had called them to preach the gospel in Macedonia, thither they went, to preach to Lydia and others, to cast out evil spirits, and to save the Philippian jailer and his house. The case is plain enough with these devoted men. The Lord had a will concerning their movements, forbidding them to preach in some places, and commanding their departure to others. Asia was without the gospel for the most part. Mysia, Bythynia and Troas were without Christ, but the mind of the Spirit was that they should go to Macedonia. God has a mind in the movement of his ministers now, and this is the point of solicitude.

Unquestioning submission is the first thing to be attained. To get clear of any willfulness in the matter, and to look only at the claims of duty, is perhaps the most difficult achievement. How it is to be ascertained, though sometimes perplexing, is not so difficult as unconditional obedience to the divine command. There are so many merely temporal considerations involved—grounds of personal preference growing out of local circumstances, family ties and pecuniary support—that we are apt to look at these almost exclusively. The country where men hope to do best for themselves is too often the Macedonia to which they gravitate. Their call to preach is a general one, and so they preach. The place may be determined by other influences than those which moved them to assume the obligations of the sacred office. The vision which took Paul and Silas by "a straight course" to Samothracia and Philippi was a divine call to preach in that particular region rather than anywhere else. Neither salary, health nor personal advancement had anything to do with it; and when they had assuredly gathered that the Lord had called them there, they forthwith endeavored to go, and they went. They loosed from Troas with no misgivings, and, doubtless, with the persuasion that he who called them would give them a prosperous voyage and stand by them in their times of trial. To be likeminded with them is the true attitude of the gospel minister. He is ready to obey the heavenly vision, and to subordinate all other considerations to the will of God concerning him. So he preaches, it is not a matter of indifference where. Paul would have gone to Asia; he then thought Bythynia was a good field; it was desirable to tarry at Troas. But he was mistaken. Macedonia was the open door; and of all the places in the world this one, which he had never thought of, was that which God had chosen for him. Abraham preached the same lesson of obedience when he went out from his own country, shaping his course not by the stars of heaven, nor by the green pastures of earth, but by the guiding hand of Jehovah.

When, however, we imagine we have attained to complete submission, and are ready to move at the divine command, there comes the perplexing question, How are we to know the will of the Lord concerning us? Does the Holy Ghost forbid, and does he move us? Is there any vision of the night, praying and saying, "Come over into Macedonia and help us?" Doubtless there are indications nearly as plain as those which the apostle had. If the steps of the good man are ordered of the Lord, the path of the devoted preacher ought not to be less clear. There are many things to be taken into the account in reaching the right conclusion, because the will of God is in accord with our conditions and necessities, and may be intimated by the providential adjustments which surround us. The men in a full and over-running Conference are not called away from it necessarily, and in some instances a man may be called from a destitute field to one that is already pretty well supplied. The generally accepted idea, however, is probably the true one—that the more destitute fields appeal to the preacher's conscience. To them he ought to go if he can; and if others hold back who might go, all the more reason for him to let go the fastenings and set sail. But this loosing from Troas is a hard thing with many, upon whom the impression is strong that a distant Macedonia requires their labors. The breaking up of old associations, the sundering of social ties, pecuniary sacrifices, and domestic interests involved, are calculated to deter. There are probable hardships to be encountered, a scant and uncertain support, and the ordeal of a new climate is to be undergone. Once in Macedonia, it is a trial to stay. There are older communities and Conferences, and richer and more inviting lands. To have come was the uttermost of effort, and not to go back is more than many can endure.

Alas for us! that the grace to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ is so often lacking! In some Conferences there are more men than places—there are men in the local ranks, because the itinerant cohorts are full; and there are strong and experienced preachers who could be spared without much detriment to the work where they are. It is more agreeable every way for them to stay; but meanwhile "the regions beyond" are without the gospel, and the people are perishing. We may speak for Louisiana, where nearly half of our parishes are almost without the gospel, and in which some large presiding elders' districts have not more than three or four effective preachers. In some sections our churches and parsonages are going to ruin, and our flocks are being scattered and devoured for want of pastoral oversight. This may be true of other destitute Conferences in the West, but we doubt whether any are worse off than Louisiana. Will not the night vision wake up a host of recruits for these needy and sorely suffering regions? Weird and solemn and beseeching was the appeal as it came to Paul. Across the seas and amidst the shadows of paganism there stood a man of Macedonia. Was it the embodiment of heathen ignorance and misery crying to Christ's ministers for deliverance? or was it Christ himself, already there and waiting for his heralds to proclaim life to the dying?

In Louisiana, in Arkansas, in Montana, in California there stands a man who identifies himself with all the waste places, who speaks the language of their perishing people, and calls upon his servants to come to the rescue. There he stands, the impersonation and representative of famishing and neglected souls thirsting for the waters of life, and hungry for the bread of heaven. He who called to Paul out of the night and across the Aegean, calls to hundreds among us to break away from the older Conferences, to surrender local for itinerant work, and to yield to the Spirit's call to a self-denying but glorious ministry.—Loosing from Troas with a Hellespont of some sort to cross—there is the rub! Struggling and dying souls implore, the Man of Calvary prays us to come. The needle is true to the pole when suspended upon a burnished point and freed from perturbing influences. So it is with preachers in the line of duty, if they swing free and clear upon the perfectly polished pivot of obedience to the divine will, and divest themselves of the disturbing forces which tempt them to swerve from the path of duty. The eye of love will be clear to see, the ear of love will be quick to hear, unless blinded and deadened by mistaken views. Where there is a Pauline heroism, and an apostolic zeal, the man of Macedonia will not pray in vain for help. Loosing from Troas will be an easy matter when the spirit of burning fully imbues the ministry, and when the Master's voice is heard sounding across the waters and from the dreary desolations: "Come over and help us."

BUSINESS IS BUSINESS.

Business is not something else. Business is not fun. Business is not beneficence. Business may chafer to have the last penny of an account allowed; benevolence may turn round and receipt the bill without payment. But the maxim is often quoted to hide nefariousness; and the covert principle is often acted on where the maxim is not quoted. There is deep fraud and devilish iniquity often concealed under the flippant expression, or else the secret motive, "Business is business."—Again, "supposing that gain is godliness" is the same error, the same perversion of truth, meaning "business is business," as it obtains, say in a milder form, in Christian circles.

Illustrations of these statements are too abundant in facts near and present to burden our columns with hypothetical cases, rhetorically stated.

1. A preacher in one of our large cities vigorously defends the theater. The next thing we hear is that he is to preach in the New Opera House on Sunday next. The theater-goers will, of course, patronize their advocate. It is a good thing for him. Business is business. The Little Church Around the Corner in New York may have done a very proper thing. But "the Little Church Around the Corner," on Carondelet street, sells whisky. Comment is unnecessary, for "business is business."

2. Civil service reform in our national affairs is justly pronounced, by many leading journals, of all political questions of the day the most important. The nation is horrified by the discovery of the manner in which appointments to office are solicited and made by the sort of pressure—a pressure whose exact weight can be told in gold and greenbacks—to which Congressmen are subjected, and which they in turn bring to bear upon the executive and heads of departments; the shameless brokerage carried on in the sale of recommendations for office, the exchange of influences and the demoralizing and corrupting effects of the whole system. An appointment to office is a reward for party services. The office-holder contributes out of the very salary which the country pays him for his work, to maintain the party supremacy and to promote the personal aggrandizement of those who have appointed him; but "business is business." The whole army of office-holders, great and small, throughout the country are transformed into a legion of mercenaries; but "business is business." The public treasury, by means of assessment and forced contributions levied upon all its employés, is subsidized to secure the renomination of a political chief, or otherwise control the presidential succession; but "business is business." Clerks are sent upon electioneering errands at the public expense, or their salaries are docked for party purposes; but "business is business."

3. A protectionist on the tariff question, writing to the Nation, says that immediately after the Chicago fire he made a computation of the amount he would probably gain in extra profits, by reason of the tariff, in furnishing iron and lumber to build the desolate city, and immediately gave one-half of this anticipated profit to the Chicago relief fund. Upon this exhibit is constructed an argument for a protective tariff, showing how it enables him to be charitable to the unfortunate. The tariff question it is not for these columns to discuss. But admitting protection to be the best thing ever heard of in heaven or earth, the argument for it, adduced by the above ingenious and entertaining confession, must be repudiated as ridiculously unsound. It amounts simply, as a cotemporary suggests, to the plea of the thief that carries off your spoons in the night, that he is thereby enabled to supply these articles to the destitute. However, "business is business."

4. Leading Republican journals at the North abound in kind words for the South, in gentle consideration of the South as a long-suffering people eaten out of substance by exactions and debt under which richer communities would stagger, in denunciation of scalawags and carpet-baggers, in sober doubts of any Ku-klux organization sufficient to justify martial law, in rebuke of the oppressive measures of the administration; and yet those same papers will support Grant, the oppressor, for re-election, if he should be renominated for the presidency. "Business is business" will explain the inconsistency. The commercial cities of the North must have the trade of the South, and pleasant relations must be cultivated in order to heaviest sales; therefore let all "great swelling words of vanity" be spoken. But, on the other hand, the patronage of party cannot be dispensed with, and so let Grant have the votes, for "business is business."

In striking contrast with the cases above mentioned we adduce the following, in which it would be difficult for a compound solar microscope to detect the least trace of the trite maxim which is our subject, whether in its simple or its corrupted sense:

Mr. George M. Pullman, treasurer of the Chicago Relief and Aid Society, writes to the managers of the Charleston, South Carolina, relief movement, thanking them for "the generous donation from the warm-hearted Charleston to broken-hearted Chicago." He adds:

"Our prostrate people will be more touched by this contribution than by many of greater amount, which come from other more prosperous sources, since the kind words and feeling which accompany the gift assures us once more 'that all the world's akin.' Such hearty manifestations from the South—and they are numerous in this time of trial—convince us anew that we of America, at least, are one people; and over the red fields which lie between us and those who this day bless us with their bounty, we stretch our empty hands in a mournful benediction on the givers of this sacred fund."

The Meeting at Lyceum Hall, on Wednesday night, the sixth instant, in behalf of Centenary College, was presided over by Hon. E. T. Merrick. The chairman delivered an excellent address. Hon. Christian Roselius made an able and earnest speech, and was followed by Prof. Alexander Dimitry in one of his happy impromptu efforts. About $1,000 were subscribed on the spot, and a committee of prominent citizens was appointed to solicit further subscriptions. It is time that our people were waking up to this vital enterprise.

Mr. Disraeli has been elected Lord Rector of the University of Glasgow over Prof. John Ruskin who was also nominated for the honor.

Bishop Keener on Editing, and Supporting Home Newspapers.

The San Jose Patriot gives an interesting account of Bishop Keener's views, as expressed before the Pacific Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, lately in session in that city. After paying a deserved compliment to the Bishop's piety, devotion to his work and ability, it adds: "The debate had been on the question of explicitly sustaining the Spectator, of San Francisco, as the organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church South on this coast. Very vigorous discussion had taken place, and the Conference, by a decisive vote, had determined the issue affirmatively. Upon this the Bishop arose and congratulated the members on their action in the premises. He urged them to stand by their paper. The question for them was not: Should they have a paper? but how should they sustain it? It was a foregone conclusion that they should have a paper—a competent, recognized journal, devoted to their interests and the interests of true religion. Such a paper the Spectator would doubtless prove to be. And he urged upon the Conference and upon its people the importance of sustaining home newspapers and journals in preference to publications foreign to their bishopric. This, he assured them, was not anti-catholic. And, if any member of the Conference had doubts on that point, he would ask him to visit Nashville, and seek to introduce the Spectator there in place of the organs local to that part of the country. Why, so to speak, they didn't know of any place or any publication away from Nashville. (Laughter.) So it was in St. Louis, also. And such exclusive and partial patronage he pronounced to be laudable and necessary. Besides, he called the attention of the Conference to the great difficulty of editing; the vast labor and responsibility involved, and the expense of publication. He expressed the opinion, based on personal experience extending through nearly three decades, that no man could edit that long without succeeding in displeasing everybody, (laughter,) and most men would do it in less time.

"A Member—'You have become Bishop, sir.'

"Bishop Keener—'But not by virtue of that newspaper experience, my friend. Probably the vast majority of people who wanted me for Bishop never saw or heard of my paper. (Laughter.) But I wish to impress that mere pique, or dissatisfaction without adequate cause, or preference for other journals, is not sufficient to justify the withholding of patronage from your home publications. I therefore counsel this Conference and its people to stand by their own paper. Help it along. Take it. Advise your friends to take it. Make them take it, if they can. Take it for them, if they can't. Outside papers are good, but, in a great and growing country like this, you need a reliable paper of your own, and you cannot have it if you do not support it.' (Applause.")

Methodism and Masonry in Arkansas.

We extract as follows from a letter written by Bishop McTyeire to the Western Methodist:

The church building in Augusta reminds me that Arkansas Methodism is almost entitled to the honor of inventing a style of ecclesiastical architecture. Nowhere else have I seen the "lodge" so frequently domiciled under the same roof with the church. Even log houses in the country may be seen with a second story for a lodge. One of them had a queer look, indeed—its second story seems to have been a second thought also; it was framed and weather-boarded. There it sat upon the hewed logs, the superstructure jutting over each end a few feet, suggesting a hat on the head, and suggestive of other things. I asked a "bright" Mason, how about this? "Sir," he replied, "we believe in you. The church is founded on a rock, and Masonry on the church." He was disposed to be facetious.—Whether we gain or lose by this arrangement, is a problem yet under consideration. It has been told me that some of our people pay more, and more willingly, for their Masonry than they do for their Methodism; and that if a lodge meeting comes in conflict with a church meeting, the latter goes by default. Also that there were men who as members of the "grand lodge" allowed nothing to hinder their attendance, but as delegates to a District or Annual Conference, almost anything would keep them away.

Masonry is a noteworthy feature of Arkansas. It is a power. The best class of men are attached to it. I think the "ancient order" more prevalent here than I have seen it anywhere else. Our preachers all seem to belong to it.

And hereby hangs a tale. A few years ago, going into Sequatchie valley, on the Tennessee river, to hold a District Conference, on entering the valley, beautiful in its geography as in its name, I noticed that the fowls tarried till late in the morning on their roosts, and here and there one could be seen lying dead on a stable or outhouse. The cholera or some other disease was among them. Whereupon, in my mind, I took two resolutions: 1. To eat no chicken that trip; 2. To keep the reason to myself. A friend happened to ask if I was a Mason, I was not. "Why," inquired he, "don't you like them?" He was informed that I liked them much, and had no objections to the order, but I was a Methodist, and that took all my time, and gave an opportunity for all the good I could do. By and by we sat down to dinner, and my host offered stewed chicken and baked chicken, which I steadily declined. "Well," he exclaimed, dropping knife and fork, and holding up his hands, "I see what I never expected in this world—a Methodist preacher that ain't a Mason and don't eat chicken."

The Walt had a number of cotton bales to take on, and we had time and opportunity to hold a pleasant and edifying service at the church.

I am now completing my first visitation of the Conferences in Arkansas, and I desire to record my thankfulness for the providential mercies and the social and religious fellowship that have conspired to make it very agreeable to me, and, I trust, not without some results. While there remains much land to be possessed, and much work remains to be done upon what has been occupied, yet it is evident that the church, as represented by her faithful laborers, has not been idle or unsuccessful in this field. The past is cause for gratitude, and the future is full of hope. We have over thirty thousand Methodists (white) in Arkansas. A noble band of itinerant and local preachers is leading them forward in the name of the Lord. Is there not enough leaven to leaven the State? They are preaching the pure word of God, building churches and parsonages, locating camp grounds, establishing schools, and throwing out their lines by organizing new missions. Their finances are steadily rising. The year now closing has been made glorious by many displays of the great power of God. The word has been confirmed by signs following. Hard and old and long-resisting sinners have been converted—a greater number of them than the brethren recollect in any former year of their ministry. The Lord grant them prosperity, and make them a thousand times as many more as they are! Amen.

Tennessee Female College.—Attention is called to the advertisement of this institution, which will be found in the appropriate column. Prof. Hargrove can be safely trusted with the care and education of our daughters, and the college over which he presides possesses unsurpassed advantages. It is located at Franklin, Tennessee—a most delightful and salubrious region. It will be seen that the spring session begins January 22, 1872. For particulars see advertisement, and address Rev. R. K. Hargrove, Franklin, Tennessee.

The San Francisco Spectator has changed its name to the Pacific Methodist, and is now edited and published by Wick B. Parsons. It has come out in a new dress, enlarged, and looking more beautiful and attractive than ever. Bro. Parsons has our best wishes for his success in the arduous enterprise he has undertaken. He is, we doubt not, the man for the place.

Texas Conference.—A communication in reference to the thirty-second session of the Texas Conference is too late for this issue. It will appear next week, by which time we hope to receive the list of appointments.

PERIODICALS.

Die Mædenwelt is an illustrated magazine of fashions and fancy work, and contains abundance of patterns and fashion plates. We have received the monthly numbers for November. Published by S. T. Taylor, New York.

Burke's Magazine for Boys and Girls for November reaches us late, but is a valuable number. It contains the best of reading for the young, and is handsomely illustrated.

The Atlantic Monthly for December has: Light and Darkness; The Legend Beautiful; A Japanese Doctor and his Works; Their Wedding Journey; Shasta, and other articles.

Peters' Musical Monthly contains a valuable supplement, "Christmas Chimes," in addition to the usual quantity of music and songs.

The Sunday School Journal for December is received. A good table of contents, and altogether an excellent number.

Obituaries.

THOMAS ABERNETHY, son of Rev. Thomas S. Abernethy, Jr., died in Enterprise, Mississippi, on the first of November, of congestion of the brain. He was born on the twenty-third of August, 1860, in Pickensville, Alabama.

Thomas was a bright, sweet-spirited and intelligent Christian boy of eleven years, and gave large and decided promise of a shining intellect and a beautiful character. Death leaves a shining mark, and his rude and cruel arrows have suddenly stricken down this sweet boy, and hurried him away from the hearts and home of devoted parents to the cold grave. But they sorrow not as those who are without hope, but cheerfully cherish the expectation of a period of time

"When what they now deplore
Will rise in full immortal prime,
And bloom to fade no more."

SISTER SUSAN GRACE, daughter of the Rev. James King, and wife of J. B. Grace, was born in North Carolina, June 3, 1809, and departed this life, at her home in Allenton, Wilcox county, Alabama, October 16, 1871.

Brother and Sister Grace were married September 1, 1831. Sister Grace was converted at a very early age, at a camp meeting in Clark county, under the preaching of Rev. Ebenezer Hearne.

Ever since she was married her house has been a home for the Methodist preacher. Nothing seemed to give her more delight than to entertain the ministers of her church.

Sister Grace suffered long, having been confined to her bed most of the time for eight months with dropsy. She bore her sufferings with that Christian fortitude which would commend the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, which she professed, to all. She would often sing the good songs of Zion. At one time during her illness she became speechless for some time, and while all watched her with breathless anxiety, she, to their great surprise and astonishment, broke forth in singing that good old hymn:

"On Jordan's stormy banks I stand,
And cast a wishful eye
To Canaan's fair and happy land,
Where my possessions lie."

I visited her frequently during her sickness, but never found her at any time unwilling to exchange this desert for that land which flows with milk and honey. This was the purpose of her Christian race, the end of her desires and the completion of her hopes.

Notwithstanding she knew she was passing through the valley and shadow of death, she feared no evil. Her faith in God was strong. She fully believed that she would cross the river of death and safely land on Canaan's happy shores.

In her death the church has sustained a great loss, her husband a kind and affectionate wife, and the community a good neighbor.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

THE CONTINENTAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY of New York offers many advantages to the insuring public. It adapts itself to the wants of the people; hence follows its wonderful success. Though in infancy, yet by vitality and energy it has attained an enviable position in the foremost ranks of life underwriting. Established in May, 1866, it has up to date issued over 42,000 policies. Its assets are $5,500,000. Dividends paid to policyholders, over $200,000; and the surplus as regards policyholders is over $500,000. In 1870, per official record, it issued more policies than any other company in the world. With such stupendous results, we cannot doubt its ability to maintain the position it has justly attained. Having no investments at any time in Chicago, it must not be confounded with the fire company of the same name, as its work and investments are entirely confined to life underwriting.

J. DOUGLAS is too well known as an engraver to need any recommendation from the people of New Orleans. We are satisfied that anything intrusted to him in his line will be executed in superior style. Those in want of wedding cards, etc., will be well pleased by giving him a call. Our patrons in the country, who cannot spare time to come to the city, can, by dropping him a line, have their business attended to the same as if they were here in person. We refer our readers to his card.

WALSHE'S EMPORIUM.—Those who are in want of something warm and comfortable for the winter, and at moderate charges, should go to the popular house of Captain B. T. Walshe, on Canal street. There everything in the line of gentlemen's garments, also clothing and underwear for boys and children, can be had, and will, we are satisfied, give entire satisfaction to the wearer. Our friends in the country should call and see the captain when they come to town to replenish their wardrobes.

DAVIS & JACKSON.—These gentlemen are disposing of their large stock of clothing at reduced rates, with the intention of closing out business. They would be glad if their friends and others would give them a call before going elsewhere; and they are satisfied that their stock can be had as low as at any house in the city, if not lower. We would advise our country friends to call and see them.

WE ARE PLEASED to notice among the list of premiums at our recent State Fair the name of J. Thomson & Bros., who were given the first premium for home-made carriages. Their advertisement appears elsewhere.

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE,
FRANKLIN, TENNESSEE.

THE SPRING SESSION FOR 1872 OPENS JANUARY 22.

This institution combines internal comfort and elegance with educational facilities of a high order. It challenges investigation of its equipments and appointments, its methods and results. A complete system of Gymnastics for girls is a recent addition for healthful exercise and physical development. Its prosperity has steadily grown under the present management, and the number of pupils is larger now than ever before. It is under the supervision of the Tennessee Conference, and refers inquirers to the Bishops of the church, and to leading ministers in Nashville and elsewhere.

During the fifteen years since its organization no pupil has died in attendance on it. The climate is bracing, the atmosphere pure, the soil generous and the scenery beautiful.

While in a thriving town, and within one hour of Nashville by several daily trains, it has all the necessary quiet for successful study.

Charges are low. The Literary Course, including Latin and French, is free to itinerant ministers, and they may enacol board and other fees for their daughters by an active interest for the college.

SELF-EVIDENT FACTS.

THE CELEBRATED ARGYLE BITTERS, so long distinguished for their unrivaled efficacy as a Tonic, and for the purity of the articles used in their manufacture, are now offered for sale at reduced prices.

They combine all the elements of a first-rate family medicine—simplicity in manufacture, healthful and tonic ingredients, efficacy in action, and perfect safety in their use, for any age or condition.

Unlike all other Bitters, they do not increase the desire for alcoholic stimulants but, by their peculiar action upon the digestive organs, serve rather to subdue the disposition for strong drinks, as can be testified to by thousands of our most respected professional and business men of every degree and condition.

They are Tonic, Alterative and Invigorating, and are a safe family medicine for either sex or for any age.

For sale by all leading merchants through out the country. no16 1m

WHAT THE SPARROW CHIRPS.

BY "PEARL RIVERS."

I am only a little sparrow,
A bird of low degree;
My life is of little value,
But the dear Lord careth for me.

He gave me a coat of feathers,
It is very plain, I know,
With never a speck of crimson,
For it was not made for show.

But it keeps me warm in winter,
And it shields me from the rain;
Were it bordered with gold or purple,
Perhaps it would make me vain.

And now that the spring-time cometh,
I will build me a little nest,
With many a chirp of pleasure,
In the spot I love the best.

I have no barn or storehouse,
I neither sow nor reap;
God gives me a sparrow's portion,
But never a seed to keep.

If my meal is sometimes scanty,
Close picking makes it sweet;
I have always enough to feed me,
And "life is more than meat."

I know there are many sparrows;
All over the world we are found;
But our Heavenly Father knoweth
When one of us falls to the ground.

Though small, we are never forgotten;
Though weak, we are never afraid;
For we know that the dear Lord keepeth
The life of the creatures he made.

I fly through the thickest forest,
I light on many a spray;
I have no chart nor compass,
But I never lose my way.

And I fold my wings at twilight,
Wherever I happen to be;
For the Father is always watching,
And no harm will come to me.

GOOD NATURE.

As welcome as sunshine
In every place
Is the beaming approach
Of a good-natured face.
As genial as sunshine,
Like warmth to impart,
Is a good-natured word
From a good-natured heart.

THE SIZE OF SOULS.

"Father," said James Watson, "are all souls of the same size?"

"It depends upon what you mean by the term," said Mr. Watson. "A certain kind of fish are called soles. They are not of the same size; some are small and some are large. Shoes and boots have soles. They are not all of the same size."

"I did not mean those kinds of soles."

"What kind did you mean?"

"Such souls as we have."

"What kind of souls do we have?"

"We all have souls. More properly speaking, we are living souls. We are not one thing and our souls another. What led you to ask the question respecting the size of souls?"

"I heard Mr. Newcomb say in his lecture that Cromwell had one of the largest souls that ever lived."

"What did Mr. Newcomb mean when he said Cromwell had a very large soul?"

"I suppose he meant what he said."

"Did he mean to affirm that his soul was longer and wider and thicker than other souls?"

"No, sir, I don't suppose he meant that; because souls have no length or breadth. He spoke figuratively, and his meaning was that Cromwell had greater intelligence, energy and magnanimity than other men. When we speak of one as having a great soul we generally have reference to his capacity for generous feeling, rather than to his capacity for thinking. We say of a generous, noble-minded man that he has a great soul."

"Why do some persons have larger souls than others?"

"Some are born with greater souls—that is, with greater capacities—than others. That is one cause. Then some souls grow more than others."

"What makes some souls grow more than others?"

"Because better care is taken of them—more culture is bestowed upon them. It is with souls as with plants. If they are carefully cultivated they make a vigorous growth. If they are neglected they have a stunted growth. I once knew two boys who were ambitious, but the ambition of one differed widely from that of the other. One was a great admiror of the village blacksmith, who was a tall, stalwart man, and who had the reputation of being the strongest man in town. Robert, for that was the boy's name, used frequently to visit the blacksmith's shop, and watch the ponderous blows the blacksmith gave to the heated iron. He admired the powerful arm that wielded the sledge-hammer, and thought that he should be perfectly happy if he could be as tall and large and strong as the blacksmith. He wanted to know what would make his body grow and what would make him strong. Some wags gave him some directions which he made himself ridiculous by following."

"Did he grow large and strong?"

"No. Nature designed that he should be a medium-sized man, and of course he did not get beyond that. The other boy was ambitious of having a great soul—of being mentally strong. He admired mind more than body, and whenever he read a good book he felt an intense desire for mental improvement."

"What did he do?"

"He used all the means of mental improvement within his reach."

"Did he go to school?"

"He went to school when he could. His father was a farmer who kept him at home to help him in the summer, and sent him to school in winter. He studied with all his might when he did go to school, and when he did not go to school he did the best he could. When he went to the field to work he took a book with him, and when for any cause there was an interval from labor, he spent it in reading. Then, when he was at work, he thought over what he had read, so that he knew all the thoughts the book contained. Then he kept his eyes and ears open. He saw and heard what was going on around him; especially when he met with intelligent men did he listen with great attention to what they said, and treasured up in his memory everything he thought to have value. He thus made as much mental progress as most of those who have nothing to do but study. After awhile his father concluded to give him the advantages of a public education. In due time he was sent to college, where he became one of the very best scholars."

"It seems to me that he sought to have a great mind rather than a great soul."

"So he did at first—that is to say, he cared more for the attainments of intellectual power than he did for nobility of soul. But after awhile he began to see that he was pursuing a selfish course. 'I am,' thought he, 'living only to myself. I am seeking my own mental improvement without caring much for the improvement and happiness of others.' Having become sensible of his deficiency, he set out to cultivate his heart as well as his intellect."

"How did he do it?"

"In the first place he set himself to encourage and assist those students who were discouraged and found it hard to get along. Then he endeavored to act as a peacemaker in all cases where there were difficulties and quarrels. By and by he discovered that the best way to become noble-minded was to follow the example of Christ. He sought first the kingdom of Christ and his righteousness, and became thus a true follower of Christ. After he had completed his college course he studied for the ministry, that he might become a missionary to the heathen. Some thought that he was wasting his talents by devoting them to the work of instructing the ignorant and degraded sons of Africa, but he did not think so. All who knew him honored him for his devotion to the cause of benevolence."

Many young persons desire to be strong. This is well. They should seek to have healthy, strong bodies, that their bodies may be fitting instruments of the soul. They should desire to have strong, beautiful, noble souls. To have such souls they must use the means of growth. The law of bodily growth is exercise. The limbs become strong when they are properly and vigorously exercised. The law of soul-growth is the same: exercise. He who wishes to have a strong memory must exercise it, and he who would have strong and noble feelings must pursue a similar course.—Bright Side.

THE LOST FOUND.

There was once a boy in Liverpool who went into the water to bathe and he was carried out by the tide. Though he struggled long and hard, he was not able to swim against the ebbing tide, and he was taken far out to sea. He was picked up by a boat belonging to a vessel bound for Dublin. The poor little boy was almost lost. The sailors were all very kind to him when he was taken into the vessel. One gave him a cap, another a jacket, another a pair of shoes, and so on.

But that evening a gentleman, who was walking near the place where the little boy had gone into the water, found his clothes lying on the shore. He searched and made inquiries; but no tidings were to be heard of the poor little boy. He found a piece of paper in the pocket of the boy's coat, by which he discovered who it was to whom the clothes belonged. The kind man went with a sad and heavy heart to break the news to the parents. He said to the father: "I am very sorry to tell you that I found those clothes on the shore, and could not find the lad to whom they belonged; I almost fear he has been drowned." The father could hardly speak for grief; the mother was wild with sorrow. They caused every inquiry to be made, but no account was to be had of their dear boy. The house was sad; the little children missed their playfellow; mourning was ordered; the mother spent her time crying; and the father's heart was heavy. He said little, but he felt much.

The lad was taken back in a vessel bound for Liverpool, and arrived on the day the mourning was to be brought home. As soon as he reached Liverpool he set off toward his father's house. He did not like to be seen in the strange cap and jacket and shoes which he had on; so he went by the lanes, where he would not meet those who knew him. At last he came to the hall door. He knocked. When the servant opened it, and saw who it was, she screamed with joy, and said: "Here is Master Tom!" His father rushed out, and, bursting into tears, embraced him. His mother fainted; "there was no more spirit in her." What a happy evening they all, parents and children, spent! They did not want the mourning. The father could say with Jacob: "It is enough; my son is yet alive."

But what do you think will be the rejoicing in heaven when those who were in danger of being lost forever arrive safely on that happy shore? How will the angels rejoice, and the family of heaven be glad! Perhaps when some of you will hereafter go to heaven, your fathers and mothers, or brothers and sisters, will welcome you and say: "I am delighted to see you safe. Welcome! Welcome!" You will not go there like the boy with a cap and clothes of which he was ashamed, but in garments of salvation, white as snow, with crowns of glory that fade not away. And what must you do to be ready to enter heaven when you die? Think what it is, and then do it.

But remember the great multitude of heathen children who have never heard a word about heaven, and who do not know that there is any Savior for lost men. Suppose you had seen that Liverpool boy carried out to sea by the tide. How would you have pitied him! Then suppose you had seen the water full of boys, all drifting out beyond the reach of human help. How would your spirit have died within you! When you should have turned away and gone home, how sad you would have felt! No "pleasant bread" could you have eaten that night. But all the children in heathen lands are drifting hopelessly onward—can you tell whither?—Lovely Words.

The Farm and Garden.

How to Save the Seeds of Melons, Squashes and Cucumbers.

The true way to get seed of the very choicest quality of any of the vegetables named—including pumpkins—is to tie a red piece of cloth loosely around the vine, near the first squash, or the melon that will ripen first, to indicate that such specimens are for seed, and keep them, after they are removed from the vine, in a cool apartment until they begin to decay. Cucumbers and melons will yield better seeds if the seed is not removed until the edible portion has decayed. The seed should remain as long as possible in the squash or pumpkin, that it may ripen. Pumpkins and squashes that are matured sufficiently for use do not always contain ripe seed at the time the squash is taken from the vine; but, on the contrary, the seed is frequently quite green. As long as the pumpkin or squash remains sound, it is well to keep it, as the seeds will absorb the soft inner part of the squash, and grow fat and oily, being of much more substance, and will produce a far better crop than the green seeds. It is necessary to the fullest development of the germ that the seed be dried before planting. This keeping seeds out of the ground, and allowing them to dry and ripen the germ, constitutes one difference between cultivation and the state of nature. Thoroughly ripened seed will give larger young plants, as there will be more substance in the seed to sustain the young plant. When green seeds are taken from a vegetable of any sort, and dried, the germs are frequently dried so rapidly that the vitality is destroyed. Squash seeds and pumpkin seeds are frequently placed on dishes and set in an oven to dry; and the oven is sometimes so hot that the germ of every seed is killed by too great a heat. Let the seeds be spread thin on a board, or on shelves in some out-building, where they will dry gradually. If seeds are allowed to freeze before they are dry, the germs of some kinds of seed will be destroyed. As soon as they are dry store them in small sacks, and suspend the sacks so that mice cannot devour them. If stored in a box or barrel before they are quite dry, the seeds are liable to ferment and mold.—New York Observer.

CARE OF THE GRAPE-VINE.

The earth that covered the young vines as a protection through the winter should be removed as soon as the frost has left the ground in the spring. If the land was heavily cropped previous to planting the vines, a little bone-dust or thoroughly composted manure may now be beneficially worked into the soil around the plants. The stakes that were used the first summer, if they were not removed in the fall, must be now replaced by poles nine or ten feet long.

Allow two shoots to grow from each plant, breaking away all others. Tie these two shoots, after they have attained a height of about one foot, to the pole. This obviates the danger, to which they would otherwise be exposed, of being broken by the winds—a casualty to be avoided, if possible. Never allow the shoots to make too great a growth without support, as their weight may cause them to break.

The first laterals (shoots that grow from the buds at the base of the leaves) will now begin to appear. When there is a liability of their making a very strong growth pinch them back to the first leaf after they formed a third one. The object of this is two-fold—to strengthen the main stem and to develop the bud at the base of the lateral, which, in many varieties, is the bearing one for next year. If the Concord is under cultivation, check the two shoots by pinching off the ends with the thumb and finger, when they have grown about six feet long. The laterals will now push out more vigorously than before. The second growth of laterals (those which grow from laterals previously pinched) must have their ends pinched off when about eighteen inches long. If the canes are securely tied to the poles, we can leave them until the fall pruning is needed.—Correspondent of Oneida Circular.

MANAGEMENT OF FRUIT TREES.

I have a young orchard of thirty acres, and have trained those of a spreading variety so that the lower limbs lay on the ground; when there is a general failure of fruit these limbs near the ground always produce. Many persons have said to me: "Why don't you trim your orchard up, so you can plow under the trees?" This is the great mistake of nearly all farmers—they trim their trees too high. You may plow deep and near the tree until the orchard has several years' growth; but after the roots and top begin to spread you must plow shallow and not too near the tree. An orchard while young needs about the same cultivation as corn; if the land is rich you may cultivate corn in it for three or four years; after that it is better to cultivate a vine or root crop; but never raise small grain in the orchard. Never plant anything or allow grass to grow nearer than six feet of the tree. Trees that stand near decaying stumps are very liable to be attacked by the grub worm in the root. The best way to prevent this is to take the ground away from around the tree, put a peck or more of unleached ashes around it, and cover it over with the soil. When the ground gets wet lye is formed, and sinks to the lower roots and destroys the pest. The lye will not kill the trees, as some theoretical writers have claimed; but, on the contrary, will make them grow. An orchard should not be set with grass until the trees are nearly as large as desired. Many orchards have died for the want of drainage. If the soil requires draining at all, it should be drained deep and thorough. A liberal coat of manure will help the trees wonderfully. The necessity of destroying all apples that fall before their time, I presume, is well understood by all farmers. Therefore I will not speak of it.—Practical Farmer.

DEAD ANIMALS possess great fertilizing properties, and should all be utilized on our farms and in our gardens. They are especially valuable for grapevines, fruit trees, etc., and may be applied simply by cutting up into pieces and burying near the roots.

Mr. Lyman recently remarked, in a discussion on this subject before the New York Farmers' Club, that he could illustrate the advantage of animal flesh as food for trees by stating that during a late visit to the farm of Mr. Quinn, two pear trees were pointed out, one of which was very inferior to the other in size and thriftiness. On inquiry he learned they were planted at the same time, but it happened that the carcass of a pole-cat rested at the root of the one, while the other was not similarly favored. These two pear trees have been bearing for the past six years; the one yielding one bushel, the other two bushels—a proportion which is likely to be kept up for twenty years longer. This fact shows what a pole-cat may do for a pear tree.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

ENGLISH SALAD SAUCE.—Pound in a mortar the hard-boiled yolk of an egg; mix with it a saltspoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of mustard flour, a mashed mealy potato, two dessertspoonfuls each of cream and olive oil, and a tablespoonful of good vinegar.

YEAST.—Boil six potatoes without the skins; add six tablespoonfuls of flour, one tablespoonful of salt, one quarter pint of brown sugar. Mash the whole, having poured over the mixture a pint of the water in which the potatoes were boiled, scalding hot. When lukewarm add half a pint of yeast. Excellent for biscuit.

A HINT TO CONSUMPTIVES.—A physician of no little experience says he has known several consumptives cured by observing the following rule: Live temperately, avoid spirituous liquors, wear flannel next to the skin, and take every morning half a pint of new milk mixed with a wineglassful of expressed juice of green hoarhound.

GRATED CUCUMBER.—Take large green cucumbers and grate them, and let them drain in a colander for several hours to get rid of the green juice. Season to taste with salt, pepper and grated onion; put in vinegar enough to cover them—the best and strongest vinegar should be used. Put them in a bottle without cooking, and seal closely.

TO KNIT THE HEELS OF STOCKINGS DOUBLE.—After setting the heel, widen a few stitches, according to the fineness of the yarn; commence at one side, knit the first, then slip off the next without knitting, knit the next, slip the next, and so on across. In knitting back slip those stitches that were previously knit and knit those that were slipped. This makes a double heel like the old-fashioned striped mittens.

MEDICAL.

The New Louisiana Remedy

FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as

G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,

and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE $5 PER BOTTLE.

Scientific.

THE GREAT electro-magnet recently made for the Stevens Institute, at Hoboken, is the largest in the world. The length of wire in the coils is four thousand four hundred and eighty-eight feet. The iron cores are over three feet long, and weigh one hundred and eighty-three pounds each. The lifting force is estimated at between thirty and forty tons.

IT IS CLAIMED that San Buenaventura, California, has the largest pear, English walnut and olive trees in the United States; three date palms from seven to nine feet in circumference, and from forty to fifty feet high; pear trees eight feet in circumference, and olives seven; three English walnuts, the largest six feet in circumference, about thirty feet in height and a spread of top of sixty feet.

SOME ONE has been testing the accuracy of thermometers. He took one mounted on box-wood, one on metal; and one very dirty. In the shade one degree covered the range of difference between them. In the sun they differed sixteen degrees. The method of mounting seems to make a variation in the effects of heat, and may account partly for the well-known fact that thermometers, as well as doctors, often disagree.

THE Scientific American explains the word carat. It is an imaginary weight expressing the proportion of pure gold in a mass of metal. An ounce of gold is divided into twenty-four carats, and so gold of twenty-two carats fine is gold of which twenty-two parts are pure, the other two parts being silver, copper or other metal. Carat is originally the name of a bean which grows upon the carat tree. This bean varies little in its weight, and from a remote period has been used as a weight for gold, gems and pearls in India and Africa.

A FOREIGN WRITER notes some curious effects of the peculiar dryness of the American climate. Housekeepers are less annoyed by molds; it is safe to move into new houses much sooner than in the old countries; articles of wood are with more difficulty kept from shrinkage. Americans use more hair-oil than Europeans; as a rule they are more lean, for which reason they appear to have longer necks, and the women to be more "delicate and ethereal." Among other effects of the dryness of our climate is the nervousness of the Americans, of which this is regarded as at least one of the causes.

THE COMPASS PLANT.—Much has been lately said and written in journals devoted to natural history, horticulture, etc., about a remarkable plant found in Kansas and other Western regions, which, it is alleged, has the property of turning its leaves northward and southward, like the needle of a compass, and which has, on this account, been called the "compass plant." The botanical name of the plant is "silphium laciniatum." It has been denied by some that its leaves do always point in the direction stated. Others think the statement true, but account for it as the effect of solar influence. On the whole, the evidence in favor of the peculiar characteristic of the plant alleged seems to preponderate. There remains little doubt that its leaves do generally point north and south. J. H. Snyder, of Monrovia, Kansas, writes to the United States Department of Agriculture as follows:

"Having been a resident of Kansas for sixteen years, I have had abundant opportunity to become fully acquainted with the plant and its habits, and I am fully persuaded that the course of north or south is so infallibly indicated by its leaves that I would not hesitate to follow their directions for hundreds of miles. The leaves of the plant from which the accompanying sketch has been made were taken from my orchard, which has been tilled for years, and the plants cut up and turned over and under, and every way; yet every time they come up, either from the old roots or from seed, they invariably turn their leaves in the same direction. There can be no question of this fact, and if, in a group of these plants, here and there a leaf varies a little from the true course, the appearance of the stem and its relation to other leaves show the reason for such discrepancy. The average of such a group is infallible."

The plant is described as having a stalk from three to five feet high, with a leaf resembling a miniature sunflower. It is variously called pair-weed, gum-weed, resin-weed, compass plant, etc. The terms gum-weed and resin-weed arise from the fact that the plant exudes a resinous gum from its stem and leaves, more especially so when the latter are bruised or cut. Medical properties are attributed to this gum, which is often chewed by people acquainted with its character.

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are not all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of strictly unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thoroughly should not be offensive to the people—which should present only thought and feeling of the Southern are now issuing a complete series the facts of history and science—by the eminent Southern scholars of School and College Text-books and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The general market has exhibited only a moderate degree of animation since our last report. Sugar has been in moderate request at prices more in favor of sellers, the closing rates showing a net advance of about ¼c. Molasses has been more active, and closed on Tuesday at an irregular improvement of 2@4c. since Friday. The supply of flour consists mostly of the higher grades, which show little or no variation, while double extra and superfine have continued firm at previous rates. Corn has been in very limited supply, and, owing to its scarcity, it has sold at an advance of 5c. ₱ bushel. Pork and bacon continued quiet at previous rates until Tuesday, when the advices from the West caused considerable speculative feeling, and quite an active business was done at an advance of about 25c. ₱ barrel.

The crop accounts are no less discouraging than previously, indicating that the yield of sugar will be short of last year's, and that the falling off in cotton will be no less than was apprehended last month.

The river is 13 feet 4 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the eighth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	20,986
Lake.....	50
Arkansas.....	2,303
Mobile.....	3,344
Texas.....	231
Total.....	26,914

On Saturday the demand was active, and 8,000 bales changed hands, partly at full prices and partly at an advance of ⅛c., good ordinary closing at 18½@18⅝c., low middling at 18½@18⅞c., and middling at 19@19⅛c. On Monday, with rather exciting accounts from New York, buyers came forward with more eagerness, and, although the movement was checked by moderate offerings and the high pretensions of factors, the sales embraced 6,300 bales at an irregular advance of ⅛@⅜c., closing at ¼@⅜c. On Tuesday the market was excited by the accounts from Liverpool and New York, the former showing an advance of 1-16d. in uplands and ⅛@3-16d. in Orleans, and the latter, at noon, an advance of ⅜c., of which ¼c. was subsequently lost. Under the effect of higher rates factors raised their pretensions, and while some sales were at figures showing only ⅛@¼c. advance, others were at an improvement of ½c., but after the 1.30 P. M. New York telegram, which reported an unfavorable reaction, prices settled down and closed at a net improvement of barely ¼c. The movement was checked by the high pretensions of factors and several buyers being unable to go on at the advance, but the sales nevertheless summed up 6,100 bales.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 299,750 bales, against 380,810 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 208,976 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 74,954 to France, and a decrease of 116,645 to Great Britain, and of 48,631 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

SUGAR.—Quite a fair demand has prevailed, and we note firmer prices. The supplies on Saturday and Monday were mostly disposed of, embracing 1,200 hhds., at 6½@6¾c. for inferior, 7@7¼c. for common, 7½@7¾c. for good common, 8@8¼c. for fair, 8½@8¾c. for good fair, 9@9¼c. for fully fair, 9½@9¾c. for primo, 10¼@10⅝c. for choice, 8½@10c. for seconds, 9¾c. for centrifugal, 10¾@11c. for yellow clarified, 11c. for gray clarified, and 11@12c. for white clarified.

MOLASSES.—The demand has been active, and prices have advanced fully 3c. ₱ gallon on the better grades.

PORK.—Western advices received caused a speculative demand here, and an advance of fully 25c. ₱ bbl. On Tuesday 1,000 bbls. mess were sold, mostly to speculators, at $15 for old mess, on the spot, and $14.50 for new mess, and $14 87½ ₱ bbl. for new mess to arrive. Mess is retailing at $15.25@$15.50.

BACON.—The market has continued dull, and has been more depressed since our last review. On Saturday 15 and 20 casks clear sides sold at 7¾c. ₱ lb. On Monday 5 do. sold at 7¾c., and 5 casks shoulders at 7¾c.

HAMS.—There is little or no demand for them, and prices are merely nominal. Choice new sugar-cured hams are offering at 14@15c. ₱ lb., as in brand; old 12@14c. On Monday 20 tierces new sugar-cured sold at 15c.

DRY SALT MEAT.—The market has shown no animation since our last review, and shoulders are quoted at 5¾c. ₱ lb. There were some sales of shoulders on Monday, not reported, at 5¾c. On Tuesday 15 casks shoulders sold, in three lots, at 6c.

BREAKFAST BACON.—There is no demand, and prices are nominal at 9@10c. ₱ lb. for choice Western.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in moderate request, and opened on Tuesday at 109⅛@109¾, (against 109⅛ at New York,) and closed at 109⅛@109⅜, (against 109⅜ at New York.)

American half dollars are quoted at 108@109, and Mexican dollars at 1¼@2¼ per cent. premium in gold.

The sales of City Appropriation Certificates include $2,500 on Saturday at 85 and 85⅛; and $1,000 on Tuesday at 87½.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"
IS THE "KING"
Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Willcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

Stoves! Stoves! Stoves!

THESE are not the best the world ever saw, nor do I pretend to say that they will last for ages and generations to come; neither will they bake bread or warm rooms without some little wood or coal, and just the least bit of fire, judiciously applied. But I do believe they are just as good as any now in use, and with the same care in using and skill in managing will perform as well, and prove as durable and economical as the most approved pattern. The Christian Advocate.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1871. NO. 49.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINOTON, Dec. 13.—The patent for Daniel Pratt's cotton gin, extended July last, has been reissued, with new claims.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 13.—An emigrant train camped in Saline county, Nebraska. The men went for wood, and, not returning, the women went in search of them. The children left in the wagons were the only ones saved. The men and women, seventeen in number, were frozen to death.

RICHMONN, VA., Dec. 13.—A large meeting of gentlemen, representing all portions of professions, is being held here in the interest of immigration.

BOSTON, Dec. 13.—To-day Alexis visited Qnincy market and other places in a qniet way.

MEMPHIS, Dec. 14.—A private dispatch says the men who rohbed the express car on the Mohile and Ohio railroad, some two months ago, were captured near Verona on Mondsy, after a desperate fight. The detectives have been on their track ever since the robbery.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—Attorney General Akerman has resigned.

The President has accepted his resignation, and will nominate Geo. H. Williems, of Orégon, to-day, as Akerman's snccessor.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—The Tribune has the following special from Washington: An effort will be made this winter to induce Congress to pass a law directing the refunding of the cotton tax collected in the years 1865, 1866 and 1867.

A memorial upon this subject, from the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce, is now before the Committee of Ways and Means, which argues that the tax was unconstitutional by reason of its falling upon one section of the country.

This will be supported by similar memorials from other commercial associations and petitions from farmers who have paid the tax, which will soon be filed.

The amount that the treasury would have to pay in case the tax should be refunded would be so enormous that there is almost no probability of snch a bill passing, even with the aid of the power and influence that would certainly be brought to bear.

That a movement is organizing to press the scheme for refnnding the cotton tax is undoubted. By information received here from a trustworthy source it is learned that speculators have been husy in west Tennessee buying from the planters, for trifling sums, the assignments of their claims to the tax paid by them.

One man in Memphis, it is alleged, holds assignments amounting to several millions of dollars. The whole amount of the cotton tax collected is said to have been over $100,000,000.

The Grand Duke Alexis sent $5,000 here for the relief of the poor.

MONTGOMEAY, ALA., Dec. 15.—Both branches of the Alabama Legislature have resolved to extend the session beyond thirty days.

A bill has passed both houses, authorizing the Governor to issue $1,000,000 Alahama eight per cent. bonds, to be used as necessity may require.

WASHINOTON, Dec. 16.—The cotton returns received in December at the Department of Agriculture are similar in tenor to the November reports, fully sustaining the moderate promise of improvement upon the somewhat gloomy views presented in October; yet the changes are not so marked as to modify materially the prospect foreshadowed in the monthly reports for July and September.

The latest returns would indicate an estimate almost identical with that of the September report favoring autumn, which could scarcely bring a crop exceeding three and one-third million of bales. Frosts have been delayed till Novemher, in some localities until the twentieth, and the weather has been generally favorable for picking, without waste or the discoloring of the fiher. A fair rendering of the recent local estimates, which have been nnusually numerous and complete, gives a local aggregate of three millions four hundred thousand bales as the present expectation of the cotton yield of 1871.

A daily mail has been ordered on the railroad between New Orleans and Donaldsonville, and Reverdy M. Johnson has been appointed route agent.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 16.—The lower house of the Legislature passed concurrent resolutions asking Congress to pass a universal amnesty bill.

NEW YORK, Dec. 16.—A special dispatch from Paris says: The Orleans princes and M. Thiers had an unfriendly interview yesterday. Thiers complained that D'Anmale was endeavoring to interest the generals in his favor. From this D'Anmale dissented, when Thiers retorted with evidence of interviews with a number of generals, and concluded by saying: I doubt not your aim is patriotic, but these proceedings are not in accordance with onr agreement.

D'Anmale terminated the interview hy saying he wonld consnlt his friends as to the proper time for claiming his seat in the Assemhly.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 17.—The steamboats, after cutting at the ice gorge below this city yesterday and to-day, snceeeded in opening a passage, and navigation to the South is now resnmed.

MEMPHIS, Dec. 17.—Private dispatches contradict the report that Hon. Reuben Davis had been killed at Columbns, Mississippi, yesterday.

CHICAGO, Dec. 18.—Three men were seen to throw some substance upon a pile of debris on Sixteenth street, when they fled. The snbstance was afterward examined, and upon its exposure to moisture the substance burned fiercely, and nothing would extinguish it. The men are being pursued.

NEW YORK, Dec. 18.—The latest advices from Mexico represent that Juarez maintains a fearless attitude, and speaks confidently of crushing the rebellion. The cabinet remains unchanged. The people complain that opposition is directed more against the cabinet than against Juarez.

The revolution in the western States is extending. Extraordinary powers have been given the Jnarist Governors of States.

Business throughout the repnblic is paralyzed. The qnestion of United States protectorate or annexation is boldly discnssed as the only solution.

No important engagement is reported in the central or western States.

The World's special from the City of Mexico says: The revolution will probahly prove a failnre. Only two States have risen, and there is no popnlar excitement. The country is only distnrbed hy robbers.

A special correspondent of the Herald, from Havana, says: "Castanon's grave was not desecrated, as alleged. The glass covering of the niche was not broken. Everything about the grave is in perfect order, not having been distnrbed."

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—The smallpox is spreading in Jersey City, Hoboken, Newark and Trenton.

At a meeting of the Federal Command of Internationals last night the St. Crispin, Typographical and Jewelers' Unions affiliated with them, and became part of the International Society.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, Dec. 14.—The Ex-Empress Engenie has gone to Gibraltar, where she will take a steamer for England.

LONDON, Dec. 14.—Dispatches to noon to-day indicate a slight improvement in the condition of the Prince of Wales.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—The Prince of Wales is decidedly better. He takes food, and his strength is increasing. Hopes of continned progress toward recovery are entertained.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—The Prince of Wales passed a quiet day and was satisfactorily progressing toward recovery.

Parliament meets the second week in February.

PARIS, Dec. 17.—A French committee propose to present to the government of England an oil painting commemorative of the great efforts made by the people and authorities of that country to supply the French people with food when they were sorely pressed by famine at the close of the war.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Blegg, the groom of the Prince of Wales, died of typhoid fever to-day.

There is great public rejoicing at Windsor over the convalescence of the Prince of Wales. Oxen and sheep were roasted by the town authorities.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The Prince of Wales continues to make satisfactory progress. The Duke of Edinburg, who left last week as soon as the Prince was declared out of danger, returned to Sandringham on Saturday.

PARIS, Dec. 19.—Duke d'Aumale and Prince de Joinville took their seats in the National Assembly today. They sat in the center of the members of the Right. Their appearance created no sensation in the body.

CITY OF MEXICO, VIA HAVANA, Dec. 19.—Anarchy continues throughout Mexico and complications increase. The States of San Lnis and Gnanajato have prononnced in favor of Zeredo de Tejada. Whatever party ohtains power will act in no despotic manner. The attitude of Diaz's army against the Federal army is unchanged.

MATAMORAS, Dec. 19.—Major Varges, the chief of a small force at San Carlos, in this State, pronounced and advanced on Bnrgos yesterday, which is about one hundred miles from this place, and occnpied it without opposition. As this is the first revolntionary movement attempted in the State of Tamanlipas in favor of Diaz, it has stimnlated activity among insnrgent sympathizers here, who may commence hostilities in this vicinity any moment.

DURING the siege of Paris the priests were almost compelled to dispense with the razor, and on the restoration of peace many of them had become so well satisfied with the fnll beard that they were unwilling to cut it off. Consequently a grave dispnte has arisen among the Parisian clergy on the snbject of beards. In this debate the German professor, Oertel, has taken part, and in a long historical article he shows that the cnstom of shaving is a modern innovation—that none of the patriarchs of the Jewish church nor the early fathers of the Christian church practiced it; that "Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Moses and the prophets, wore long beards, which they carefnlly cultivated with olive oil and ointments, as abundantly appears from the Psalms and other sonrces;" and that no painter with any knowledge of antiqnity wonld think of representing Christ or the twelve apostles with shaven faces. If Father Oertel does not say, he might have said that the priests on the continent of Europe wore their beards up to the separation of the Greek and Latin churches, in the eighth century; when Leo the Third, to distingnish himself from the patriarch of Constantinople, shaved his face, and called upon his clergy to imitate his example. Thirty years after, Gregory the Fourth issued a bull denouncing penalties upon every bearded priest. Three hundred years later the same requirement was laid upon the laity, and even upon royalty itself. No kings shriven nnless shaven was the ultimatnm of the priests, and Frederick Barbarossa and Henry the Fifth of England were among the monarchs who were compelled by ecclesiastical pressure to seek the services of the barbers. When the fact comes to be known that shaving is a relic of popery and of the dark ages, we expect to see a great increase of beards among a certain portion of our clergy. We cannot commend their motive, hut we can most heartily applaud the resnlt to which it will lead. Let us have a generation of ministers who are not ashamed of their manhood.—Independent.

DEATH OF REV. ALFRED COOKMAN. Rev. Alfred Cookman, pastor of the Central Methodist Episcopal church, Newark, New Jersey, died in Newark, on Monday, November 13, aged forty-fonr years. He had been snffering for some time with an attack of "muscular rheumatism," and up to within a few days of his death was thought to be in the way of permanent recovery. The funeral took place from the Central church, on Thursday, at two o'clock P. M., Bishop Simpson, Rev. W. McDonald, of Brooklyn, and Rev. J. K. Burr, of Morristown, conducting the services.

Mr. Cookman was a graduate of Dickinson College, under the presidency of Rev. John P. Dnrbin, D. D. He entered the Philadelphia Conference in 1848, and immediately took high rank both as a pastor and preacher, receiving among his first appointments those that were denominated first-class. Among these appointments were Union church, Green street and Spring Garden, Philadelphia; First church, Harrisbnrg, Pennsylvania; Christ church, Pittshnrg; and St. Paul's, Wilmington, Delaware. From Wilmington he went, last spring, to the Central church, Newark.

Alfred Cookman was the oldest son of the well-known Rev. George Cookman, D. D., who was lost on the steamship President in 1841. He has a brother, Rev. John E. Cookman, a member of the New York Conference, now stationed at Bedford Street church, New York city.

WHY did the Highlanders do most execution at Waterloo! Because every man had one kilt before the battle began.

Northern Methodist Missionary Appropriations.

The "sinews of war," says the Nashville Advocate, voted at the late meeting of the General Missionary Committee to carry on the work of "disintegration and absorption" in the Sonth, may interest onr readers. The following are among the sums appropriated:

Alabama Conference	$11,000
Georgia Conference	11,000
Holston Conference	9,000
Louisiana Conference	9,000
Mississippi Conference	10,000
North Carolina Conference	10,000
Sonth Carolina Conference	14,000
Tennessee Conference	12,000
Texas Conference	9,000
Virginia Conference	15,000
Kentucky Conference	8,000
Lexington Conf. (negro)	1,000

The reader, if he has a taste for it, may foot up these figures. He will then be able to answer the qnestion: How is it that a class of men called "missionaries" get on without social position or sympathy among our people? Who pays the bill? Some of them, in States under Radical rule, manage to qnarter themselves npon the school funds and other departments of the public crib, hdt all of them can't get accommodated that way.

In these appropriations one may get an idea of the Kuklnx howlings that are to be kept up for another year; they are paid for. Misinformation, false and harrowing reports from the South, will be furnished abnndantly to the Northern press. A band of men is kept on pay by a missionary society that will he felt in local politics, and in the Presidential election, jnst ahead.

Southern people see and know that this thing is bogus—a hnmhug, as far as purely gospel missionary operations are concerned. Not a half of the "members" claimed by Northern Methodists in these "Conferences" conld be fonnd on a sheriff's warrant. This is the belief of well-informed and well-traveled citizens, who are often snrprised at the great report abroad of the great operations going on around them.

Their Alabama Conference is pnt down as having 14,251 members and 1,981 probationers! Where are they? Their Tennessee Conference, 9,179 members and 1,592 probationers! Their Mississippi Conference, 20,110 members and 5,510 probationers! Sonth Carolina is credited with 22,702 members and 5,376 probationers! Well, things down there look, at this time, like that might be so. Poor Sonth Carolina, rohbed, cheated, sold out, plncked, lied nnto, and lied about—a millennial spot jnst now for legislative corruption and official thieves—these "missions" and "missionaries" reign and flonrish there. It is the very atmosphere for them. There Whittemore, the "missionary," flonrished—though expelled from Congress.

Our opinion is that the good people of the Methodist Episcopal Church North are being egregiously deceived, and are paying dearly for it. We can stand it if they can.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate, referring to the same subject, says:

At the recent meeting of the board the usual snpplies for the war of "disintegration and absorption" were voted, much to the comfort of that peculiar body, the Virginia Conference, which seems to realize the Western myth of half horse and half alligator, or a predatory cavalry of itinerant "missionaries," with the heavy head and strong jaws and fishy odor of "Property Agent Phelps," for their foremost part. Fifteen thousand dollars collected for the heathen at home and abroad, from the little savings of pious old women and the self-denial of little children, and other sources of ingenious missionary snpply, are voted to continne strife and pension imbecility, or the worse than imbecility, that demands to be provided for, because npon Conference rolls are men who have "a name to live and are dead." While New York is tingling in all her nerves with the shock of nncovered corruption, it is marvelons that the Missionary Board persists in the good old way of appropriation, in which they have been accnstomed to waste the Lord's money. Bnt the board has no control over the application of the money. Once a snm is voted to a Conference or mission and the Bishop's drafts upon it are absolnte and indispntable. Hence "Property Agent Phelps," as he is officially designated, became a missionary, and hence the board have just voted him his share of the money collected to send the gospel to the destitute. The thing is a bare-faced swindle npon the confidence of the church, and is not a particle more honest than the appropriations made by "Property Agent Judas," who carried the bag and rohbed the poor.

THE LIGHT WINE MOVEMENT.

There are two movements going on in this conntry, both of which are proposed as remedies for drunkenness. One is the cold water movement; the other is the light wine movement.

The advocates of the light wine movement are, many of them, avowed advocates of temperance. They are not drunkards. They recognize the fact that intemperance fills onr jails and our poorhonses. They desire to check the evil which they think cannot be repressed. They propose for this purpose the cultivation of the native grape and the employment of native wines. They assert that there is comparatively little drunkenness in France and Italy. "Give us wine," they cry, "as plenty as in France and Italy, and drunkards will he as rare with ns as with them." They have more faith in the moral power of Ohio and California wines than in that of Washingtonian and Father Mathew societies.

Before, however, we agree to adopt the light wine movement as a substitute for the cold water movement, we shall ask its advocates to explain to us the fact reported hy Dr. Albert Day. He has had long experience in the treatment of inebriates desiring to reform, in the asylums at Boston and Binghamton, and he reports that a large majority of the cases under his care commenced their course of drink hy nsing light wines, beer and cider.

This does not look encouraging for the advocates of the light wine system. The truth is that there is as much difference between races as between individnals. One man will drink a bottle of wine and hardly be conscious of its effects; another will be set on fire by a wineglass full. The nervous and excitable American people need sedatives, not stimulants. Even if Frenchmen and Italians could drink native wines as a beverage in moderation, that would do nothing to prove that the Americans can drink it, as they do everything, to excess, as a stimulant. Christian Weekly.

THE Bavarian government has solved two important points that have heretofore troubled the Old Catholics, hy annonncing that—"1. We have determined to recognize the right of religious edncation on the part of parents opposed to the dogma of the infallibility of the Pope. 2. If congregations are established by the adherents of the old Catholic faith, then the government proposes, as it has declared its readiness to acknowledge the individual as still Catholic, so also to acknowledge the congregations as Catholic, and consequent thereupon to afford to their ministers all those rights which they would have had if the congregation had been established before Jnly. 18, 1870." Under these guarantees, old Catholic congregations are said to be springing up on all sides. Thus far, however, throughout Southern Germany there are reports of actnal congregations only in Munich, Konigsberg, Cologne and Vienna. In the latter city Alois Anton is the pastor. The Salvator Kapelle has been set apart for the nse of the reformers, and on the first Sunday something of a scene is reported, arising from the fact that an early mass was celebrated in the church hy the "Roman" party before the church was given up. "The building," says a correspondent, "was crowded to overflowing, and many women were so overcome that a demonstration of howling and screaming took place on their part, in grief at the loss of their usual infallibilist service, hut it had no other result than a forcible expulsion of the dervishes. After the mass the perpetual light before the sacrament was, with much ceremony, extinguished, and the Monstranz and Ciborium removed. These latter were formally given up to the magistrates and hy them redelivered to Anton, who then held service to a recrowded church of Old Catholics. After prayer before the altar, he ascended the pulpit, offered a short prayer, read the gospel for the day, and preached, and then, returning to the altar, said mass."

DR. ARNOLD hit it when he made his remark abont boys that professed their sentimental admiration of virtue: "I have seen enough of boys that loved God. Commend me now to boys that not only love God, but hate the devil."

TRANSFERRED.—Samuel Morris, to Trinity Conference.

MONTANA MISSIONARIES.

Brethren of the Mississippi Conference, Julius T. Cnrtis, T. W. Flowers and R. S. Clark, reached this city, en ronte to Montana—all transferred to the Western Conference. Bro. Curtis is appointed to Helena station. The appointments of the others are not yet fixed. They are all men of family, and thus far they and their families remain in good health and preserve their zeal for the work in which they have embarked. A long travel is yet before them, and we pray that a kind Providence may attend them on their jonrney, and open the way for welcome and usefulness in that distant field of labor. Bro. Curtis preached at St. Paul's church in the morning and Bro. Flowers at night. Bro. Cnrtis also preached at night at First church—all very acceptable pulpit service, and peculiarly interesting to their hearers as from men brave enough and with heart enough for the missionary work of the church. God bless them!

In onr mail we received tidings, from Bro. Catlin, of the safe arrival, October 30, in Montana, of himself and the transfers who accompanied him. They were twenty days on the road from Corinne to Deer Lodge City. He was fortunate in securing at Deer Lodge City a furnished house with six rooms, belonging to a gentleman who has come to the States to spend the winter. The people have received him kindly and he is well pleased. He speaks of the weather as delightful—warm and pleasant in the city, though just east and north of it the mountains are covered with snow. He left Bro. Stateler and the preachers of his district at Corinne. We regret to be informed that Bros. Blackwell and Brewer were sick when he parted from them.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

Louisiana Colored Conference.

The Louisiana Conference of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America will meet, in its first session, at Trenton, Louisiana, January 4, 1872.

Any preachers who may desire to unite with ns will please report themselves early in the session.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1871.

TO THE EARTH.

I.

Speed on, thou ancient bark,
Through ether calm and pure.
To pining sense a prison dark;
To patient faith a sheltering ark,
Chartered with heaven's own royal mark,
In covenant blest and sure.

II.

Around the isle of light,
Thy beacon-tower the sun,
Trace like a bird thy circling flight,
Wrapt in cool shades, or flashing bright
As yon true stars of morn and night
Tell how thy course is run.

III.

Haste! for thou bear'st the dead—
A moving house of graves;
Yet o'er each silent, sightless head
Thy surface thrills, beneath the tread
Of youth's gay dance; and hope hath spread
Flowers o'er thy gloomy caves.

IV.

Launched in Creation's morn,
Through Time's majestic portals,
Now bear'st thou, seared and voyage-worn,
Man's earliest dead, and latest born,
The love and hate, the fame and scorn,
All hopes and alms of mortals.

V.

Unanchored and unmoored,
On thee is risked our all;
Rude surges rock the festive board,
Wash o'er the miser's coffered hoard—
Yet still each pilgrim's niche is stored
With idols great and small.

VI.

Haste! ruin round thee raves!
Time's ancient arches shake;
Decay creeps forth from moldering caves,
And dark mutation's whelming waves
Shall burst thy spheres, disclose thy graves,
And bid the slumberers wake.

VII.

Haste! for no home in thee
Our heaven-bound spirits find;
Our wistful eyes no anchorage see
In time or space, in land or sea;
No rest in all immensity
For man's immortal mind.

VIII.

Our hearts still yearn to hall
Those calm eternal hills;
The flowers we tend are faint and frail,
These broken cisterns soil and fail,
We sigh for Zion's soft land gale,
Her pure and living rills.

IX.

We seek that city grand,
The home of Deity;
By love's divine omniscience planned,
Based through all depths by God's right hand,
Reared to all height; whose pillars stand
Built for eternity.

ALCOHOL—ITS USES AND ABUSES.

NUMBER TWO.

Mr. Editor: In my first number on this subject the gentleman of the "case and composing stick" has caused me to give an erroneous definition of "corrugation." In the fourth line from the bottom of the first column he has caused me to say puncturing instead of puckering. The reader is requested to notice the correction.

I left the reader where I was describing the effects of alcohol on the coats of the stomach, as quoted from the observations of Dr. Percy, with the promise to resume the subject again at this point, and to show the physiological effects of the poison on the human system, especially upon the nervous. Before entering upon that subject, I wish to say that the physical change described in my former article must have an important influence upon the chemical relations of the tissues, since it is impossible that alcohol can be substituted, in however small a proportion, for their constituent water without producing a decided alteration in their chemical properties, which must disturb the normal series of changes involved in their nutritive operations. Among the most important of the chemical changes which alcohol has the power of effecting is the coagulation of soluble albumen; and although it will rarely if ever be introduced into the mass of the blood, or into the serous fluids of the tissues, by any ordinary alcoholic potations, in a sufficiently concentrated state to effect this, yet we should anticipate that its presence, even in a very dilute form, must affect the chemical relations of albumen, and can scarcely do otherwise than retard that peculiar transformation by which it is converted into the more vitalized substance — fibrine. No changes of a physical or chemical nature can take place in any of the animal tissues without disordering their vital properties also; and we have now to inquire into the mode in which these properties are affected by the contact of alcoholic liquids. In the first place, it would appear that the solidifiability of the fibrine, which is its special vital endowment, (the coagulation of albumen and the fibrillation of fibrine are two entirely distinct processes, the former being simply physical aggregation, the latter tending to produce an organized tissue, and being, therefore, of a vital nature,) is impaired by the introduction of alcohol into the fluid which contains it; for when an animal has been killed by the injection of alcohol into the blood vessels, the blood often remains fluid after death, or coagulates but imperfectly.—Dr. Percy. Now, as it is probable that nearly all the organized tissues are developed at the expense of the fibrine, it is obvious that anything which impairs its organizability must have an injurious influence upon the general nutritive operations; and we shall hereafter find confirmation of this inference in that peculiar condition of the system which results from excess in habitual indulgence in alcoholic potations, and of which the imperfect elaboration or formation of the fibrine is one of the special characteristics. But, secondly, we find that when alcoholic liquids are applied to living tissues, especially to the vascular surface of the skin or mucous membrane, they induce redness, heat and pain, indicating an increased determination of blood to the part. These symptoms vary in intensity according to the state of concentration of the liquid, and the length of time during which it has remained in contact with the surface; and they may pass on from this condition of irritation to one of actual inflammation!

We will now enter upon the physiological and pathological character of intoxication by alcohol. The modus operandi of the poison has been fully made out from the experiments and observations already presented, but concisely, it is true; and it is very important that the results of these should be rightly understood. That alcoholic liquors, when introduced into the stomach, should undergo rapid absorption into the sanguiferous system (blood vessels) is precisely what might be anticipated from our knowledge of the conditions under which that absorption takes place; and there is ample evidence that such is really the case. The rapidity with which this absorption takes place may be judged from the fact that in one of Dr. Percy's experiments, in which the animal fell lifeless to the ground immediately after the injection of the alcohol into the stomach was completed, (the respiratory movements and pulsations of the heart entirely ceasing within two minutes,) the stomach was found nearly void, while the blood was strongly impregnated with alcohol. Hence it may reasonably be inferred that in all cases of ordinary intoxication, and in the greater number of cases of death from the introduction of alcohol into the stomach, the effects are produced by the passage of alcohol into the current of the circulation, so as to exert a direct action on the nervous centers (the brain and spinal marrow.) And this influence has been confirmed by the fact that its presence has been demonstrated, in considerable amount, in the substance of the brain, as well as in the ventricles (cavities within the brain.)

The general stimulant action which is for a time exerted by alcohol introduced in small quantities, and diluted by admixture with the general mass of the blood, is easily explained upon the basis of observations already detailed; but its special power of exciting the nervous centers to augmented activity can only be accounted for by the idea of some special relation between alcohol and nervous matter. And this idea is fully borne out by the fact that experiments have found alcohol to exist in the substance of the brains of animals poisoned by it, in considerably greater proportion than in an equivalent quantity of blood. This fact is one of fundamental importance, and should be thought upon by every man who is in the habit of indulging, as showing us how directly and immediately the whole nutrition and vital activity of the nervous system must be affected by the presence of alcohol in the blood; the alcohol being thus specially drawn out of the circulating current by the nervous matter, and incorporated with its substance in such a manner as even to change (when in sufficient amount) its physical as well as chemical properties.

I may probably be thought unnecessarily elaborate in these articles. My only excuse is the importance of the subject, and the ignorance of most inebriates on the chemical as well as physical action of alcohol on the human economy. Perhaps one more article will be sufficient. Yours fraternally,

John Sample, M. D.

JOHN W. ELLIS.

Mr. Editor: The above name many of your readers in Alabama and Mississippi will remember. I was a boy of perhaps fourteen years when he preached near my father's, in Noxubee county, Mississippi. He impressed me as a thoughtful, serious man; not given to many words in the social circle, but a good preacher, sound in word and doctrine. I never saw him afterward. The minutes of the Alabama Conference for 1854 show that he was transferred to the Pacific Conference; but having halted, as I learn, in Arkansas, it was in the fall of 1855 when he, along with an emigrant train, reached this coast. Here in southern California he resumed the work of an itinerant preacher, but only for a short while. Divergent paths often meet again, and we confront either the living men known long ago, or we stand at their graves. So it is with your correspondent. Here in the graveyard of El Monte I stand before a cedar board that marks the last resting place of one I knew and loved with early Christian ardor. Here is the inscription:

REV. J. W. ELLIS.
Born in N. C., Aug. 18, 1819.
Died in peace, March 30, 1856.

Close at his side sleeps another good man of the itinerant ranks—J. M. Fulton—with nearly the same inscription. One paling incloses both the graves of these good men, whose short pioneer lives closed within a year of each other.

The subject of this notice is still remembered here as a thoughtful sermonizer and a good man of few words. His physician, who witnessed his death, still lives, and testifies to his peaceful and happy end. Perhaps some of your readers may feel a like melancholy pleasure with me in knowing these facts. You will judge of that.

A. Adams.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Summit District, Mississippi Conference.

Mr. Editor: I have closed my year's work on the Summit district, Mississippi Conference. This district extends from the lakes to Bogue Chitto station, on the Jackson railroad, and from Pearl river to Amite river, covering four parishes and two counties, ten circuits and forty-eight churches. The most of this territory is, or ought to be, missionary ground. But, alas! we have not the money in our treasury. The preachers—a noble band—have been at their posts, laboring faithfully for the salvation of souls, and working with their hands to help to support their families. They realize the blessings accruing to those who preach the gospel to the poor; but they are more or less embarrassed by so doing. Although they have had no wonderful revivals, yet in nearly every charge there has been a gradual improvement, and in some circuits quite an increase of conversions and accessions. Covington circuit has had an accession of one hundred members and built one new church. On Franklinton circuit a new church has also been built, and there has been a large accession. On the Greensburg circuit many have been added to the church. A very good church is in course of erection in Greensburg. We also expect that a very good church will be ready for the new pastor in Tangipahoa. The brethren are just about to erect a church in Amite City. In the three last-named places the ladies, after becoming tired of the tardiness of the men, have taken the matter in hand, and we are now about to have comfortable houses in which to worship God. In the beautiful, thriving town of Summit we have never had a church of our own, but our Presbyterian brethren have for years kindly allowed us the use of their comfortable house.—They now have a resident pastor, and need their church. There is also a large and pretty Baptist church; also a commodious Protestant Episcopal church, nearly completed, near which is the rectory. These churches and rectory are all very eligibly situated, as also the academy, which has a fine corps of teachers and a large number of pupils. These institutions are all represented by the most intelligent, pious, enterprising and benevolent people in this country. We greatly need a house of worship here. We have had two eligible lots given us by Colonel Garland, on one of which the preacher, failing to raise sufficient money to build a church, erected a comfortable parsonage. Our people are now in want of aid to build the church. I requested Mrs. M. S. I. Hoover to act in this matter. At her request and in her name, as well as our own, we thank the gentlemen of New Orleans named below for their kindness and contributions to the church in Summit, Mississippi:

Lewis Allen, $10; A. E. May, $5; M. Eiler & Co., $10; Philip Werlein, $10; A Friend, $1; C. L. Walmsley, $10; W. H. Dameron, $5. Total, $51.

Our church at Magnolia had never been ceiled, and was greatly out of repair. We have had it ceiled and repaired, and hope soon to have it painted and fenced.

May the Lord direct in the appointment of a presiding elder and pastors who will be instrumental in causing a glorious revival throughout these lands, for which, I believe, all are in readiness. We have had the droppings ominous of a gracious rain. May it come speedily! Then will the itinerancy be supported so that it may do its work, and the benevolent enterprises of the church will be alive.

I have thought for several years of giving my views of the propriety of attaching east Louisiana to the Louisiana Conference, and extending the line across Mississippi so as to include Jackson, Harrison and Hancock counties, then to extend the line due west to Texas, and make a North Louisiana Conference and a New Orleans Conference. But I may speak more of this matter hereafter.

May God bless you in your arduous labors,

Your brother in Christ,

J. Nicholson.

Missionaries En Route to Montana.

The brethren whose departure from this city en route to Montana we announced week before last have arrived safely as far as Corrinne, Utah Territory. From there Bro. J. T. Curtiss sends us the following note, dated the twenty-sixth ultimo. We are sure that a general sentiment of prayerful sympathy will be felt for them in the hardship of their travel at this season of the year.

Messrs. Editors: I will take time to drop you a line that you may know that we are safe thus far on our long and tiresome journey. We were fortunate enough to obtain half fare from Omaha to Corrinne. We arrived here on Friday at seven P. M., and will leave here, part of us, on to-morrow at six A. M., and the rest on Tuesday at the same hour. We are all well, except colds. We are in fine spirits and hopeful; yet we have the severest part of our journey still before us. The snow is about fifteen or eighteen inches here, and I learn that it is very cold in Montana, with snow between here and Helena between five and eight feet deep. We have all been favored here by the stage agent, Mr. T. Henderson, whom we find to be a very clever gentleman.

I fear we shall suffer going through, yet our trust is in the God of our fathers, and therefore we push on, not knowing the things that shall befall us. But with the help of God we can go where others have gone before. We have all stood the trip much better than we expected we could. But here I would remark that I would never advise any one to undertake this trip at this season of the year. We could have made the journey in the spring with half the expense we have been at. Then there are no snow storms to encounter. We got half fare to Helena, but we have to pay fifteen cents per pound for our baggage—over thirty pounds to the passenger. (Heavy!) I can write but little to-day, but when we reach our destination I will let you hear from us again. It has snowed a good deal to-day, and is now sleeting. Pray for us.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

Prof. Park, of Andover, tells clergymen that "the habit of writing late on Saturday and early on Sabbath morning imperils the health of body, intellect and heart." He might have added that the sermons thus written are easily detected by intelligent congregations. They smell of gas in the city and of kerosene in the country.

The Planting of Methodism in Van Buren, Arkansas.

Bishop McTyeire writes to the Western Methodist incidents of his episcopal tour in Arkansas. In a late letter he gives the history of the planting of Methodism at Van Buren—the story and its moral—thus:

The history of the planting of Methodism in Van Buren interested me. I tell the tale as 'twas told to me, for it is part of the chronicles of the place. It reminds one of a chapter in the Acts of the Apostles.

There was no church in Van Buren. A Methodist itinerant was sent there. One house only was open to him—the tavern—and to that he went and put up. He interviewed mine host. "What is the chance for a Methodist preacher here?" The reply was that it was the same as for other men, if he had money. "But I have no money." The chances were bad enough. "What do you charge for board?" said the circuit rider. The rates were given. "Look at my horse," said he. "What do you think he is worth?" The animal, doubtless, was good middling, for our preachers are not novices about horses, and no men have better use for them. That preliminary settled, the preacher proceeded in a very straightforward style with the host. "Sir, turn my horse into your stable, and when you think I have eat up the value of him let me know, and I will either change my quarters or provide some other means for paying my bill."

He went to work—laid siege to the place in the name of the Lord; and before the horse was eat up the town capitulated. The people presented him his horse, all charges paid, and his own bill beside; fitted out "the parson" in a new suit of clothes; and from that day Christianity has had a firm footing in Van Buren. Two churches, a Methodist and an Old School Presbyterian, with good brick houses to worship in, and good congregations, furnish the gospel and ordinances to that excellent people.

The Rev. John J. Roberts, one of the oldest members of the Conference, is the man. He introduced me to the venerable matron, "Mother Gross," who, when she heard the young man's courageous purpose in the tavern, was touched with a woman's kindness, and soon had the tumbled and crumpled wardrobe of his saddlebags fixed, washed, mended and ironed out. Was religion ever known to be introduced into a town or city, but a woman was the first on the list of disciples? Lydia, at Philippi, stands not alone.

It is refreshing to see and recall such plain, simple instances of the power that overcomes the world. Here is courage to enterprise, confidence to venture, constancy to persevere. Behind them lies faith—faith in the power of the gospel to save, faith in a co-operating Holy Spirit, faith in a Savior who has pledged that his embassador shall never go forth alone. Here is the clear type of the gospel preacher, not sent for, but sent. How different from the timidity which will not venture a step unless some strong missionary treasury backs the movement! Or the feeble following, which builds only where others have broken ground!

THE HEAVENLY HOME.

Rev. H. Bonar, D. D., sets forth the "great city, the holy Jerusalem," (Rev. xxi, 10,) the blessed and eternal home of all who love Jesus, in the following interesting way:

1. It is a great city. "That great city," said John, gazing on it. Its circuit is vast—beyond Babylon or Nineveh, Paris or London. That "mighty city," says John, speaking of Babylon the Great, (Rev. xiii, 10;) but this is mightier far. There has been no city like it. It is the city, the one city, the great metropolis of the mighty universe, the mighty city of the mighty God.

2. It is a well-built city. Its "Builder and Maker is God." Its foundations are eternal; its walls are jasper; its gates pearls; its streets paved with gold. It is "compactly built together," lying four-square, and perfect in all its parts; without a break or flaw, or weakness or deformity.

3. It is a well-lighted city. Something brighter than sun or moon is given to fill its heaven. The glory of God lighteus it. The Lamb is its "light" or "lamp;" so that it needs no candle, no sunlight. There is no night there.

4. It is a well-watered city. A pure river of the water of life flows through its streets, proceeding from the throne of God and the Lamb. What must its waters be! What must be the rivers of pleasure there! Who in it can ever thirst? Its inhabitants shall thirst no more.

5. It is a well-provisioned city. The tree of life is there, with its twelve variety of fruits and its health-giving leaves. It has more than Eden had; it is Paradise restored. Paradise and Jerusalem in one; Jerusalem in Paradise, and Paradise in Jerusalem.

6. It is a well-guarded city. Not only has it gates and walls and towers which no enemy could scale or force; but at the gates are twelve angels keeping perpetual watch.

7. It is a well-governed city. Its King is the Son of God; the King of kings, Immanuel; the King eternal, whose scepter is righteousness; who loveth righteousness and hateth iniquity. No misrule is there, no disorder, no lawlessness.

8. It is a well-peopled city. It has gathered within its walls all generations of the redeemed. Its population is as the sands or the stars; the multitude that no man can number; the millions of the risen and glorified.

9. It is a holy city. Its origin is heavenly, and it is perfect as its Builder. Nothing that defileth shall enter—no spot or speck or shadow of evil. All is perfection there—divine perfection.

10. It is a glorious city. The glory that fills it and encircles it is the glory of God. All precious stones are there—no marble nor granite, such as we boast of now; all about it is gold and pearls and gems. Everything resplendent is there.

11. It is a blessed city. It is truly the joyous city. It is the throne and seat of the blessed One, and all in it is like him. Its name is Jerusalem, the City of Peace; its King's name is Solomon, the Prince of Peace. There is no enemy there, no danger, no darkness, no sickness, no curse, no death, no weeping, no pain, no sorrow, no change forever. They that dwell in it "shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more," (Rev. vii, 16, 17;) for "the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to it with songs; sorrow and sighing shall flee away."—(Isa. xxxv, 10.) Blessed city! City of peace and love and song! Fit accompaniment of the new heavens; fit metropolis of the new earth; wherein dwelleth righteousness! How eagerly should we look for it! How worthy of it should we live!

THE USES OF FLOWERS.

It is common to point to flowers as final answers to utilitarianism. J. R. Lowell has told us of those practical questions which would abolish the rose and be answered triumphantly by the cabbage. All very true; but may not one question whether the flowers were really meant to be as useless as we make them out? No doubt their use is very different from that of the cabbage. One can heartily respond to Leigh Hunt's claim for them:

"Uselessness divinest,
Of a use the finest;"

but at the same time one may have a misgiving that we do not put them to the finest uses when we cut them for bouquets and adorn our rooms with them. The ancients made a religious use of flowers, as chaplets, altar decorations, and as symbols of particular gods and goddesses. Each flower preserved a divine myth. The tradition of their sanctity passed to the Christian convents, and many of our exotics would never have reached us but for their assiduous cultivation within monastic walls. The rosary is the transfiguration of roses into prayers, and one of the noblest of Persian sacred books is the Gulistan or Rose Garden Sheik Saadi walked with his friend in a beautiful garden. "It was the season of spring; the air was temperate, and the rose in full bloom. The vestments of the trees resembled the festive garments of the fortunate. It was mid-spring, when the nightingales were chanting from the pulpits of the branches; the rose decked with pearly dew, like blushes on the cheek of a chiding mistress. You would have said that the knot of the Pleiades was suspended from the branch of the vine. Under the shade of its trees Zephyr had spread the variegated carpet. I saw in my friend's lap a collection of roses, odoriferous herbs and hyacinths, which he had intended to carry into town. I said: 'You are not ignorant that the flower soon fadeth, and the enjoyment of the rose is of short continuance; and the sages have declared that the heart ought not to be set upon anything that is transitory.' He asked: 'What course is there to be pursued?' I replied: 'I am able to form a book of roses, whose spring the autumn blast cannot injure. What benefit from a basket of flowers? Carry a leaf from my garden.' Saadi's friend cast away his flowers. 'While the rose was yet in bloom the book entitled the Rose Garden was finished.'" From this book the dervishes get their hymns to-day, and the people say each sentence of it has seven meanings.—Harper's Magazine.

The only religion possible to man is the religion of penitence. The righteousness of man cannot be the integrity of the virgin citadel which has never admitted the enemy; it can never be more than the integrity of the city which has been surprised and roused, and which, having expelled the invader with blood in the streets, has suffered great inward loss.

Let not sinful pleasures prevent godly sorrows.

THE ANGELS' SONG.

BY E. H. SEARS.

It came upon the midnight clear,
That glorious song of old,
From angels bending near the earth,
To touch their harps of gold.
"Peace to the earth, good will to men,
From heaven's all-gracious King;"
The world in solemn stillness lay
To hear the angels sing.

Still through the cloven skies they come
With peaceful wings unfurled;
And still their heavenly music floats
O'er all the weary world;
Above its sad and lowly plains
They bend on hovering wing,
And ever o'er its Babel sounds
The blessed angels sing.

Yet with the woes of sin and strife
The world has suffered long;
Beneath the angel strain have rolled
Two thousand years of wrong;
And man at war with man hears not
The love song which they bring;
O! hush the noise, ye men of strife,
And hear the angels sing.

And ye, beneath life's crushing load,
Whose forms are bending low,
Who toil along the climbing way
With painful steps and slow;
Look now! for glad and golden hours
Come swiftly on the wing;
O! rest beside the weary road,
And hear the angels sing.

For lo! the days are hastening on,
By prophet bards foretold,
When with the ever-circling years
Comes round the age of gold;
When peace shall over all the earth
Its ancient splendors fling,
And the whole world sends back the song
Which now the angels sing.

A Catholic Author On Papal Infallibility.

MESSRS. EDITORS: According to the New York Times of November 12, 1871, the Methodist says:

"We know of not a single prominent clerical or lay Catholic in the republic who has dared openly to join in the noble protest of Dollinger and his associates."

The term prominent is susceptible of several constructions. See if the following description answers to that term:

My father was the late Chancellor Walworth, of New York State, for twenty years the chief judge of the Court of Chancery here. Shortly before being admitted to practice law in the courts of this State and of the United States I became a convert to the Roman Catholic Church. In order intelligently to speak of my new faith, I purchased a library of Catholic standard authorities, several hundred volumes. They were the works of eminent theologians, dogmatic treatises, church histories of unquestioned authority—among them Dollinger's Church History, Mohler's Symbolism, Bishop England's works, Lingard's works, and, indeed, all first-class standard authorities, such as Roman Catholic prelates and the more accomplished of the clergy in this country place upon their library shelves. I made myself perfectly familiar with the dogmas of the church, the scriptural authorities and the traditions of the church upon which they were founded.

The cogent reasons which induced me to connect myself with the Church of Rome were, that other churches were constantly changing their dogmas, and that truth, divine truth, must of its own nature be unchangeable. I was instructed that I had joined a church which held one set of dogmas from the days of Christ to the end of all time, and which, being the church established by our Savior, could not teach in one age and to one generation of men what it did not teach in another; that whatever dogmas a man of the first century proclaimed as the dogmas of his church must be each and all the same dogmas that a man of the nineteenth century announced as his dogmas. It was reasonable to believe that no more doctrines could be required of the latter than of the former.

The Christian of the first century did not believe in the infallibility of the Bishop of Rome; the American Catholic of 1860 did not believe in the infallibility of the Roman pontiff. It was not taught to him, nor did he believe it. In 1871 it is taught to him, and if he does not believe it he cannot have Christian burial. Thus the good Catholic who died in 1860 held just one doctrine less than the good Catholic of 1871 holds when he passes into the presence of his Creator. Is this unity of faith? Is this belonging to an unchangeable church? I have been a member of the Roman Catholic Church for eighteen years. I published my first work as an author in defense of the Roman Catholic religion. That book, The Mission of Death, or a Tale of the New York Penal Laws of 1741, has passed through many editions, and is today a living book, new editions issuing yearly, and it can be found on the shelves of many colleges, convents and schools of the Catholic Church in America. I wrote that book to influence others to join an unchangeable church. The unchangeable church has changed since I wrote that book. When I wrote that book I denied the infallibility of the Bishop of Rome, and avowed my belief in the infallibility of the assembled bishops of the world defining articles of faith. I was at perfect liberty to do so. If I were to do it to-day I should be declared a heretic, and refused Christian burial.

But I do deny the infallibility of the Bishop of Rome, just as I denied it then; just as Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, denied it; just as the learned, the great Roman Catholic Church historian, Dollinger, denies it. He knows, as I know, and as the prelates of the United States know, that it is new; that it is not what men were required to believe in 1860, and in the time of Christ and his apostles. It is as great a variation in faith as any variation exposed by Bossuet in his memorable work, The Variations of the Protestant Churches, one of the very authorities, standard authorities, placed in my hands to induce me to accept the Catholic as the unchangeable church. Must I, an educated American citizen, stultify myself by believing contradictions? I want to believe what the old Catholic Church believed, and no more. I would be cursed now for asserting just the doctrines I avowed in 1860. I cannot accept this new religion. If one change, one variation is made in my short life, how many changes will be made in the next one thousand years? Why, the Catholic Christian of 2872 would not consider the Catholic Christian of 1872 as orthodox at all. One rises into the celestial city with doctrines which the other is totally ignorant of. Is this "one Lord, one faith, one baptism?"

Dollinger I believe to be right. I am an American citizen who fears not to indorse him and the old Catholics. I am willing to take the consequences, temporal and spiritual. God reigns, and is not subject to mutations. He will find some way to protect men who endeavor to be consistent, and this is exactly what Dollinger and the old Catholics are endeavoring to be.

I am a layman, the author of six books, which have sold by tens of thousands over the United States. Possibly I may answer the Methodist's term, "prominent lay Catholic." If not, then I am only a simple lay Catholic, who fearlessly indorses Dollinger.—Mansfield Tracy Walworth, in the Methodist.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

The gospel of John is the gospel of gospels, as the Epistle to the Romans is the epistle of epistles. It is the most remarkable, as well as the most important literary production ever composed by man. It is a marvel even in the marvelous Book of books. It is the most spiritual and ideal of the gospels. It introduces us into the holy of holies in the history of our Lord; it brings us, as it were, into his immediate presence, so that we behold face to face the true Shekinah, "the glory of the only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." It presents the fairest harmony of the highest knowledge, and the deepest love of Christ. It gives us the clearest view of his incarnate divinity and his most real humanity. It sets him forth as the Eternal Word, who was the source of life from the beginning, and the organ of all the revelations of God to man; as the Fountain of living water, that quenches the thirst of the soul; as the Light of the world that illuminates the darkness of sin and error; as the Resurrection and the Life that destroys the terror of death. It reflects the luster of the transfiguration on the mount, yet subdued by the holy sadness of Gethsemane. It is the plainest in speech and the profoundest in meaning. To it, more than to any portion of the Scripture, applies the familiar comparison of deep enough for an elephant to swim, with shallows for the lambs to wade. It is the gospel of love, life and light, the gospel of the heart taken from the very heart of Christ, on which the beloved apostle leaned at the last supper. It has an irresistible charm for speculative and contemplative minds, and furnishes inexhaustible food for meditation and devotion. It is the gospel of peace and Christian union, and a prophecy of that blessed future when all the discords of the church militant on earth shall be solved in the harmony of the church triumphant in heaven.—Dr. Schaff.

WHEN Rev. John Wesley was on his voyage to Georgia with General Oglethorpe, the general threatened revenge upon an offending servant, saying:

"I never forgive."

"Then I hope, sir," said Mr. Wesley, "you never sin."

The general felt the force of the rebuke, and modified his action toward the servant.

OF THE thirty-five thousand graduates that have been sent out by American colleges, nearly two hundred have been Governors, more than five hundred Representatives in Congress, one hundred and thirty Senators of the United States, and nearly four hundred judges of supreme courts.

FOR each one of us no business can be of more pressing moment, of more urgent importance, than the discovery of our besetting sin.

HEBER AND HIS HYMN.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

There have been men who have won an honorable immortality in an hour. A brave word fitly spoken, or a noble deed promptly done, has given them a place on the head-roll of fame forever. Sometimes in a happy moment of inspiration a poet or an orator has "said or sung" what will last for ages.

One of these happy songsters, whose grandest strain was born in an hour, but which the world shall never willingly let die, was Reginald Heber, bishop of Christ's flock in Calcutta. If the great mass of Christians around the globe were asked to name the two English bishops whose memory is most dear to them, they would probably name Jeremy Taylor and Reginald Heber. Yet the veneration and gratitude felt toward the latter is mainly founded upon a few lines which he threw off in a sudden inspiration, and which could be written on a single page.

Reginald Heber was born at Malpas, in Cheshire, on the twenty-first of April, 1783. He was a precocious boy, and at seven years of age he had translated Phædrus into English verse. His prize poem at Oxford University on "Palestine," written in his twentieth year, stands at the head of that class of somewhat ephemeral productions. His "Palestine" will live, and so will his tender and graceful lines to his wife at Bombay, and so will his nautical hymn,

"When through the torn sail the tempest is streaming."

But all his poetry, and his Bampton lectures, and his able Quarterly Review articles, are weighed down by his single matchless missionary hymn. Its composition was in this wise:

While Reginald Heber was rector of the Episcopal church at Hodnet, in Shropshire, he went to pay a visit to his father-in-law, Dr. Shipley, then Vicar of Wrexham, on the border of Wales. Heber was in his thirty-second year, and had come to Wrexham to deliver the first of a series of Sunday evening lectures in Dr. Shipley's church. In the morning of that same day Dr. Shipley was to deliver a discourse in behalf of the "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts."

On the afternoon before "Whitsunday" (1819) Heber and his father-in-law sat chatting with a few friends in Dr. Shipley's parlor. Dr. Shipley, knowing his son-in-law's happy gift in rapid composition, said to him: "Write something for us to sing at the service tomorrow morning." Short notice, that, for a man to achieve his immortality. Heber retired to another part of the room, and in a little time had prepared three verses, of which the first one ran thus:

"From Greenland's icy mountains,
From India's coral strand,
Where Afric's sunny fountains
Roll down their golden sand;
From many an ancient river;
From many a palmy plain
They call us to deliver
Their land from error's chain."

Heber read the three verses over, and only altered a single word. The seventh line of the second verse was:

"The savage in his blindness."

The author erased that word, and substituted for it the better word heathen. "There, there," coolly remarked Dr. Shipley, "that will do very well." Heber was not satisfied, and said: "No, no; the sense is not complete." In spite of his father's earnest protest, Heber withdrew for a few moments longer, and then coming back, read the following glorious bugle-blast, which rings like the reveille of the millennial morning:

"Waft, waft, ye winds, the story,
And you, ye waters, roll!
Till like a sea of glory
It spreads from pole to pole!
Till o'er our ransomed nature,
The Lamb for sinners slain,
Redeemer, King, Creator,
In bliss returns to reign."

"What shall we sing it to?" inquired Dr. Shipley. Mr. Heber, who had a fine musical ear, suggested a popular air, called "'Twas when the seas were roaring." The suggestion was adopted, and on the next morning the people of Wrexham church listened to the "first rehearsal" of a lyric which has since been echoed by millions of voices around the globe. The air to which it was sung originally has given place, at least in our American churches, to a sonorous and lofty tune composed by Dr. Lowell Mason. The air is worthy of the hymn, and both are perfect. No profane hymn-tinker ever dared to lay his bungling finger on a single syllable of those four stanzas which the Holy Spirit moved Reginald Heber to write. Little did the young rector of Hodnet dream, as he listened to the lines sung that Sabbath morning, that he was catching the first strains of his own immortality. He "builded better than he knew." He did more to waft the story of Calvary around the earth than if he had preached like Apollos, or had founded a board of missions. In the "monthly concerts," held in New England school houses, in frontier cabins, on the decks of missionary ships bound to "Ceylon's Isle," and in the vast assemblies of the American Board, Heber's trumpet-hymn has been sung with swelling voices and gushing tears. It is the marching music to which Christ's hosts "keep step" as they advance to the conquest of the globe.

Heber lived but seven years after the composition of his masterpiece. In June, 1823, he departed for Calcutta as the missionary bishop of India. For three years he toiled and traveled incessantly, and wherever he went his apostolic sweetness of character and benignity won even the "heathen in their blindness." After a laborious day's work at Trichinopoly, he went to his bath to refresh his weary frame. He remained in the bath-room until his attendants became alarmed, and when they came in they found Reginald Heber asleep in Jesus. His gentle spirit had stolen away to join in the "song of Moses and of the Lamb."—Evangelist.

INVITATION TO CONFERENCE.

Every county and nearly every town in England has its own "tongue." The following letter was received by a distinguished minister in Liverpool from a Lancashire man, extending to the divine the hospitalities of his home during the session of Conference:

HEALTH HINTS.

TREATMENT OF THE INSANE.—Some interesting views were expressed in a late lecture on this subject by Dr. Maudsley. With regard to the treatment of insane persons, he thinks that the fashion of at once dispatching a lunatic to an asylum should by no means be necessarily followed in all cases. Many cases recovered without ever being sent to an asylum, and many cases were on record which baffled all treatment while resident in an asylum, but rapidly recovered after effecting their escape.

ONE of the simplest and most useful remedies for scalds and burns is said to be an embrocation of lime water and linseed oil. These simple agents combined form a thick, cream-like substance, which effectually excludes the air from the injured parts, and allays the inflammation almost instantly. A case is mentioned where a child fell backward into a bath-tub of boiling water, and was nearly flayed from her neck to below her hips. Her agonies were indescribable, but her clothing being gently removed, and the lime and oil thickly spread over the injured surface, she was sound asleep in five minutes. Subsequently the parts were carefully washed with warm milk and water three times a day, the oil dressing renewed, and the little patient rapidly recovered. Though all the scalded skin came off, she did not have a scar. This remedy leaves no hard coat to dry on the sores, but softens the parts, and aids nature to repair the injury in the readiest and most expeditious manner. The mixture may be procured in the drug stores, but if not thus accessible, slake a lump of quicklime in water, and as soon as the water is clear mix it with the oil and shake it well. If the case is urgent use boiling water over the lime, and it will become clear in five minutes. The preparation may be kept ready bottled in the house, and it will be as good when six months old as when first made.

A GOOD, finished scandal, fully armed and equipped, such as circulates in the world, is rarely the production of a single individual, or even of a single coterie. It sees the light in one; is rocked and nurtured in another; is petted, developed, and attains its growth in a third; and receives its finishing touches only after passing through a multitude of hands.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE United Presbyterians of Scotland want missionaries for Caffraria, Trinidad, India and China.

THE first church of the American Board in Bulgaria was organized at Barrsko, near Samokov, September 8. Evancho Tonzhorone was ordained pastor. The church hopes to pay half of his salary next year.

THE General Minutes of the Northern Methodist Episcopal Church have been published. We give the total number of members, 1,229,240; increase, 56,141; probationers, 189,875; decrease, 4,160. This does not include the numbers in the Liberia Conference.

THE Basle Missionary Society employs, of European laborers: In Africa, 34 men and 18 women; in India, 53 men and 33 women; in China, 7 men and 6 women. The number of native laborers is: In Africa, 52; in India, 137; in China, 18. The treasury is embarrassed by a deficit of 153,299 francs.

THE professors of the University of Glasgow recently invited the Bishop of Argyll and the Isles to preach in the college chapel, the understanding being that his lordship would be at liberty to use the liturgy of the English Church. The Bishop of Glasgow, however, exhibited the breadth of his catholicity by refusing to permit the service.

THE statistics of the Lutheran Church in America for the year 1871, as compiled in Brobst's German Almanac, are as follows: Synods, 54; ministers, 2,175; congregations, 3,826; communicants, 458,607. Twenty-eight ministers departed this life during the last year, the average age of twenty-five of whom was fifty-three years and five months.

MEXICO.—The first native Methodist Church in Mexico was recently organized with eleven members, in a densely settled community, about twenty miles from La Junta. Rev. Mr. Harwood writes very hopefully of the general condition of the mission work in that section. One native Mexican, with a heart yearning for the salvation of his people, is now studying for the ministry. This mission in no way interferes with the mission of the American and Foreign Christian Union in that country. The Union is doing a noble work, and should be sustained by all the Christian churches. Still, there is room in Mexico for the other missionary organizations beyond all the Union can do.

CONSTANTINOPLE.—The new American College located here is destined to accomplish a great work for Christianity in that city and surrounding country. A missionary recently visiting it, writes that "it stands perched high on the northern bluff of the Bosphorus, just above the old fortress of Europe. The site is the finest in the whole length of that classic strait. The wonder is that the Turks should ever have surrendered so choice a spot for such a use. The building is a very handsome one, of stone, with Mansard roof. But even now it proves insufficient for the pupils who apply, even at the rate of tuition and board of $200 for one year. Dr. Hamlin comes to America this fall for money to put up a second building. It quite jumps with the spirit of the times that he will also seek funds to found a female college of like character."

AT THE Iowa Baptist convention, held at Waterloo on the eighteenth of October, a committee of the Disciples, duly delegated from their own State convention, attended, and presented an address setting forth, in kind and fraternal language, the views of Christian doctrine held by that denomination. These statements were almost the same as those made by the Disciples to the Ohio Baptist convention. The Iowa Disciples profess their faith in nine articles, namely: 1. The inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. 2. The old and new covenants. 3. The Deity of the Lord Jesus Christ. 4. The church as a missionary body. 5. Divine agency necessary to salvation. 6. A converted membership. 7. Personality and work of the Holy Spirit. 8. Baptism for the remission of sins; provided it be preceded by a change of heart. 9. The unity of the church of Christ. The convention appointed a committee to prepare a formal response to be presented at the next State meeting.

THERE are now in Syria under the care of the Presbyterian Board 11 American missionaries, 2 native ordained missionaries and 13 licentiates, with 10 American teachers and 48 native. The number of communicants connected with the mission churches, according to the last report, was 294, and of scholars 1,671. The following is a list of the various populations of Syria: Mohammedans, nearly 2,000,000; Druzes, seceders from Islam and holding a medley of Mohammedanism and ancient philosophic sects, 100,000; Nuseirizeh, perhaps descendants from ancient Canaanites, and still virtually heathen, 200,000; Bedouin Arabs, a few thousand; Maronites, modified papists, very bigoted and intolerant, about 200,000; Papal Greek, the proudest and most intelligent people of Syria, of pure Arab stock, and numbering about 400,000; orthodox Greek, 150,000; Arminians, 20,000; Jacobites, 15,000; Jews, 25,000; other fragmentary sects, aggregating from 50,000 to 100,000.

THE Spanish Committee of Lausanne, Switzerland, have thirteen Spanish students studying under the theological faculty of the Free Church of the canton of Vaud. They are described as having attained as high a degree of spirituality and sanctification as can be expected of Spaniards. The committee sustain a mission at Barcelona, which is under the care of the Rev. Mr. Empaytaz, "a pious and zealous French-Swiss pastor," and is regarded as upon a solid foundation, though it grows slowly. They find that their work is beyond their own means, and fear that without help their double work at Lausanne and Barcelona will be imperiled, and that they may be compelled to threw back into ordinary life their young Christian students who might otherwise "become good laborers in the vineyard of the Lord." Through the Evangelical Educational Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church they appeal to American churches for aid. For references they give the character and progress of their work, and Prof. Merle d'Aubigne and Prof. De Felice, of Montauban.

SOME exceedingly interesting, and to most of our readers probably surprising, statements were made at the Methodist Episcopal Missionary convention just held in New York city. Rev. Dr. Wentworth, of Troy, is represented as "advocating the severance" of the home and foreign work. "He thought that the strangest anomaly of missionary operations is the spending of so much money to sustain Christianity in Christian countries." He saw a "lack of uprightness in begging for foreign missions, and then spending so much of the fund as we do on the domestic work." Mr. Thomas L. Price, of Philadelphia, is reported as stating that the proportion of funds allotted to work in heathen lands has been decreasing, until in 1867 only six and one-half per cent. went in that direction. And of the $5,500,000 given during the last seven years an average of only twelve and a half per cent. has been so appropriated. Alluding to Methodist Episcopal missions in Europe, he thought it strange for us to be sending both missionaries and students of theology to Germany, and on the same steamer; that denominational extension was too much prized and sought through missions; that "our money and energies are wasted in trying to make Lutherans or Presbyterians or Catholics become Methodists, rather than leaving them to get to heaven by their own creeds, and devoting ourselves to the heathen, who have none or only the crudest ideas of God." We are told that such remarks were "greeted heartily by the convention."—Independent.

MRS. PRUYN, of the Woman's Mission in Japan, reports the prospects for the success of her work as encouraging in the highest degree. She writes, in the Missionary Link, under date of August 4: "Last week a messenger came to see us from the Governor of this place, to inquire about our plans, having been instructed to do this by the officials at Yedo. He particularly inquired if we would teach women, and if one of our party could not go to Yedo at once for that purpose. Mr. Ballagh, who was mainly instrumental in my coming to Japan, has just had an interview with the Governor, who sent for him to see if arrangements could not be made to have one or two of us go to Miaco, to teach in the families of the nobility there. Miaco is the old imperial capital—the residence of the Mikado from time immemorial until a few years ago, when, by the downfall of the Tycoon's dynasty, the Mikado's official residence was transferred to Yedo. No foreigners have ever been permitted to reside in Miaco, and nothing could possibly prove their eagerness for education more conclusively than their seeking the aid and introduction of foreigners for that purpose. The Governor expressed the decided opinion that what was needed in this country was the education of all classes. Mr. Ballagh told the Governor what were the motives that brought us here, and that, although we intended to teach all branches of useful knowledge, yet as Christian women we could not refrain from trying to teach Christ—our Bible and its truths. He also said that we hoped in time to have a large institution there, and then probably we could take young ladies to board and instruct. This idea seemed to him wiser than to send separate teachers to each place."

CHRISTMAS.

The Christmas festival is again at hand, and everybody feels the influence of it. The folly and evil of religious festivals may be ever so great, and we may be reminded that the exact day of the nativity is beyond discovery; but the people, especially the young people, will have a Christmas, and the Advocate, falling in with the general voice, sends greetings to its thousands of readers. Only let it not be a Saturnalia—a season of unseemly excess and dissipation—and the rest and social gatherings and good cheer are not to be condemned. If, amidst the customary pleasures and temperate diversions of the hour, we shall mingle charitable actions and pious services, it may be a time of profit to the soul.

That a sinful world should rejoice over the birth of a Savior is right, and acceptable to him who came, and to him who sent. It is meet that all should participate, because all are alike interested in the wonderful event. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given." The angel declared: "I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all the people." None are left out on this occasion of thankfulness and praise. Rich and poor, old and young, meet together and have a common joy. The ages looked forward to this event. For thousands of years patriarchs, kings and prophets gazed and expected, "searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify." It is our privilege to look back through half as long a roll of centuries to the incarnation which they predicted and longed to witness. The eye of the world has ever turned to it as the pivot and center of hope, and as the event of events. Six thousand years of faith and love, as in our world, have gathered around this single birth, and the studies and ministries of angels have for as long, and probably a much longer period, been occupied with it. God manifest in the flesh is something too great and glorious to be comprehended, save as the mystery of godliness, and as the singular and only expedient by which infinite love and wisdom could reach and save our alienated race.

Christmas is eminently the children's hour. Christ was a child, and consecrated childhood and tenderest infancy. In some sort they have a special claim, and it is fit that they, above others, should be made happy. Let all their recollections of the day be pleasant, and fragrant of the blossoms of kindness. We do not care even now to part with the illusions which were thrown around the Christmas of our childhood. It cost us a pang to give up Santa Claus and all the fairy creations with which the long-looked-for eve was peopled. Even now we like to feel something of the spirit of the old tradition:

Ever 'gainst that season comes
Wherein our Savior's birth is celebrated,
This bird of dawning singeth all night long;
And then, they say, no spirit stirs abroad;
The nights are wholesome; then no planet strikes;
No fairy tales, nor witch hath power to charm,
So hallowed and so gracious is the time.

It is a fitting time to give. So the popular instinct decides; and such also is the lesson of the nativity. First of all, that we give ourselves to God; and then that, like the wise men, we open our treasures, and pour out the "gold and frankincense and myrrh." The poor and destitute should be thought of, and ministered to according to our ability. The gifts of piety, charity and friendship have an appropriate inspiration in him who gave his only begotten Son. The love which poured this flood of light and mercy upon our fallen world should incite us to the most profuse and unselfish disposal of our abundant store. Rejoicing ourselves, let it be our aim to make everybody happy about us. If we cannot write hymns and carols worthy of the sacred morn, let us at least recall the angels' anthem, "Good will toward men," and make somebody sing who has long been a stranger to earthly joy.

It is a time to praise. Where angels could not be silent and unmoved, we should not be. If we do not choose to deck our houses with evergreens, and to wear chaplets of holly and laurel and ivy about our heads, let there be a doxology in our hearts. Let the winged thoughts of love go up unto him that loved us. Let the melody of the heart flow out till its waves break against the throne, and until its tones shall vibrate and mingle with the harp music of the glorified in heaven.

Ring out, ye crystal spheres;
Once bless our human ears,
If ye have power to touch our senses so;
And let your silver chime
Move in melodious time;
And let the bass of heaven's deep organ blow;
And with your ninefold harmony
Make up full consort to the angelic symphony.
For, if such holy song
Enwraps our fancy long,
Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold;
And speckled Vanity
Will sicken soon and die;
And leprous Sin will melt from earthly mold;
And Hell itself will pass away,
And leave her dolorous mansions to the peering day.

MERIDIAN.

This is a city of to-day rather than of yesterday. Everything about it is new, very new. Not less than eighteen or twenty brick stores are in process of erection, and the hammer and saw are heard in all directions. New and tasteful residences are going up in all parts. It is the newest, thriftiest and most stirring place we have seen since the war. The population is estimated at five thousand, and is rapidly augmenting by an influx of citizens from various sections.

Meridian has suffered fearfully from fires. It was nearly destroyed during the war, and twice since it has been nearly burnt up; but it has more than recovered, and is growing rapidly in spite of all its calamities. The town is a great railroad center. The Mobile and Ohio, the Vicksburg and Meridian, the Alabama Central, and the Alabama and Chattanooga roads cross, touch or terminate at this point, and yet others are projected which take Meridian in their line of survey. Trains are arriving and departing at almost all hours of the day and night, and the locomotive whistle is nearly a continuous scream. As many as thirty-five or forty thousand bales of cotton are sold annually here, and a large trade is transacted in provisions, dry goods and general supplies. The Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists and Cumberland Presbyterians have each a church organization and edifice, and all seem to be in a state of considerable prosperity. The sessions of the Conference are held in the Presbyterian church, a large and commodious house, which the brethren of that denomination have kindly given up to the use of the Conference. On Wednesday morning, at nine o'clock, a goodly company of preachers and laymen were present, and Bishop Kavanaugh, looking more rotund and hearty than ever, opened the Conference appropriately. All our life acquainted only with a Conference composed almost entirely of young men, we have been impressed with the large number of white-haired ministers which appears here. It is indeed a beautiful sheen and a crown of glory to such an assembly. Clinton, Nixon and Pipkin are not here, but J. G. Jones, Ransom Jones, James Shanks and other venerable members answer to their names at roll-call. Dr. Abbey, Watkins, Montgomery, Hines, J. A. B. Jones, Hunnicutt, W. Harrington, Thompson, Hurst, Forsyth, H. F. Johnson, Heard, Featherston, Godfrey, Benjamin Jones and others of like experience are shaping the business, and busy in its affairs. The secretary is no other than the best-looking man of the Conference—Rev. C. G. Andrews, president of Centenary College. J. A. B. Jones is his assistant, and also John T. Cameron, Esq., of Canton, Mississippi. Bishop Keener created a buzz of delight by appearing in the Conference room on Saturday morning, and was cordially greeted by the brethren. Among the visiting brethren we notice Bro. Harp, of our Depository; B. F. White, agent for Centenary College; and W. P. Barton, A. G. Ramsey, Dr. T. H. Wier, Joseph B. Cottrell and T. A. S. Adams, of the North Mississippi Conference; and William Horton, of Kentucky. The missionary anniversary was held at the Presbyterian church on Saturday night. The house was as full as it could be. The treasurer, Dr. Watkins, delivered a short address in connection with his report. J. B. Cottrell made a characteristic speech—lively, humorous, grave and gay; and Bishop Keener closed one of the noblest and most appropriate missionary addresses we have ever listened to by taking the collection. The amount realized was $400, and about one-third as much as was hoped for. The means of grace were abundant on Sunday—all the churches occupied twice, and some of them with three services. The sermon of Bishop Kavanaugh, at the Methodist church, at eleven A. M., as reported to us, was rich in thought and unction, and up to the best standard of this most eloquent of preachers. It was our privilege to hear excellent sermons from Drs. Watkins and Montgomery at the Presbyterian church, and to be present at the ordination of elders at the Methodist church in the afternoon. During the week, among the many good sermons preached, we have heard William Horton, of Kentucky, and W. E. M. Linfield. Of the generous and refined hospitality of Meridian it would be superfluous to speak. Preachers and laymen are all most comfortably domiciled, and all speak in the highest terms of the manner in which they are entertained. Dr. Watkins and the editor of the Advocate have a home indeed at the residence of Mr. R. F. Huston, an elder in the Presbyterian church of Meridian. At this writing we judge the Conference will not adjourn in time to finish the published proceedings or to insert the appointments in the present issue of the Advocate. The Conference has received quite an accession of preachers and members this year by the union with it of the Methodist Protestants. Among the preachers united with us, we have been gratified to meet C. F. Gillespie, P. H. Napier, C. McDonald, and others whose names we cannot recall. An increase of something over two thousand is reported in the membership. The following are the statistics, as nearly as we could gather them:

White members, 17,737; colored, 454; local preachers, 149; adults baptized, 995; infants, 1,015; Sunday schools, 176; superintendents and teachers, 997; scholars, 6,572; volumes in library, 16,978; Visitors taken, 1,459; money expended, $2,058.28; number of churches, 274; number of sittings, 59,775; value of churches, $274,440; parsonages, 16; value of parsonages, $37,600; value of other church property, $69,560; Bishops' fund, $1,033.06; Conference collection, $1,124.30; missionary collection, $1,771.58; tracts, $237.25; ministerial education, $194; poor, $146; other objects, $3,732.74; books sold, $1,568; salaries of presiding elders, $7,700; receipts, $5,205; salaries of preachers in charge, $56,910; receipts, $31,778.48.

Boston is well favored with praying bands, twenty of which have just formed themselves into a union. These bands are peculiar features of the Methodists.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

First Day.

WEDNESDAY, December 13, 1871.

The fifty-sixth session of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South convened in the Presbyterian church, in the city of Meridian, December 13, 1871, at nine A. M.

Bishop H. H. Kavanaugh, presiding, opened the exercises by reading the second chapter of Second Corinthians, singing the two hundred and seventy-second hymn, and prayer. Another hymn was sung, and J. G. Jones led in prayer.

The roll was called by the secretary of last year, and the following members answered to their names, viz.—Ministers: John G. Jones, William H. Watkins, Andrew Day, Henry J. Harris, J. Nicholson, James L. Forsyth, Henderson H. Montgomery, Robert A. Sibley, Arch. B. Nicholson, John A. B. Jones, Ephraim A. Flowers, John J. Clark, Whitfield Harrington, David W. Dillehay, John D. Willis, William G. Millsaps, Benjamin Jones, George F. Thompson, Richard Abbey, Thos. Price, Henry P. Lewis, George Jackson, John A. Vance, Charles G. Andrews, William B. Lewis, Newton B. Young, Louis Kendall, Ira B. Robertson, George W. Boyls, Walter W. Hurst, David Merchant, William L. C. Hunnicutt, Corydon Chamberlin, William E. Ballard, Robert B. Downer, Francis M. Williams, John A. Ellis, William E. M. Linfield, Francis M. Featherston, Parmenas Howard, Ransom J. Jones, Andrew B. Stewart, Levi P. Meador, Epaphrodilus W. Simmons, Alexander M. Campbell, George M. Liverman, Joshua T. Heard, James Shanks, John C. Brogan, William H. Leith, James M. Gann, Charles B. Galloway, Thomas J. Armstrong, Horace M. Booth, Charles F. Gillespie, J. H. Evans and C. McDonald. Laymen: J. E. Jagers, Josiah D. Nettles, E. L. Tarver, H. C. Newsom, D. M. Dunlap, R. C. Hilliard, J. V. Enochs, D. C. Langford, John T. Cameron, Eli R. Jones, D. M. Womack, L. M. Horton, J. S. Holbert, John Watts and Thomas P. Bell.

On motion of W. H. Watkins, C. G. Andrews was elected secretary, and J. A. B. Jones and J. T. Cameron assistants.

According to resolution of last year, the presiding elders made the following nominations for the various standing committees, which were adopted, viz.:

Finance.—D. C. Langford, J. E. Jagers, E. L. Tarver, D. M. Womack, J. V. Enochs, D. M. Dunlap, T. P. Bell and E. R. Jones.

Public Worship.—W. B. Hines, J. A. Ellis and J. T. Heard.

Education.—W. E. Ballard, T. Price, W. H. Leith, G. W. Boyls, E. H. Mounger, W. Harrington, W. H. Watkins, J. H. Shanks and John Watts.

Sunday Schools.—Thomas Green, R. Hilliard, C. Chamberlin, N. B. Young, H. C. Newsom, L. M. Horton, J. T. Heard and J. M. Gann.

Bible Cause.—R. B. Downer, L. R. Davis, G. M. Liverman, C. Macdonald, E. W. Simmons, J. C. Brogan, J. D. Willis and A. M. Campbell.

Religious Literature.—E. G. Cooke, W. E. Holloman, J. A. Godfrey, L. P. Meador, W. L. C. Hunnicutt, W. Spillman, J. P. Carter and J. J. Clark.

The Revs. T. S. Abernathy, of the Alabama Conference; B. F. White, of the Louisiana, and agent of Centenary College; Dr. Parker, editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate; and W. F. Horton, from Kentucky, were introduced to the Conference.

Revs. James Nelson, of the Baptist Church, and Rev. Mr. Smith, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in this city, were also introduced to the Conference.

A communication from Rev. J. B. McFerrin, missionary secretary, was read and referred to the Committee on Missions.

Communications from A. H. Redford, agent, showing exhibit of the Publishing House at Nashville, in regard to the old debt, and the circulation of the Advocate, were read and referred to the Committee on Religious Literature.

A communication from Dr. R. A. Young, in regard to establishing a central University, was read and referred to the Committee on Education.

The first question was called—Who are admitted on trial? Answer: Warren C. Black, from Raymond district, and Henry Walter Featherston, from North Warren circuit.

After notices were given, Conference adjourned with the benediction by the Bishop.

Second Day.

THURSDAY, December 14, 1871.

Bishop Kavanaugh called the Conference to order at nine A. M. J. G. Jones conducted the religious services.

The roll was called and the following members, in addition to those reported yesterday, answered to their names, viz.: Ministers: Erastus R. Strickland, Archibald B. Nicholson, W. B. Hines, Harvey F. Johnson, John D. Hays, Bascom T. Pearson, Henry P. Bowen and P. H. Napier. Laymen: Thos. Green, E. C. Pastell, D. C. Langford, Eli R. Jones, William E. Hollbman and T. S. West.

Irvin Miller, alternate from Brandon district, was recognized as a member in place of J. Watts, absent, and was appointed on like committees.

Rev. J. B. Cottrell, of the North Mississippi Conference, and Rev. Mr. Ross, pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in this city, were introduced to the Conference.

W. H. Watkins, chairman of the committee appointed at the last Conference to settle any matter of indebtedness between Port Gibson Collegiate Academy and Rev. Benjamin Jones, submitted the report of the committee, which was adopted, and on motion of the chairman was referred to the Committee on Education.

The first question was resumed, and James J. Smylie, from the Jackson circuit, was admitted.

Who remain on trial? Pending this question, W. E. M. Linfield moved that as each name was called the preacher be required to state the amounts collected for Bishops' and Conference funds, which was adopted.

John Wesley Sandell, Thomas B. Walden, David P. Bradford and Hiram Rives Singleton were passed and continued. Peter Wilson Cram was, on motion of J. A. B. Jones, discontinued.

John W. Hall, continued and elected to deacon's orders.

Alexander Trotter, Daniel G. W. Ellis, George M. Gillmore and James S. Parker were passed and continued.

The class of the second year was called up, answered the disciplinary questions, and was charged by the Bishop; of which class David M. Givens and James M. Weems were admitted into full connection and elected to deacon's orders.

Conference adjourned with the benediction by the Bishop.

Third Day.

FRIDAY, December 15, 1871.

Conference met at nine o'clock A. M. Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair. Religious exercises by Rev. J. Nicholson. Minutes of yesterday read and approved.

The presiding elder of Summit district made application for restoration of the parchments of Jessie Lee, but owing to informalities in the case the Conference could take no action.

A series of resolutions concerning the conduct of public worship in the Methodist Church were read and laid on the table for the present.

R. Abbey, Conference Sunday school agent, made his report, which was referred to the Committee on Sunday Schools, and on motion R. Abbey was added to said committee.

A communication from Sardis Female Academy was referred to the Committee on Education.

A communication from the trustees of Meridian Female College was referred to the same committee.

The presiding elder of Brookhaven district moved that Rev. E. F. Mullins be restored to his former relation as a member of Conference, he having been located at the last Conference. He was restored.

Communications from Revs. Allen Y. Davis and J. N. Williams, representing their circumstances in view of receiving appointments from the Conference, were referred to the Bishop and his council.

A. B. Stewart reported that he had collected money sufficient to pay for the record book, etc., and had a surplus of a small amount, which latter was ordered to be placed to the credit of the Conference fund.

H. F. Johnson, president of Whitworth Female College, presented a report from that institution. Referred to the Committee on Education.

Rev. W. B. Hines called the attention of the Conference to an announcement in one of the city papers that "Rev. R. Y. Rew was in attendance as a member of the Conference." This is a mistake. He is not a member of the Conference, nor a preacher, he having surrendered his credentials as a minister.

A communication was read from W. C. Johnson, secretary of the Memphis Conference, concerning the Central University. Referred to the Committee on Education.

Fourth question—Who are admitted into full connection? Lyman Carley, George W. Chatfield and Ulysses B. Phillips were admitted. J. A. Howard continued on trial.

Fifteenth question—Who are admitted on trial? George Bancroft.

Seventh question—Who are the deacons of one year? Henry P. Brown, passed and elected to elder's orders.

Tenth ques.—What local preachers are elected and ordained to deacon's orders? John Richie, David P. Bradford, John W. Williams, Alexander Scarborough, H. W. Featherston and A. C. Hendley.

Fourteenth question—What local preachers are elected to elder's orders? Elijah L. Tarver, John S. Arburthnot, Robert C. Bethea, E. M. Alford and P. F. Stern.

The Conference then proceeded to the examination of the character of elders under the twentieth question—James L. Forsyth.

Twelfth question—What traveling preachers are elected elders? Levi P. Meador, E. W. Simmons and A. M. Campbell passed and were elected.

Corydon Chamberlin, passed.

The Conference resolved that, pending the examination of the character of elders when it is said there is nothing against a member, he may be permitted to remain in the house.

Rev. Mr. Whitfield, pastor of the Baptist Church, was introduced to the Conference.

The hour having arrived, notice being given, the Conference adjourned with the benediction.

Fourth Day.

SATURDAY, December 16, 1871.

Conference met at nine o'clock A. M. Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair. Religious exercises by Rev. B. F. White. Minutes of yesterday were read and approved.

Bishop Keener was introduced to the Conference; also Revs. William Barton, Ramsey, Wier and Thomas, of the North Mississippi Conference.

B. Jones presented a report from the Port Gibson Collegiate Academy, which was referred to the Committee on Education.

J. T. Heard, chairman of special committee to inquire into the complaints against C. B. Galloway, made a report.

Tenth ques.—What local preachers are elected to deacon's orders? resumed—Miles Linton and Aaron Jones were elected.

The secretary of the Conference read a report of the statistics of the church, including the number of members, ministers, Sunday school scholars, church houses, sittings, parsonages, baptisms, (adults and infants,) etc.

Pending this reading, the following motion was made and adopted, viz.:

That the grand total in each district only be read now, and that the report be left on the secretary's table during this afternoon, subject to inspection by the members.

E. W. Simmons and T. S. West asked and obtained leave of absence for the remainder of the session.

The hour having arrived, notice being given, the Conference adjourned with the benediction.

The Home Advocate is an excellent family paper, deeply religious in its tone, published at Jefferson, Texas. We notice that our old friend Rev. S. J. Hawkins, of the Trinity Conference, has assumed its editorial management. Bro. Hawkins is a clear and earnest thinker and writer. He has our best wishes for abundant success in his new and responsible duties. In the last issue we are pained to find that John C. Murphy, an old citizen and Methodist of Jefferson, is dead.

We regret exceedingly not being able to be present at the collation given on board the new British steamship Memphis. This noble steamer is commanded by our old friend Captain Weeks, than whom no better man or seaman treads a quarter-deck. The Memphis lies at the foot of St. Mary street, Fourth District.

We left the Conference room at Meridian on Monday afternoon. The adjournment was expected by Tuesday evening, but at the hour of going to press we have no further items. The appointments and other matter will appear next week.

Death of Rev. Dr. Parsons.—The Rev. C. B. Parsons, D. D., died at his residence in Portland, near Louisville, on the eighth of December. His end was peace.

Lobster-Christians.—The lobster, when left high and dry among the rocks, has not sense or energy enough to work his way back to the sea, but waits for the sea to come to him. If it does not come, he remains where he is, and dies, although a little effort would enable him to reach the waves, which are, perhaps, tossing and tumbling within a few feet of him. When misfortune comes to the slothful Christian, instead of receiving it as God's invitation to trust and exertion, (which should always go together,) he despairs and blames his bad luck. He wonders when the tide will turn, and spends more time in envying his neighbors than in helping himself. His waiting is not trustfulness, but simply spiritual laziness, as far removed from faith as love from selfishness.

Rev. J. B. Vanmeter, of the Baltimore Methodist Episcopal Conference, now closing his second year as pastor at Ryland chapel, in Washington, has been appointed chaplain of the United States Naval Academy, at Annapolis.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

OUR KEEPSAKE. Edited by Attieus G. Haygood, Sunday school secretary. Nashville, Tennessee: A. H. Redford, agent, Southern Methodist Publishing House.

This is a sqnare octavo, with double columns, on fine paper, full of pictures and short stories, and interesting miscellany—prose and poetry—prepared for onr children and young folks as a holiday, Christmas, New Year's or birthday present. It is, indeed, a beautiful volume, and equal in typography and illustrations to the holiday books which come from any of our Northern publishers. The contents are mostly moral, religions and scriptnral, and well calenlated to interest at the same time that they impress the most important lessons upon the youthful mind. It is a good Christmas present for the children, and we wish that all of our Sunday school scholars could have a copy. There is yet time to order them for the holiday gatherings of the schools. Price, postage paid, only $1.

ELEMENTS OF DIVINITY, or a Concise and Comprehensive View of Bible Theology. Comprising the doctrines, evidences, morals and institutions of Christiauity, with appropriate qnestions appended to each chapter. By Thomas N. Ralston, D. D. Nashville, Tennessee: Published by A. H. Redford, agent, for the Methodist Episcopal Chnrch South, 1871.

At present we notice this volnme without any purpose to review it. The fact that it is edited by Dr. Summers, and that it is published by our book agent for the Methodist Episcopal Church South, are adequate warrants for its soundness snd valne as a doctrinal standard. The former work of Dr. Ralston related exclusively to the doctrines of Christianity; the present embraces the matter comprised in "the Elements of Divinity," revised, improved and enlarged, besides a most thorough and elaborate treatment of the evidences, morals and institutions of Christianity. Besides a complete table of contents, there is a general alphabetical index, and questions are appended to each chapter. It is especially adapted to the nse of young men who are studying for the ministry, and the nndergraduates in the Confereuces. Our preachers, both traveling and local, shonld all have it, and study it thoronghly. The Bishops have done wisely in putting it iuto the course of study. The volnme is an octavo of 1,023 pages, clear large type, and substantially bound in sheep. Our Publishing Honse has turned ont no better job of printing and binding. For sale by Robert J. Harp, at the Depository, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

THE FREEDOM OF THE WILL AS A BASIS OF HUMAN RESPONSIBILITY AND A DIVINE GOVERNMENT, elncidated and maiutained in its issne with the necessitarian theories of Hobbes, Edwards, the Princeton Essayists, and other leading advocates. By D. D. Whedon, D. D. New York: Carlton & Lanahan. San Francisco: E. Thomas. Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden.

A 12mo of 438 pages, and a most thorough and able treatment of a difficult subject. Those whose studies and tastes lie in the direction of metaphysical and polemical divinity should not fail to give the work a careful perusal. Why we have been put in this sinful world, with such hard nuts to crack, is perhaps as much of a problem as the will itself. For ono thing the discussion is good for mental discipline, and as handled by Arminian writers, good for the piety of the investigator. Dr. Whedon evidently loves this kind of work, and is a master workman in it. We doubt whether he has exhausted the snbject or satisfied all who are mainly in accord with him, but it will be gouerally conceded that he has made an important contribution to our theological literatnre, and has done good service against the views which have been so effectively advocated by Augustine, Calvin and Edwards.

AUNT JANE'S HERO is a thoroughly religions story, and the one in our honsehold who reads and appreciates all good books pronounces it uncommonly excellent and edifying. It is written by Mrs. E. Prentiss, author of Stepping Heavenward and other books. Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., New York, are the publishers. The volnme is handsomely printed and bonnd, and is a duodecimo of 292 pages.

MISS COLUMBIA'S PUBLIC SCHOOL, OR WILL IT BLOW OVER? By a Cosmopolitan. The pencil is a mighty anxiliary of the pen, especially as wielded by Thomas Nast. The Roman Catholic policy is well exhibited and delineated in theso sketches. The whole thing is good for its humor, and also for its trnth. From Francis B. Felt & Co., New York, through James A. Gresham, bookseller, New Orleans.

HISTORY OF THE CROSS, by Henry Dana Ward, M. A., treats of the pagan origin and idolatrous adoption and worship of the image, and seems to be directed against the encroachments which ritualism is making in the Protestant Episcopal Church. The author treats the worship of the cross with much seriousness and research, but we fear it will be lost labor with those who are so infatuated and silly as to worship a mere symbol. Published by Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger, Philadelphia. For sale by Gresham, New Orleans.

THE NEW MONTHLY for December has just reached ns, and in the qnality of its illnstrations, its original and selected articles and editorial matter, is perhaps the best of the twelve numbers now completed. Dr. Harrison, the editor, bids his readers farewell, and we suppose the publication is at an end.

THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE AND REVIEW is published by the Review Publishing and Printing Company, Philadelphia, and is especially devoted to finance, mining and metallurgy, insurance, manufactures and kindred snbjects. We have received the November number.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE, November 25, has: The Pilgrim Fathers; Letters and Letter Writing; The Famine in Parsia; The American Fires, and other articles of rare merit. Published by Littell & Gay, Boston, weekly, at $8 per annum.

THE CHRISTIAN BANNER and the CHILD AT HOME are monthlies published by the American Tract Society, Boston. They are beautifully printed and filled with choice religions matter. We have received the December numbers.

LE BON TON, pnblished by S. T. Taylor, New York, is unsurpassed in the beauty and finish of its numerous fashion plates. We have received the nnmber for the current month.

OLD AND NEW for December contains: Day Dreaming; chapter 1 of Six of One by Half a Dozen of the Other; God with Man; The Bear Rock, and other articles.

GOOD HEALTH is among the best periodicals devoted to popnlar hygiene. The December number is excellent.

THE SOUTHERN FARMER for December is up to its usual standard of excellence.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE and the SOUTHERN for December are fine numbers.

ANTI-JESUITISM is one of the conspicuous features of the new reform. The ardor with which this phase of the religious question has been pushed has led some of the German papers to print the present statistics of the order. In Austria it appears there are four hundred and ninety-eight members in seventeen establishments. In Rhenish Prussia and Westphalia there are twelve monasteries. The total of members in all Germany is stated to be eight thousand nine hundred and twenty.

Obituaries.

MRS. MARY EMMA SCHARMERHORN, wife of William W. Schermerhorn, born Shropshire, died in New Orleans, November 27, 1871, aged thirty-six years. Sister Schermerhorn was the daughter of S. G. and Margaret A. Shropshire, and was a native of Augusta, Kentucky. In her tenth year she made a profession of religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. She came with her parents to New Orleans in 1846, where she has resided most of the time since that date. She was married in 1861, and, besides her parents and two brothers, leaves a husband and four children to mourn her loss. For some years previous to her death she had lost much of the religious comfort which she formerly enjoyed, but during her last illness the joy of salvation was restored to her, and the Sun of Righteousness arose with healing in his wings. During her sickness of three weeks' duration she was blessed with a clear mind, and was enabled to come with boldness to the throne of grace. She lamented that she had followed the Savior at so great a distance, and her greatest desire to recover was that she might devote herself more perfectly to his service. The peace of God which passeth all understanding kept her mind and heart, and the fear of death was entirely removed. Full assurance and complete victory marked her closing hours. Her sickness and death exhibited, in a remarkable degree, the beauty and power of the Christian faith, and the sufficiency of divine grace and consolation. With many and strong ties binding her to life, she was able calmly to commit husband, children and kindred to God, and to welcome the hour that opened to her soul the glories of heaven. Sister Schermerhorn was a woman of noble and generous character, the light of her home, and the joy and comfort of her family and kindred. May God bless the dear ones she has left behind, and bring them all at length to join her in that fearless world.

LINUS PARKER.

MRS. EMILY J. BUIE was born in Cumberland, North Carolina, October 31, 1871, and was married to Neill Buie July 10, 1831. Her parents were strict Presbyterians. She was piously raised and educated, and especially taught to keep holy the Sabbath day—a lesson she in turn most rigidly enforced. She moved to Louisiana in 1830, settled at Springfield, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church by letter from the Presbyterians, there being no church of her own persuasion near; and her heart being with the people of God, she could not remain out of church fellowship even for a short time. She ever afterward remained in the Methodist Church—loved its doctrines, its usages and its members.

Sister Buie was a daily Bible reader, and kept up this habit till within a few days of her death. She rigidly kept up family and secret prayer, and regularly at eventide took her children and grandchildren to secret prayer with her. She often dwelt upon the necessity of a change of heart—the witness of the Spirit—to the sonship of all true Christians, and entire sanctification to be realized and exemplified in the present world; and these blessed truths she expatiated with copiousness and frequency, and urged upon all that came within the sphere of her influence with a becoming earnestness.

Thirty years of her Christian life were spent in Covington, Louisiana, and much of this time she was noted for activity in the cause of Christ—active in the Sabbath school, class meeting, visiting, praying with and administering to the sick and distressed.

She loved to entertain the preachers, and annually contributed to the cause of missions, in which she ever felt a deep interest. In 1862 she became crippled by falling from a horse, and ever afterward suffered severely from the injury—never walked again, except on crutches.

Her increasing infirmities were borne with patience, and even with cheerfulness. She frequently said to the writer of this: "What blessings I enjoy! All is mercy and love. How good is God to me in this affliction!" During her last illness she was graciously sustained, and frequently expressed her confidence in God and her acquiescence in his will. Like the aged patriarch of old, just before she died she gave her blessing to her children and grandchildren, and to her devoted friend, Sister Fuqua, fervently praying heaven's blessing upon them. She had often prayed that she might be spared a painful death. In this respect her prayer was answered; for after calling her daughter, "Catherine, O Catherine," she slightly turned her head and peacefully breathed her last, at Baton Rouge, November 7, 1871, in the seventy-sixth year of her age.

E. S. TRIPPETT.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

At a called meeting of the Fayette Female Financial Association, held on the seventeenth of November, 1871, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted, viz:

Whereas, It has pleased an all-wise God to take from our midst our beloved sister, Mrs. LOUISA BROWN; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we bow in submission to this afflicting dispensation of Providence, and that we will endeavor to follow her as she followed Christ.

Resolved, That we ever recognized in her the high-toned Christian lady, and a faithful co-worker in our society from its organization until her death.

Resolved, That in token of our respect for her we will wear a badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolutions be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication; that a copy be presented to her children, who have our sympathy; and that it also be spread upon the minutes.

AMANDA S. ARMSTRONG, Prest.
M. M. COPPEE, Secretary.

AMANDA MAYO, wife of A. F. Malone, was born in Plaquemine, Louisiana, August 1, 1836, and died near Washington, Louisiana, September 12, 1871.

Sister Malone was reared by a pious mother and enjoyed the advantages of the Sabbath school. She joined the church at the age of fifteen, and was converted soon after; from which time to the day of her death she was a devoted Christian, manifesting a growing zeal for God and the church. She esteemed it a real pleasure and blessing to meet with the people of God in public and social worship—used all the means of grace. When she became a mother she manifested a keen sense of the responsibility of her position, and was prayerfully solicitous to train her little ones for God and heaven; and now, that, in the providence of God, her four little children are left to the care of others, it remains only for them to lead these little ones forward in the same line of development in which they have been so happily started. Two of the children are already members of the church, and no doubt the other two will be at the proper time.

Sister Malone was fully resigned to the will of God in removing her from a charge and circle she loved so dearly, and died in confident assurance of a blissful immortality.

A. E. GOODWYN.

MISS ADELAIDE, daughter of Henry and Mary Jemison, was born near Newbern, Hale county, Alabama, January 24, 1843, and died of pneumonia, November 18, 1871.

This family has been sorely afflicted during the past few years: of twelve, only five are left. Four of them have died in a little more than one year: two last year—the father and one daughter—and two daughters this year—the subject of this obituary and a little girl seven or eight years old. Truly, the cup of the survivors is full and bitter! May God in his mercy sustain and comfort them. Miss Adelaide professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South when she was about fourteen years old, and from that time to her death led a consistent Christian life. All her intimate friends speak of her in the highest terms. She was punctual and regular in the use of the means of grace, public and private. She attended our recent revival meeting in Newbern, and took much interest in it. She manifested a deep interest in the welfare of some of her acquaintances here who are not religious, urging them to seek salvation. She was possessed of a mind of high order, well cultivated and richly stored with knowledge. She was refined, amiable, lovely. Her end was peace. She was much concerned for an unconverted brother. May he follow her as she followed Christ.

JEWELRY, ETC.—We would recommend our readers, when they want anything in the above line, to visit E. Priolland, 120 Canal street.

JOHN FRIEL.—Those in want of something becoming for the apex, and at the same time reasonable in price, should call at 100 St. Charles street.

C. H. PATMEYER.—We refer those in want of gloves, of every variety, size and color, to the above gentleman, who will be found at 222 Canal street.

H. P. BUCKLEY.—This old house has a large assortment of jewelry and plated ware for the holidays. We can recommend this house to our numerous patrons.

A. EGAN & CO.—This is the place to get such articles of produce as apples, potatoes, etc. Parties will do well to get their supply at this old house. See their card.

AVENDANO BROS.—We refer our patrons to the card of this house, which appears on the fifth page. They are receiving coffee in large quantities. Give them a call.

DRESSES, ETC.—Our lady friends who are desirous of a proper-fitting dress, and of the latest style, will be pleased by giving Mrs. Obear a call, at 173 Carondelot street.

J. G. BERMEL & Co. have just received an elegant selection of things from Paris for the holidays, and are busily engaged in unpacking them. Give them a call, and you will find attentive and polite ladies to show you their fine stock of goods.

CHEAP CLOTHING.—Charles Lamm is selling off his clothing below cost, for the purpose of giving up business. Those who are desirous of something cheap, as well as good, will find it to their interest to call and examine the articles.

BLACKMAN'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, No. 78 Camp street, will give a full commercial course, at half price, to all over fifteen years of age who will enter previous to the new year. This college enjoys a high reputation; and as an education is the most valuable present that can be given, parents and guardians will do well to act accordingly. See advertisement on sixth page.

PIANOS.—We refer our readers to the card of Mr. Blackmar, who is agent for Chickering's pianos for Louisiana, Texas and Mississippi. These pianos can be had at factory retail rates at from one to two years' time, in monthly installments. He is also the only agent in the United States for the La Haze music, which can be had for twenty per cent. less than American music. We advise our friends, when they require a good instrument, to give him a call.

OPTICAL GOODS.—The eye is the most sensitive of the organs; therefore how important it is, when the sight is dimmed prematurely, or when old age comes upon us, that we ought to be particular in the selection of proper spectacles, so that the optics may not be impaired by the use of bad ones. Numbers trust the selection to inexperienced traders, indifferent as to the serious consequences resulting therefrom. We can safely refer our friends and the numerous readers of our paper to William Bohne, practical optician, 108 Carondelet street. His card will be seen on the fifth page.

The Child's Corner.

THE FOX AND THE MASK.

A fox walked round a toyman's shop,
(How he came there, pray do not ask,)
But soon he made a sudden stop,
To look and wonder at a mask.

The mask was beautiful and fair,
A perfect mask as e'er was made;
And which the lady meant to wear
At the ensuing masquerade.

He turned it round, with much surprise,
To find it prove so light and thin;
"How strange!" astonished Reynard cries,
"Here's mouth and nose and eyes and chin;

"And cheeks and lips extremely pretty;
And yet, one thing there still remains
To make it perfect—what a pity
So fine a head should have no brains!"

Thus, to some fop or maiden pretty,
Who's got learning takes no pains,
May we exclaim: "Ah! what a pity
So fine a head should have no brains!"

WHAT THE CLOCK SAYS.

"Tick," the clock says, "tick, tick, tick!"
What you have to do, do quick;
Time is gliding fast away;
Let us act, and act to-day.

If your lesson you would get,
Do it now, and do not fret;
That alone is hearty fun
Which comes after duty done.

When your mother says, "Obey,"
Do not loiter, do not stay;
Wait not for another tick;
What you have to do, do quick.

A BEAUTIFUL PLANT.

Kind hearts are the gardens,
Kind thoughts are the roots,
Kind words are the blossoms,
Kind deeds are the fruits.

Love is sweetest sunshine
That warms into life;
For only in the darkness
Grow hatred and strife.

ON BALDWIN'S ROCK.

One morning in the spring vacation John Choate's father told him that if he would take a rake and clear away all the dead leaves and bits of sticks in the garden he would give him a quarter of a dollar.

Now this was just the sum that John had been wishing for, as he had seen a fishing-line in a shop window marked "only twenty-five cents," and he wanted to go to the river and fish for minnows.

So John went to the wood-shed and took down the long-handled rake which had been lying across the beams all winter, and then getting a bushel-basket from the cellar, he went to work with a good will, and soon he made a great improvement in the appearance of the yard and garden. The rubbish he carried off to a dust-heap behind the barn, to be eventually carted off by a man who was hired annually for that purpose.

The quarter of a dollar was promptly paid, and with a light heart John went whistling down the street toward Butterfield's bazar, where the long-wished-for fishing-line had been seen; he had been a good boy, and that was why he felt so happy and merry. But boys are constantly sorely beset with temptations, and at the very moment when John was thinking how easy it was to be good and mind his parents, the tempter appeared to him in a most dangerous and insidious form. It was in the person of Frank Bushfield, a boy who was hired by General Manning to take care of the horses and to do "chores" around the house; he was about as old as John, but not the kind of boy that Mr. Choate liked as a companion to his son, and therefore John was forbidden to associate with him. Bushfield had a way of making himself very agreeable sometimes, and he was particularly so on this occasion, when he discovered that John was going to buy a fishing-line.

"I'll tell you what we'll do, John," said he; "you get the line, and I'll get a boat, and we'll go down to Baldwin's Rock; there's any quantity of tom-cod and flounders down there."

"I don't believe my father will let me go," said John.

"He didn't say you shouldn't, did he?" asked Frank.

"No, not exactly," replied John.

"Well, then, come along, we'll have a grand time; and bring home fish enough to pay for the line; it won't take us more than two hours, and your father will never know it," said Frank.

John wanted to go very much; so he stifled his conscience, and followed his companion to Mercantile wharf, where they found a green dory tied; Frank jumped into it and told John to follow.

"Whose boat is this?" asked John.

"Oh, it belongs to a man I know. I got his hat for him once when it blew overboard, and he told me I could use his boat any time I wanted it," replied Frank.

In a few minutes the two boys were on their way to Baldwin's Rock—a large rock which stood in the broadest part of the river, serving as a guide to the pilots in going in and out of the harbor.

They had supplied themselves with bait, and found that the fish were plentiful and quite ready to bite. The only difficulty was that there was only one line; John monopolized this, and Frank could only look on impatiently.

"Come, John," said he, after two tom-cods had been hooked, "now let me have a chance."

"No, I've only just begun," said John.

"Well, I ought to have the first chance, for I got the boat," answered Frank.

"Now, take care a minute, here comes a whopper of a fish. I guess it's a regular built codfish, or a haddock; may be it's a haddock," said John eagerly, and he directed his hook toward the newcomer.

"He's after it! see! Surely I've got him," exclaimed John, and he began to haul up his line with the unfortunate fish at the end. It was quite a large fish, and John was greatly pleased at his capture, but Bushfield was a little envious of his comrade's success, and just as John lifted him out of the water Frank maliciously jerked his arm in such a way as to free the fish, which fell back into the water with a splash, and darted out of sight forever.

"What did you do that for, Frank Bushfield? You're a mean fellow, and I've a good mind to chuck you overboard!" exclaimed John, highly exasperated.

"No sauce!" said Frank; "it's my turn to fish, and if you don't let me have that line I'll throw you overboard."

"I won't do it, and I'd like to see you threw me over," answered John, defiantly.

"There goes your hat to begin with," said Frank, as he seized John's hat from his head and sealed it into the air. It skimmed gracefully across the water, and then taking an upward sweep, found a resting-place on the summit of Baldwin's Rock.

John was very angry; he flew at Bushfield, seized him by the collar, and in a moment they were both struggling violently until they went over into the water. Each was a good swimmer, and when they found themselves overboard they let go of each other, and scrambled for the boat. Bushfield succeeded in getting in first, when he seized an oar and rapped John's fingers, that were on the gunwale of the boat, so hard that he was obliged to let go.

"You shan't get in here; this is my boat!" exclaimed the bad boy.

"What shall I do?" gasped John despairingly.

"Get up on that rock where your hat is; you can't get in this boat anyhow," and Frank commenced to scull the boat away.

John swam to the big rock, and with some difficulty climbed upon it, and recovered his hat. He looked around him dismayed; there he was, wet to the skin, perched upon the top of a barren rock, his treacherous and wicked companion carrying away the boat, and no other apparent means of escape left him.

"Father was right, after all," he said to himself; "he told me that Frank Bushfield was not a proper playmate for me, and now I am punished for disobeying him. I do wish that I had minded what he said."

Two long, dreary hours John sat on Baldwin's Rock, watching and waiting for something to release him. It came at last. A plank floated slowly down the river and struck the rock. In an instant John was astride of it, and after struggling hard with the current, he contrived to reach the shore, dripping, tired and forlorn; and as he was on the opposite shore from the town, he had to walk nearly three miles to a bridge where he could cross over.

A sorry plight he was in when he reached home; but told the whole story to his parents—told them how sorry he was—and they forgave him.

"Where do you suppose Frank Bushfield is?" asked Mr. Choate of his son.

"I do not know, sir; have you heard anything about him?"

"He is in jail, locked up there till to-morrow, when his trial will take place," said the father.

"In jail!" repeated John, much amazed. "What is he to be tried for?"

"For stealing the boat you went in; it belonged to a man that lives up in Cripplegate; he was very angry to find it stolen, and when Bushfield came back a constable was ready to arrest him."

John felt thankful that he was not in the boat with the thief, and indeed the whole day's experience taught him a lesson that was never forgotten, even when his hair was gray, and he was ready to take passage across a darker river with the grim ferryman.—Student and Schoolmate.

The Farm and Garden.

THE JUTE PLANT.

Mr. E. H. Derby, of Boston, Massachusetts, who has taken much interest in the introduction of the jute plant into the United States, forwards to the Department of Agriculture for publication the following letter from Mr. R. Macallister, Calcutta, India, in reference to the cultivation and gathering of the plant, and the separation and curing of the fiber:

"The seeds are sown in the months of March and April, broadcast, on plowed land, preference being given to moist high ground, situated, if possible, on the bank of a river, and somewhat sandy. As a general rule manure is not used, but animal dung has been employed to advantage; nor is it necessary to irrigate the ground, as no more water is required than is sufficient to keep the roots moist, for which the ordinary showers of this country generally suffice. It is allowed to grow three to four months, and is cut in the months of June, July and August, when it has attained a height of seven and a half to twelve feet, the size depending, of course, on the fertility of the soil and the season.

"The time chosen for cutting is just after the flowers have turned to seed, and before the seeds begin to ripen, for it is found, when cut thus early, to be of better color and to have less root. When the seeds are allowed to ripen it appears that the fiber becomes stiff and hard, and the inferior portion of the stem changes color, becoming blackish or reddish.

"When cut the stalks are tied in bundles and thrown into tanks of dirty water, and allowed to remain there five to eight days to rot, (the dirtier the water the faster, I believe, the rotting process takes place,) at the expiration of which time they are taken out, and the fiber falls from the stick. The fiber is then hung up to dry, and, when dry, is assorted, packed in round bundles called drums, and sent off.

"The finer qualities of jute sometimes attain a height of fifteen feet. The smaller the plant the lower the quality. The seeds are used for cultivation only. They contain very little oil, and no one has ever thought it worth while to crush them, neither have they ever been tried for feeding poultry or cattle. Small plants yield more seeds than the larger ones, and, supposing all the plants on an acre to be allowed to ripen, the yield of seed would be about one hundred and twenty pounds, as I am informed."

To encourage the general cultivation of this valuable fiber plant in the Southern States, the Commissioner of Agriculture has ordered a large quantity of the seed for distribution. The seed heretofore distributed by the department is reported to have succeeded admirably. It is stated that on the banks of the lower Mississippi, with little or no cultivation, in the course of three months, it grew eight to twelve feet high, maturing an abundance of seed. It can probably be raised as easily as hemp throughout the South, and in a large part of the Mississippi valley, and possibly as far north as Virginia and Tennessee.

ROOT CROPS.—From all who have systematically grown root crops as food for stock, testimony is given as to their great value. They make milk, they fatten animals, they are excellent for manure. Almost the only objection urged against them is that the turnips taint the milk. But with proper care in feeding this objection may be overcome. Salt hay fed to milch cows, or salt given them with their turnips, will do much toward removing the taint. If the turnips are fed at the time of milking, or if they are cooked before feeding, the bad taste is almost wholly remedied. Potatoes, turnips, parsnips, carrots and beets, all are valuable as food for stock, and all may be grown for this purpose with profit, though the high price of potatoes in most localities makes it wise to feed the unmarketable ones. As much food for stock can be raised from one acre of root crops as can be raised from six acres of oats or grass. This is the reason why root crops are so extensively cultivated in England. They also place the land in condition to raise heavy crops of wheat.

FEEDING STOCK.—Overfeeding is as injurious as underfeeding. Probably more sickness occurs, especially among horses, from this cause than from any other. In addition to this evil effect, much fodder is wasted when stock are supplied with unlimited quantities. Even if it is only within their reach they will pull it down, pick out the choice bits, and waste the remainder. There is a certain amount which is just right, and either more or less than that is an evil to be guarded against. Owners of stock should watch this, as being more interested and better capable of judging than the great majority of hired men. The proper supply may be measured by the appetite of the animal, which, in good health, will lead it to eat with relish all that is necessary. When any is left in the manger the beast has been overfed, and when it has just enough it will eat and enjoy its allowance and lick its trough clean. It is difficult to manage this without direct occasional supervision. "Where the owner is the crib is clean," and in his absence much waste is almost certain to occur.—Hearth and Home.

WHAT SOILS TO USE ASHES ON.—It seems to be agreed by farmers who have investigated the matter that the ashes do the best on light soils, and some contend that they are actually injurious on moist and compact clays. The same authorities admit their value on the opposite character of soils. One farmer says: "I sowed one hundred bushels of ashes mixed, leached and unleached, on dry loam alluvion, and my hay crop was increased one-half." Another states that he applied the leached, which he allowed to stand twelve months, to his corn crop on similar land, and found it greatly increased. One farmer of our acquaintance, clearing some new land, saved the ashes and applied them to his sweet potato crop, and raised over one thousand bushels to the acre. It is a safe rule for any farmer having land that he knows is deficient in potash to apply wood ashes if he can get them; if not, the best fertilizer which contains potash.

THE IMPORTANCE OF MULCHING.—A sagacious fruit grower near New Brunswick, New Jersey, mulches his place heavily, and never removes it from one year's end to the other. His soil is always cool and mellow, and his trees and vines never suffer from heat; his fruit is large, fair and delicious, and his produce is extraordinary in quantity. For all newly-planted trees in the spring of the year mulching is the only safe guarantee of their success; without mulching many will fail; with it not one should be lost. The practice is also a saving of labor, and if the mulch is applied two or three inches deep it will keep down all the weeds. Mulching can also be used to retard the ripening of fruit from three to ten days. Upon light sandy soil currants cannot be grown without it. Pears dropping from the trees are safe from bruises.—Southern Farmer.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

TO CURE A FELON ON THE HAND.—Take sassafras bark—the inside bark—dry, and grate it fine, and wet in a teacup with cold water, for a poultice. Apply to the felon, and wet once in five minutes with cold water. This, followed up, will draw it to a head in twenty-four hours, without any pain and without any injury to the hand. Use the bark of the root.

PICKLED NASTURTIUMS.—Gather the seed when green and not fully green, and drop them into vinegar as you pick them. When you have a sufficient quantity, scald the whole in vinegar and bottle or soak them twelve hours in brine; then drain and pour over boiling vinegar, with whole peppers and allspice. They are often used as substitutes for capers, and the flowers and young seeds are used in salads.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Country Gentleman says: "The way to have fresh eggs at all seasons of the year, and the only way I know of, is to have a breed of hens that will lay in the winter as well as in the summer. In order to accomplish this—1. Get the hens. 2. Keep them well; give them a variety of food—pounded bone in the winter to take the place of gravel in the summer. 3. Give them warm roosting places; a hen that is kept poor and cold and half froze every night will not lay an egg the next day. A good hen is like a grist-mill: if we expect big grists, we must fill the hopper. 4. Hatch out early pullets to lay in the fall while the old hens are moulting, as they will stop laying for a few days during this process, and keep mostly pullets over winter, as they will lay more eggs the first year than the second year, and so on. There is scarcely a day in the whole year that I do not bring fresh eggs from the barn to the house."

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE,

FRANKLIN, TENNESSEE.

THE SPRING SESSION FOR 1872 OPENS JANUARY 22.

This institution combines internal comfort and elegance with educational facilities of a high order. It challenges investigation of its equipments and appointments, its methods and results. A complete system of Gymnastics for girls is a recent addition for healthful exercise and physical development. Its prosperity has steadily grown under the present management, and the number of pupils is larger now than ever before. It is under the supervision of the Tennessee Conference, and refers inquirers to the Bishops of the church, and to leading ministers in Nashville and elsewhere.

During the fifteen years since its organization no pupil has died in attendance on it. The climate is bracing, the atmosphere pure, the soil generous and the scenery beautiful.

While in a thriving town, and within one hour of Nashville by several daily trains, it has all the necessary quiet for successful study.

Charges are low. The Literary Course, including Latin and French, is free to Itinerant ministers, and they may cancel board and other fees for their daughters by an active interest for the college.

Scientific.

THE lake survey has recently been making dredgings in the deepest portions of Lake Superior, at the depth of one hundred and sixty-nine fathoms, under the direction of Mr. S. J. Smith. Two species of shrimps were found, which proved identical with those inhabiting the bottom of Lake Wetter, in Sweden. One of them is a common marine animal on the Norwegian coast.

SIR EDWARD SABINE has been engaged for a quarter of a century in working up tables and charts which will be a reduction of all that has been observed of terrestrial magnetism with a precise system. Alone with his wife, who is his constant assistant, in a quiet retreat, he is patiently doing a work of formidable proportions, which attracts no public attention, but which will be of exceeding value to science when complete; and two years yet of this severe toil will be required before it can be finished.

AS REGARDS the heat of the moon, Lord Rosse has found that its heat is transmitted by a plate of glass in the proportion of 12 per cent., while the same plate allowed the passage of 87 per cent. of solar heat and only 1.6 per cent. of the heat emitted by a body with the temperature of 180 degrees. The light of the moon was found to diminish with the altitude in the proportion of three to one, and the lunar heat in the proportion of about five to one. So far as it was possible to judge by these observations, the maximum of heat appeared to be given out a little after full moon.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN TANNING. It appears from investigation that western Texas has, in inexhaustible quantity, two of the best tanning materials known to the world. The wood as well as the bark of the mesquite, a species of timber that abounds in great quantity, is found to be rich in tannic acid; but live oak is even better, yielding by chemical demonstration fifty per cent. of tan, while mesquite yields but thirty per cent. A remarkable and important quality of the tan of the mesquite, however, is that instead of beginning on the surface, it strikes through and through, incising into the hide, revealing the fact that the process of tanning goes on in the center equal with the surface. The experiments made by practical gentlemen are said to have demonstrated that the wood of the mesquite is fully equal to black jack, which stands among the richest barks we tan, while the live oak is much richer than either. A letter from Texas on the subject says the discovery will have a very important effect in the supply of our country and the world with the necessary article of leather, the demand for which is constantly on the increase. The interest in this discovery and its value increases from the fact of the rapid exhaustion of the materials for tanning in our country and in many other parts of the world.

PROF. EDWARD S. MORSE, writing in the Boston Journal of Chemistry upon the habits of the mussel, thus accounts for the manner in which it obtains lime for forming its shell. The process is probably the same with other shell-fish. "If a living mussel be placed in water it will soon be seen to slightly open its shell, and from one end two currents of water will be noticed, one passing into the shell, while the other passes from the shell. So strong are these currents, that if a dozen mussels are placed in a uniform manner around the edge of a circular dish, a current is soon produced which will cause a miniature boat to sail round and round. The mussel not only appropriates the oxygen contained in the water which bathes the gills within, as in fishes, but, having no hard parts to its mouth, or any ability to seize food, depends upon the minuter particles of organic matter floating in the water, which are constantly swept into the mouth by the same organs which cause the currents—namely, cilia. These cilia are microscopic lashes, one-five-thousandth of an inch in length, which clothe the gills like down, and which keep up a perpetual movement. * * * * As the mussel is almost always in action, it is obvious that many hundred barrels of water pass into the shell during its lifetime. A shell four inches long is at least fifteen years old, as shown by Prof. Agassiz. In portions of this country, as in the West, where the rivers flow through limestone regions, the same species of mollusk which in New England have a very thin shell, in the limy waters of the West have a very thick and ponderous shell. It has been noticed that some species of marine mollusks living in pure sea water, where the calcareous salts are abundant, have thicker shells than when occurring near the mouth of our rivers, where the water is brackish, and consequently containing less lime."

IMITATION is the sincerest of flattery.

ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.

To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the meritorious of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power.

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.
PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.
Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.
IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.
THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND ELEGANCE OF DESIGN.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sound, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of purely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. SCHELE DE VERE, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Cildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. GILDERSLEEVE, PhD., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. CARTER, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LECONTE, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. JOHNSTON, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"
IS THE "KING"
Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

MEDICAL.

The New Louisiana Remedy

FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as

G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,

and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.

G. H. SMITH & CO., Proprietors,
20 Baronne St., New Orleans.

Caution to the Public.—Be sure to get the right article.

Among the references are Hon. S. Belden, Attorney General; Hon. C. O. Dugue, Ex-Judge District Court; General Thomas M. Scott, of J. Pinckney Smith & Co.; Rev. L. P. Hentz, Lutheran Church; Captain J. J. Rivera, foreman of the Bulletin office, and many others. no30 6m

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.
A Purely Vegetable Compound
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF
RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.
2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.
3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

We have but little change to notice in the general market. Sugar has been in only moderate demand, and prices have ruled more in favor of buyers, the closing rates showing a falling off of ¼c. from Friday's rates. Molasses also has exhibited less animation, and ruled 1@2c. ₱ gallon cheaper. Flour continues in light supply and has sold at rather stiffer prices. Corn has receded from the extreme rate realized on Friday, ($1.25 ₱ bushel,) but from scant supplies has continued to rule high, selling at 95c. Pork has been dull and drooping, closing at a decline of 25c. ₱ barrel. Bacon has continued quiet and hardly maintained previous rates.

Our accounts from the country are, if anything, more unfavorable. The cane is yielding so poorly that crop estimates are generally reduced. We hear of 130,000, 120,000 and even 110,000 hogsheads given as conjectural figures, or 70,000 to 80,000 hogsheads less than the amount predicted just before planters commenced cutting. The reports from cotton also indicate no less falling off than previously noted.

The river is 13 feet 9 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the fifteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	20,133
Lake	45
Arkansas	1,021
Mobile	2,250
Florida	23
Texas	191
Total	23,663

On Saturday the demand was limited, and although the free purchases of five brokers, who did two-thirds of the business, swelled the sales to 5,200 bales, the movement exhibited little animation and prices ruled ⅛c. lower. On Monday the figures accepted during the morning indicated a further decline of ⅛@¼c., but later in the day factors were inspired with renewed confidence, and while the closing rates showed a falling off of ⅛c. in low middling, the other grades were without any quotable reduction. The sales embraced 4,700 bales. On Tuesday the market opened under the influence of more favorable dispatches from New York, and, although factors were more stringent in their pretensions, a fair business was done during the morning at stiffer rates, showing an average advance of ⅛c., but later in the day, the five P. M. telegram from Liverpool being discouraging, prices receded to about their previous position, closing, however, rather more in favor of factors than on Monday evening. The sales summed up 7,000 bales.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 340,358 bales, against 433,304 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 241,676 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 78,599 to France, and a decrease of 162,050 to Great Britain, and of 51,479 to other foreign ports.

SUGAR.—The supplies have been liberal, and not meeting with a ready demand prices have been a little easier for buyers. On Saturday and Monday the receipts were mostly sold at 6½@6¾c. for inferior, 7c. for common, 7¼@7½c. for good common, 7½@8c. for fair, 8⅛@8½c. for good fair, 8¾c. for fully fair, 9¼@9½c. for prime. Some choice brought 10¾c., (choice is scarce,) 8½@9½c. for seconds, 10½@11¼c. for yellow clarified, and 11¼@12c. for white.

MOLASSES.—The supplies have been liberal, and although the demand has been fair prices have ruled in favor of buyers. The receipts on Saturday and Monday were mostly sold at 20@30c. for inferior, 30@33c. for common, 35@38c. for fair, 39@43c. for prime, and 44@45c. for strictly prime. Choice brought 46c. ₱ gallon.

PORK.—On Saturday 100 bbls. old extra heavy mess sold at $15.12½, and 25 bbls. at $15.25 ₱ bbl. On Monday 50 bbls. new mess sold at $14.75, and 50 do. at $15, and 30 bbls. prime mess at $13 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—The market is quiet but firm, with a light stock. On Tuesday shoulders were offering at 8c., clear rib sides 8c., and clear sides 8@8¼c. ₱ lb. 10 casks shoulders sold at 8c., and 6 do. clear sides at 8¼c.

HAMS.—There is little or no demand for old, and prices are merely nominal. Choice new sugar-cured hams are scarce and in demand at 15@15½c. ₱ lb. Old are quoted at 12½@13c.

DRY SALT MEAT.—The sales are confined to 16 casks shoulders at 6c. ₱ lb. Clear rib sides are retailing at 7c., and clear sides at 7⅛c.

BREAKFAST BACON.—There is no demand, and prices are almost nominal, and are quoted at 8@9c. ₱ lb. for choice Western. Northern is quoted at 11c.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request, and opened on Tuesday at 109⅜@109⅝, (against 109¼ at New York,) and closed at the opening rates, (against 109 at New York.)

The sales of silver have been confined to several small amounts in American half dollars on Monday at 108¾@109. American half dollars are quoted at 108@109, and Mexican dollars at 1¾@2¼ per cent. premium in gold.

The movement in warrants has been limited, the sales embracing $500 State on Saturday at 60 and 65; $13,000 on Monday at 57½, 58, 58½, 60, 60⅝ and 61—the highest for small—and $1,000 State, special levee tax, at 80.

VOL. XVII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1871. NO. 50.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Dec. 20.—The funeral of Henry T. Tuckerman to-day was attended by many literary mourners. The remains were taken to Boston for interment in the family vault at Mount Auburn Cemetery.

Eighteen persons have been added to the medical staff of the city to fight the smallpox.

Several streets in Williamsburg which are infected have been closed to travel.

Memphis, Dec. 20.—Last Tuesday a week a mob of negroes entered the town of Lake City, in Chicot county, Arkansas, proceeded to the jail, took out John H. Saunders, Curtis Garrett and Jasper Dugan, imprisoned for killing a negro lawyer named Wynne, and shot them to death. The mob still held possession of the town at last accounts. Many citizens had fled for safety.

New York, Dec. 21.—South American letters report forty shocks of an earthquake in nine hours at the town of Oran. The streets opened and every house was tumbled into ruins.

A volcano burst forth in the province.

Further subterranean commotion along the line of the Andes is apprehended.

Memphis, Dec. 21.—Later reports from Chicot county, Arkansas, state that the mob of negroes still have possession of the county, and are pillaging it.

A person who last escaped from Lake Village heard screams of women and children, whom he saw rushing down the levee. The sheriff of the county has applied for federal troops, fearing that the colored militia will fraternize with the insurgents.

San Francisco, Dec. 21.—The latest advices from China state that Admiral Kellet, of the British royal navy, is lying dangerously ill at Hong Kong.

Japanese advices state that a social and political revolution there is making astonishing progress. The government is considering the policy of sending twenty-one young ladies, daughters of Daimos, to America to be educated.

Twenty officers of the United States frigate Colorado and many other foreigners were presented to the Mikado.

The Mikado will visit the Colorado and witness a naval review.

The Mikado has already visited a number of foreign residents and enjoyed his visits greatly.

The Buddhist priests in the country have been notified that their temples will be closed, and that they must enter the army as soldiers or earn their living in mercantile occupations.

Advices from Hindostan by China and Japan steamer state that great damage has been done by floods in Bengal, and that a dangerous rising of Sepoys had taken place at Goa.

Mobile, Dec. 22.—John Anthony Winston, Ex-Governor of Alabama, is dead.

New York, Dec. 22.—The Herald's correspondent in search of Dr. Livingstone, in Africa, writes from Kwihara, July 4, stating that the doctor had been heard from. He had grown very fat; had been deserted by his men, whom he treated cruelly, and had been obliged to hunt for a livelihood. At the date of the letter Dr. Livingstone was a month's march away at Mijil, and the Herald's man was about proceeding thither with large quantities of cloth, beads, wine, provisions, books and newspapers.

San Francisco, Dec. 23.—Extensive damage along Carson river from heavy snow storms. No trains from Stockton or Sacramento; the only communication is by water.

Youngstown, O., Dec. 23.—A broken rail wrecked a freight train, by which one person was killed and several hurt.

Cincinnati, Dec. 23.—The smallpox is decreasing in this city.

Buffalo, Dec. 23.—The Grand Duke Alexis arrived here this evening. Millard Fillmore will deliver an address of welcome to-morrow, when the formal reception of the Grand Duke takes place.

Omaha, Dec. 23.—The snow is very severe, and has extended throughout the mountains. Trains are reported snow-bound.

Philadelphia, Dec. 23.—Jacob Barker, broker, known throughout the Union, is dead, aged ninety-three years.

Vicksburg, Dec. 26.—The captain of the Silver Bow reports the sinking of the steamer Kate Kearney on the night of the twenty-fourth, at the head of Island 82. The chimneys went overboard, and nothing of the boat remains above water but the pilot house. The cause of the sinking is unknown. No lives lost. The steamer Peytona rendered assistance in saving the crew. The Kearney was a large new stern-wheel boat.

FOREIGN.

Paris, Dec. 20.—President Thiers to-day assured a deputation of French Protestants that religious equality would be maintained.

London, Dec. 22.—Parliament has been prorogued to the sixth of February.

Baron Von Ruest presented his credentials as minister from Austria to Queen Victoria at Windsor Castle.

The Ex-Empress Eugenia has arrived from Spain.

Rome, Dec. 22.—The army budget has passed the Committee on Budget.

The minister of war, while maintaining that the military establishment of the country should be fully provided for, declared that there was no reason to fear aggression on the part of their neighbor, France, while an aggressive policy was opposed to her interests. Although there was no danger, still, he said, a nation should always be prepared for evil.

The Hague, Dec. 22.—The Roman Catholic bishops of this country have united in a memorial to the King, praying him not to discontinue, but to maintain the Dutch legation at the Vatican.

London, Dec. 26.—The Sublime Porte, backed by Russia and Austria, is sharply pressing the government of the Danubian Principalities for a settlement of the railway obligation.

Mexico.—We have dates from Mexico and the American side of the Rio Grande to the seventeenth instant.

The States of Oaxaca, New Leon, Sonora, Durango and Zacatecas are in the hands of the revolutionists. San Luis, Vera Cruz and Puebla have seconded the movement.

President Juarez has ordered the ports of Sau Angel and Selina Cruz to be closed to commerce.

The government has fourteen thousand men. The fact of General Rocha having retreated from Tehuacan shows that he is not able to cope with General Porfierio Diaz. The latter is the people's favorite for the presidency.

Delfin Sanchez, a native Spaniard, who some time ago married one of President Juarez's daughters, has been sentenced, for contempt of court, to one year of imprisonment or to pay a fine of $2,500.

The revolutionists are quite successful in the western departments.

Escobedo has resigned the governorship of San Luis Potosi and taken the field in favor of Juarez.

The governors of the different States have been invested with extraordinary powers—they are now dictators.

It is generally believed in Mexico that only an intervention by the United States can save the country. Picayune.

The West Texas Railroad.—The Rockport (Texas) Transcript announces the election of a board of directors and officers for the new Rockport, Fulton, Laredo and Mexican Pacific Railroad Company. G. W. Fulton was elected president; J. M. Doughty, vice president; J. M. Mathis, treasurer, and J. H. Hynes, secretary.

The survey of the road will soon commence. Judge M. H. McWillie, of Mexico, has made the board a proposition to build the road, which they have under consideration. Judge McWillie was formerly a prominent citizen of Arizona. He has large mining interests in North Mexico, and is deeply interested in the opening of that rich country with Texas by railroads.

The voters of Bexar county have accepted the proposition submitted by Messrs. Morgan and McComb for building a railroad from the gulf to San Antonio by October, 1873. The counties along the line of the road are each called on to subscribe stock to it. Several have accepted the proposition. The San Antonio Herald learns from good authority that work on the road will commence immediately. The section from Indianola to Victoria has been built and in use for some time.—Picayune.

The Methodist Tract Society has established printing presses in China, India and Germany, and tracts are published in the vernaculars of a number of foreign nations.

Men are believed on their word, but God is not taken at his.

LATEST FROM CHINA.

Latest missionary information from China shows increased hostility to the progress of the work, especially in the South. The Methodist missionaries, under date of July 5, 1871, say that their services had been repeatedly interrupted, but order had been restored by the interposition of the mandarins. Dr. Maclay, writing lengthily from Foochow, September 8, gives detailed account of four new cases of violence and persecution in that region, where native preachers were attacked and beaten nearly to death, and the congregation so threatened as to be afraid to assemble.

Recent letters from the missionaries of the American Board at Foochow, say also: "There seems to be a grand attempt made to stir up the minds of the people throughout China against foreigners and foreign religions. The story is circulated that foreigners are poisoning the Chinese to force them to embrace Christianity. The movement was started at Canton about the first of July, has reached us and swept on to the province north of us, and will spread, in all probability, throughout China. The design seems to be to prove that the minds of the people are so opposed to the missionary work that the officials have not the power to protect missionaries in the interior." This strong feeling against foreigners, in the opinion of Methodist missionaries, may be traced to the influence of the gentry and official literati, who shrewdly anticipate the fate of the systems by which they live, should foreign intercourse grow and increase. It is not the doctrines of Christianity, or any imprudence on the part of Christian teachers, to which this powerful conservative party mainly object. They dread steamboats, railways, telegraphs; they hate the opium and coolie trades; they have a deep-seated jealousy of the ultimate designs of the foreigners, and imagine that the English aim to subjugate the Chinese empire, and make it, like India, a dependency on the British crown. But China is too vast, and will ultimately be too rewarding a field for its abandonment by Christian missionaries. "In it," says a writer in the November number of the Chronicle of the London Missionary Society, "is every configuration of country and every description of soil. Larger than Europe, it is also far richer in its mineral productions. The mental capacities of its people are of no inferior order. They are the hope of the East. China possesses a written language; education prevails extensively; their literature is based on truths and moral maxims; Chinese youth are carefully indoctrinated into all their principles; up to the Savior's time there were no idols in China; their theory of government is the most perfect on earth. China has fallen from all its privileges, but yet in its borders we have a people embracing one-third of the human race—a people of great reach of intellect, fertility of resources, full of energy and enterprise, fitted by nature and disposed by training to contend with any obstacle, and carry out their enterprises in spite of all opposition—a people, in a measure, cultivated and prepared to receive all that can be placed before them for acceptance—a people whose youthful minds are directed toward moral excellence as the acme of all ambition, trained to imitate virtuous examples, and to watch the springs of action, taught to set mental accomplishment above wealth, and virtue above nobility—a people, through God's providence, so hammered and blended together that they retain their characteristics as well among the most vigorous and leveling races of the world, as among the immobile populations of the Archipelago—a people that has struggled after civilization and high attainments for thousands of years, passed through revolution after revolution, disorganization and reconstruction—a people needing to receive the word of emancipation, enlightenment and new life, which their Father and our Father has intrusted to us for dissemination among them—a people possessed of all the elements of success and dominion, with no end of material resources, and with brains to plan and govern. They have always been the imperial race of the East, and are as able as ever to exercise dominion and power." And they will not be left without the gospel of Christ.—Christian Union.

We are in God, only because we have let Christ come in his redeeming love and power, and snatch us away to God.—Dr. Crosby.

MISSION FIELD.

"All the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord."—Num. xiv, 21.

Gilbert Islands.—The Gilbert or Kingsmill group of Islands, says Zion's Herald, lie about two thousand miles southeast of the Sandwich Islands. The group consists of fifteen low coral islands, eight of which lie north, and seven south of the equator. Their population numbers about forty thousand, and they were literally inhabited by a vast number of naked savages. Wilkes, in his "United States Exploring Expedition," describes their most wretched social and moral condition. Their language had never been reduced to a written form, and taking the most favorable view of their condition, they seemed hopelessly degraded and depraved. Says a writer in the Honolulu Friend: "It was our privilege to visit the group in 1861, and from personal observation we can add our testimony to Wilkes' narrative."

The Morning Star first visited the group in 1857, and left the Rev. Mr. Bingham and wife, with their Hawaiian associates. Then the missionary work commenced. Says the writer already referred to:

"Now what are the results? The language has been reduced to a written form; primary school books have been printed in that language, and more than one-half of the New Testament; hundreds, if not thousands, have been taught to read; the gospel has been preached, small churches have been organized; a good beginning has been made. But we desire to call the reader's attention to what we consider the crowning feature of this picture. Yesterday, April 5, we met in a street of Honolulu, near the post-office, a native of Apaiang, one of the Gilbert Islands. His name is Joseph. He held in his hand a proof-sheet of the translation of the Apostle Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians. He was on his way to the Advertiser printing office to correct typographical errors! Joseph is an invaluable assistant to Mr. and Mrs. Bingham in the work of translation. He makes the final copy for the printer, and possesses an accurate grammatical knowledge of his own language. He also reads and speaks English and Hawaiian very intelligently. To us, such a man as Joseph—the Gilbert Islands translator and proof-reader—is a greater marvel than Max Muller with all his linguistical lore, or Prof. Addison Alexander, who is reported to have known accurately more than a score of languages, or Cardinal Mezzofanti, who could speak more than threescore tongues. Fourteen years ago, Joseph's people, what were they? His language unreduced to a written form. Now he is a resident of Honolulu, correcting proof-sheets of a translation of the New Testament into the Gilbert Island dialect! We congratulate our friends Mr. and Mrs. Bingham on the success of their labors, and conclude that it is not a vain and useless enterprise to keep the Morning Star plying among the islands of Micronesia. We hope the new Morning Star, on her voyage around Cape Horn, may soon arrive in safety, and be speedily dispatched on her errand, of mercy to the Micronesian Islands."

European Catholic Reform.—The Old Catholic movement in Germany is making sure headway, especially in Bavaria, where there are now one hundred and fourteen Old Catholic congregations, with church property worth a million of dollars. The Archbishop of Munich and the Bishop of Passau, who last summer were exceedingly active in excommunicating the Old Catholic priests, are now quiet. A majority of the theological professors at the Bavarian universities are Old Catholics; and the King is not expected to appoint any more "infallibilists" as professors. Less is known of the movement in Prussia. There are between seventy and eighty Old Catholic congregations in the provinces of Posen and Silesia, while the number in Westphalia and the Rhine provinces can hardly be less. In Baden twenty-nine Old Catholic churches are in full operation, and seven are reported in Wurtemberg. In Austria, too, including the Tyrol, the movement is active. Four Old Catholic congregations have been organized in Prague, and seven in Vienna. In Hungary the Old Catholics are in a large majority; most of the bishops are with them, and the Diet at Pesth has recognized them as the true Catholics. In France and Belgium, owing to the indifference of the higher classes to religion, little is heard of the question, although Father Hyacinthe is actively preaching the reform; but quite a number of Old Catholic churches have sprung up in Holland.—*N. Death of Rev. Newton G. Berryman.

Another of our preachers in Missouri, says the St. Louis Christian Advocate, has fallen—Rev. Newton G. Berryman, of the Cambridge circuit, West St. Louis Conference. It was a violent death, the circumstances of which are related in a note received from Rev. T. J. Gooch, preacher in charge of Glasgow station. Under date of the eleventh instant he writes:

"It is my painful task to inform you of the death of Rev. N. G. Berryman, of the Cambridge circuit. It happened under the following circumstances: Week before last he came to Glasgow to meet his family on their return from Palmyra, where they had been on a visit. They were ice-bound and compelled to remain here for several days. On Monday morning, the fourth of December, in company with a gentleman from Saline county, he crossed the river. Bro. Berryman was waiting on the other shore, holding the horses, while other persons carried over his carriage and baggage. A dog rose up and frightened one of the horses, which struggled and kicked, striking Bro. Berryman on the head. He was brought back to Glasgow in a state of unconsciousness, from which he never revived. He died on Sunday morning at half-past twelve o'clock. All the aid that human skill and kind friends could render was given. To-day we bury him. May God bless the deeply afflicted family."

HIWASSEE COLLEGE.

Mr. Editor: The patrons of my school who are readers of your paper will be pleased to learn that we have been visited of late with a very gracious revival of religion, in which nearly every pupil has been interested, and all but three or four have become connected with the church. This school now presents that aspect which should characterize a church institution, the boys being active workers in the prayer meeting, Sunday school, love-feast, and at the mourners' bench. It was a sight to see them joining the church last Sunday, and receiving baptism. I was surprised to see several of them, who were brought up in Methodist families, requiring to be baptized. This seems to show a widespread neglect of infant baptism, as the boys are from several different States.

Our next session begins on the first day of January, 1872, and will continue twenty weeks. With twenty-five pions young men to begin with, we anticipate a profitable term. Yours truly,

F. M. Grace.

THE POSTOFFICES WANTED.

Mr. Editor: On the last day of the session of the Alabama Conference the secretary received from Mr. John L. Rapier, cashier of the Mobile Register, an offer of Mr. J. Denovan, proprietor of that excellent paper, to compliment each clerical member of the Conference with a year's subscription. I have furnished the postoffices of the most of the preachers, according to Mr. Denevan's request, but have no correct clew to the postoffices of the following: Revs. Hugh M. Gillis, P. L. Martin, W. H. McDaniel, T. S. Abernathy, C. W. Calhoun, G. F. Ellis, W. M. Winn, J. T. Roper, J. W. Vest, G. R. Talley, L. Patterson, W. Hargrave Morris, Joseph Spear, W. P. H. Connerly, J. M. Brown, D. C. Standley, D. J. Wright, J. M. Johnson, J. L. Skipper, H. J. Hunter, M. M. Graham, W. F. Norton, W. A. Sampey, R. E. Carey, W. C. Robinson, Z. Dowling, S. F. Pilley, J. T. Talley and J. W. Jordan.

In most cases we have adjudged the chief town of the circuit to be the postoffices. We desire the postoffices for the Register. But we desire the addresses of the preachers that we may send them the minutes, which we hope to have out of press by the first of January. Will the presiding elders send me the address of their preachers at once? Now, brethren, at once. Will the preachers send me their address? Attend to it now, brethren. Some of the offices I ventured to guess at.

Yours, B. B. Ross,
Sec'y of Alabama Conference.

Disaster to Texas Cattle.—The Austin State Gazette of the thirteenth says:

"Messrs. Bennett & Pope, who have just arrived from Kansas, confirm the reports of the severity of the late snow storm in the West. They represent that fully fifty thousand head of Texas stock have perished, and a considerable number of drovers."

The Houston Telegraph of the seventeenth says:

"The reports of the mortality among stock from poor range and cold weather are very discouraging. In the more thickly settled portions of the State, raising stock and allowing them to depend upon the range will have to be abandoned."

Covetousness.—The first act of divine justice in the infant church at Jerusalem was to punish covetousness. And yet the church has never dealt with this sin as it should. "Who ever heard of a man being disciplined for covetousness?" asks Dr. John Hall. "For other sins," he says, "men are cast out of the church; but in this sin, which the Bible calls idolatry, they live and die without one honest rebuke."

Much of the unhappiness in this world arises from giving utterance to hasty, unkind words.

A SONG OF AN OLD MAN.

BY PERDITA.

"In green pastures" He will lead me,
Gently by the stream of Death;
On His manna ever feed me—
So the Good Book always saith.
"In green pastures," where the sunshine
Gilds the grasses with its gold,
I would rest and gladly lay me
In its brightness, for I'm cold.

"In green pastures," calm and pleasant,
Hark the river's placid flow;
Seems it blending with the Present
Echoes of the Long Ago.
Ah! methinks those liquid voices
Were the same in years long gone;
Whispereth the sighing water
Now a word and now a song!

Oh! the friends, the friends long sleeping
In these pastures green of life!
All the thoughts of them once weeping
In my heart have hushed their strife.
Then I saw—ah! darkly, darkly
Now—almost each beaming face.
Life for me hath no more shadows
O'er the Past's bright "tender grace!"

Onward, forward! Lo, the pastures
Are all filled with sunset lights,
And Time's western hill-tops gleaming,
Now reveal supernal sights!
Golden ripples gild the river
In its ceaseless onward flow—
Seem they now long-hidden faces
Of the angels I shall know!

Oh! the bright ones that flew upward
From my clasping, praying hands!
Think you that I "shall not know them"
'Mid the thousand shining bands!
There's a sound of pulsing pinions
Floating round me in the air;
Darling, I can almost see you—
There's a wave of golden hair!

Angel hands! clasp closer, firmer—
'Tis my child—my child I see!
All the years that bowed the father
Let the winsome boy go free.
God be praised! His ways are wondrous,
And I now begin to "know;"
All life's sorrows, that seemed grievous,
Change to mercies as I go!

Onward, forward! Lo, the pastures
Now grow dim and dark of sight,
And I only hear the river
As it bears me in its flight.
Earth, farewell, and flying shadows!
Burst, ye emerald Gates of Morn!
Dawn, thou Sun whose beams are beaming!
Rise, my soul, on wings of song!

ALCOHOL—ITS USES AND ABUSES.

NUMBER THREE.

MR. EDITOR: I took leave of my readers, in my second article on this subject, when treating of the physiological and pathological effects of alcohol, and stated that "alcohol was drawn out of the circulating current by the nervous matter, and incorporated with its substance in such a manner as even to change its physical as well as chemical properties." I will continue the same subject a little further by remarking that it will be important also to observe that this affinity is obviously such as will occasion the continual presence of alcohol in the blood, even in very minute proportion, to modify the nutrition of the nervous substance more than that of any other tissue; for the alcohol will seek out the nervous matter and fasten itself upon it, just as we see that other poisons, whose results become more obvious to our senses—although the poisons themselves may exist in such minute amount as not to be detected by the most refined analysis—will localize themselves in particular organs. This doctrine is clearly illustrated by Dr. Budd on Symmetrical Diseases, and in Mr. Paget's Lectures on Nutrition, and is now generally admitted by physiologists. We could go a much greater length in elucidating and establishing the facts indicated above; but believing that sufficient has been said on that subject, and being indisposed to occupy any more space in your paper than is actually necessary, we leave that part of the subject, to conclude with some remarks upon another.

There are extremists on every subject that is presented for discussion. So on this. There are those who advocate the entire abandonment of the article in all cases, while others advocate the temperate use of it in too many cases; and harm results in both. It is the only menstruum, or solvent, that will take hold of many of the medicinal gums, and render their administration as sanatives eligible. It is by the solvent power of this agent that the active principle of many of our best vegetable medicines is obtained in the form of extracts, rendering them more potent, and thereby requiring a smaller quantity to render the same or a greater amount of good than the crude article could do. Again, where the nervous system has been the seat of disease, as in typhus or typhoid fever, resulting in nervous depression and physical exhaustion, there is no article known to the profession that can substitute the place of good generous wine, or its product, brandy. But beyond the uses above indicated we should not go, for beyond is danger! As soon as the physician sees that the natural powers have again resumed their place, all dependence upon alcoholic stimuli should be withdrawn, and let the vis medicatrix naturæ perform the balance, which it will certainly do.

The writer will close this short series by showing that alcohol in any quantity is not conducive to health in any climate, however insalubrious. He lived in Louisiana—on Red river—in 1848. His observation was that planters generally made use of the ardent—drank it in the morning, as they termed it, as an anti-fogmatic; in the forenoon as an anti-effluviatic; just before dinner as a tonic; after dinner as an hypnotic, or sleep producer, and before retiring at night used it for the same purpose. This was of pretty general practice, especially among the wealthy. His observation was that they who followed this practice were above fever heat most of the time; but he further observed that while they avoided disease by the process of inhaling or absorbing effluvia, which the curative powers of nature would have, by a little attention to diet and other matters, been sufficient to ward off, they daily swallowed a more potent poison, and were in a short time wrecks that soon fell passive victims to a delusion; while the ladies and servants enjoyed good health. The former did not use it; the latter did not for the reason that they could not. He also observed that ministers of the gospel of our denomination, many of them unacclimated, zealously plied their vocation amid all the hardships and privations incident to itinerant life, without falling victims to the imaginary bugbear that haunted the minds of others. By reference to the journals of physicians and surgeons who have attended armies in the insalubrious climates of India, South America and other equatorial portions of the globe, it is found that alcoholic stimuli is by no means essential to the health of their men. We will first cite the testimony of the late Mr. Gardner, a well-educated surgeon, who spent several years of most active exertion in the exploration of the botany of Brazil, into which country he penetrated further than any scientific European had previously done. During three years' traveling in that forvid and insalubrious climate, he tells us, "under constant fatigue and exposure to the vicissitudes of weather and irregularity of living," his only beverage, besides water, was tea, of which he laid in a large stock previous to his leaving Pernambuco. He was told, when he arrived at Brazil, that it would be necessary to mix either wine or brandy with the water which he drank. But a very short experience convinced him not only that they were unnecessary, but decidedly hurtful to those whose occupations led them much into the sun. He continues: "Whoever drinks stimulating liquors, and travels day after day in the sun, will certainly suffer from headache; and in countries where miasmata prevail he will be far more likely to be attacked by the diseases which are there endemic."

Equally explicit is the testimony of Sir James Brooke, the enterprising and skillful colonizer of Borneo, who speaks of habitual abstinence from alcoholic liquors as decidedly conducive to the maintenance of health, and of the power of sustained exertion, in the equatorial regions in which he had established himself. Again, Mr. Waterton, the well-known traveler, speaks of himself as confident that the preservation of his vigor, during many years of toil and exposure in tropical climates, is mainly due to his total abstinence from fermented liquors. Dr. Daniell, who was for a long time stationed as medical officer in the equatorial regions of Western Africa, says that he found the use of the ordinary alcoholic liquors decidedly inimical to the power of exertion. The strongest beverage which could be habitually used without detriment or injury was the palm wine of those countries, which was very little if any stronger than our ginger beer. We could add testimony to testimony from scientific gentlemen, but we think the foregoing sufficient.

We have been thus particular in setting before your readers the detrimental effects of this article (alcohol) for the reason that few of them, perhaps, are acquainted with the potency of this subtile poison in sapping the foundation of health, happiness and life. They may implicitly rely upon everything that has been said as true, and which will be indorsed by every scientific man of the medical profession, too many of whom, alas! indulge in the abuse of the article, knowing at the time that they are intelligent, self-willed suicides.

If my labors in these articles will have the effect to cause one inebriate to become a sober man—one sinner to forsake his ways—I will feel myself amply rewarded, and would freely perform the same or a greater amount of work, if necessary, to reclaim another.

Yours fraternally,

JOHN SAMPLE, M. D.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: In accordance with my promise to write, I send you a running sketch of Conference items, doings, etc. The session opened in Columbus, Mississippi, on Wednesday, Nov. 29, in the Sunday school room of the Methodist church—that is to say, in the basement of the church—handsomely finished up, and adapted to Sunday school purposes. By the way, the Sunday school constitutes a marked feature of our church in Columbus. Those devoted Sunday school men, Dr. W. L. Lipscomb and Judge Brown, with a number of faithful co-laborers, are doing a great and good work for the children of their church.

The session of Conference was a most harmonious one. Bishop Kavanaugh presided with his accustomed urbanity—patiently attending to every item of business, listening to every preacher who had anything to say, and carrying forward the business without impatience, jar or discord. The genial spirit of our good Bishop must have communicated itself to the whole Conference. Nobody seemed out of humor, brotherly kindness prevailed, and the proceedings moved quietly and steadily onward to adjournment, which occurred by gaslight on the afternoon of Tuesday, the fifth instant.

The presence of a number of visiting brethren was highly appreciated by the Conference. Dr. Summers looked in upon us and spent one day. As he was addressing the Conference from the rostrum, Bro. Cottrell, at my side, suggested: "You have heard that voice before." With Bros. Shaeffer, Massengale, Ramsey, Stone and others, from the old Alabama Conference, in full view, and Dr. Summers on the platform, it would have required no great effort of imagination for the writer to reverse the order of chronology, and to fancy himself again seated in his mother Conference. Dr. A. S. Andrews, chancellor of the Southern University, made a good speech in behalf of that institution. Rev. B. F. White represented Centenary College of Louisiana. Rev. W. C. Johnson made a statement in reference to Andrew College, as proxy of its agent. These three male colleges were adopted and brought under the patronage of the North Mississippi Conference. Dr. Scruggs, of St. Louis, was present, canvassing for the Southern Review. The Verona Female College, with several other institutions of similar character within and without the Conference, were duly represented or circulared. Some piano house had its advertisements scattered plentifully about the room; and a preacher who is an incorrigible wag, notwithstanding his fine talents, handed me an envelope containing several advertisements of a strayed or stolen horse—$50 reward. Thus it is that an Annual Conference reminds one of an immense bulletin board, where all sorts of things are advertised. Dr. Green, of Nashville, represented the interests of the Publishing House and "the great university" scheme—a scheme in favor with the Conference. The indefatigable publisher of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE at New Orleans represented his paper and the branch Publishing House, located in the same city. Rev. W. C. Johnson, of the Western Methodist, had the gratification to be present at the adoption of his paper as the Conference organ. Kind words were also spoken for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. It has many friends in this Conference.

The laity were well represented. Such men as Dr. Garland, Colonel R. C. Clark, Colonel O. J. Moore, Judge Foot and Judge Beauchamp, with others whose names might be mentioned, would do honor to any body of men, whether of Church or State. It is gratifying to see how gracefully our lay brethren take their places, and how well they work in the organic polity of the church. In the matter of assignment to Conference lodgings they do not all seem quite as if "to the manner born." My excellent host said that when he went to his first Annual Conference he put up at a hotel—he had since learned better. A simple card, with the bearer's name and name of his host, a self-introduction, and an apprehension that he may be unwished for, are too much for one who has been accustomed to pay as he goes, or to go only where invited. More than one good lay member of our Conference took refuge from the embarrassments of the situation amid the freedom of a hotel. This was not owing to any want of provision on the part of the committee of arrangements. These good brethren, with Dr. Shattuck and Judge S. A. Brown at their head, were promptly at their posts of duty, and remarkably attentive. They deserve the thanks of the Conference.

Bishop Kavanaugh, for one of his age and labors, exhibits a remarkable degree of mental and physical preservation. There seems to be no decay. He appears to be physically strong; his hair is dark; he reads hymn and ritual without the aid of spectacles; he preaches eloquently and with power; "his eye is not dim; his natural force is not abated, and his hair is not turned gray"—an item more than was mentioned of Moses.

The Sunday school mass-meeting on Sunday afternoon was a grand success. The weather was bleak without, but the large and elegant auditorium of the Methodist church accommodated one of the largest congregations ever assembled in the city of Columbus on a similar occasion. The several schools of the city, under the direction of Dr. W. L. Lipscomb, rendered several pieces from the Amaranth most delightfully. Dr. Green was introduced as one of the speakers, and for about one hour he talked to the "little folks" with fine effect. It was "a new departure" in the matter of Sunday school addresses, and highly entertaining to the large assembly.

Three preachers, during the year, had passed away to their heavenly reward—Rev. John I. E. Byrd, Rev. A. J. See and Rev. Charles B. Harris—all of precious memory, and one at least well known to many readers of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The North Mississippi Conference numbers over one hundred preachers. The writer not included, it is a fine-looking, vigorous body of men—a full-grown Conference at the beginning, with a large and improving territory for its field of operations. Much is to be hoped for in the future of this body of Christian laborers.

T. C. WIER.

Selecting a Place for a Church.

MR. EDITOR: All whom it concerns, I would urgently request to exercise all possible discretion in the selection of the place for a church. I notice that in this respect great blunders have been made. An unsuitable selection is always attended with pernicious consequences. A mistake made in this matter cannot be so readily corrected. True, not possessed of the power of prognostication, it is not always so very easy in an unsettled society, and in places constantly developing—frequently developing in directions contrary to all preconception—it is not so very easy, under such circumstances, always to fix upon the most suitable locality. This difficulty is increased by the not unfrequent impossibility to harmonize the opinions of brethren who, with us, are interested in the enterprise. But this diversity of opinion can oft-times be overcome by a proper exercise of tact. If those who are endowed with the peculiar ability, who have acquired the necessary experience, and who are clothed with requisite authority, fail, because of cowardice or neglect, by argument and management to carry their point and to select the place which in their judgment is the most suitable, they are indeed very censurable. Continued debates and protracted discussions on the part of the brethren but create confusion. These in authority, assisted by a master mind and a strong hand, should hurriedly come to a definite conclusion, and then, if necessary, lovingly coerce all talkative opposition. All should heed our Lord's injunction: "Be ye therefore wise as serpents and harmless as doves."

The old saying, Where the Lord erects a temple, the devil immediately builds a chapel alongside! expresses general experience only very partially. Really the devil does not wait until the temple is erected, but quickly anticipates the enterprise by directing his agents to occupy the ground for himself, or at least, by creating dissensions, to preclude the possibility of securing the same for church purposes. The modus operandi of Satan in carrying his damnable ends is, very often,

1. By operating on the covetousness of our church members. It cannot be denied that the place selected is very suitable; but it is too dear. It is whispered from ear to ear that the membership is made up principally of poor men and widows. True, there are a few opulent members among them; but—they have "just now" furnished their lordly residences with new carpets, and, withal, their boys at college prove very expensive—the purchase of such a dear place for church purposes would embarrass them, etc.

2. By darkening the understanding of those whose office requires that they should see very distinctly. In selecting the place for a church, they take but the present time and the present circumstances into consideration. The convenience of an aged brother, who, however, within twelve months may die; the proximity of the residence of a respected sister, who, however, within six months may move away—influences of such character are allowed to operate in making the selection, and of course a place is chosen which, within ten years, proves a great hinderance to the prosperity of the congregation.

3. By creating dissensions among the membership. He well knows that in all congregations there are combative elements—elements which, in the Revelation by St. John xxii, 3, are called a "curse;" but which, in the Greek text, means simply Katathema, which, in English, means "contradiction" or "opposition." Well, the seventy may be right—such opposition party in a congregation is a great curse. Poor fellows! They have no idea that they are simply the ignoble tools of Satan.

In selecting the place for a church we must be prepared to encounter opposition like that above enumerated; aye, we must anticipate it. Prudence, experience, firmness, zeal and faith will never fail in securing the victory for us. It may be difficult to give any special directions to those selecting the place for a church. I venture only the two following rules:

1. Think not only of yourself and of the present time, but also have an eye to the convenience of others and to the future.

2. Locate the church within, not outside of the village or city.

OUR own little six-year-old hoped that her two kittens, left behind in the cellar, were killed by the smoke, not by the fire; and that the smoke came to them from behind, so that they could not see it. She was glad aunty had set free her canary bird. Would it perhaps get away into the country? Her doll was lost; she did not ask for another.—Chicago Letter.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

ALEXANDER WHELESS died in New Orleans, Louisiana, December 3, 1871, in his forty-fifth year. He was from Nashville, Tennessee, where he was extensively known and highly esteemed. A few years ago he located in this city, where new friends gathered around him, and new influences directed and developed his energies. He was in the prime of manhood, and entering into wider fields of activity when death arrested him. His departure was a surprise to his family and friends. Life closed upon him noiselessly; no one heard the summons or ever anticipated a close to his career at the point in life when his powers were approaching ripeness.

As men phrase it, his death was a calamity to his family, his friends and society. In the mind of God it was otherwise. That mind took in facts which mortals cannot fathom, and suffered the departure for reasons man cannot unfold. There is one inspired utterance which assures of right when we cannot see: "Clouds and darkness are round about him; righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne."

Alexander Wheless, while esteemed by his friends, was best known and revered in the bosom of his family. There the husband and father unfolded those finer qualities without which no home is complete—qualities too sacred for public gaze. To his home he turned with joy, and was welcomed with a sympathy which gladdened his life. Here he found attractions which nerved him for battle, and comforted him under care. He governed his children wisely, for he understood that difficult problem in the administration of all government—how to decide between personal feeling and the obligation to promote the highest good of those under his control. Here was discipline without austerity, firmness without hardness; and, as a natural result, there was trust and cheerful obedience.

In early life Bro. Wheless assumed church relations, and died holding the faith of his early love. Two weeks before his death he had the great pleasure of hearing his two sons take upon themselves the vows imposed by the church, and of standing beside them while receiving the sacrament of baptism. It was a touching scene.

One week previous to his death he had a vague impression of some impending change—he hardly knew what; and without a distinct statement that it was of the near approach of death, yet on his way from church talked of his death, and gave specific directions as to the manner of his burial. Those directions were strictly observed. Such was the nature of the disease that he could not give his dying blessing to those he loved so well. Yellow fever works rapidly and darkens the intellect.

There is only one place where those so suddenly bereaved can find comfort and obtain strength, and that place is at the feet of Jesus. There take your wounded heart, there toll your anguish. One in like affliction uttered a rare song. May you realize its sweetness.

"Lord Jesus, life is very hard, as thou dost know,
And hours of peace and rest are very rare
But it is sweet, after the toil and woe,
To nestle close to thee with thoughts of prayer.
If thou wilt lay thy hand upon my head,
I shall arise refreshed and comforted."

JOHN MATHEWS.

A TWENTIETH.—A pastor, whose flock had found pastures golden as well as green, complimented their liberality in this wise: "Why, brethren, the Jews were only to give a tenth, and here are our pillars, Deacon A. and Deacon S., who give a twentieth of their diggings. A twentieth, brethren; just think of it! Just twice as much as those old Israelites gave."

ONLY JESUS.—I love to feel the Sabbath coming, but cannot bear to awake and find it gone. But yet Jesus is my every-day Sabbath, and in him I find happiness and peace all the week, and all the year, when I am kept abiding. This is all I want, never to wander more or expect any good from anything or anybody, but look for all in Jesus, in whom I now find heaven begun.—Ruth Bryan.

ADVENT.

There is a holy time
That comes with shadows of the darkened days,
With wintry winds that their wild voices raise,
As with a funeral chime.

It comes with sounds of bells
That peal like memory's echoes from the tower,
Beneath whose walls, in sacred, watchful hour,
The Advent music swells.

It comes to weary hearts
Beneath the burden of the past year bending,
To bring the promise of joy unending,
And peace that ne'er departs.

To bid the drooping eyes,
By tears long dimmed, look upward to the home
Whence shall the second Advent mighty come,
In glorious majesty.

Until, from sorrows here,
The spirit turns to visions far away,
And earth re-echoes with the heavenly lay—
Once heard by mortal ear.

Until we see again
The wondrous rising of the Eastern star;
The shepherds watching on the hills afar,
Beneath the angel's strain.

Results of Mission Work in China.

BY REV. S. L. BALDWIN.

Gail Hamilton, in her recent article headed "Por Contra," calls for information in answer to a number of interesting and important questions. Leaving those concerning the Sandwich Islands to others, I propose to answer, briefly, some of these which refer to China; and, without repeating her questions in exact form, I will do what I can to give the information she desires.

1. What has been accomplished?

Answer.—Although the first Protestant missionary to the Chinese landed at Canton in 1807, and about sixty missionaries were sent from Europe and America between 1813 and 1842 to China and to the Chinese settlements in Java, Siam and the Straits, the real era of the commencement of Protestant missionary labor in China is the year 1842, in which the treaty with Great Britain was signed, which opened the "five ports" to the commerce of the world. Our missionaries were then permitted to enter at all the open ports with the word of life. A long period of preparatory work was then entered upon—breaking down the prejudices of a people for centuries secluded from the rest of the world, overcoming the superstitions of the masses, and undermining their faith in idolatry. While this work was going on—for ten or twelve years—there were scarcely any converts; so that nearly all the converts have been received within the last sixteen years, and by far the larger part of them within the last seven years. The following table will show the ratio of increase during the last eighteen years:

In 1853 the number of native Christians was		351
In 1863	do	1,974
In 1864	do	2,607
In 1868	do	5,743
The present number is very nearly		8,000

But we should get a very inadequate idea of the work done if we were to look only at the number of communicants. Over five hundred different books have been printed in the Chinese language by Protestant missionaries, including the sacred Scriptures, commentaries, theological, educational, linguistic, historical, geographical, mathematical, astronomical and botanical works—books ranging in size and importance from the child's primer to Dr. Martin's translation of Whoaton's "International Law," Dr. Hobson's medical and physiological works, and Mr. Wylie's translations of "Euclid's Geometry" and "Herschell's Astronomy."

Besides, the vast advance made in eradicating the prejudices of the people, securing their confidence, and gaining entrance into the interior, is to be taken into the account. The fact that fifty thousand native patients are annually treated in Protestant missionary hospitals is also full of significance.

It is a common thing for us to meet with people now who say that for eight or ten or more years they have not worshiped idols; that they were convinced by preaching that they heard or books that they received so long ago, that idolatry was wrong, and had given it up. We find them now, in interior cities and villages, ready to become adherents of the gospel of Christ.

2. What are our prospects for the future?

Answer.—Rev. M. J. Knowlton, of Ningpo, calls attention to the fact that of late the number of outstations, of native preachers, and of converts has doubled once in a period of a little over three years; and that we may reasonably expect that by the year 1900 the native Christians will number over two millions. Bishop Kingsley, in addressing the native Methodist preachers at Foochow, in 1869, reminded them that there were more Methodists then in Foochow than there were in America a hundred years before. Let this fact be borne in mind—viz., that, although the Chinese move slowly, when they begin to move they move in masses—and there is no reason why this rule may not operate to the advantage of Christianity. In the Foochow mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church we had last year nine hundred and thirty-one members and nine hundred and sixty-nine probationers, showing the work of the year preceding to have equaled in the number of converts all the years of the mission's history that had gone before. Such facts as these will have weight with all thinking minds.

3. What is the character of Chinese converts?

Answer.—As among converts at home, there is every variety of character among them; but in general they are faithful, earnest, devoted men. The difference between them and their pagan neighbors is marked. The pagan neighbor is dirty. The Christian is clean. The pagan lies, and delights in lying. The Christian becomes truthful. The pagan treats his wife as a slave. The Christian treats her as an immortal being. The pagan regards the birth of a daughter as a calamity. The Christian welcomes the little girl, gives her to God in baptism, and tries to prepare her for a useful life.

One of our native Christians at Foochow went on Saturday to an American mercantile house with samples of tea. The agent in charge said: "Come to-morrow." The native replied: "To-morrow is Sunday, and I never transact business on God's day!" (Some incidents of this kind may go far to account for the asserted fact that "merchants do not expect great things from the missionary.")

When Li Cha Mi, a few weeks ago, was stoned by persecutors until he was nearly dead, and afterward, in attempting to elude his pursuers, fell over a precipice twenty feet high, while he was falling, he prayed: "Lord, have mercy upon them, and forgive them."

After Ling Ching Ting had been beaten with two thousand stripes, as soon as he was able to move, he returned to the place where he had been beaten, and preached the gospel so faithfully that some of the very men who brought that trial upon him were converted.

When Hii Yong Mi was driven from his home by a mob, and his wife cruelly outraged, they both held steadfast to their faith in Christ, emulating the spirit of Job: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

When old Father Ling, at Kucheng, was told by heathen friends, "You must not try to give up opium smoking now, after forty years' practice. It will kill you," his reply was: "I belong to Jesus. I have promised to give up every sin. I would rather die trying to conquer this sin than live an opium smoker."

I speak only of men I have personally known, whose Christian character commands my admiration, and whose Christian lives are evidence of the genuineness of their profession.

4. What is the rank of Christian converts in Chinese society?

As yet, "not many mighty, not many noble are called." It is still true that "this sect is everywhere spoken against" by the haughty literati, by wicked pagans, and by licentious foreign traders. Yet in China, as everywhere else, Christianity elevates its subjects. They grow not only in grace, but in knowledge, in influence, in relative position; and, if God still chooses "the foolish things of the world to confound the wise," and "the weak things of the world to confound the mighty," in order "that no flesh should glory in his presence," why, the best thing we can do is to fall in with his arrangement.—Independent.

MR. PUNSHON'S POWER.

The one great element of Mr. Punshon's power is to be found in his universality. Many preachers manage to attract considerable congregations, who are yet wanting in that respect. For, if you come to look at those who are listening to them, you will find them mostly drawn from one class of life. There are buildings filled every Lord's day with the average cockney, the animal that digests the highly-seasoned fare of the Daily Telegraph in the week, and requires, in consequence, on the Sabbath to be crammed to the verge of spiritual suffocation with tit-bits of rant and flattery and piled-up perorations. There are other buildings where the audience is, for the most part, composed of men of taste and thought, who enjoy a quiet, meditative, yet none the less evangelical sermon. And yet again there are places where the lower orders are mostly to be found, where good, plain gospel preaching is heard and appreciated. It seldom happens, however, that an audience is composed of an almost equal number taken from different ranks and grades of social position. But this exceptional sight is to be seen when Mr. Punshon preaches. Then "the rich and the poor are met together;" then is seen the man who can understand Ruskin seated beside the man who revels in Sala; then the lady with many flounces takes her place beside the poor needle-woman who has helped to make them. For Mr. Punshon, though a man of the most chastened thought and expression, is yet possessed of sympathies that stretch right down to the very lowest dregs of humanity—that is to say, he embodies in his teaching the spirit of the gospel, the spirit of Christ, of his apostles, of Christianity itself. He is entirely free from vulgarity, which, indeed, never pays in the long run, and which many a wise preacher, though tempted into its use at first, has ultimately seen the propriety of discarding. Those who go to hear Mr. Punshon need never fear being disgusted with sensationalism, or shocked by irreverence.

He is indeed too well read a man ever to lower his happy art to that dead level. Thoroughly abreast of the growing thoughtfulness of these times, and well versed in the careful study of such models as Macaulay, Robertson and Tennyson, he has yet gained additional breadth of view and fresh freedom from conventional restraint in his recent travels. And who can help, above all things, being impressed with the earnestness of the man! The man who has witnessed the fascinating enticements to wealth and ease, who has stood by the glorious old cause with which he first began, who has in his heart the one feeling—"For me to live is Christ"—must needs command our respect and veneration. As a Wesleyan minister he is, it is true, in a peculiarly fortunate condition for preparing his discourses; but even were this not so, there is no reason to doubt that his boundless wealth of illustration would have failed to place him on the pinnacle of greatness which he now occupies. It is said that a minister was once complimented by an old-lady in his church, because his sermon had "so many 'likes' in it." That has been the secret of success with many a popular preacher; and the practice of introducing many illustrations is, of course, abundantly justified by the great Master's method. Mr. Punshon traverses the realms of Scripture, of science, of history, explores all the marvels of the outside world, ascends from this earth to the starry systems, and calls angels, and if needs be fiends, into the substance of his discourse to make his meaning plain. But above all things, and in all ways, and to all people he preaches not about the gospel, but the gospel itself; not Christianity, but Christ. And in him as much as in any man living do we see the truth and force of Mr. Dale's declaration: "The world is not yet weary of hearing about Christ."—London Christian World.

"TO DIE IS GAIN."—It is a universal statement universally disbelieved. I have searched the graves of twenty graveyards, and not a marble slab or shaft, plainly wrought, or chiseled in costly design, bore this immortal assertion. I have prayed above a hundred coffins, and watched the faces of the mourners anxiously; not one betrayed a knowledge of this sentence. I have carried a bright face to the funeral chamber, and spoken the words of cheerful faith; and men have marveled, revealing their skepticism by their surprise. I have found it hard to persuade men that death is gain; but when I compare the conditions of this life with those of the next; when I set the body sensual over against the body spiritual, the mind in bondage over against the mind emancipated; when I have bowed myself to the white face, beautiful as it lay in deep, unruffled peace, and remember how passionate and painful was the life; when I have stood beside the dying, heard their dying murmured words of wonder, their exclamations of rapture, and seen a light, not of this world, fall upon their faces as they touched the margin of the great change—I have said: "Death, thou art a gain."—W. H. H. Murray.

THE colonists at New Sweden, down in Maine, retain in their new home the costume of their native country. The dress of the men and boys resembles the costumes worn by our grandfathers, while the women and girls wear a plain, straight dress, with short sleeves, a narrow apron, and upon the head a silk handkerchief, folded and tied under the chin, and looking very odd, but pretty and comfortable. Both wear the national wooden shoes, with high heels and turned-up toes, and painted black. The children are dressed exactly like father and mother.

WHAT is the most characteristic in true religion—what is the most wonderful—is the fact that it wells up right against a man's desire, his inclinations, his preconceptions. It shatters his old, moldy crust of habits; it changes the current of his thoughts; it makes the dumb, stupefied conscience talk right out, and speak to the purpose; it transfigures him, it regenerates him. If it cannot make a small power large, it makes it good.

WHERE ARE THE SINNERS?

Scripture speaks on every page of all men as sinners. And on entering the house of God we hear at every side the ejaculation: "Have mercy on us, miserable sinners." But who knows many persons who appear to think of themselves at any other time in this light, or who are disturbed at this fact?

We hear A speak often of B, C and D as very miserable sinners, but he never speaks so of himself.

Contentions, difficulties, estrangements meet us on every hand, bearing witness to the fact that some one has done wrong. If the matter at issue is between G and H, inquire of G if he is at fault. "Oh! no, H is the sinner." Turn round and ask H, and he will discourse fluently of the outrageous conduct of G. We have all heard the proverb: "Harder to catch than an eel." Might not "Harder to catch than a sinner" be still more forcible? The only advertised reward that would not likely be responded to, would be one offering a premium to any one who would own himself not a sinner in general, but at fault in some particular matter.

How frequently do we hear comments on sermons in some such form as this: "Fine sermon to-day! Just suited old Green. I wonder he can hold his head up after that," while at the same instant of time old Green's criticism of the very same address would be, "How well the parson hit off Mr. Black." Few persons seem to find anything just suited to themselves in a discourse, unless it may be a bit of consolation. Any well-drawn description of his own faults and sins does not often appear to impress the hearer. Can any one inform us in what locality sinners reside? It would be a spectacle worth looking at, to see twelve men and women who are so engrossed with their own shortcomings as to have little time in which to criticise their neighbors.—Busy Bee, in Christian at Work.

THE Philadelphia Catholic Standard says that "General Sherman says there is a growing favor toward the Catholic Church among the officers of the army." So much the worse for the "officers of the army," if the assertion, either of Sherman or the Standard, be true. But we do not believe it of the officers, nor do we believe the general ever said so. Popery is the greatest reactionary force now in the civilized world. It continually conspires against the Juarez progressive measure in Mexico, and the advanced people there are throwing it off. It is the chief embarrassment of every South American republic, and keeps those struggling States in perpetual turmoil and revolution. It conspires with the Carlists, in Spain, against the liberal policy of Amadeus and the Republicans. It opposes the unification of Italy, and would nullify the emancipation of the Roman people. It is the chief embarrassment of Austria and the German empire. It would restore Napoleon, or the Bourbon Henry the Fifth, in France. It ruins Ireland, and makes the greatest trouble of the British government. It is not only the ecclesiastical, but the social and political nuisance of the United States; giving us all our Fenian troubles and expenses; sustaining our Tweeds and other demagogues; making nearly all our mobs, and filling our prisons and pauper houses.—Methodist.

THE SABBATH IN GERMANY.—In Germany there is a growing sentiment in favor of a better observance of the Sabbath, in the interests of religion, and also of legal intervention to protect the working classes in their right to Sunday respite from labor. Petitions to the German Parliament in behalf of the abolition of Sunday employment of workingmen, and of public Sunday amusements, are being widely circulated and signed. By command of the Emperor, the Sunday military parades which have been customary throughout Germany, are now transferred to Wednesday.

A Bremen paper gives an account of the recent agitation of the Sunday law question in Cincinnati, and of the active part taken in defense of the Sabbath by a large class of German Christians, and adds: "When will the time come; when will our people in Germany be wise enough to take energetic steps for the maintenance and better observance of their Sunday? There are thousands, yes hundreds of thousands of workingmen, apprentices and servants who sigh under the yoke, and it is just the best and most conscientious citizens who suffer most from this want of or non-enforcement of Sunday laws."

M. GUILLAUME ADAM DE FELICE, honorary dean of the faculty of theology of Montauban, France, an eloquent and faithful preacher and an able professor, known to Christians in America as the French correspondent for many years of the New York Observer over the signature "G. de F.," died at Lausanne, October 23, in the sixty-ninth year of his age.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

ANOP EFFENDI, the recognized head of the Protestant community in Turkey, has published the results of a tour of inspection which has occupied a year. The Protestants were recognized by the Sultan as a distinct community in 1848. They now number 23,000, scattered over the empire, and represent twelve nationalities. The greater part of them—19,000—are connected with the American missions. The members are, as a rule, quiet, sober and industrious. Drunkenness is very rare among them; 85 per cent. of them can read, and there are 5,600 pupils in schools supported wholly or in part by themselves and under their own control. They are every year undertaking a greater share of the expense of supporting their pastors and their schools. As it is, they pay more than a tithe of their income—namely, 12 per cent.—toward those objects. There are 250 Protestant places of worship in the empire, to the maintenance of which the various missionary societies largely contribute.

THE OLD PROJECT, renewed in every generation, of leading the scattered children of Israel back to Palestine, and establishing a Jewish kingdom there, is on foot once more in Frankfort, Germany. A small knot of rabbis have contrived the plan, and have circulated a large number of printed invitations to join in the undertaking; and, if we may credit the report of newspapers friendly to Judaism, influential moneyed men in the old imperial capital—the headquarters of German Jews—have given it their substantial support. The originators endeavor to prove that the undertaking is by no means so impracticable as it at first sight seems, and remind their fellow-creedsmen that it is what they pray for three or four times every day. Moreover, they interpret the Bible passage, "Return to me, and I will return to you," as meaning literally that on the Jews returning to Jerusalem, the Lord, and with him prosperity, will return to them. It is not at all likely that the shrewd and thrifty bankers and traders of the Israelites will accept this interpretation. They have already learned that prosperity is to be found in other lands, and their views of prophecy have been greatly modified within the last century.

A TRAINING SCHOOL for lay-workers has been organized by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, of Brooklyn, New York. He calls it "The Tabernacle Free College for Training Christian Men and Women." The object of the "Free College" is thus stated: "We do not propose to make ministers. We have enough good institutions for that. We propose to enter a field as yet unoccupied—the development of the Christian laity. We propose to offer an opportunity for merchants, mechanics, artists, clerks and journeymen, and men and women of all occupations, who are engaged in the day time in worldly callings, to study, under some of the eminent teachers of the age, during two or three nights of each week, the art of doing good. That large number of persons who cannot afford the money or the time for a collegiate or theological course of seven years will here find every facility. If persons under this culture shall after a while seek ordination, they will be recommended for this to the conferences, the associations, the conventions, the presbyteries which they prefer. No sectarianism will be taught; no charges will be made for instruction. Two seasons will complete the course, and the student will graduate with diploma awarded at commencement exercises. Each session will extend from November 15 to March 15, (save the first session, which will begin January 7, 1872, and close April 7.) Persons of all ages admitted, save those under eighteen years of age."

MADAGASCAR.—The sufferings of the martyrs of Madagascar furnish one of the most thrilling and important chapters in the history of martyrdom. Their heroism has given them an immortality. It is proposed to build four memorial churches on places where the martyrs triumphed, to commemorate their noble deeds. Three of these churches are completed. The Chronicle of the London Missionary Society refers to them as follows: "The project has been slowly realized, so numerous have been the social and material difficulties which lie in the way of such a formidable undertaking among a people but partly civilized. The Ambatonakanga church, erected on the site of the first prison in which the martyrs were confined, was opened on March 22, 1867. That at Amhohipotsy, built on the right above the ditch where Rasalama and others were buried, was opened in November, 1868. And now the Children's Church at Faravohitra has been completed, and set apart for worship. The Faravohitra church is built in a commanding position at the north end of the capitol, and, from the height and solidity of its walls, is a very striking object. On its site, in February, 1849, four Christian nobles, including a lady, were burned alive; and the bodies of fourteen others, who had that day been thrown over the lofty precipice, were also consumed. In digging the foundations of the church Mr. Cameron laid bare the charcoal and ashes which had remained from the fire, and the first stone of the church was laid under the very spot where the stake was planted. It has taken three years to erect the building, and it was opened in September last."

THE National Council of the Congregational churches met at Oberlin, Ohio, November 15. Until it met, it had been a question whether or not it should become a permanent body. A permanent organization was decided upon, and the name we have given was chosen as its designation. A constitution was adopted, which embodies the following creed: "They"—the Congregational churches, by elders and messengers assembled—"agree in belief that the Holy Scriptures are the sufficient and only infallible rule of religious faith and practice, their interpretation thereof being in substantial accordance with the great doctrines of Christian faith commonly called evangelical, held in our churches in early times, and sufficiently set forth in former general councils." A clause maintains "the scriptural and inalienable right of each church to self-government and administration," and provides that the council "shall never exercise legislative or judicial authority, nor consent to act as a council of reference." The council is to meet every third year. Delegates are to be appointed at the rate of one for every ten churches in each local Conference, and one for each fraction of ten greater than one-half; and the State organizations may besides appoint one delegate for each ten thousand members, and one for each major fraction of ten thousand. Societies for Christian work and theological seminaries may be represented also by one delegate each. A paper on the unity of the church, adopted by the council, expressed the desire of the Congregational churches, while maintaining their distinctive faith and polity, to cooperate harmoniously with all other Christians in extending the one church of Christ. The Congregational Publication Society was recommended to the churches for their support.

FATHER GAVAZZI has been preaching and lecturing to large audiences in London. The accounts which he gives of the evangelical work in Rome are very encouraging. The following passage from a report of his address, which was delivered with all his characteristic eloquence, will be read with interest: "The entry of the gospel into Rome, after such a long banishment, was not a crisis, but a triumph of God. All attempts at reformation had been laughed at by the Pope. He would not allow buildings, after the fashion of places of worship, to be erected. You could build what churches you thought fit now—it was only a question of money; and the gospel could be preached within the hearing and under the eyes of the infallible Pope. Signor Gavazzi could hardly believe that Rome was the same place—the Pope still there, and he, an ex-monk, permitted to preach the gospel within its walls. They had lately established five regular congregations in the most populous quarters of the Eternal City, two of which belong to the Free Church. After fourteen centuries of mass—and only mass—they had at last established the Lord's Supper, the first since the apostasy of Constantine. There was a bright future before them. They had received guarantees for the security of their churches. Schools were attached to each of the churches, which were attended by more than one-half Roman Catholic children. Several parents had been brought to their churches through the instrumentality of the children. Since January last eight colporteurs had been engaged in selling the Bible in Rome. From seven to ten thousand copies of the word of God and twenty thousand copies of the Epistles were in circulation. Two thousand copies of the Testament had been sold in a neighborhood inhabited by Jews, who also formed a part of their congregations, and who previously had formed their opinions of Christianity by supposing that popery was Christianity. The best shop in the Corso, the first street in Rome, was the depot of the London Bible Society, which could be seen from the Vatican windows."

M. PASTEUR, who has given great attention to the disease known as pebrine, which has brought destruction on silk-worms, is succeeding in exterminating it by rigidly destroying all the creatures who are supposed to be affected by it.

THE OLD YEAR AND THE NEW.

The season of friendly compliments and congratulations has come. Unmeaning and formal as is the "Happy New Year" of many, we still like the custom. There is a great deal of mere pretense in the courtesies of life, but we do not think that they should be dispensed with on that account. There is enough of truth and genuineness in them to commend them to our hearts, and so much convenience and comfort that society cannot well do without them. The determination to take a bright and cheerful view of life is eminently in accord with the spirit of Christianity. There are solemn and sad associations connected with the fact that another year is cut off from the short measure of our days, and that we stand once more upon the threshold of a new period of our earthly existence. It would bring nothing but gloom were it not for the light which revelation throws upon human destiny. With the boundless horizon of eternity stretching beyond the visible, and with the prospect of everlasting blessedness before us, it matters not that we all do fade as a leaf, and that our days are as an hand-breadth. If the old year's death brings us nearer to the true life, and if its termination tells us that we are so much nearer home, what matter if it be gone, and that our earthly being is as a vapor?

The congratulations of friendship may spring from the consciousness that the year's perils have been passed in safety, very much as we felicitate those who come into port from a voyage across the sea, or those who come out of a battle sound in life and limb. Many have gone down amidst the waves over which we have sailed, and the conflict out of which we have come has been too much for thousands who marched with us twelve months ago. There is reason for such occasion of joy, and it is a benevolent impulse which leads to its expression. Life is recognized as a blessing, and its prolongation is felt to be a ground of thankfulness. If we have passed through the year somehow, and are still within the privileges of our earthly probation, the hand of Infinite goodness is apparent. If the old year has been well spent, we are in a better condition to enjoy and improve the new; and if it has been perverted and abused, it is a signal mercy that we have some opportunity of reparation and repentance. The faithful Christian can live to more purpose than ever, with the experience of the past, and with its treasures of piety and knowledge, while the impenitent soul has a ground of gratitude which ought to awaken to the uttermost of earnestness and diligence.

The old year is indeed cut off from the roll of time. It can be no more to us what it has been, but it lives in the memory, as a dream perhaps, spent as a tale that is told, and it has left its impress upon the immortal nature. We are far from having done with its responsibilities, or with the marks it has made upon us for good or evil. Its results are with us in the shaping of character, and a certain resurrection awaits all the buried years. The dead past may bury its dead, but memory, conscience and final accountability are so many trumpets to call it forth and to give it a new and terrible life. As we move on into fresh scenes and new responsibilities the past is close upon our footsteps, and often casts its shadows far in advance. Instead of going back to seek the old year, we shall come upon it in the new, standing like an avenging angel with a drawn sword in our path. In reality we are leaving nothing behind us but the shells and skeletons of history, while the substance and realities are carried along with us whithersoever we go. The last year of a man's life embraces all his years. It is the sum total of the accumulations--the strata and deposits of all the periods and epochs of his probationary career. Death and the judgment will disclose the imprint of every successive season, and life as a whole, and character as a unit, will be revealed.

And yet the new year is not altogether a misnomer. It is in many respects but the posting forward of the old upon a fresh page, with the total of its debits and credits, and to which we add the transactions which occur in the routine of life. It is the same stream flowing on between its appointed banks, with its eddies, currents and sinuosities, but passing through different climes, and growing broader and deeper on its way to the sea. While the new year carries the old with it, it has something of its own in the confluents which empty into it, and in the changes which mark its progress. The privileges and responsibilities may be like, but they are not the same. The discoveries are new to us, though millions have passed the same route and met with the same experiences. If there were no change in events, there are changes in ourselves which give an aspect of novelty. The eye is not what it was—all the senses, in their education or partial decay, give to outward nature a different cast. The perceptive faculties, the apprehension, the imagination, have undergone some modifications. The outward world of last year can never be exactly reproduced to us. No more can the inward. Better or worse, and therefore now, will be the coming year. Other sorrows and other joys are sure to come.

Progress in holiness will impart freshness and ever surprising beauty. The new creation is always new. Unlike our mental states, and in strong contrast with all that is material, the grace of God in the heart is ever fresh and young. The beauty of holiness is from the womb of the morning, and crowned with the dew of youth. Age may outrail decay and decrepitude upon the body, and impair the mental action, but it rather contributes to the elasticity and strength of the spiritual nature. "Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." The year will be new indeed, and happy beyond all the past, to those who begin the Christian life with it. No matter what fortune is in store, it will be gloriously unlike all the past to them, and the beginning of solid peace and joy. And if it should prove the last of our earthly years, as it surely will of some who read these lines, what then? Are there dates and epochs in eternity? things remembered as the old, and looked for as the new? As the past envelops us now, so it will be then; and whatever we leave behind, whatever we shuffle off, and whatever we cast aside in that wonderful and even awful change, we shall take with us the substance and essence of what we are and of what we have been.

This is the chief import of the new year—that it pushes the old one off and brings us nearer the end. We cannot pause if we would, but on we must, through the untried and the unknown, to the house appointed for all the living. We cannot tarry upon the beach, but we must launch upon the deep, and set our sails and steer our bark the best we can. What billows, what storms, what wrecks await us we cannot tell, but we cannot stand upon the shore. A happy new year it may be, notwithstanding. Whether it be a year of prosperity or of adversity, of life or of death, happy if God be for us, and if Christ be our hope. Firm as the throne itself stands the divine declaration that "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

CHRISTMAS GATHERING.

The Felicity street Sunday school held a Christmas meeting on Tuesday night, the twenty-sixth instant. The church was full, galleries and all. A few brief and excellent speeches from the children, and several songs and hymns, preceded the rise of the curtain. The Christmas Tree song was finely sung. We give the first stanza and chorus:

Who comes this way, so blithe and gay,
Upon the merry Christmas day,
So merrily, so cheerily,
With his peaked hat and reindeer sleigh!
With pretty toys for girls and boys,
As pretty as you e'er did see;
Oh, this is Santa Claus' man,
Kriss Kringle with his Christmas tree.

CHORUS.

Then jingle, jingle, jing, jing, jing,
Right merry we shall be,
Yes jingle, jingle,
Come Kriss Kringle,
Come with your Christmas tree;
And welcome, welcome, welcome Kriss,
Right welcome shall you be;
O there he is, yes, yes, 'tis Kriss,
'Tis Kriss with the Christmas tree,
The Christmas tree, the Christmas tree,
The Christmas tree, the Christmas tree.

Just as the conclusion of the song was reached old Santa Claus, in his sleigh, was revealed, loaded with presents for the children and teachers, and a handsome Christmas tree stood near, brilliantly illuminated, and its evergreen boughs bending with all sorts of bon-bons. After the distribution of presents the "Beautiful River" was sung, and the happy throng was dismissed with the apostolical benediction. We congratulate the pastor, superintendent, teachers and children on the success of their entertainment, and wish them all a merry Christmas.

MR. ALEXANDER WHELESS.—On our second page will be found an obituary sketch of this gentleman, whose demise occurred on the third of December. A large circle of friends and relatives mourn over his death. He was in the prime of life and in the midst of active business pursuits when so suddenly called away from earth. The stricken family have our sincere sympathy and prayers in their deep bereavement.

THE fifth and sixth days' proceedings of the Mississippi Conference have reached us too late for this week's issue. We publish the appointments this week—the balance will appear next week. Many thanks to the secretary and his assistants for favors received.

IN MEMORIAM.

The Rev. THOMAS FORD has gone to the assembly above. His long life of faith and love, of sacrifice and devotion; his patient trust in Christ through the weary weeks of sickness that brought him to the end of his pilgrimage, and the gentle, confiding, Christianly manner of passing down into the valley and shadow of death, all justify us in this cheering assurance.

In a letter to me, his affectionate eldest daughter says: "Dear father died on the second of December, at his residence near Clinton, after a painful illness of eight months' duration, which he bore with perfect resignation and Christian patience from the first to the last moment."

Such a record, from such a pen, is itself sufficient. The aged and infirm mother, the tender daughters and thoughtful sons gather about the couch of the reverend patriarch to see him illustrate in death the power of Christ over death — to witness the realization of the fruits on the banks of Jordan, to which the journey of life had been consecrated. At nineteen years of age he devoted his young heart to God and the church; and approaching the sixty-ninth year of his age, he laid his armor down, leaving to all who knew him the precious legacy of a pure record—a useful life, and a true, manly devotion to Christ and the church.

He had been a member of the Mississippi Conference, and filled some of the principal stations in the prime of his strength and zeal, and always left the savor of a pure life among the people, whom he served with superior ability. But the greater part of his life has been spent in the local ranks, where he has endeavored, by a most blameless life and constant care for the welfare of the church, to make his talents felt and his life useful. He possessed the quiet energy of a strong river, and accomplished much by the steadiness of that onward, uniform, unwavering movement which never fails to achieve.

He planted the banner of our church at Jackson, the capital of Mississippi, long years ago, where he organized a church and commenced the present edifice, in which the congregation still worships. He watched its rising walls, and took a lively and efficient interest in it till it was finished. The churches of Raymond, Forrest Hill, Chappel Hill, Liberty and many others were the fruits of his foresight, toil and influence. Indeed, he was the center of power from which there swept out and moved on many noble and salutary influences upon a large community, extending over many counties, and over many churches and people. From his daughter I learn that "he attended a sacramental meeting at Raymond, in the absence of the presiding elder, on the fourth Sabbath of last March, and returned home sick. He then remarked to us that 'his work was finished;' 'and it was his last ministerial service.'"

Bro. Ford's health was never vigorous, and yet with care and prudence, a physical system that other men would have destroyed in early manhood was sustained and preserved for a ripe old age.

How touching is the above quotation. He returned from a sacramental meeting with the arrows of the great Archer so deeply riven into his mortal frame that he realized he had begun to die. Eight months of weakness, pain, decay and dying—eight months of peculiar trial, ripening holiness, radiant hope, victorious faith and patient endurance! Not a murmur, not a word of complaint. His life-work was finished. And thus each day, rising higher into the likeness of the Divine, he calmly closed his earthly toils, and his freed spirit bade adieu to all terrestrial things. Surely of such an one we may say: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." Thus one by one the fathers and the brethren pass away.

In the spring of 1833 there was held, in the brick church in Clinton, a quarterly meeting, and there were present Rev. John Lane, Rev. D. O. Shattuck, Rev. Thomas Ford and the undersigned. All but one are now safe with God. All here a good testimony. All fought the good fight, kept the faith and received the crown. Glorious lives—immortal men! Dr. Ford was the last of that number to leave. What meetings were there then, among the soldiers of Christ, on the other side!

Another who was there that bright May day, in the prime and joyousness of ripe womanhood, now sits in the shadows of the tomb, just waiting amidst the first sad surprises of widowhood and deep bereavement—waiting the coming of the Lord. Five children gather around this venerable Christian mother to soothe her weary spirit, and smooth the pathway to the place where sweetly slumbers the sainted husband and father. May Heaven bless them.

Of Bro. Ford a volume might be written. In this brief sketch we cannot adequately describe the man—his style, the class of mind in which he ranked, his powers and peculiarities as a preacher, his solicitude for the cause of Christ, his wakeful, earnest, prayerful piety, his manly sympathy with the great public interests of his country, and his patriotic virtues as a citizen.

But we must pause. One by one the fathers are passing away. The heroic pioneers of the country and church are nearly gone. May a kind Providence raise up others to lead the people and bless the church. But come who may, the church will never see a truer friend, a purer man, or a more loving and gentle spirit than the beloved Ford.

C. K. MARSHALL.

EDUCATIONAL FEVER.

Bishop Pierce, writing to the Southern Christian Advocate, has a few words about an educated ministry. The Bishop's words of caution should not be overstrained, but it is well to hear them. Too much emphasis laid upon the education of our candidates may tend to stop the supply, if it has not done it already.

They have got up a furor for education among the preachers in Holston. Some married men have caught the fever. I was threatened with great embarrassment in manning the work, by the untimely withdrawal of preachers. I was obliged to put on the brakes. Education is very desirable; but there is a time for, and a fitness in, things. The sentiment in Holston, I think, is unsound, unwholesome, and will work detriment to the men and the work. The church cannot be supplied by quitting the work to go to school. We cannot inaugurate a reform by beginning in the middle or at the end of a man's career. Take the thing in time. Begin at the right place. Do not license or admit on trial prematurely. So develop the work financially as that the educated men will not leave in search of better support. As a rule, make it the interest of a man of culture to abide in the Conference he joins. Read—meditate—pray—work; improvement will follow about as fast as is safe for most men. A flashy reputation is no blessing—not a thing to be desired. After all, our average preacher is the man for large results. Good sense—deep piety—fidelity to duty, will achieve the great ends of gospel preaching. I have no use for lazy, unimproving men, especially if they be young; but I do not sympathize, as much as might be expected, with the rage for an educated ministry. I want the Conferences mixed, some of all grades, save the lowest stratum; for we have every grade of work to do, and our system is one of adaptation. Present plans, faithfully worked out, will supply the wants of the church and the times. The very considerations which are keeping educated young men, called of God to preach, out of the ministry, would disqualify them for effective itineracy if they were to come in. These must have more of the self-denying element in their religion, or the church must forestall the necessity for it by a more liberal policy in the general work. In a strict gospel view, both parties are censurable—the church, in that she furnishes a pretext by illiberal arrangements, and those who decline service by conferring with flesh and blood, instead of yielding a prompt and self-sacrificing obedience to the heavenly vision.

REV. R. A. HOLLAND.—The St. Louis Christian Advocate says: Some weeks ago we were informed of a call by the vestry of St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church of this city of Rev. R. A. Holland to its rectorship, made vacant by the resignation of Rev. Dr. Ed. F. Berkeley, who has long filled the place. We have received authentic information of the acceptance by Mr. Holland. His predecessor possessed eminent ability, and withal was a late Methodist preacher as well as Mr. Holland. The late Dr. Cross is also in our city. "Waiting for orders" is long past, but he is still "waiting," and in the meantime assistant rector to Mr. Easter at Trinity church. Methodism has a wonderful vitality. It seems to keep up the succession in that church and don't feel the loss of force, yet having no lack of succession in its own ministerial ranks. The church which Mr. Holland takes is one of the oldest in the city, with a large membership of good social position, and rich enough to pay a good round salary. We wish he may have a comfortable settlement and a useful ministry.

CHURCH BURNT.—Colonel Harper, of Greenwood, Louisiana, says the Home Advocate, tells us that the Methodist church in that place was recently destroyed by fire. The building was being used as an academy. We suppose the old academies in the place had become unsuitable for school purposes, on account of want of repairs; however, we have no accurate information on that subject.

THE way to have a good social meeting is to have those who compose it in meeting order when they are at home.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

THE UNION PRAYER BOOK: A Manual of Public Worship. Prepared for the use of the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ in the United States of America. Also a service for Sunday schools, and forms for family devotion. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co., 1872.

This is the Book of Common Prayor of the Protestant Episcopal Church, somewhat altered to meet the views of those who have lately bolted from that communion. As we published a lengthy notice of the work some time ago, we do not go into particulars now. The volume is handsomely bound, and of faultless type and paper. Price, $3, sent by mail.

VIEW OF THE STATE OF EUROPE DURING THE MIDDLE AGES. By Henry Hallam, LL. D., F. R. A. S. Incorporating in the text the author's latest researches, with additions from recent writers, and adapted to the use of students. By William Smith, D. C. L., LL. D. New York: Harper & Bros., publishers, 1872.

The great work of Hallam has been a standard for many years, and Dr. Smith and the publishers have rendered an important service to literature in bringing out this edition. It is not, strictly speaking, an abridgment, but is a revision in which additions are made from Hallam's disquisitions and reconsiderations, and incorporated in the text. The pruning relates chiefly to notes and matters not essential, and to such abbreviations of the original text as take nothing from its substance, while it is better adapted to the use of students and the general reader. The whole work, embracing a copious and complete index, is comprised in 708 duodecimo pages. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

DOGS AND THEIR DOINGS. By the Rev. F. O. Morris, B. A. New York: Harper & Bros., 1872.

This work is a marvel of beautiful typography and of exquisite illustrations, on cream-tinted paper, and bound in blue and gold. All the choice anecdotes and wonderful doings of all sorts of dogs are recorded in its pages, and told in a lively and captivating style. The volume would make a fine gift for the young, and the very thing for the Christmas times. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

WE HAVE RECEIVED No. 1 of the National Encyclopedia, a compendium of universal information, brought down to the year 1871, with the pronunciation of every term and proper name. By L. Colange, LL. D., editor of Zell's Popular Encyclopedia. Illustrated with five hundred wood engravings. Complete in one volume. New York: Francis B. Felt & Co. From the specimen number we are favorably impressed with the work. The following information is furnished us by the publishers:

It is to be completed in eighteen semi-monthly parts, at forty cents each—the whole to form one volume, royal 8vo., of over one thousand double-column pages, with five hundred wood engravings. It is designed to furnish a complete Encyclopedia that shall be within the reach of all, and at the same time be useful to all by reason of its reliability, compactness and direct mode of treatment. As it will be the first work of general reference in one volume ever published, it is intended that it shall be complete in all its departments, and the publishers refer to the success of the last great work (Zell's Encyclopedia) of the editor of the present volume, as the best assurance which animates them on this head.

A specimen number will be mailed by the publishers to any address on application.

THE SOUTHERN FARM AND HOME, formerly published at Macon, Georgia, by J. W. Burke & Co., is now published at Memphis, Tennessee. The editor, W. M. Browne, has become sole proprietor, and editor as well. This is an agricultural journal of sterling worth, and most tastefully and ably edited. The December number has reached us.

PETERS' MUSICAL MONTHLY for January, 1872, contains thirty pages of choice music, with songs and chants of great beauty. Published in handsome style, at $3 per annum, by J. L. Peters, New York.

THE AMERICAN PROTESTANT is a monthly family journal, published in St. Louis, at $1.25 per annum. It is a handsome eight-page sheet, devoted to the defense of Protestantism against Romanism. We have received the number for January, 1872.

THE AMERICAN WORKING PEOPLE is a monthly, published at Pittsburg, containing 20 pages of large quarto matter. It is edited with taste and discrimination, and full of useful and most valuable articles. Its advocacy of a protective tariff is not to our mind.

GOOD WORDS for December displays a tempting table of contents. Work in India; Thought versus Learning; Retaliation; City Life in the Capital of the Oezbegs; Sir John Burgoyne, and other articles, are worthy of special notice.

THE LITTLE CORPORAL suffered with his fellows in the great Chicago fire, but appears for December, fresh and lively, carrying a picture by Nast, and a budget of reading, of the best quality, for the young folks.

THE SOUTHERN FIELD AND FACTORY is an excellent periodical, devoted to agriculture and manufactures, published at Jackson, Mississippi. The December number has been received.

ARTHUR'S LADIES' MAGAZINE and the CHILDREN'S HOUR for January, 1872, are both excellent, and, as always, filled with choice and wholesome literature.

LE BON TON for January has very elaborate and well-executed plates, besides the usual amount of fashion literature. Published by S. T. Taylor, New York.

Obituaries.

MRS. REBECCA M., wife of William C. Burt, was born in Halifax county, North Carolina, September 16, 1798, and died in Carroll county, Mississippi, October 9, 1871. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Church October 19, 1820. It will thus be seen that Sister Burt was seventy-three years old, and had been a member of the church for fifty-one years. During all these long years her course had been uniform and consistent with her profession. Her most prominent characteristics were humility, patience and zeal. Who ever doubted her piety? O how often has she made the hearts of her brethren rejoice when they saw the love of God beaming from her countenance, and heard the praises of her Savior sweetly falling from her lips!

Her death was sudden and unexpected. She had been in poor health a long time, but had been able to keep up and attend to her domestic duties. On the morning of her death she had been up attending to these duties. But a very few minutes before she died she laid herself down to rest, as was usual with her after breakfast, and before the family knew that anything unusual was the matter with her, while her hands were gently laid across her breast and her eyes closed as if asleep, God, in his kind providence, sent the angel of mercy, who gently took away her spirit, and she was with her Savior in heaven before her friends had missed her on earth.

G. D. WADE.

THOMAS PARROTT LAMAR, youngest child of John and Mary Lamar, was born September 27, 1867, and died September 7, 1871.

Ere the frost had come to change the hue of leaves and flowers death came and snatched away the idolized boy—the concentration of a mother's fondest hopes. Tommie was "the angel of the household," and oh, how sad it was to see him stricken down, the victim of a few hours' torture, and consigned to a cold, narrow grave! It seemed that the pattering of his little feet and the sound of his happy childish voice had not ceased to echo through "the halls of his home" ere he was arrayed for the coffin.

He was a remarkably interesting child, and his questions and remarks often astonished us all. But strong as his mind was, the form was too delicate to endure the blow of affliction, and like a frail, tender flower he passed away, and left a number of loving ones to weep over his departure. But the "flower" has only been transplanted. It was a small, delicate bud, and its kind Maker saw that this world was too cold and sterile, so he sent his angels to cull it, and convey it to a better, happier land,

Where flowers of fadeless hues forever bloom,
And death can never cull them for the tomb.

It seems that the sunshine is shut out and the music is hushed in that once happy home and sorrow, like a dark cloud, has gathered there. But, beloved ones, weep no more. "Earth hath no sorrow that heaven cannot heal." The lost one has not departed forever, but has returned to him who gave it—he has joined the "shining host" that sing eternal praises to him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

CIGARS.—Those in want of a genuine cigar should visit Gonzales Bros. They have constantly on hand all the well-known brands; also Havana cigarettes.

JOSEPH KEELER.—This house has constantly on hand articles of produce, such as apples, potatoes, onions, beans, etc. The trade and families will find it to their advantage to buy their supplies from this house. Remember the number—40 Poydras street.

BRASELMAN & ADAMS.—It is with pleasure we refer our readers to the card of this popular up-town house. They have an elegant assortment of silks, laces, gloves, and fancy goods, which they are offering at very reasonable prices. None of the attractions offered during the holidays are deserving of more attention than those at 586 and 588 Magazine street.

ATTENTION, LADIES!—The firm of O'Donnell, Wemett & Co. have a very fine selection of Irish poplins at $1.25 per yard. They have also a choice stock of laces and dress goods, to which they invite the attention of purchasers. We would recommend our up-town friends to call and see this growing young house, and we are confident they will be satisfied, as their goods are not misrepresented. They are located in Dr. Wade's new building, 643 and 645 Magazine street.

THOSE desiring repairs to their furniture, frames for their pictures, carpets put down, or in fact any of the necessities of housekeeping done in a superior manner, at a moderate expense, will do well to call on John Bois, No. 291 Camp street. See card elsewhere.

PIANOS PIANOS.—Zorn & Bremer have on hand a stock of the above instruments from the celebrated factories of Pleyel, George Steck & Co. and Hallett & Cumston, which they are selling at reduced prices. Their instruments cannot be surpassed, and those in need of a good piano ought to remember 176 Canal street. They are also sole agents for Smith's American organs.

SLOCOMB, BALDWIN & CO.'S HARDWARE IMPORTING HOUSE, NEW ORLEANS.—To those of our friends in the interior not acquainted with the house at the heading of this paragraph we desire to say: First. They are honorable, public-spirited merchants, and deserve well of the public. Second. They import all their goods direct from the manufactories of Europe and this country, and can consequently sell the same as low as any similar house. Third. They have in their employ some fifty young men, some of whom have seen twenty-five years' service with them, and know their business. Lastly. They have a stock unequaled, and we ask our friends to give them their patronage, believing we are doing mutual service.

BLACKMAN'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, No. 78 Camp street, will give a full commercial course, at half price, to all over fifteen years of age who will enter previous to the new year. This college enjoys a high reputation; and as an education is the most valuable present that can be given, parents and guardians will do well to act accordingly. See advertisement on sixth page. 2t

PLAYING STORE.

BY GEORGE COOPER.

Little ones busy as busy can be;
Ribbons they measure, and parcels they tie.
Sand for their sugar, and dirt for their tea—
Sunny-eyed customers coming to buy.

Dollies are left without any regret;
Baskets and aprons go laden away;
Paper for money—so easy to get!
Oh! but there's fun in their innocent play!

"What will I have?" I am puzzled to tell.
Sweet little dimpled chins, rosy and bright;
What I would purchase you never can sell,
Though you may wonder and laugh with delight.

"Give me an hour of my childhood again,
Some of your smiles and your innocent glee;
Sell me a beam of your sunshine; and then Worlds could not barter my treasures from me."

CHAT.

Mr. ". .gs, yonng ladies and gentlemen, Mr. Barnabas Biggs. We take grent pleasure in introducing him to our select circle of chatters. Here we are, you see, Mr. Biggs, a select circle, but a great party, after all. It won't take you long to get acquainted with the company; so take a seat, and make yourself at home.

"We're a free-and-easy set here; but you mustn't get scared," says Mr. Short.

Why, Mr. Short, that's not very polite. You are making free on short acquaintance.

"How can a man of my name and size have any other than a short acquaintance, I should like to know?" replies Mr. Short.

"Now, Short, behave yourself," says Mr. Little, "or you will make our newcomer think he has got into the wrong place. Don't you mind Short, Mr. Biggs; he means well; but he's a little rough sometimes."

"And you're a rough Little," replies Mr. Short.

Gentlemen, stop this miserable punning, and let's get to work, or Mr. Biggs will get disgusted and quit.

"I'm not so easily disgusted, thank you," says Mr. Biggs. "You have some funny gentlemen here, I see; perhaps I'll get even with them some day."

And Mr. Barnabas Biggs strokes his mustache and heard, tries to smooth the wrinkles out of the sleeve of his dark-green coat, in the waist-pocket of which we can see the ends of a bnd-get sticking out, and takes his seat among us.

"Now, ladies and gentlemen," says Barnabas Biggs, "what can I do for you?"

"That sounds like business, to begin with," says Mr. Spry. "I rather like that."

You may do anything you please for us, Mr. Biggs. We shall be happy to hear from you on any subject you choose to select.

"Then I'll tell you," says Barnabas Biggs,

"WHAT HAPPENED AT THE TOWN PUMP.

"There is near our house an old pump—a kind of town pump—which every one may use, and whose wet and best-watered base speaks plainer than sign-boards could do of water for man and horse; and a very excellent pump it is, too—never out of water, easily worked, and furnishing some of the purest, clearest, coolest water in the world.

"Not long since the old pump was honored as though an angel had blessed it. A rosy cheeked girl, half hid in a flood of golden curls, came bouncing by, driving her hoop, just as the old, decrepit apple-woman at the corner, whom everybody knows, was trying to get a drink. She had set down her basket, but, bent nearly double by the weight of her years and troubles, she was still compelled to lean upon her staff. The little girl saw the difficulty, and was in an instant at the handle. Holding the ladle till it was filled, she raised it steadily to the lips of the old woman, whose warm, grateful thanks called the crimson to the child's cheek, which, as she hurried away, was deepened by finding that her kind deed had been observed."

Thank you, Mr. Biggs. You've made a very good beginning, and you may call again. But, let's see; we believe we have a special order of the day. We were to have a shark story from Captain Hunter. It won't do to miss that. So, captain, if you have no objection, you may give it to us now.

"It's a story," says Captain Hunter, "which was told by Sir John Barrow, a celebrated English traveler. The circumstance took place while the ship he belonged to was in the Eastern seas.

THE SHARK STORY.

"He says: 'When on board the Hindostan, I hooked a shark from the stern gallery; in doing which, however, I had a very narrow escape from being dragged by it into the sea. No sooner did the fish feel the hook in its jaw than, plunging toward the bottom, he drew the line to its full stretch. In the rapidity with which the rope ran out, a coil of it got round my arm; but, just as I was about being pulled overboard, the shark, by darting back to the surface, slackened the rope, and thus enabled me to disengage my arm and get clear. Greatly as I was alarmed at this accident, a poor Javanese appeared to be still more so, who happened at that moment to be astern of the ship, paddling his canoe with a load of fruit and vegetables. He feared lest the wounded shark, in rolling and plunging and lashing the water with its fins and tail, should overturn his little skiff. Fortunately for him, this did not happen. The shark, being killed with a harpoon, was hoisted on deck and opened. The contents of its stomach formed a mass such as can scarcely be conceived.'"

"That's not a very horrible story, captain," says Dr. Beetle. "I didn't know but you were going to tell us of some poor fellow who got his leg bitten off. I'm glad nobody was hurt, though some of them got badly frightened. A shark's stomach," continues the doctor, "is sometimes

A MUSEUM OF ODD THINGS.

"Jack Tar makes high festival at the cutting-up of a shark, and has great delight in opening the creature for the purpose of finding out the articles which it has swallowed; for a shark, when following a vessel, will eat anything that falls overboard. The contents of a lady's work-box, a cow's hide entire, knives, hats, boots, and various other things have been found in its interior. On one occasion the papers of a slave-ship were found in the stomach of a shark. By means of these papers the slaver was known; and the cruel men who carried on the base traffic were convicted and punished."

That shark became a detective police officer without knowing it. How many cries of misery had gone up from that slave-ship! The sound of these cries at last reached heaven.

Professor Tryall, who is less inclined to figures of speech than to figures of the other sort, would like to say something on

THE VELOCITY OF SOUND.

"In a still night the voices of the workmen in the distillery at Battersea may be heard at Westminster Bridge, an interval of three miles. The watchword at Portsmouth, it is said, can be heard at Ryde, in the Isle of Wight, a distance of four or five miles. The echo in Woodstock Park is repeated seventeen times by day, and twenty by night. The artillery at the siege of Genoa, by the French, was heard at Leghorn, a distance of ninety miles. The firing at the battle of Waterloo was heard at Dover, at a distance in a direct line of one hundred and forty miles, of which one hundred and ten were over land, and the remainder over water."

But, after all, professor, it is a great comfort for us to know that our prayers can reach farther still, even to heaven. Methodist.

A FATAL MOUTHFUL.—Once I was fishing from my punt, and saw an odd movement at the surface of the water about ten yards off. Paddling up, I found a biggish carp swimming about with a pike of less than his own size hanging upon his nose. The pike had been dead some time, for he had begun to decay, and leeches were clinging to his side. He had tried to swallow the carp, but could get only about half its head into his mouth. Having gaped to the full stretch of his jaws, he could not open his mouth wider to draw his teeth out, so he remained attached to his intended dinner, and died a victim to gluttony. The poor carp, not being able to get rid of his enemy, even when dead, had to go about his business with a corpse nearly as big as himself on his head. Growing weak, he rose to the surface, where I found him, swimming feebly round and round, with this hideous encumbrance. I took him into the boat, slit the pike's jaws open with my knife, and released the carp, who paddled off with a light heart and a very sore nose.

The Farm and Garden.

RICE CULTURE.

We have no doubt that in a few years Louisiana will rival South Carolina in the quantity and quality of rice annually produced—indeed, already, through the efforts of Mr. James Wood, of New Orleans, who has introduced the best varieties of seed, many of our rice planters are growing as good rice as can be found anywhere.

Even with their imperfect means of irrigation and old fogy style of gathering their crop with the sickle, Louisiana rice planters are doing a safe and more profitable business than the sugar planters; and when they bring all the improved machinery into requisition, it will prove so remunerative that the culture of rice will be extensively engaged in.

We find the rice planters much more thrifty than the cotton planters. The crop matures and can be harvested in about seven months after sowing, leaving considerable time that can be devoted to other pursuits. To illustrate how much one man can cultivate and harvest, we will mention that on lower Bayou Lafourche we find one young gentleman, Mr. H. N. Cook, who had alone cultivated nineteen arpents, and though his crop was on new and imperfectly irrigated ground, yet he thought he would have about three hundred barrels of clean rice. When reaping machines are used, the labor of harvesting will be greatly lessened.—Louisiana Sugar Bowl.

Raising Fruit Trees from the Seed.

Mr. A. Czerny, of Austria, states, as the result of long-continued observations and experiments, that the strongest and best fruit trees can be raised from seed, thus obviating a great deal of expense and disappointment to the pomologist. According to his observations, the extent and ramifications of the roots of a healthy tree is to that of its crown in the ratio of three to two, so that the action of the root is always preponderating. In this relation he finds the reason why fruit seeds from trees, budded or grafted upon indifferent stocks, have always been found unreliable, and he endeavors, as the first step, to obtain good trees grown upon their own stock, the seed of which, he says, will produce their parents with certainty. To this end he layers a branch of good tree, which, when well rooted, serves him as a stock, into which he introduces buds or scions of such varieties as promise to improve the original fruit. By judicious cross fertilization he obtains fruit, the seed of which will propagate, to a greater or less extent, the good qualities of the varieties used in hybridizing, and thus a new fruit is originated, which, when suitable, can always be reproduced from its seed. Such trees, says Mr. Czerny, are more healthy and vigorous, (having never been wounded by the knife,) bear earlier, and when accidentally wounded in the stem, throw out shoots identical with those of the original tree.

MUCK.

As an absorbent dry muck is very nearly equal to pulverized charcoal, which it much resembles in its chemical constitution. As a basis of compost we know of nothing superior to it, unless it is leaf-mold from the forest, which is richer in potash and other soluble saline matters. We cannot too strongly insist upon the importance of composting all manures. Not only is the quantity greatly increased, but the quality is also. Much of the barn-yard manure that is scattered directly from the yard, and plowed under, is unevenly distributed, is full of seeds, and lies in large lumps, so that the crops do not receive the full benefit of it. By composting we not only get a much finer manure, but we also get the mysterious catalytic (that is, dissolution into parts) influence by which, in the contact of fermenting nitrogenous substances, the whole mass is fermented, much in the same manner as when, by a little leaven, the whole lump of meal is leavened. We know that there is labor in composting, and that labor costs money; but we very much question whether any labor on the farm is more economically expended than upon the compost heap.—Lectures on Agricultural Topics.

HOW TO DISSOLVE BONES.

A barrel, box or an ash-hopper will do to dissolve bones in. The bones should be broken into small pieces with an ax or sledge-hammer. By laying them on a flat stone or a piece of iron they can readily be broken into small particles. After being broken, place a layer of them in the vessel provided, about three inches deep, cover them with good hard wood, unleached ashes, to which should be added fresh lime in the proportion of half a bushel of lime to a barrel of ashes. Put on enough of ashes to cover them thoroughly, and so continue alternately until the vessel is full. Add enough water to saturate the whole thoroughly, though not enough to make the lye run. Let it remain about three months, taking care to dampen it every two weeks with enough water to start the lye. If the lye should run, catch it for dampening the ashes in future use. In three months the bones will become soft and ready to crumble. Much of it can be broken up with the shovel, by throwing out the mass and working it over. Those bones that do not work up can be picked out and reset again, and by the time they go through the process again they will be thoroughly decomposed, and ready for use on grain or other crops.

THE BEURRE D'ANJOU PEAR.—This is one of the most valuable pears in cultivation, and deserves to be most widely disseminated. The fruit is of large size and fine appearance, the skin of which is yellowish green, sprinkled with russet, and often presents a dull crimson cheek on the sunny side. The flesh is melting and juicy, very nicely perfumed, and having a brisk vinous flavor, ranking in variety among the best. It is usually ripe in November, but will often keep until January. The tree is vigorous and very productive, and seems likely to prove hardy, so as to thrive well where pears can be grown.

The fruit is much sought after in the city markets, and last year sold readily in the Boston markets at $30 per barrel.

MAMMOTH CORN.—Captain Frederick Beall shelled five ears of corn, taken from his field crop, which yielded three and a half pounds of clean corn.—Eighty ears make a bushel. His seed corn was obtained from Moscow, Kentucky. The grains are remarkably large. This shows what a change of corn from one soil to another will do. We have never seen any better corn.—West Point (Mississippi) Citizen.

TO KEEP THE WEEVIL OUT OF CORN.—Put the corn up in shuck, and before corn-gathering time have your crib well cleaned and smoked, and then thoroughly painted on the inside with gas tar. If peas are kept in a cool place, the weevil will not make its appearance as early in the season as when kept in a warm room.—Southern Cultivator.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

TO CLEAN LAMP-SHADES.—Lamp-shades may be cleansed with soap or pearlash; these will not injure or discolor them.

SWEET CORN PUDDING.—Grate the corn from twelve ears; add four well-beaten eggs, a quart of sweet, fresh milk, a little butter and a pinch of salt. Bake two hours.

MAGIC NERVE LINIMENT.—This was used and recommended by Dr. Stewart for nervous affections, etc.: Spirits of hartshorn, 1½ ounce; sulphuric ether, 1½ ounce; spirits turpentine, ½ ounce; sweet oil, ¾ ounce; oil cloves, ½ ounce; chloroform, 1 ounce. Put into a strong bottle of the capacity of 8 ounces, shake liniment, and it is ready for use. Keep the bottle securely closed and in a dark place, free from light.

LEMON JUICE IN DIPHTHERIA.—Mr. Revillout, in a paper presented last summer to the French Academy of Medicine, asserts that lemon juice is one of the most efficacious appliances for diphtheria, and he relates that, when a dresser in the hospital, his own wife was saved by this timely application. He got three dozen lemons and gargled her throat with the juice, she swallowing a little at the same time, in order to act on the more deep-seated parts.

PICKLED CAULIFLOWER.—Select the most perfect; break off the flowers, as they would naturally part. Put a layer of them in a jar and sprinkle over salt; then another layer of cauliflower; then salt, and so on. Let them soak two days; then wash off the salt and let them drain well; then pack in a jar or bottle, and pour over boiling spiced vinegar. In a few days, if necessary, heat the vinegar again; and pour over them, and cover or cork closely.

BAKED BEANS—Norwich.—Take small white beans, put to soak at six P. M., in a deep vessel; change the water late in the evening, and again next morning, and parboil for two hours, changing the water at the end of the second hour. Then pour off nearly all the water; take raw pork scored on top; put the beans in a deep dish, the pork in the middle, sinking it so as to have it just level with the surface. Add a very little molasses, and bake at least six hours, raising the pork toward the last so that it may crisp on top.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE,
FRANKLIN, TENNESSEE.
THE SPRING SESSION FOR 1872 OPENS JANUARY 22.
This institution combines internal comfort and elegance with educational facilities of a high order. It challenges investigation of its equipments and appointments, its methods and results. A complete system of Gymnastics for girls is a recent addition for healthful exercise and physical development. Its prosperity has steadily grown under the present management, and the number of pupils is larger now than ever before. It is under the supervision of the Tennessee Conference, and refers inquirers to the Bishops of the church, and to leading ministers in Nashville and elsewhere.
During the fifteen years since its organization no pupil has died in attendance on it. The climate is bracing, the atmosphere pure, the soil generous and the scenery beautiful.
While in a thriving town, and within one hour of Nashville by several daily trains, it has all the necessary quiet for successful study.
Charges are low. The Literary Course, including Latin and French, is free to itinerant ministers, and they may cancel board and other fees for their daughters by an active interest for the college.

Scientific.

The temperature of the sun is again treated of by Prof. Ericssen, in Nature. He says, in conclusion, that "we cannot consistently refuse to accept the conclusion that the temperature at the surface of the photosphere is very nearly 4,036,000 degrees Fahrenheit."

M. Moseel, of France, asserts that if the electro-negative plates in a galvanic battery are made large and the opposite ones small the power is increased in proportion to expenditure. Thus if the copper member is made as large as possible and the zinc made small the expenditure of the latter is lessened; a fact of importance, he suggests, to telegraph companies. Houle calculates that the utmost possible force in a grain of zinc in a Grove's battery is two hundred and sixty-seven foot-pounds, while the utmost practical is one hundred and thirty-four. The march of experiment is continually showing how little is really known yet about the galvanic power, and such theoretical calculations based on the fashionable law of conservation of force are of small account.

A Total Eclipse of the Sun in 1699.—The preparations made by the governments of the present age to have every phase of a total eclipse studied and recorded contrast favorably with the superstition that prevailed a few centuries ago. For instance, we find the following in one of our German exchanges: The elector of Darmstadt was informed of the approach of a total eclipse in 1699, and published the following edict in consequence: "His highness, having been informed that on Wednesday morning next, at ten o'clock, a very dangerous eclipse will take place, orders that on the day previous, and a few days afterward, all cattle be kept housed, and to this end ample fodder be provided; the doors and windows of the stalls be carefully secured, the drinking-wells to be covered up, the cellars and garrets guarded so that the bad atmosphere may not obtain lodgment, and thus produce infection, because such eclipses frequently occasion whooping-cough, epilepsy, paralysis, fever and other diseases, against which every precaution should be observed."

Cause of Variegation of Leaves. According to Mr. Morren the difference in the color of the leaves of the variegated plants, which form so ornamental a feature of our greenhouse, is due to a disease which is at once contagious and capable of being transmitted from one species of plants to another, by a kind of inoculation. He considers that the alteration of the chlorophyl, (which he compares to the red globules of the blood,) or green coloring matter, gives rise to variegated leaves, which consist of a mixture of green parts with others more or less yellow. If the discoloration is general it produces death. Among the higher orders of plants only those which are parasitic can exist when entirely deprived of chlorophyl. Variegation is a sign of organic disease; the discolored or variegated portions of the leaf have lost their power of reducing the carbonic acid of the atmosphere; the plants are generally weaker, smaller, their flowers and fruit much poorer, and their power of resisting cold diminished. Variegation can be propagated by means of layers, buds or grafts, showing that the buds themselves are infected. The seeds, however, from variegated individuals usually produce normal and healthy plants.

The substitution of iron for wood in ships has led to much investigation of the attendant variations of the compass and the means of diminishing so serious an inconvenience. It has sometimes been supposed that fogs and certain other states of the atmosphere could influence the needle; but this has not been borne out by observation. Lightning exercises a decided influence on the needle by reversing its points, so that north becomes south, and conversely. When a vessel is nearing land the needle is said to be affected; and certain rocks there are that exercise a marked magnetic influence on the compass, volcanic rocks especially, but this influence is not felt on board ships. But the action of the iron forming the ship's sides is far different, and not even the interposition of a thick non-magnetic body will stop its influence—far less, as some have believed, a copper coating or thick paint. Danger, however, comes from another source, since the ship herself, under her weight of canvas, may increase the deviation of the needle. Thus, experiments made on board an iron-built sailing vessel, provided with iron rigging and lower yards of steel, and with two binnacle compasses on her poops, and a third placed between the mizzen and main masts, the lower part of which was all of iron—the deviations of the needle were respectively fifty-six, twenty-four and thirty-five degrees.

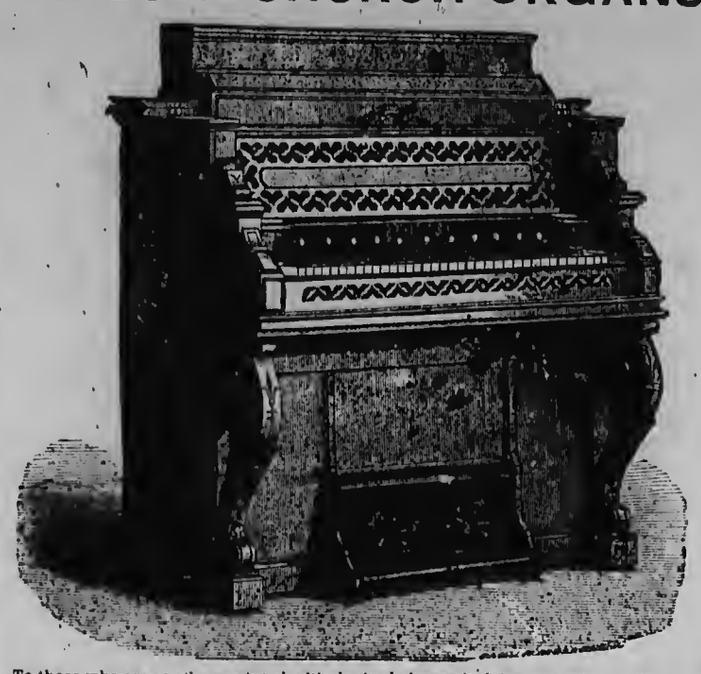
ROBERT J. HARP,

NO. 112 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS,

AGENT FOR THE SOUTHWESTERN STATES FOR THE SALE OF

GEORGE WOODS & CO.'S

PARLOR And CHURCH ORGANS.



To those who are at all acquainted with the trade in musical instruments, or those conversant with the improvements that during the last twenty years have been made in that most popular of instruments, the Reed Organ, it is entirely superfluous to speak of the reputation or ability of the firm of GEO. WOODS & CO. We will, however, mention, for the benefit of any who may be without information on the subject, that the senior partner, Mr. Geo. Woods, has been engaged in the manufacture of Organs for many years, that he is the inventor of many valuable improvements and ingenious devices, and that his coadjutors in the business are all men extensively known to the trade as being possessed of uncommon skill, taste and experience in their different branches.

In offering our instruments to the notice of all interested in music, we merely ask a comparison between those of our manufacture and those of others, and briefly mention upon what points in our instruments we base our claims of superiority to the productions of our competitors in business:

QUALITY OF TONE.

Its Purity, Clearness and Brilliancy, Extraordinary Power,

CAPACITY FOR VARIETY, AND BEAUTY OF EFFECT,

Which is owing in a great measure to the excellence of our famous SOLO STOPS,

VOX HUMANA AND VOX CELESTE,

which differ materially in their construction and effects from other Stops of the same or similar name.

Our MANUAL SUB-BASS; smooth as well as effective in quality of tone.

PATENTED INVENTIONS AND INGENIOUS DEVICES.

Our method of employing SOLO SETS in separate WIND CHESTS.

IMPROVED VALVES AND WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.

THOROUGHNESS OF CONSTRUCTION and Elegance of Design.

All material used in the construction of our instruments will be found to be strictly of the best quality. Our workmanship will also be found to be of a very high order.

The Cases are constructed with a proper regard to the laws of sonad, having acoustic chambers at the ends of the case.

The Fronts of Keys are Ivory, and are not of Holly wood.

The Carvings are hand-made.

The Stops are of Ebony and Ivory, engraved by hand.

Special attention is called to these Organs. Price Lists and Catalogues, containing full particulars of the many numbers, sizes, varieties and prices—ranging from $110 to $650—will be mailed to any one on application.

☞ All instruments will be thoroughly examined and shipped in good order. Therefore parties can safely order without coming to select. Address

ROBERT J. HARP, 112 Camp Street, New Orleans.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

On sitting down to the "Domestic" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

MEDICAL.

The New Louisiana Remedy

For Consumption, Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as

G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SYRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,

and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Syrup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.

G. H. SMITH & Co., Proprietors,
20 Baronne St., New Orleans.

Caution to the Public.—Be sure to get the right article.

Among the references are Hon. S. Belden, Attorney General; Hon. C. O. Dugue, Ex-Judge District Court; General Thomas M. Scott, of J. Pinckney Smith & Co.; Rev. L. P. Hentz, Lutheran Church; Captain J. J. Rivera, foreman of the Bee office, and many others. no30 6m

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

The subscriber takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the disease of which it claims to be the "Annihilator" and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. Schele DeVere, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. Gildersleeve, Ph.D., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. Carter, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LeConte, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. Johnston, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The movement in the general market has been interrupted by the Christmas holiday, and we have only two days' business to review, during which prices have exhibited but few variations. Sugar was dull and drooping on Saturday, but in fair request on Tuesday at previous rates for fair and the lower grades, but easier for the better qualities. Molasses has declined 2@3c. ₱ gallon for inferior to fair, but ruled at previous rates for the higher grades. Flour has been in light supply and ruled at steady prices. Corn has come forward more freely, and sold at a reduction of 2½@5c. ₱ bushel on Saturday and 10c. on Tuesday. Pork and bacon have been heavy at previous rates.

The weather has been warm for the season and generally clear. The accounts from the country present no new features.

The river is 13 feet 8 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-second instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	29,943
Alabama	37
Mobile	2,621
Texas	276
Total	32,877

On Saturday the movement commenced at full previous rates, but toward noon the advantage was on the side of the buyer, and some sales were made a shade lower, after which the figures paid indicated a renewal of confidence on the part of factors, and at the close there was no apparent variation from Friday. Nothing was done on Christmas except about 700 bales, particulars not reported; and on Tuesday buyers came forward with a fair degree of spirit and took 6,300 bales at a decline of ⅛c.—in some instances of ¼c. Strict good ordinary to low middling sold at 18⅝c., low middling at 18⅝, 18¾, 18⅞ and 19c., strict low middling at 18¾, 18⅞, 19, 19⅛ and 19¼c., barely middling nt 19⅜c., middling at 19⅝ and 19½c., and good middling at 19⅞c. These figures indicate the irregularity of the market, which was much stronger at the opening than later in the day.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 887,219 bales, against 485,526 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 247,914 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 83,006 to France, and a decrease of 185,930 to Great Britain, and of 52,327 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary	16 @ 17
Good ordinary	18⅛ @ 18⅝
Low middling	18⅞ @ 19⅛
Middling	19⅛ @ 19⅜
Strict middling	— @ 19⅛
Good middling	— @ 19⅝

SUGAR.—The supplies have been liberal and in excess of the demand, and prices were barely sustained. On Saturday the receipts were mostly disposed of at 6@6½c. for inferior, 6¾c. for common, 7c. for good common, 7¼@7½c. for fair, 7⅝@8⅛c. for good fair, 8½c. for fully fair, 8⅝@9c. for prime, (no choice in market,) 7⅛@9½c. for seconds, 9@9½c, for centrifugal, 10½@11c. for yellow clarified, and 11¼@11½c. for white.

MOLASSES.—The supplies on Saturday sold at 20@25c. for inferior, 28@30c. for common, 32@35c. for fair, 38@40c. for prime, 41@42c. for strictly prime, and 43@44c. for choice.

PORK.—On Saturday a lot of 50 bbls. choice mess sold at $14.75 ₱ bbl. On Tuesday there was no animation, and mess was offering at $14.50, without sales. Mess is retailing at $14.75@$15.

BACON.—Shoulders are quoted nominally at 8c., clear rib sides 8c., clear sides 8½c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday 15 casks clear rib sides sold at 7⅞c. on the spot, and 10 casks shoulders at the Jackson railroad depot at 7⅞c.

HAMS.—Choice new sugar-cured hams continue scarce and in demand at 14¾@15½c. ₱ lb. Old are quoted at 12½@14c.

DRY SALT MEAT.—Shoulders are quoted at 6¾c., clear rib and clear sides 7¼c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday 25 casks sold, in lots, at 6¾c. for shoulders, 7¼c. for clear sides, and 8¼c. ₱ lb. for hams.

BREAKFAST BACON.—There is no demand and prices are almost nominal, and are quoted at 8@9c. ₱ lb. for choice Western. The last sales of any importance were at 8@8½c. Northern is quoted at 11c.

LARD.—Choice has continued in fair demand for export, with a light stock on hand. Tierces are quoted at 9½@10c., kegs 10¼@10½c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday 20 tierces kettle-rendered sold at 9¾c. ₱ lb., and 100 kegs refined at 10¾c.

BUTTER.—Choice is in light supply and in good demand. Choice Western is quoted at 25@28c., Goshen 33@35c. ₱ lb. Inferior is unsaleable.

CHEESE.—Choice is in light supply and in good demand, but poor continues dull.

LOUISIANA RICE is in good supply, principally the lower grades.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request, and opened on Tuesday at 109@109¼, (against 108½ at New York,) and closed at 109½@109¾, (against 108¼ at New York.)

The sales of silver have been confined to about $1,500 in American half dollars on Tuesday at 108@108½. American half dollars are quoted at 107½@108½, and Mexican dollars at 1¾@2¼ per cent. premium in gold.

The movement in warrants has been fair, the sales embracing $1,000 State on Saturday at 59 for large and 65 for small; and about $25,000 on Tuesday at 58½, 59 and 60 for large, and 65 for small.

HISTORY OF THE BIBLE

By Wm. SMITH, LL.D.

AUTHOR OF SMITH'S BIBLE DICTIONARY.

It contains 243 fine Scripture Illustrations and over 1,100 pages, and is the most comprehensive and valuable History of the Bible ever published. The labor and learning of centuries are gathered in this one volume to throw a strong, clear light upon every page of the Inspired Word.
